Dr. Livingstone had already rearranged the map of Africa, and, as it were, discovered a new world. But that was not enough. His weather-beaten frame demanded rest, and the ties of kindred at home were strong; but he must complete his mission. Once again he plunged with his devoted followers into the heart of that continent in a more northerly direction, with a view to solve the grand problem of the sources of the Nile, and for several years was lost to sight. At present the particulars of his last journeys and discoveries are fragmentary; but this lonely traveller, who for years saw no white face till Mr. Stanley tracked him out, was able, by means of a few scraps of information and stirring appeals, so to move the heart of England that the detestable slave trade, which has desolated the country, received its death-blow. Once again Dr. Livingstone was left to his solitude, and at length fell a victim to his exploring zeal, ignorant that the great work was wellnigh accomplished by Sir Bartle Frere, which he had been the means of initiating by means of the treaty with the Sultan of Zanzibar. It is nearly a year ago that, exhausted with the hardships of travel, he pathetically enjoined his faithful native adherents, "Build me a hut to die in. I am going home"—and there, at Ilala, he slept the sleep of the just. His lifeless body was conveyed during many months of a toilsome and dangerous journey a distance of more than a thousand miles to the coast, by his humble body-guard, one and all liberated slaves—a grander and more touching memento of the great missionary explorer than any tomb which can be raised in his honour in Westminster Abbey. The devoted heroism of his followers was worthy of the chief they served.

The time seems to be near at hand when the vast continent of Africa will have yielded up all her secrets, when the traffic in flesh and blood which has depopulated the negro race will be as much a tradition on the east coast as on the west, and when the highway will be open by which the missionary and trader may obtain access to its fertile plains and highlands to carry the blessings of Christianity, civilisation, and commerce into the remotest districts of the continent. With this grand achievement the name of Livingstone will be ever associated. Though he has had worthy coadjutors in Grant, Speke, Baker, and other explorers, the work of opening Africa is mainly the outcome of his faith, his sagacity, his perseverance, his hardships, and his sufferings. He has, moreover, bequeathed to his countrymen—to the whole world—the legacy of an entire life of self-devotion, single in its aim, perfect in its completeness, and sublime in its grandeur, which will incite to self-sacrifice and enthusiasm as long as the record of his character and labours survives.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and Prince Leopold, visited the Royal Victoria Hospital at Netley on Thursday week. Her Majesty crossed from Osborne in the Royal yacht Alberta, Captain the Prince of Leiningen, G.C.B., and was received, on landing, by Colonel Evans Gordon and Surgeon-General Balfour. The Queen was conducted through the hospital by the chief officials of the establishment, visiting the various wards in which were located the invalids from the Gold Coast. Her Majesty also paid visits to several invalid officers of other regiments. Doctors Fleming, Bleckley, and Kynsey were presented to the Queen. After leaving Netley, the Alberta steamed close round H.M.S. Victor Emmanuel (hospital-ship), which was at anchor in Southampton Water, when the crew heartily greeted her Majesty. Prince Louis of Battenburg, R.N., and the Earl of Carnarvon, Secretary of State for the Colonies, arrived at Osborne and dined with the Queen, leaving the following day. Prince Leopold also left Osborne for London and Oxford. Lieutenant-Colonel Jepson, 102nd (Royal Madras) Fusiliers, commanding the troops at Parkhurst, dined with her Majesty. The Queen, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and Princess Beatrice, drove through West Cowes on Saturday last, the streets being profusely decorated in honour of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. The Cowes Rifle Volunteers formed a guard of honour, and the Sunday school children, to the number of upwards 1300, were ranged in the town. The band of the 102nd Regiment was also in attendance. Flowers were scattered by ladies from the windows of the houses as the Royal party passed, and the townspeople evinced the utmost enthusiasm in welcoming the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. Earl Beauchamp arrived at Osborne and had an audience of the Queen to present a message from the House of Lords. The Right Hon. G. Ward-Hunt and Commander Ramsay dined with her Majesty. The Queen, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday at Whippingham church. The Rev. George Prothero officiated. The Rev. George Prothero and Mrs. Prothero dined with her Majesty. On Monday the Queen conferred the Victoria Cross upon Lance-Sergeant Samuel M'Gaw, of the 42nd Royal Highlanders (Black Watch), at Osborne. Lieutenant-Colonel M'Leod, K.C.B., commanding the regiment, and Lieutenant and Adjutant Stevenson were present. Lieutenant Stevenson was presented to her Majesty. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh left Osborne. It was the Queen's intention to have visited Haslar Hospital on Tuesday, but, in consequence of there being some cases of contagious fever in the hospital, her Majesty was advised not to go there. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left Osborne on Thursday for Claremont House, Esher. On her way thither the Queen inspected, at the Royal Clarence Yard, Gosport, the Naval Brigade, which served in the Ashantee campaign. Her Majesty will sojourn at Esher until Monday next, and then return to Windsor Castle, preparatory to receiving the Emperor of Russia. The Queen and the Prince of Wales were represented at the funeral of Lady Phipps by General Sir T. M. Biddulph and General Sir William Knollys.

The Hon. Horatia Stopford has succeeded the Hon. Frances Drummond as Maid of Honour in Waiting to her Majesty.

The Queen has appointed Lady Abercromby to be one of her Majesty's Ladies of the Bedchamber in Ordinary, in the room of the Countess of Mayo, resigned. The Queen has also appointed the Countess of Mayo to be an Extra Lady of the Bedchamber to her Majesty.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales have been entertaining various guests at Sandringham House, among whom were Earl and Countess Spencer, the Earl of Clanwilliam, and the Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley. The Prince and Princess, with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, attended Divine service on Sunday at St. Mary Magdalene's, Sandringham Park. The Rev. W. Lake Onslow and the Rev. William Rogers, Rector of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, officiated. The Prince presided at the eighteenth festival of the Royal Benevolent College, held on Monday at Willis's Rooms.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh crossed in her Majesty's yacht Alberta, on Monday, from Osborne to Portsmouth, where the Duke laid the foundation-stone of a school and female orphan home for children of men of the Royal Navy and Royal Marines. After the ceremony their Royal Highnesses partook of luncheon with Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy at the Admiralty House, and afterwards proceeded to London. The Duke and Duchess and Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) were present, on Tuesday, at the Shakespearean tableaux given by Mr. and Mrs. Freake at Cromwell House for the benefit of the National Orphan Home and the Victoria Hospital for Sick Children. Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein have been on a visit to the Duke and Duchess at Buckingham Palace. The Duchess and Princess Christian visited the School of Art-Needlework, Sloane-street, on Wednesday. The Duke and Duchess and Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne went to the Lyceum Theatre in the evening.

Prince Arthur arrived at Maidstone on Saturday last, having been appointed to a captaincy in the 7th (Queen's Own) Hussars. His Royal Highness dined with Colonel Hale and the other officers of his regiment. On Sunday the Prince attended Divine service at Holy Trinity Church.

His Excellency the French Ambassador and the Duchess De la Rochefoucauld Bisaccia have arrived at the French Embassy, Albert-gate, from Paris.

The Duke and Duchess of Bedford have returned to Eaton-square from Woburn Abbey.

The Duke and Duchess of Beaufort have arrived in Charles-street, Berkeley-square, from Badminton House.

The Duke and Duchess of Marlborough and the Ladies Spencer Churchill have arrived at their residence in St. James's-square, from Blenheim.

The Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe have left Brown's Hotel for Brighton.

The Duke and Duchess of Montrose have arrived at their residence in Belgrave-square from Nice.

The Marchioness of Salisbury held her first reception at the family mansion in Arlington-street, Piccadilly, on Saturday last. Previously to her Ladyship's reception the Marquis and Marchioness entertained a large party at dinner. The Countess of Derby gave her first reception, on Wednesday, at the Foreign Office. Previously to her Ladyship's reception the noble Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs and the Countess gave a banquet. The Right Hon. the Speaker gave his second Parliamentary full-dress dinner on Wednesday. The Speaker will hold his levées on the evenings of Saturday, May 2, and Saturday, May 9, at ten o'clock. Full dress.

The Queen, on the recommendation of Mr. Disraeli, has conferred baronetcies on Mr. George Elliot, who represented North Durham in the late Parliament; on Mr. H. W. Peek, M.P. for East Surrey; and on Mr. Philip Rose, who was formerly the agent of the Conservative party, and who has for many years been on terms of intimate personal friendship with the Prime Minister.

Mr. Halsey, M.P., was on Wednesday installed as the P.G.M. of Freemasons of Hertfordshire, in place of Mr. Wm. Stuart, resigned, after thirty years' service. The ceremony was performed at the Shire-hall, Hertford, in a Provincial Grand Lodge, by Mr. John Hervey, G.S. After the ceremony the brethren went in procession to All Saints' Church, where a sermon on Freemasonry was preached to a crowded congregation by the Rev. Lewis Deedes, P.G.C., and a collection, which amounted to £25 8s., was made for the Hertford Infirmary and the District Visiting Society. Having returned to the Shire-hall, and disposed of some Masonic business, the Grand Lodge was entertained at a superb banquet by the Hertford Lodge, No. 403. All the lodges in the province were represented.

The Duke of Abercorn, on Saturday last, made his formal entry into Dublin as Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. At Kingstown an address of congratulation was presented by the Commissioners of that township; and at Westland-row station his Grace received a congratulatory address from the Lord Mayor and Corporation. The streets from Westland-row to the castle were lined with military and filled with dense crowds, and the reception of the new Lord Lieutenant is described as having been of a very cordial character. A state reception was held, on Monday, at the castle, by the Duke for the purpose of receiving addresses from the Municipal Council and the University of Dublin. His Grace, in reply, expressed an opinion that the circumstances and position of the country were favourable for directing public attention to unexciting but useful measures of social improvement.

The Extra Supplement.

"LE BAC JAPONAIS."

There is a good story, which has been told, but is worth telling again. Three artists were commissioned to paint a camel. The first was an Englishman, the second was a Frenchman, the third was a German. Mr. John Brushby looked into Murray's and Bradshaw's "Guides," then took his passage by the Peninsular and Oriental line to Egypt, and spent four months in a tour of inspection, carefully noting and comparing the features of all the different breeds of camels he could find really existing in the East. Monsieur Napoléon Chic, after a gay convivial déjeûner at the best restaurant on the Boulevards, strolled to the Jardin des Plantes, having a cigar and a bon mot alternately between his lips, to discuss with a brother artist the salient points of that particular camel, the very pick and pink of all camels in the universe, which had the honour to figure in the zoological collection of Paris. Herr Kunst-Magister von Grund-Begriff, for his part, having seen live camels in his Wander-Jahre, and many pictorial or sculptured delineations thereof, in his visits to the art-museums of Europe, now shut himself up with a pile of books, ancient and modern, containing descriptions of the camel, its anatomical structure, and its significant part in the history of civilisation. After these studies he would smoke a pound of strong kanaster, and silently "develop the Idea of the Camel out of his Internal Consciousness!" We are told, in the original story, what result was obtained and in what space of time, by each of the three artists. The picture entitled "Le Bac Japonais," which we have engraved by permission of Messrs. Goupil and Co. from a photograph of their publication, is the work of a clever French artist, M. Lenoir. It is an elegant design, representing a very attractive performance and an agreeable scene. Our readers, we hope, will enjoy its high artistic merits of conception and execution, without inquiring whether this is really the ordinary mode of conveyance across a river or an inlet of the sea in Japan. We have never yet received from Mr. Wiggins, our correspondent at Yokohama during many years past, or from Mr. Simpson, who visited several Japanese towns and provinces on his way home from the Imperial wedding at Pekin, any sketch of this kind of ferry. But we could well fancy, in the heyday of ingenious festivities at the French capital a few years ago, that there might have been a Fête Japonaise in some park or public garden with a piece of water, displaying the superb voyage of a Princess Oho-na-kara-mejitara, the destined bride of the celestial Mikado, drawn by a team of swiftly-swimming Damios, the proudest nobles of the empire, led by the Tycoon himself, across that placid lake. It is a very pretty scene, and we are much obliged to the Artist.

THE LATE BISHOP PATTESON.

The death of the Right Rev. John Coleridge Patteson, Missionary Bishop of the Church of England in the South Sea Islands, by the rash and misguided violence of those he had laboured to save and to bless, was the martyrdom of a Christian hero. Such an example, though at first sight discouraging, is yet, to all who have any faith in moral principle or Divine Providence, a sure pledge of the better life for mankind in future. The natives of the sequestered island, in the Santa Cruz group, where he was killed instantly on landing there, had been exasperated by the cruel outrages inflicted upon them by kidnappers and slave-traders of English race. They did not know that Bishop Patteson had been striving for years to move the British and the Australian Governments to put a stop to those atrocious practices, against which the voice of English social opinion is still raised in vain. The kidnappers had sometimes approached their prey in the disguise of missionary clergymen; so these poor savages, who mistook their truest and boldest friend for one of their dreaded persecutors, met him and killed him on the beach. After that, one would say, the entire suppression of the South Pacific slave trade should be merely a question of the shortest time and the most effective manner. If this were not so to be, let the British Empire and the Church of England shut up shop for shame; they might be expected to do likewise for consistency's sake, if the East African slave trade were ever allowed to revive, after Livingstone's funeral last week. But this question will come up again, with that of the annexation of the Fiji Islands. For Bishop Patteson's life and death, very worthy to be studied, we refer to Miss Yonge's lately-published biographical work. He was a son of the late Sir J. Patteson, one of our Judges, and a cousin of Lord Coleridge, Chief Justice. A monument has lately been put up in Christ Church, Sydney, from the design by Mr. E. T. Blacket, architect, with a recumbent marble figure by Mr. H. Apperley, sculptor, of that city. The cost was defrayed by a subscription, to which Miss Betts and the Rev. P. R. Bailey were the foremost contributors. Here in England a memorial pillar of red brick and stone has been erected by Lord Coleridge to the memory of Bishop Patteson, near the district church which he formerly served. It is at the cross or meeting of four roads in the parish of Ottery St. Mary, Devon, where both the Coleridge and the Patteson families have long resided.

THE HIGH TIDE IN THE THAMES.

The extraordinary rising of the tide, predicted to occur on the Friday night and on the Saturday afternoon of last week, did not amount to a great local disaster. It was checked by a wind from the south-west blowing down the river, and only a little exceeded the height which an ordinary spring tide has reached upon some former occasions. Many of the owners and occupiers of riverside premises, however, in the districts of Bankside, Lambeth, Vauxhall, Nine Elms, and Battersea, had made great preparations to keep out the expected flood, by fixing planks, fronted with layers of clay, and other supposed effectual barriers, across doorways, at the ends of lanes and alleys, and over the cellar gratings. The north-easterly wind, continuing till the Friday afternoon, had really justified the apprehensions so far entertained; but, in the evening of that day, the wind fortunately changed. Still, many families had removed their furniture for safety, and many did not care to go to bed that night. The scene next day on the South Embankment and at the bridges up the river was somewhat unusual, but scarcely alarming. Our Illustration shows the appearance of the rising waters at Battersea Bridge.

Franz Liszt, the pianist, has (according to the Eastern Budget) left his whole collection of curiosities, works of art, &c., valued at 400,000*fl.*, to the Hungarian nation. Among the curiosities are Beethoven's American piano, Haydn's and Mozart's harpsichords, and a number of decorations and other articles presented to Liszt by his admirers.

COLONEL FESTING, C.B.

The beginning of our late war on the Gold Coast was in June, last year, when the Ashantee army, led by Amanquatia, had overrun the country under the British Protectorate and threatened Cape Coast Castle. The Administrator, Colonel Harley, having but a thousand fighting men at his disposal, without reckoning the natives, who could not defend themselves, was obliged to limit his earlier operations to holding some fortified positions near the seaport towns. The naval squadron, composed of the Druid corvette, the Argus sloop, and the gun-boats Seagull, Merlin, and Decoy, kept the disaffected villages of the coast from joining the enemy, and lent a few seamen and marines to garrison the forts on shore. But on June 7 arrived from England H.M.S. Barracouta, under command of Captain E. R. Fremantle, with 110 Royal Marines and Royal Marine Artillery, two mountain guns, 200 rockets, and ammunition stores. Colonel Francis Worgan Festing, R.M.A., came to be in command of the military force, which was further augmented by four companies of the 2nd West India Regiment. There was no time lost in setting the combined military and naval forces in action. The circumstances are fully related in Chapter V. of our Illustrated Narrative of the Ashantee War, lately published under the title, "From Cape Coast to Coomassie." It was most urgent to deprive the Ashantee army, then encamped around Mampon, between Abakrampa and the river Beyah, of its facilities for obtaining warlike stores from Elmina. The natives of the "King's Town" at Elmina, resenting their transfer from the Dutch to the English Government, had become the active, though covert, allies of the Ashantee invader. Some parties of Ashantee warriors had been introduced into the town, while others lurked in the adjacent bush. To put an end to this danger, within nine miles of Cape Coast Castle, it was determined by Colonel Harley that the chiefs of Elmina should be forced to lay down their arms. They refused to obey the summons, and their town was consequently attacked on the next day, which was June 13, by the boats of the squadron, and the troops under Colonel Festing, with the aid of Captain Fremantle. The hostile native quarter of Elmina was destroyed, and the enemy was expelled from that neighbourhood. In recognition of this useful service Colonel Festing has been made a Companion of the Bath. The same honour has been conferred on his naval coadjutor. Colonel Festing was entertained by the Royal Naval Club, at Portsmouth, a fortnight ago.

The Portrait of Colonel Festing is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry, of Baker-street.

CAPTAIN GLOVER, R.N.

The name of this distinguished officer, it will seem to many readers, should rather be written "Captain Glover, C.B." It was resolved by each House of Parliament "that the thanks of this House be given to Commander John Hawley Glover, R.N., for the energy, courage, and ability with which, as her Majesty's Special Commissioner to the eastern tribes of the Gold Coast, and with the aid of the gallant officers of the Army and Navy, he led a considerable native force from the River Volta to Coomassie, thereby largely conducing to the success of the main operations under the Major-General Commanding." When Captain Glover, accompanied by Major Goldsworthy and Captain Sartorius, landed at Liverpool on Good Friday, and stayed two days at Manchester, they were received with high honours. Although they were not present at Sir Garnet Wolseley's actual victory over the Ashantees, it is now well understood that the fall of Coomassie, the submission of King Coffee Calcallee, and the immediate return of the British troops to the seacoast, without further risk from the climate at the beginning of the unhealthy season, were partly the result of Captain Glover's separate achievements. He is fairly entitled to a minor share of the credit due to the Commander-in-Chief for the successful result of the whole campaign. Captain Glover is one of a family who have contributed much to the service of their Queen and country. He had two brothers in the Army, Captain Glover and Lieutenant Glover, of the 43rd Regiment, which was engaged in the Maori war of New Zealand ten years ago. They were both killed on the same day, in the fatal attack on the Gate Pah. The circumstances are related by Major-General Alexander, in his book lately published, "Bush-Fighting in New Zealand." The father of the three gallant brothers was chaplain or minister of the English church at Cologne. Lieutenant-Commander J. H. Glover, R.N., had long been employed in special service on the West African Coast, and had latterly held, under the Colonial Office, the appointment of Administrator of Lagos. He had gained a particular ascendancy over the Houssas, the fierce fighting men of the Lower Niger country, whose services it was resolved last autumn to enlist against the Ashantees. For this purpose he received a special commission, subordinate to that of Sir Garnet Wolseley, with instructions to levy whatever native auxiliary forces he could in the eastern districts of the Gold Coast territory, from Accra to Addah, at the mouth of the river Volta, or among the Aquapims, the Aquamos, the Kroboes, and other nations thereabout. A very efficient staff, including Captain Goldsworthy, Commander Larcom, Lieutenant Moore, R.N., and Dr. Rowe, with a large quantity of military stores, a river steam-boat, and four steam-launches, was given to Captain Glover, and he was aided by two vessels of the squadron. He got the kings and chiefs of the native people to muster a large army of fighting men on the banks of the Volta. But when the time came for action they all refused to march against the kingdom of Ashantee. Sir Garnet Wolseley then ordered Captain Glover to take his faithful Houssas and Yorubas, numbering about 1200, and make his way inland, crossing the Prah where he best could, so as to support the main advance on Coomassie. This service was promptly and skilfully performed by Captain Glover, bringing up his guns, rockets, and stores, across a very difficult country, in a manner which few officers of the land service could have surpassed. He entered the Ashantee kingdom as soon as Sir Garnet did, capturing the town of Obogo on Jan. 16, and the important city of Dwabon, less than twenty miles from Coomassie, in time to close its entrance to the defeated King. A few days later his force was tripled or quadrupled by the Akim and Aquapim contingents, rallying under Lieutenant Moore. We presume there can be no doubt that the effect was to bring Coffee Calcallee to submission, and to secure the English troops from predatory attacks on their way back to Prah-su. It is probable that Captain Glover's operations on the Volta may yet be turned to profitable use in opening the inland navigation of West Africa. He has, we remark, been visiting the Earl of Carnarvon at Highclere; and the Secretary for the Colonies may have been inclined to get some information from him with this useful object in view.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Mr. W. E. Debenham, of Regent-street and Haverstock-hill.

The London Female Penitentiary, Pentonville-road, has received a fourth donation of £1000 from "H. L. T."

THE LATE CAPTAIN BLAKE, R.N.

One of the most valuable lives, among officers of the Army and Navy, lost to the public service and to their private friends by the casualties of the late war on the Gold Coast, was that of Captain William Hans Blake. He had served with merited distinction in all parts of the world. During the Russian War, twenty years ago, he was in the Black Sea and in the Baltic, as mate of the Albion and of the Duke of Wellington. From 1857 to 1859 he was Lieutenant of the Cambrian, employed in the China War. In 1860 he was appointed First Lieutenant of the Niger, and engaged in the Maori War of New Zealand. Here, when in command of a landing party of seamen, Lieutenant Blake received a most dangerous wound. He was shot in the breast; and a post-mortem examination has lately found the ball lying near his heart. For his brave conduct upon this occasion, Lieutenant Blake was rewarded with a life pension and promotion to the rank of Commander. From 1863 to 1865 he was in command of the Aleoto, on the South American station. He subsequently held command of the Mutine, in the Pacific, to 1866, and of the Falcon, on the Australian station, till his promotion to post rank as captain on Sept. 14, 1867. In April of last year Captain Blake was appointed to the command of H.M.S. Druid, on the West African and Cape station. He rendered much assistance to Colonel Harley, Administrator of the Gold Coast, in his preparations for the defence of Cape Coast Castle and Elmina against the Ashantees, before the arrival of the Barracouta in the month of June. With the rest of the naval squadron Captain Blake's ship and the shore parties of men under his command were actively employed in the later operations of the war. He joined the march to Coomassie, in command of the Naval Brigade, with the army of Sir Garnet Wolseley, but after conducting the sailors and marines to Prah-su, without the loss of one man, was himself seized with dysentery, on Jan. 17, and had to give up his charge to Commodore Hewett. Captain Blake was brought down to Cape Coast Castle and placed on board the hospital-ship Victor Emmanuel, but died of exhaustion on the 27th, highly commended and sincerely esteemed. He was succeeded in the command of the Druid by Captain Percy Luxmoore, C.B., second in command of the Naval Brigade.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

Thursday, April 23.

The brief spring session of the departmental general councils has passed off quietly enough. Nearly the whole of them have entered protests against the obnoxious municipal law which invests the Government with the right of naming the mayors, and several have expressed their disapproval of the proposed restriction of universal suffrage; but except at Marseilles, where the President's inaugural address was followed by a Royalist manifestation, and in Corsica, where the session has been indefinitely postponed, there have been no "incidents" of importance. Prince Napoleon appears to have made a complete fiasco at Ajaccio, having futilely summoned the councillors to attend on three successive occasions, and been most coldly received by the inhabitants. He has signally failed in securing adhesions to the democratic Bonapartist party, of which he issued the manifesto a few months ago, and by his quarrel with the ex-Empress and the Prince Imperial has completely alienated the sympathies of the leading Imperialists.

The Minister of Justice's recent circular in reference to the attacks made by the Monarchical newspapers upon the Septennat is already regarded as obsolete, and the Legitimist and Orleanist organs continue abusing the present Government with unabated animosity. There is no doubt but that the opinions they express are shared by the majority of the Royalist members of the Assembly, as recently published letters from M. Lucien Brun, M. Chesnelong's colleague in last autumn's fusionist intrigues, and M. de la Rochette, the leader of the Legitimist faction known as the "Light Horse," emphatically show. These gentlemen are loud in expressing their disapprobation of the Governmental policy, and patronisingly tell their newspaper friends that they may fearlessly continue their crusade against the Duc de Broglie and his colleagues, who are powerless to enforce obedience to their circulars.

No little sensation has been caused by the intelligence that M. Beulé, the ex-Minister of the Interior, whose sudden death was recently announced, had in reality committed suicide by stabbing himself in the heart with a dagger. His numerous failures as a politician appear to have preyed upon his mind, and his physicians and friends had urgently recommended him to travel. It is not known when he originally formed the design of committing suicide, but the newspapers relate that on meeting an intimate friend a few days previous to his death he told him that he was suffering from palpitation of the heart, and that he felt sure he should be found some morning lying dead in his bed.

General Chanzy has at length replied to M. Crémieux's letter, and has done so in a bantering, ironical manner. He maintains that, although circumstances have compelled him to establish a state of siege in Algeria, he has no intention of disavowing the Republican sentiments he frequently expressed when taking an active part in the debates of the Assembly. M. Crémieux, he says, thought it was possible to ensure the tranquillity and prosperity of Algeria by a simple decree dated from Tours; whereas the organisation of the colony is in reality a task of more than ordinary magnitude. He concludes by promising that the liberal programme he laid before the Superior Council of Algeria a few months ago shall eventually be carried into effect.

A diplomatic incident has been raised apropos of a recent pastoral letter of the Bishop of Nancy, whose diocese includes certain parishes of the now German province of Lorraine. The letter in question contained injunctions to his priests to pray for the restoration of Alsace-Lorraine to France, and was read and placarded in both the French and German fractions of the bishopric. The German Procureur of Saverne consequently summoned the Bishop to appear before the tribunal of that locality, and, upon his declining to do so, pressed the Court to condemn him, by default, to three months' imprisonment in a fortress. The Judges have, however, reserved their decision. In the mean while the Bishop has arrived in Paris, and a diplomatic correspondence is now going on, we are told, between Duc Decazes and Prince Bismarck with reference to the incident, which is by no means of a nature to improve the friendly relations assumed to exist between Germany and France.

The Paris papers are busy with their comments on the circumstances attending the wrecks of the Europa and the Amérique, and more than one loudly condemn the conduct of the English captains who took possession of the ships as salvage.

SPAIN.

In consequence of an improvement in the weather, the operations before Bilbao have recommenced. Ten thousand men, under Marshal Concha, have arrived at Santona from Santander. They are to operate by Valmaseda, while Marshal Serrano attacks San Pedro de Abanto. General Ceballos has begun the investment of San Sebastian and Irun. The water supply of the latter town has been cut off, and the inhabitants have received orders to consider themselves prisoners of war. Ingress and egress are prohibited at Irun and San Sebastian.

ITALY.

The Senate has approved all the clauses of the Fisheries Bill. The Chamber of Deputies continues discussing the financial measures.

SWITZERLAND.

The popular vote on the revision of the Federal Constitution was taken on Sunday throughout Switzerland. The revision was adopted by 321,870 votes against 177,800. The Cantons which went in favour of the revised Constitution were Zurich, Berne, Glarus, Saleure, Basle, Schaffhausen, Appenzell (exterior), St. Gallen, Grisons, Aargau, Thurgau, Tessin, Vaud, Neuchâtel, and Geneva. The Cantons of Uri, Schwyz, Unterwalden, Zug, Friburg, Valais, Appenzell (interior), and Lucerne voted against it.

Elections were held at the same time in the Cantons of Berne and Neuchâtel for members of the Grand Councils. In Berne eighty Liberals were elected and seventy Conservatives, and in Neuchâtel eighty-five Liberals and seventeen Conservatives. In the Roman Catholic Canton of the Jura all the Ultramontane candidates were returned by a small majority.

HOLLAND.

At the Hague an official despatch has been received from Achene, of the 17th inst., announcing that on the previous day a strong patrol of Dutch troops came on an entrenched position, 1500 paces south of the Kraton, and retired before the fire of the enemy. A reinforcement was pushed forward, but was repulsed, with a loss of eight killed and fifty-nine wounded.

Three States on the west coast of Sumatra have signed a convention acknowledging the sovereignty of the Netherlands.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The Delegations of the Austrian Reichsrath and the Hungarian Diet were opened at Pesth on Monday. The former elected Herr Rechbauer president, while in the Hungarian Delegation that post was conferred upon M. Garove. Both presidents, in their inaugural speeches, laid stress upon the necessity for exercising economy, without, however, impairing the military power of the empire. Subsequently Count Andrássy presented the Budget for 1875.

The Austrian and Hungarian Delegations were received, on Tuesday, by the Emperor at Pesth. The Austrian Delegation, as guests in the Hungarian capital, were received first. Both presidents, in their addresses, spoke of the economical and financial calamities of the past year, which made strict economy a necessity. His Majesty, in his reply, referred to the satisfactory nature of foreign relations, expressed the conviction that new and valuable pledges of peace had been added lately to the old ones, and promised that the maintenance of peace would in future likewise constitute the chief task of his Government.

The second Ecclesiastical Bill, relative to the recognition of religious associations by the State, came on for discussion in the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath last week, and was adopted by a large majority. Five members spoke in favour of the measure, and none objected to it in principle.

The official gazette publishes the treaty concluded between the Austro-Hungarian monarchy and Great Britain for the mutual extradition of criminals.

GERMANY.

In the German Parliament on Monday the Supplementary Budget for 1874 and the Army Bill passed their final reading—the latter by 214 votes against 123; and on Wednesday the Imperial Treasury Notes Bill was read the third time. The next important measures to be considered are the Press and the Ecclesiastical Bills.

The Emperor has conferred the Order of Louise of the First Class upon the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh. Baron von Brincken, Councillor of Legation, has left for London, to assume the post of Councillor of the Embassy, hitherto occupied by Herr von Krause.

Gerhard Rohlfs, the German explorer of the Libyan desert, has returned with his party to Cairo.

The Government has dispatched a scientific expedition to make excavations in the East. The expedition is to begin at Tyre, where it is expected relics from the time of the Crusades will be found.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The Norwegian Storting has voted for the second time the resolution that the Norwegian Ministers shall henceforth take part in the debates of the Chamber. The Government would consent to this if the Storting would vote some other constitutional changes which the Storting does not desire. If the resolution be voted a third time, it will, according to the Norwegian Constitution, become law without needing the consent of the Government.

AMERICA.

The Philadelphia correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the President has vetoed the Financial Bill adding 100,000,000 dols. to the currency. He bases the veto on the ground that the bill increased the paper circulation without providing the means of redemption. The President in his veto message says the fact is undeniable that the bill increases the paper circulation to 100,000,000 dols. This he believes to be a departure from the true principles of finance. He earnestly recommends legislation securing as speedily as practicable a return to specie payments, and refers to repeated Government pledges to make provision at the earliest practicable moment for redemption of United States notes in coin. He recommends that the revenue be increased sufficiently to meet the current expenditure, as a preparatory measure to the resumption of specie payments.

Mr. Washburne has been elected senator for Massachusetts, in the room of the late Mr. Sumner.

Mr. Baxter, the Republican Governor of Arkansas, deposed by Mr. Brooks, the Democratic claimant, has proclaimed martial law and surrounded the State House with an armed force. Latest advices received in New York from Little Rock state that the Democratic and Republican factions had exchanged many shots, and that one person had been killed and several wounded. The combatants were separated by the United States troops.

Severe floods have taken place in Louisiana, owing to crevasses in the banks of the Mississippi. But the Philadelphia correspondent of the Times telegraphs that the floods are subsiding, relieving New Orleans from danger. The inundation, however, has been (he says) the most extensive ever known. Eleven cotton and fourteen sugar parishes have been submerged, destroying 250,000 acres of cotton, 100,000 of corn, and 500,000 of sugar—probably one sixth of the whole crop.

An unusually promising wheat crop is again announced by the agricultural department of the United States. There is further an increase of eight per cent in the area sown.

The death, at Rome, is announced of Prince Dominico Orsini, the head of the family of that name, aged eighty-four.

From Ottawa we hear that Riel has been expelled by the Canadian Parliament as a fugitive from justice.

We learn from Adelaide that the copper-miners' strike is at an end, the men having come to a settlement with their employers and resumed work.

An agitation against the passport system is being maintained by the Portuguese journals, and an impression seems to prevail in Lisbon that the present system, which is attended by much abuse and inconvenience, will either be abolished or modified.

Bad luck still prevails at the Cape diamond-fields, and stoppages have occurred. Per contra, a new gold-field has been discovered within ninety miles of Capetown, and the first quartz tested yielded four ounces per ton.

During a dense fog in the Channel the Peninsular and Oriental steamer Bangalore came into collision with the Prince Rupert, a vessel belonging to St. John, New Brunswick. She stood by for a long time, but could find no trace of the ship. Her own damage was inconsiderable.

THE FAMINE IN BENGAL.

The daily telegrams from Calcutta report increased distress in several districts of Behar, north of the Ganges, but few deaths from actual starvation have yet been reported. There are nearly 1,250,000 persons receiving pay on the public works, and 116,000 others receiving charitable relief. The "circle system," established by Sir Richard Temple, is stated by him to be working in a satisfactory manner. The quantity of grain dispatched by the Government from Calcutta to the afflicted districts of the country was nearly 250,000 tons up to the end of last week. There was a difficulty in getting transport, from disease among the bullocks, and 3000 bullock-carts had been kept waiting ten days. Our illustration of the loading of a train of carts in Bengal, for the conveyance of grain, has some interest in connection with this fact. The Mansion House fund for the relief of the distress in India now amounts to £85,000. A donation of £500 has been sent to the Lord Mayor by the Earl of Derby. The Committee have sent another remittance of £20,000 to Calcutta, making £80,000 already sent from London. It is stated, in a letter from Mr. Scholch, Chairman of the Executive Relief Committee at Calcutta, that the distress will continue in some districts till August, in others till November.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

We have frequently urged the necessity of a thorough reform and a more liberal policy at Newmarket. For some years past the programmes of the various meetings have been growing weaker and weaker, but happily the first and second days of the Craven meeting are almost without parallel. Six out of the fifteen races were reduced to walks-over, and the remaining nine were contested by forty-seven animals, which is at the rate of about five competitors for each race. On the previous Saturday, at Windsor, Prince Charlie and Tangible ran a race that will never be forgotten by those who were fortunate enough to witness it. The distance was five furlongs, and Tangible, one of the speediest horses in England, received 16lb. for the year. It is probable that no two animals ever came away from the starting-post at such a terrific pace, and, after a grand struggle all the way, Prince Charlie just outtrode his opponent at the finish, and won by a head. He was by no means fit, and well deserves his proud title of "Prince of the T.Y.C.," for he never had his equal at a mile or under. Now, both Prince Charlie and Tangible are trained at Newmarket, yet they had to be sent to a small meeting like Windsor to run this splendid race, as no sufficient inducement was offered at home. The fact is that owners are getting very tired of running for their own money, and so, though there are upwards of a thousand horses in training at Newmarket, the races which close over-night are often declared void for want of entries. We fancy there would soon be a very decided change for the better if the Jockey Club would appoint a clerk of the course of the stamp of Messrs. Verrall, Frail, or Merry, and allow him a fair amount of freedom of action.

The Newmarket Biennial generally produces a fine finish, and this year's race proved no exception to the rule, for the undefeated Miss Toto and Reverberation, against whom his owner laid 100 to 1 in the course of the race, ran a dead-heat. Miss Toto has not grown since last year, and was so deficient in flesh and muscle that she will probably make great improvement as the season advances, and, moreover, Fordham did not see Reverberation, who was running on the other side of the course. Still there were eight horses behind the pair, and we understand that Reverberation is Admiral Rous's Derby "tip." We cannot, however, believe in the victory of an animal that, on his Northampton running, is much inferior to Quantock, and whose breeding, by Thunderbolt—Golden Horn, does not read like staying over a severe mile and a half. George Frederick, whose friends still insist that he is not half fit, finished third; but Aquilo ran so badly that Lord Falkmouth must have abandoned all hope of another Kingcraft coup.

On Tuesday there was an interesting race over the T.Y.C. between Roquesford and Oxonian at level weights, in which the former secured a clever neck victory; and the Newmarket Handicap was the only other event worthy of record. As is usual in this race, a scrimmage took place, by which Royal George (7st. 11lb.) and Tichborne (7st. 9lb.) were the chief sufferers. At the time, however, Lydon (7st. 1lb.) had a clear lead, and eventually won easily by five lengths. Tomahawk (7st. 5lb.) was only fifth, and we should fancy a mile is his best distance. In any case, he did not perform so well as another three-year-old, Conseil (7st. 11lb.), so his Epsom prospects are not very cheerful.

A sale of blood stock took place in Lord Stamford's paddocks at Newmarket on Wednesday. Thirteen lots, the property of the late Mr. Hilton, went at low prices, with the exception of a two-year-old filly by The Rake or Cecrops—Nemesis, which fetched 350 gs. Mr. Fisher bought in Napoleon III. for 950 gs.; Wedmore was sold for 600 gs.; Newry, who was to have been put up, had previously been disposed of to Mr. Charles Groucock for 1500 gs., and the same gentleman had bought Lady Alice for 700 gs.

The annual sports of the Richmond Cricket Club will take place in the Old Deer Park at Richmond to-day (Saturday). The entries number nearly 300, and the first race will be started punctually at half-past one o'clock.

At a banquet which took place in Hull, yesterday week, Colonel Pease, who was the Conservative candidate for that borough at the general election, was presented with a receipt for £4328, the amount of his expenses on that occasion. The gallant Colonel's portrait and a diamond necklace are to be presented to Mrs. Pease.

The Dean and Chapter of Exeter have decided to appeal against Mr. Justice Keating's judgment declaring the reredos in Exeter Cathedral to be illegal.

The New Testament company of revisers assembled on Tuesday, in the Jerusalem Chamber, for their thirty-ninth session. The Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol presided. The company proceeded with the revision of the third chapter of the First Epistle of St. John.

The new school-rooms in connection with the Church of St. Michael and All Angels in Lambeth, Hackney, were formally opened yesterday week. They contain some ingenious arrangements by the Rev. J. B. Podmore for dividing and altering the rooms, and adapting them to various uses. The schools cost £3500, of which £400 remains to be liquidated.

The Bishop of Exeter recently reopened two churches in Cornwall. One is St. Allen's, which is one of the oldest in the county, and which has been restored, at a cost of between £500 and £600, under the auspices of an octogenarian Rector, the Rev. G. Morris. The other is St. Winnow's, upon which £1000 has been spent.

The Bishop of Peterborough consecrated a new church, intended for a memorial of Earl Howe, last week, at Leicester. His Lordship afterwards preached a sermon on the mission of John the Baptist. He also presided at a meeting of the local Church-Building Society, and expressed his thankfulness for the progress the Church has been making in his diocese.

The ancient church of Petersfield, Hants, has been restored, under the direction of Mr. A. Blomfield, at a cost of £6000. A new organ is in course of construction by Messrs. Foster and Andrews, at a cost of £500. A handsome altar-cloth, the gift of Mrs. W. Nicholson, worked by the Sisters of Mercy of East Grinstead, adorns the communion-table, and the same lady has also been at the expense of reseating the church.

Some time past, it being deemed there was a lack of church accommodation in Wood-green, Mr. Alderman Sidney presented a piece of ground facing his residence, situated at Bowes Manor, Wood-green, and also gave a large donation. A handsome edifice, from designs furnished by Sir Gilbert Scott, was speedily erected; and on Tuesday the church was consecrated and dedicated to St. Michael by the Bishop of London.

Last week the Bishop of Lichfield consecrated a new church at Knutton, a mining village in the parish of Wolstanton, Staffordshire. Schools were opened there about a month ago. The church, schools, and an endowment for the clergyman have been liberally provided, at an expense of about £12,000, by Mrs. Stanier, of the Silverdale iron firm of Stanier and Co., and the Rev. Walter Sneyd, Mr. W. F. Gordon, and a few others connected with mines in the neighbourhood.

An appeal is made on behalf of St. Luke's Church, Tiptree, Essex. The congregation, although numerous, is composed almost entirely of rural labourers and small shopkeepers, and sufficient funds cannot be procured to meet the indispensable expenses. It is therefore sought to raise £400, the interest of which, when invested, would be sufficient to cover the annual deficit. Contributions will be thankfully received and acknowledged by the Rev. F. R. Lawrence, Tiptree Rectory, Kelvedon, Essex; or by Mr. J. J. Mechi, Tiptree Hall, Kelvedon, Essex.

The Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels held its monthly meeting, on Monday last, at 7, Whitehall, S.W.—the Rev. S. W. Lloyd in the chair. Grants of money were made in aid of the following objects, viz.:—Building a church at Woolwich (St. Michael and All Angels), Kent; rebuilding the church at Brighton (St. James's); Newington (St. Mary's), Surrey; and Rogate, near Petersfield, Sussex; enlarging or otherwise increasing the accommodation in the churches at Bulvan, near Romford, Essex; Homerton (St. Barnabas's), Middlesex; Newnham, Gloucester; and Poplar (St. Matthias's), Middlesex. Under urgent circumstances, the grants formerly made towards rebuilding the church at Denbigh (St. Mary's), and towards reseating and restoring the church at Holt, near Wrexham, were each increased. Grants were also made from the School-Church and Mission-House Fund towards building, &c., school or mission churches at Chadwick End, in the parish of Temple Balsall, Warwick; Clethorp, in the parish of Standish, Gloucester; Everton, St. George, Liverpool; Great Grimsby, St. James; Troedyrhiw, in the parish of Pontyrhun, Glamorgan; and Wolborough, Newton Abbot, Devon. The society likewise accepted the trust of a sum of money as a repair fund for the church at Knutton, Staffordshire.—A special choral festival service of this society will be held in the nave of Westminster Abbey on the afternoon of May 14.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The Rev. J. M. Wilson has resigned the Professorship of Moral Philosophy.

The election to the open scholarships at Queen's has ended as follows:—B. E. S. Stocker, from Durham School; M. J. Preston, from Nottingham High School; B. K. Bourdillon, from Haileybury School (classical scholars); H. Blackwell, from King William's College, Isle of Man (mathematical scholar); and F. Harrison, from Manchester School (natural science scholar). The scholarships are of the yearly value of £90, and are tenable for five years. At the same time the Eglesfield Exhibition (value £81 a year, tenable for four years, open to natives of Cumberland or Westmorland) was awarded to Mr. Henry B. Hodgson, from Shrewsbury School. The Hastings Exhibition (value £90 a year, tenable for five years, and open to certain schools in Cumberland, Westmorland, and Yorkshire), to Messrs. F. M. Wright, from Doncaster School; A. J. Tuckwell, from Leeds School; and W. Pratt, from Bradford School; and the Holme Exhibition (value £45 a year, tenable for five years, and open to natives of Cumberland or Westmorland), to M. G. H. Dixon, from St. Peter's School, York. There were seventy-five candidates.

A stained-glass window, in memory of the Rev. Isaac Williams, formerly a Fellow, has been placed in Trinity chapel.

CAMBRIDGE.

At Downing scholarships of £60 each were, on Tuesday, awarded to A. Hill for proficiency in natural science; F. Marryatt, mathematics; and H. W. Hunting, classics.

Mr. A. L. Francis, M.A., Head Master of Blundell School, Tiverton, has been elected a Fellow of Jesus. Mr. Francis graduated as sixteenth classic in 1870.

Mr. H. T. Bovey, B.A., has been elected a Fellow of Queens'. Mr. Bovey was twelfth wrangler in 1873.

The Burney Prize for 1873, for the best English essay on "Christian Prayer considered in relation to the belief that the Almighty governs the World by General Laws," has been adjudged to G. J. Romanes, B.A., Gonville and Caius. The author of the essay bearing the motto, "Here is the finger of God" (R. Browning), is requested to communicate with the Vice-Chancellor.

The following undergraduates have been elected scholars of Trinity:—S. A. Saunderson, R. Booth, T. C. Lewis, F. G. Trimmer, Viscount Ebrington, W. C. A. Ker, A. W. Sunderland, J. P. Postgate, J. F. Main, W. H. Williams, J. H. Poynting, W. G. Michell, E. H. C. Smith, and J. P. Smith. The moral science scholarship was adjudged to H. H. Turner, and the natural science scholarship to Sargent, of University College, London.

The Oxford and Cambridge Schools Examination Board have received applications for the appointment of examiners from the following schools:—Bedford Grammar School, Bishop-Stortford High School, Brighton College, Canterbury King's School, Clifton College, Dulwich College, Eton College, Gloucester College School; Elizabeth College, Guernsey; Victoria College, Jersey; King's College School, City of London School, Liverpool College, Manchester Grammar School, Nottingham High School, Richmond Grammar School, Sherborne School, Stepney Grammar School, Swansea Grammar School, Warminster School, Warrington Grammar School, Wellington College, Westminster School, Weymouth School, Winchester College. Most of the examinations will be held in the last fortnight of June or the last fortnight of July.

The proposals of the board for the reorganisation of the government of Trinity College, Dublin, were yesterday week considered by the junior Fellows. Four of the five proposals were unanimously adopted; the fifth was carried by a majority.

The spring meeting for conferring degrees in connection with the University of Edinburgh took place on Wednesday. The Lord Justice General, as Chancellor of the University, presided. Four clergymen received the degree of Doctor of Divinity—viz., the Rev. Alexander Bonar, Glasgow; the Rev. Jno. Christison, Biggar; the Rev. W. F. Moulton, Richmond; and the Rev. R. H. Story, Roseneath. The degree of Doctor of Laws was conferred upon the Duke of Buccleuch, Mr. T. Spencer Baynes, Professor of Logic in the University of St. Andrew's; Dr. Jno. Brown, Edinburgh, author of "Keb and his Friends"; Mr. W. G. Dixon, Sheriff of Lanarkshire; Mr. J. A. H. Murray, the well-known philologist; and Professor Reinhold Pauli, of Berlin.

The Guthrie Scholarship in St. Andrew's University has, after examination, been awarded to Mr. J. L. Stuart, Dundee.

On the departure of Dr. Jex Blake from Cheltenham College the prefects presented him with their photographs in a handsome album. A scholarship, value £36, has been founded out of subscriptions raised for a testimonial to him.

Mr. W. J. R. Pochin, B.A., late scholar of Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge, has been appointed to an assistant mastership in the King's School, Bruton.

Mr. J. T. Hibbert, late M.P. for Oldham, presided at a distribution of prizes to students in the evening classes of Owens College, Manchester, on Tuesday night. Principal Greenwood reported that the total number of evening students this session was 889, as compared with 557 in the last session. At the matriculation examinations of the University of London during the academical year eight evening students passed—two in the honours division, three in the first division, and three in the second. Undergraduate exhibitions of £5 each have been awarded to Mr. Alfred Stone, who was seventh, and to Mr. W. E. Powell, who was nineteenth, in honours; and an exhibition of £2 10s. to Mr. E. Law. One evening student took a B.A. degree, passing in the second division. In the competition for the ten Whitworth scholarships in July last two evening-class students were successful—Mr. S. Dixon and Mr. C. Bullock. Mr. Houldsworth, in moving a vote of thanks to Mr. Hibbert, stated that, in addition to Mr. Langworthy's bequest of £10,000 for the establishment of twenty annual scholarships, another sum of £5000 had been placed in their hands, for the benefit of the college, from Mr. Samuel Fielden.

A letter to the Times suggests a reform in connection with the goods traffic on railways. The proposal is analogous to that of establishing a "clearing" system for the goods trucks, which now run over an immense amount of waste mileage.

SKETCHES FROM COOMASSIE, BY OUR SPECIAL

AL ARTIST: THE KING'S SLAUGHTERING PLACE.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

It is noticeable that the Home-Rule Irish members preserve a steady and compact attitude, most of them being very assiduous in their attendance in the House, while their commander-in-chief, Mr. Butt, seems, as it were, constantly passing up and down their line of battle, and is always ready when the moment comes to lead them into action. Individual members of the body every now and then come out on their own account, and notably Mr. O'Donnell, who is almost the most recent recruit, having been seated for Galway since the general election. He has had some passages with two of the subordinate officials of the Government, which served to illustrate the careless insolence with which up to a certain point Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had chosen to treat Irish questions and Irish members, and the faculty for smartness of repartee of Lord George Hamilton. It is generally supposed that Home Rule means a Parliament in Ireland; but if so Mr. Butt is pursuing an odd—what some people would call an Irish—that is, a “bull”-like policy. For he has introduced three measures, which are intended to assimilate completely certain institutions in Ireland to some of the same nature in England. On the face of it, this would appear to be drawing more closely together the principles of administration in the two, rather than separating them; but perhaps there is beneath all this a wily, concealed purpose, which will ultimately eventuate in the promotion of Home Rule. The first of these measures was received on the part of the Government by Sir Michael Hicks-Beach with something like disdain, both of language and manner, and he opposed it in that forced, loud tone of voice which he has lately assumed, and which is unnatural to him; and, after a heated discussion, it was rejected by a majority which was Conservatively conclusive. Under the supposition that unequivocal and scornful antagonism would be preserved by the Government, by their representative the Secretary for Ireland, towards all his measures, Mr. Butt, in proposing his second bill, took the aggressive line, and made a passionate speech, proclaiming with vehemence that no Irishman, himself in particular, should with impunity be treated as an inferior creature, or his country as a conquered one, which, by-the-by, it happens to be. He wasted a great deal of patriotic indignation, as the result proved. For it had occurred that, early on that evening, Sir Michael Hicks-Beach had been on particularly high ropes with Mr. O'Callaghan, and, being apparently in an acrid state of temper, it was only reasonable to anticipate that he would have opposed the bill, as it were, in a towering passion. Possibly something had come to pass in the interval between his two appearances—something connected with that conciliatory tone which Mr. Disraeli has begun towards the Irish members, and which was illustrated ad absurdum by his saying that he should be glad to have three Irishmen as Lords of the Treasury if he could get them; for, lo and behold! Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, with a change of spirit, in tones gentle as those of a sucking dove, accepting, and declaring that if there was a country and a people that he loved (perhaps in the same way that Isaac Walton loved the worm he was impaling on his fish-hook), it was Ireland and the Irish. At once that generous nature which is popularly attributed to their race asserted itself amongst the Irish members, and there was a chorus of effusions of gratitude, and the whole atmosphere was charged with mutual blessings. It was very shocking, but there were some people who were brutal enough to think all this very amusing, and some did not even have the decency to make their laughter covert.

There is to be, after all, a “blazing” question before the House this Session. It has been proved to demonstration by undeniable authority that we have no navy, and the new First Lord of the Admiralty, with emphasis and solemnity, has declared that he will have an overwhelming and efficient one, regardless of the expense. The development of this policy was gradual, and in this wise. On the advent of the Navy Estimates, Admiral Elliot, who is member for a dock-yard borough, and whose main, if not entire, idea is probably to get as many men employed in the Government naval establishments as possible, delivered as long, as dreary, as un-rhetorical, and inconsequent a speech as could well vex the ears of his audience; but, his pounding and floundering notwithstanding, he managed to convey the suggestion that it is absolutely necessary to build more ships, and to repair those which have a crazy existence, to abandon building by private contract, and therefore to fill the dockyards with men. In the course of two speeches, Mr. E. J. Reed, the ex-Constructor of the Navy (who, by the way, speaks exceedingly well, and in the manner that just hits the general taste of the House), though not exactly admitting that all our existing ironclads, for many of which he is responsible, were worthless, was emphatic in his opinion that more money must be spent on the Navy. Then Sir John Hay, in what may be called his most frenzied manner, spoke by the card, giving the names and condition of almost every ship afloat, the result being that he provoked Mr. Ward Hunt to that portentous declaration that, notwithstanding the un-nautical cut of his jib, while he was First Lord of the Admiralty he would not have squadrons of dummies and a fleet upon paper only. The late Admiralty officials, Mr. Goschen and Mr. Shaw-Lefevre, were passionate in their own vindication; but their assertions amounted to no more than this—that they had kept the Navy in as efficient a state as was possible for the money they had to spend on it, which is begging the whole question. As has been said, here is a point of departure for a hot controversy, in which parties will be ranged against each other—at least in debate.

The legislative efforts of private members are reduced to a minimum, and Tuesdays and Fridays, and even Wednesdays, are fast becoming Parliamentary half-holidays. The cause of this is not far to seek. With that tact which with him is a sixth sense, Mr. Disraeli, in filling the subordinate offices in his Ministry, selected many of those members of the Conservative party who had proved their capacity for dealing with questions by persistently bringing forward motions or bills, which it was said, profanely, were the embodiments of their crotchets, and he carefully placed them in departments where they could by no possibility come into relation with their pet subjects. Of course they are all silent now, and a number of motions and bills for which they were accountable will be heard of no more. The Liberal members who mounted hobbies were even more numerous, and they rode them unmercifully. But as naturally all their legislative efforts were obnoxious to the Conservatives, and were the cause of many controversial debates on private-member nights, on Wednesdays in particular, in the presence of the Ministerial majority they have undergone eclipse, if not extinction. There were measures which private Liberals used regularly to carry, some through several stages, and some through all their stages in the Commons, but which were strangled while in their infant state in the Lords, and which regularly came up smiling year after year in the Lower House. These have not appeared at all this Session, notable instances being Sir Thomas Chambers's Bill for Legalising Marriage with a Deceased Wife's Sister and Mr. Osborne Morgan's Burial Bill. Such is the state of private memberdom, especially on the Opposition side, that the Liberals ought gratefully to appreciate Mr. Disraeli's half-baiting saying—when he was applied to to take up one of the few bills which has been the outcome of Liberal private memberdom—that “it would be only courteous to reserve something for the gentlemen of the Opposition to do.”

It may be interesting to some persons to know that Mr. Macdonald, the working-man member for Stafford, has delivered his maiden speech. It was brief, being only prefatory to moving for some returns connected with accidents in mines, a subject of which he may be presumed to know something. He was very deliberate in his utterance, clear in his statements, and made no attempt at elocutionary flourishes, while his demeanour was at once manly and modest.

PARLIAMENTARY REVIEW.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On the motion of the Duke of Richmond, it was resolved, yesterday week, to present a humble address to the Queen in reply to the Royal Message recommending the House to concur in enabling her Majesty to grant Sir G. J. Wolseley the sum of £25,000, and to assure her Majesty that the House will cheerfully concur in enabling such provision to be made.

The Archbishop of Canterbury propounded, on Monday, a bill for the better discipline of the Church—one enabling the episcopal authorities to deal with clergymen who may introduce irregular practices into their services. Lord Carnarvon laid on the table the report of the Fiji Commissioners, and said he had no official information of the cession of the islands, and at present he could give no opinion as to the policy of annexation. The Cattle Diseases (Ireland) Bill was read the second time.

On Tuesday the Bishop of Peterborough obtained the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the laws relating to patronage, simony, and exchange of benefices in the Church of England. The Mutiny Bill and the Marine Mutiny Bill were read the second time.

On Thursday the Mutiny Bills were read the third time and passed. The Real Property Limitation Bill, the Land Titles and Transfer Bill, the Real Property (Vendors and Purchasers) Bill, and the Local Government Provisional Orders Bill were each read the second time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

In the course of the preliminary business, yesterday week, it was stated by Mr. Disraeli that M. de Lesseps could not practically close the Suez Canal, as he had threatened, in a moment of irritation. The first motion on going into Supply—one by Mr. B. Cochrane, urging the granting of pensions to the families of deceased civil servants—was soon over, having been disposed of by the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Then Mr. Brassey made a comprehensive speech on the Royal Naval Reserves, and the other reserves of the Navy, describing them as in a far more satisfactory condition than certain pessimists would allow, and suggesting means for their enlargement and improvement. The policy and administration of the late Admiralty in reference to the reserves was effectively vindicated by Mr. Goschen. Mr. Norwood, who had the next motion, asking that the power of the Unseaworthy Ships Commission should be extended, so as to comprehend the question of the supply of seamen to the mercantile marine, drew a strong picture of the present deterioration of our mercantile sailors; but he added suggestions for remedying the existing state of things. The prevalent opinion as to the deterioration of seamen was adopted by Mr. C. M. Palmer, the member for North Durham. After Sir Charles Adderley had had his official say, the discussion did not last long, and the House went into Committee of Supply. A vote of £657,000 for the expenses of the Army Purchase Commission was agreed to, and afterwards about twenty votes in class 2 (public offices) of the Civil Service Estimates. The remainder of the sitting was occupied chiefly with a discussion on Mr. Butt's bill to assimilate the municipal franchise in Ireland to that in England, which was opposed by Ministers, and defeated by a majority of 37.

On Monday the Mutiny and Marine Mutiny Bills having been read the third time and passed, the state of our dockyards was discussed for some time; a grant of £25,000 was voted, with cheers, to Sir Garnet Wolseley—Mr. Disraeli, in moving the grant, stating that Sir Garnet had, with characteristic modesty, declined a baronetcy and an hereditary income; the usual statement of the Navy Estimates was made by Mr. Ward Hunt, when the condition of the Navy generally was debated; and the East India Annuity Funds Bill was considered in Committee.

A Select Committee was appointed on Tuesday to inquire into the social and sanitary wants of the Forest of Dean; the Betting Bill was passed through Committee; and the Municipal Privileges (Ireland) Bill was read the second time, after a long debate, sustained chiefly by the Irish members.

The Revenue Officers' Disabilities Bill, introduced by Mr. Monk, was, with the sanction of the Government, read the second time on Wednesday. The object of the measure is to relieve revenue officers from the existing prohibition against taking an active part in election proceedings. Mr. Lopes then moved the second reading of the Juries Bill, the principal proposals in which were to extend the area from which juries were summoned by conferring qualifications upon lodgers, and in other ways; to increase the pay of common jurymen from eightpence to five shillings a case; and to confer upon the Judge a limited power to order the trial to proceed in the event of the illness or death of sitting jurymen. The bill, which is substantially the same as that introduced by the late Government in 1872, was, amid a general chorus of approval, ordered to be read the second time. The Attorney-General, replying to observations made during the conversation, intimated that there was a possibility of the adoption of the bill as a Government measure. On this point he would communicate definitively with his colleagues before the House went into Committee on the bill, and in any case promised the hon. member his cordial support. The Conjugal Rights (Scotland) Bill having been read the second time, the House adjourned.

On Thursday, in reply to Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, Mr. Disraeli said her Majesty's Government have recommended that a mark of distinction be conferred upon Captain Glover in consideration of the services performed in the Ashantee war. On the report of the Committee of Ways and Means Mr. Gladstone, in a speech of considerable length, reviewed the proposals of the Chancellor of the Exchequer and expressed his approval of them generally. He, however, thought that when the country could afford it the income tax ought to be wholly abolished. At the same time, he thanked the Chancellor of the Exchequer for his proposal to reduce that tax, considering it a step towards entire repeal. He did not quite agree with his right honourable friend's proposal to get rid of the horse duty altogether, believing that it would lead to claims connected with the locomotive interest of the country which it would be difficult to resist, and under the circumstances impossible to satisfy. In conclusion, he paid a brilliant compliment to the Chancellor of the Exchequer for the statesman-like abilities which he exhibited in his financial policy. The Chancellor of the Exchequer said the Government felt themselves justified in assuming that there would be an increase in the Customs' receipts, considering what had been the progress in years past. The consumption of tobacco would, he thought, be kept up in the ensuing year; and, from what he had seen of the statistics of articles of consumption up to March 31, he believed that there would be a great increase in the imports of bacon, hams, butter, and other articles of food. When he estimated the Customs as likely to produce £400,000 more than they had done last year, he believed the figures were ridiculously low. Turning to Excise, the chief articles which contributed to it were malt and spirits. As to the former, they felt tolerably certain of its increase; and as for spirits, although he estimated an increase of £750,000, still the consumption of spirits had fallen off greatly since 1852. There seemed to be an idea abroad that from what was said by the First Lord of the Admiralty on Monday that his right hon. friend intended to submit a supplementary estimate for ironclads which would take a large sum of money, if it would not entirely absorb the surplus. Now, whilst the Government were determined to put the Navy in a state of efficiency, they did not propose to disturb the financial position of the country; but they would stand by their estimates of the revenue and expenditure. Mr. Goschen, in referring to the statement recently made by Mr. Ward Hunt, said that the whole difference which seemed to frighten some people was a matter of £100,000 in an annual expenditure of £10,000,000. Mr. Joshua Fielden proposed a resolution declaring that the malt tax should be reduced. Mr. Storer seconded the motion. After a prolonged discussion, the amendment was rejected by 244 to 17. The House then went into Committee.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

A brilliant conversation was given by the President of the Royal Society, Dr. Hooker, and Fellows of the Royal Society, on Wednesday evening, at their rooms in Burlington House.

A distinguished company assembled, yesterday week, at University College, Gower-street, on the occasion of the annual soirée which was given by the members of the Quekett Microscopical Club.

Mr. Wingfield Malcolm, of Poltalloch, late M.P. for Boston, and Mr. Macrae Moir, have been appointed the hon. secretaries of the Highland Society of London, in lieu of Sir Patrick Colquhoun and Dr. Ramsay of Inveresk, who retire.

The annual spring muster and march-out of the volunteer force of the city of London was held last Saturday, and was witnessed by a large number of spectators, both at the place of parade and along the entire route to Hyde Park.

The Times understands that a Junior Reform Club, formed upon the same political basis as the Reform Club, is about to be established. The entrance fee will be ten guineas, with an annual subscription of six. A limited number of life members will be admitted on payment of one hundred guineas.

About twenty men were at work at the Alexandra Palace, yesterday week, upon a cornice near the central transept, when the cornice gave way, carrying with it a portion of wall and scaffolding. A man who was employed underneath was killed, and eight of those who fell were conveyed to St. Bartholomew's Hospital, four suffering from severe injuries.

The deliveries of tea in London estimated for last week were 3,024,400 lb., which is an increase of 2,184,305 lb. compared with the previous statement. The amount withdrawn from bond on Saturday last was 2,576,333 lb., the requirements for immediate consumption only having been previously taken pending the announcement of the Budget.

In the Court of Exchequer, on Tuesday, the ancient and now merely honorary offices of “Postman” and “Tubman” were severally conferred on Mr. R. E. Webster and Mr. Anstey, as senior members of the outer Bar—the former holders, Mr. A. Cohen, Q.C., and the Hon. A. Theisger, Q.C., having vacated the posts in question by their acceptance of silk gowns.

Lord Shaftesbury presided, on Wednesday, at the annual meeting of the Reformatory and Refuge Union, when it was reported that during the year over £2000 had been expended in grants to various institutions. Mr. W. Noel, M.P., in moving the first resolution, affirmed that there was still much juvenile destitution lying beyond the range of the school boards.

Mr. Forsyth, M.P., writes to the Times:—“I find it so generally stated in the newspapers that I declined the office of Solicitor-General on the ground that my seat for Marylebone is not safe, that I think it is only due to the electors of that borough to say that this is an entire mistake. I have perfect confidence that my seat for Marylebone is absolutely safe.” Mr. Forsyth adds that the office was not offered to him.

The Royal Botanic Society held its second spring flower show of the season on Wednesday last, under the most favourable auspices as regards the weather. In that respect—and a fine day is the crowning glory of a flower exhibition—the summer flower show cannot surpass that of Wednesday.

Teaching the dumb to speak was, on Wednesday, shown to be no paradox, Lord Granville taking the chair at an interesting meeting in Fitzroy-square, at which an examination of deaf-mute pupils clearly demonstrated the fact that the motions of the lips can be followed and repeated by 99 out of 100 of the youngest children, who, having been deaf from their birth, are, as an ordinary consequence, dumb.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 101,016, of whom 35,418 were in workhouses and 65,598 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 8532, 12,275, and 32,070 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 796, of whom 512 were men, 227 women, and 57 children under sixteen.

The Prince of Wales presided, on Wednesday night, at the eighteenth festival of the Royal Medical Benevolent College, which was held at Willis's Rooms. His Royal Highness was supported by the Duke of Teck, Earl Granville, the Marquis of Hamilton, and a number of eminent members of the medical profession. The subscriptions received during the evening amounted to £1780, including one hundred guineas from his Royal Highness.

A deputation from the council and special committee on dwellings of the Charity Organisation Society, yesterday week, waited upon the Home Secretary, and brought under his notice the deplorable condition of the dwellings inhabited by a considerable proportion of the working classes in London. Amongst the speakers were the Earl of Shaftesbury, Lord Napier & Ettrick, Sir Sydney Waterlow, M.P., and Mr C. M. Lamson. Mr. Cross promised that the subject should receive from the Government that attentive consideration which its great importance demanded.

The forty-second season of the Sacred Harmonic Society at Exeter Hall closes on Friday next, May 1, when Sir Michael Costa's oratorio, "Naaman," will be performed, under the direction of the composer. The principal vocalists engaged for its representation are Madame Alvsleben, Madame Patey, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Mr. Santley.

At a full meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute, on Monday, at its apartments at 8, Adelphi-terrace, Mr. Edmund W. Gosse, of the British Museum, read a paper on the Ethical Condition of the Early Scandinavian Peoples, in which he illustrated the peculiar features of the civilisation of Scandinavia in Pagan times, and showed in what salient points that civilisation differed from the spontaneous developments of morality in other cultivated heathen races—the Elder or Poetic Edda of Semund Sigfusson being taken as the text.

There were 2542 births and 1339 deaths registered in London last week, the deaths being 304 below the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 489 and 499, declined last week to 460, and were 81 below the average; 179 resulted from phthisis, 159 from bronchitis, and 91 from pneumonia. There were 45 deaths from measles, 18 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 46 from whooping cough, 23 from different forms of fever, and 15 from diarrhoea. The 45 fatal cases of measles exceeded the average. The 23 deaths referred to fever included 2 certified as typhus, 16 as enteric or typhoid, and 5 as simple continued fever.

Vice-Chancellor Hall, on Tuesday, gave judgment in the suit brought by Baroness de Billing, whose marriage with Admiral Carnegie had been dissolved, to recover possession of a sum of £10,000, given to her for her separate use shortly after her marriage to her first husband, but over which he still claimed marital control. The Vice-Chancellor held that the money was the absolute property of Baroness de Billing, and that Admiral Carnegie, in whose name it had been invested, was merely a trustee for her. There would, therefore, be a decree that the sum of £10,000, minus about £220, which had been paid to her, was her absolute property, and Admiral Carnegie must pay to her interest at the rate of 4 per cent on the fund from the time when he ceased to pay dividends.

The School Board for London met on Wednesday, Sir Charles Reed in the chair. Mr. Peek's offer of £500 for the encouragement of religious education in board schools was the subject of a conversation, in which a wish was expressed for the consideration of the question at once. Several members, however, objected to this, and it was stated by the Rev. B. Waugh that a deputation from the London Board of Congregational Ministers desired to express their views upon the subject next Wednesday. An understanding was arrived at that the matter should be discussed on that day. On the motion of the Rev. Mr. Rodgers, the board has resolved to hold the first public examination for scholarships on June 20. There are already six scholarships at the disposal of the board—two established as a memorial of Lord Lawrence, Mr. W. H. Smith's, the Cloth-workers' Company's, one from the Women's Education Union, and another presented by the Duke of Bedford.

Mr. S. Cave, M.P., the Judge Advocate, presided on Wednesday at the twenty-seventh anniversary of the Earlwood Asylum for Idiots, which was held at the London Tavern. In proposing the loyal toasts, he referred to the warm interest taken in the charity by the Queen since the laying of the first stone by Prince Albert, to her gift of a watch to an inmate who had copied a drawing with much ability, and to the kindness of the Prince of Wales in attending a bazaar, opening a new wing, and presiding over the festival two years ago. Subsequently giving an interesting account of a visit to the institution, Mr. Cave mentioned the sensible and happy expression which prevails, a striking contrast to the poor idiot described in poetry and seen in the streets, the adoption of the family plan, so successfully applied to lunatics at Gheel, and the trust reposed in the inmates, who handle carpenters' tools and kitchen utensils with a smaller number of accidents than arise from quarrels among an equal number of outsiders. He spoke, also, of the strong religious and moral feeling which is developed, and of the education which is imparted. The chairman urged the necessity of county asylums, and testified to the improbability of a large proportion of idiots, some of whom at Earlwood are of high position, and pay £200 a year, thus benefiting their poorer fellow-creatures. About one hundred ladies and gentlemen were present. The secretary, Mr. William Nicholas, announced subscriptions and donations to the amount of £2411, of which £814 was contributed by London bankers.

By the kindness of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, Upper Norwood, gave a concert at Stafford House on Wednesday afternoon. The occasion was honoured by the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Louise, the Duke and Duchess of Argyll, the Duke of Westminster, and many other influential supporters of the cause of the education of the blind. The music, which was instrumental as well as vocal, was given with such skill and ability that it was well worth listening to, even without remembering that the performers were totally blind. The performances of this blind orchestra were not only interesting but most pathetic and touching; and if (says the Times) we could make our readers see the band of sightless singers and players as they stood ranked upon the broad staircase of the noble hall of Stafford House, drawing forth sweet music from instruments which they had never seen, and which they held and handled with the peculiar tenderness and fondness with which one might caress some delicate living thing, we do not think it would be long before the £17,000 needed to complete the buildings and furniture of the college were subscribed. After the music was over some of the musicians went through the rooms and galleries of the house in parties of three and four, holding hands like children, and seeming to feel the beauty that was around them while they listened to the explanations given by the person who led them. The offices of the college are at 23, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square, and Sir Rutherford Alcock is the honorary treasurer.

Mr. Holker, the Solicitor-General, was, on Thursday, re-elected, unopposed, for Preston.

The Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, has reverted to the former plan of two terms per annum.

The Birmingham magistrates, on Tuesday, passed a resolution expressive of their opinion of the salutary operations of the Licensing Act of 1872.

It having been decided to issue Henry-Martini rifles to a number of regiments still armed with the Snider breechloader, orders have been received at the Royal Arsenal, Woolwich, for the Royal Laboratory to manufacture 17,000,000 Henry-Martini cartridges during the current year, instead of 6,000,000, the number previously ordered. More than 200 additional boys will therefore be taken on in the East Laboratory.

NEW BOOKS.

NOVELS.

A story called John Fenn's Wife, by Maria Lewis (publisher, S. Tinsley), is fresh and vigorous in conception, and there is much interest in the plot, which we can relish the better as it is compressed into one modest volume. Miss Lewis could not have told the tale more effectively in three volumes. It has the colouring of life, and a brisk movement. The heroine is a lovely and innocent young bride, to whom, soon after her marriage, a bitter secret concerning her parentage, and one likely to be thought a disgrace to the husband she loves, has been cruelly revealed by a gang of base intriguers. We shall not follow their example, or rather fulfil their threat, of making public the fact referred to, because we would rather let our readers find it out for themselves from the book, which is quite worth that small trouble. They need not fear, in this instance, any morbid and deleterious playing with a criminal situation. Both Grace Fenn and her much-injured mother are pure women, and true to duty. Another person has been very wicked, but that was twenty years ago, and he is chastened by remorse on his death-bed. As for John Fenn, his manly character and generous behaviour throughout this distressing affair must be considered almost to deserve the possession of such a charming little wife.

There is reason, unfortunately, to believe that scoundrels who may do themselves the pleasure of reading Lady Moretown's Daughter, by Mrs. Eiloart (Henry S. King and Co.), will feel very considerably elated at the fate which befalls a certain young gentleman, for whom something nasty ought decidedly to have been reserved. No conscientious scoundrel could possibly complain that he was not treated as well as he deserved when the poor lady whom he has hounded and brought to the brink of marriage dies suddenly on the very eve of the wedding and leaves him all her large property. It is true that he was defeated in the attempt he afterwards made to run away with another man's wife; but no scoundrel worthy of the name would take that much to heart when he considered that his wealth was still left to him, and that—if so common a saying may be applied to the worshipful company of married women—there are as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it. On the other hand, the noble young man of the story will hardly come up to the standard of his own sex, whatever the fairer sex may think of his behaviour; for he who, in the contest for a lady's hand, tries to promote his own suit by the unmanly process of pleading a rival's bad disposition, would be not unjustly described as a "skunk." Unless, indeed, it be seriously maintained that all is fair in love and war. Nor can the noble young man be entirely acquitted of blame in that he practised deception "all for the best." Married ladies will learn from the story what ill effects may result from giving way to the desire, however natural, of running away from their husbands and children with other gentlemen; for though, in the particular case under consideration, the only alternative suggested is suicide, and though, for this once, all comes pretty right in the end, it is quite clear that the consequences might have been fearful, and that the sins of mothers may be visited upon daughters to a most deplorable extent. The tale is written in a broad, free, vigorous style; and there is many a telling stroke of character-drawing as well as more than one effective situation.

The apparently inexhaustible mine of bigamy is worked, not without effect, in Too Late, by Mrs. Newman (Henry S. King and Co.). Who or what is "too late" cannot be stated with perfect confidence; but the words are believed to be intimately connected with the remorse felt by an old lady who, had time and paralysis allowed her to follow the promptings of her better feelings, would have made reparation for the injustice she had perpetrated towards her nephew. That nephew, however, is not likely to find much favour in the eyes of right-minded readers, for, from the moment when he seems to have jumped out of the frying-pan into the fire—that is to say, consoled himself for the loss of one young woman below him in position by marrying another young woman of still lower social status—he is treated with a delicate attention to which no qualities of his own can be said to have clearly entitled him, and for which he appears to have been indebted solely to the author's caprice. But this is, no doubt, quite in accordance with one's experience of real life, wherein he whom the ladies delight to honour is so often—unless, indeed, he wear a military or a naval or a clerical uniform, which is, of course, a sufficient and satisfactory explanation—somebody in whom it is difficult for his own sex to "see anything." The character of the girl who, at the end, is visited with so terrible a punishment is, at the beginning, artistically, though not too obviously, foreshadowed, and is never, as the tale proceeds, lost sight of; and admirable are the few sketches given of the petty, spiteful, aggravating way in which lovely woman will sometimes stoop to speak and act.

Double bigamy is the burden of "Ursula's narrative," as told, with all a practised and successful story-teller's command of resources, in the volume entitled Lady Hester, by Charlotte M. Yonge (Macmillan and Co.). Of the many thousands who, it is to be presumed, will peruse the narrative, there will be very few, it may be safely predicted, who will not come to the conclusion that, unless you are very anxious indeed to believe that your husband or your wife is dead, you should not trust to the investigations and report of any third party, however conscientious and diligent and credible, but should personally scour land and sea, or, at any rate, take care that advertisements are inserted in all the principal newspapers of all countries, with the addition of the familiar request, "Other newspapers please copy." If these precautions be taken and an intimation be at the same time given that the person sought for "will hear of something to his (or her) advantage," it is long odds that, within a twelvemonth, some trace will be discovered of the missing husband or wife, if he or she be living in any part of England or America. But things were different at the date of the double bigamy committed in Ursula's narrative. The consequent complications were frightful. We all know that a temporary embarrassment was created in the case of so humble an individual as Jack Robinson when a fair creature was too credulous of hearsay; but the embarrassments are evidently increased a thousandfold when a reputed widow and a reputed widower both marry again, the latter more than once, after they have become father and mother of a daughter whose son may be the heir to titles or estates or both. The narrative, which is almost more painful than interesting, contains an original, and probably a correct, study of a certain type of womanly nature; but it is a type which, notwithstanding the beautiful conversion effected, one would be sorry to see on the increase in a Christian country. As a reasonable being, at any rate before he left his own country, the palm must be awarded to Joel Lea, the backwoodsman.

Power, eloquence, and originality characterise Nathaniel Vaughan, Priest and Man, by Frederika Macdonald (Hurst and Blackett), to a degree very unusual among modern novels. The subject is accurately indicated by the title; it is the conflict of the ascetic theory of life, impersonated in the austere vicar of a small country parish, with pure, genial human feeling, represented by the innocent and beautiful girl who, involuntarily, and sorely against his will, effects the conquest of his heart. The issue is tragic: Nathaniel Vaughan's theory breaks down, and he conceals his remorse and anguish in a Trappist convent. The shipwreck of a noble nature has seldom been more tragically portrayed; while the painfulness of the situation is relieved by the exquisite attractiveness and ultimate felicity of the heroine, and the humour of the scenes of village life. Apart from its literary merits, the book possesses especial interest at present from its intimate connection with two of the leading questions of the day—ritualism and the revolt of the agricultural labourers. The forlorn condition of the peasantry in the south of England and the insufficiency of mere philanthropy for its relief are set forth with extraordinary power.

A wolf in sheep's clothing, a work of semi-philosophical fiction in three bright blue volumes suggestive of the ordinary novel, has crept into the novelistic flock: it is called Annals of the Twenty-ninth Century (Samuel Tinsley). No author stands confessed upon the titlepage. "If the contents please thee, and be for thy use, suppose the Man in the Moon or whom thou wilt to be the author," is the exhortation addressed to the reader. The form of writing is autobiographical; and what is recorded is the imaginary experiences of one Diogenes Milton, who "was born in the year of Our Lord, July 4th, 2776." The drift of the book will be at once perceived; the book itself belonging to the category of those of which "The Coming Race" was the precursor. The miracles which will in the course of ten centuries have been accomplished by the advancement of science and the development of the human mind are the author's chief theme; the person whose autobiography is supposed to be set forth in the three volumes being described as "the tenth President of the World-Republic." One of the peculiarities most observable in the work is the nomenclature: a combination of two well-known names is bestowed upon the celebrities of the future, so that the subject of the autobiography is dubbed Diogenes Milton; a great political authority Cobden Bright; an astronomical teacher or professor or genius, Copernicus Galileo; and so on. Of course opportunity is given, and it is seized with avidity, for expressing strong opinions about the shortsightedness of our own day and the objectionable nature of our present habits, manners, customs, and institutions; and a great many truths, not to say truisms, are uttered. The progress that the human race will have made at the date of the twenty-ninth century may be faintly inferred from a statement to the effect that Diogenes Milton, having paid a visit to the planet Mars, and "just circum-journeyed its realms," receives a "stello-gram" recalling him, and is immediately "re-fired by special bomb to the world." Diogenes Milton is particularly hard upon smokers, whom he describes as "semi-barbarians," who make "their mouths the bellows to puff in and out the noxious smoke of a certain weed, the effect of which was to divert the flow of saliva from the stomach to a spit-box." On the whole, there is much amusement, even if there be small profit, to be derived from the book; though a few pages at a time will be found about as much as ordinary faculties can undergo with impunity.

A brisk, dashing, vigorous novel, with plenty of life and action, is Broken Bonds, by Hawley Smart (Hurst and Blackett). A heartrending catastrophe—so heartrending that one stands aghast at the callousness of novelists who can doom to arbitrary destruction their sweetest characters, is cleverly led up to and powerfully described. The incident upon which the greatest and, perhaps it may be considered, a disproportionately large amount of descriptive talent is expended is calculated to make the reader bristle with excitement and expectation, produced, however, by no objectionable arts, but by perfectly honest and legitimate means. If the author be open to any sort of reproach, it is because he provokes us to sympathise with a most wilful and inexcusable burglar and to heave a sigh of regret when the consummate but highly amusing rascal fails to secure his audacious escape. To the author, moreover, must be ascribed the credit, so far as it goes, of having restored the drunken sailor to his olden standing amongst humorous characters; and even the light-hearted, rollicking, blundering Irishman, who might well have been supposed to have had every particle of life and fun squeezed out of him by romance-writers, is resuscitated with astonishing success. Whether any object be gained by constantly harping upon the hero's expensive but harmless peculiarity, which was to wear kid gloves at all times and under all circumstances, it is hardly worth while to dispute; but it is quite certain that, altogether, a better sustained and a more readable novel has not lately appeared amongst the multitudinous offspring of fiction.

SOUTH AFRICAN SKETCHES.

Our Artist in South Africa, Mr. Thomas Baines, F.G.S., sends us a sketch of an incident that took place in the journey of his party to the newly discovered gold-fields. It was the common practice of the officers of the party to walk on some distance ahead of the waggons, "prospecting for gold," as it is called, on each side of the road. On one of these occasions, Mr. Nelson, the indefatigable mineralogist, was in advance of the rest, when he met with the adventure so well illustrated by Mr. Baines. Happily, the lion, having a very substantial meal before him, contented himself with a warning growl and left the worthy mineralogist to pursue his way in peace. The lion of South Africa, however, is not the formidable beast described by travellers as infesting the jungles on the frontier of Algeria.

The Engraving, last week, of a picture by M. Bonifazi, called "Nina," was from a photograph published by the Berlin Photographic Company.

The Esquimaux returned to Dundee from the seal fishery on Wednesday. She has upwards of 10,000 seals, calculated to yield 130 tons of oil.

A serious accident occurred on Wednesday at Oakham, on the Midland Railway. The 12.50 passenger train from Leicester, when entering the station, was run into by a mineral train which was shunting, and some of the carriages were smashed. Several passengers were injured, and two, it is feared, fatally.

The annual spring show of the Royal Dublin Society, which was opened on Tuesday, was one of the largest ever held. There were over 228 bulls entered, of which 160 were short-horns. The other cattle numbered 120 head. The display of machinery and agricultural implements was unusually large and fine. The Challoner Plate, valued at £155, has been awarded to Major Myles O'Reilly, of Knock Abbey, Dundalk, with his Richard II. shorthorn bull. The Lord Lieutenant, accompanied by a numerous party, visited the ground on Wednesday, and was received by the council of the society. The Duke of Abercorn was then presented with an address from the members of the society.

SKETCHES OF SOUTH AFRICAN TRAVEL: THE LION AND DEAD ELEPHANT.

NATIVES OF UGOGO.

The readers of Mr. H. M. Stanley's book, relating his journey from the East Coast of Africa to the shores of Lake Tanganyika in search of Dr. Livingstone, must be familiar with Ugogo, as the name of a country, and Wagogo, the name of its people. This is one of the provinces traversed by the ordinary path of Arab traffic from the coast opposite Zanzibar to the interior, in the direction of Unyamwebe and Ujiji. It was visited by Captains Burton and Speke in 1857, and by Colonel Grant, with Captain Speke, not long afterwards. Our portraits of some of the natives, showing their grotesque fashions of hairdressing, are from sketches by Lieutenant Cameron, R.N., commander of the recent Livingstone Search and Relief Expedition.

The Ugogo country extends west of Usagara to Uyanzi. It is about eighty miles broad and one hundred miles in length. Its chief towns or villages are Mbuni, Matamburu, Khonko, and Kiwyeh. The Mgogo (this is the singular form of the plural name Wagogo, and denotes an individual of that nation) is a well-formed, robust man, with skin of a rich dark brown colour. His face is broad, and has in front almost a leonine aspect. The eyes are large and round, the nose flat, and the mouth large, but the lips are not monstrously thick. A warrior of this race carries a bow and sheaf of arrows, barbed or pronged; a couple of light javelins, and a broad-bladed spear, battle-axe, or club, with an oval shield of rhinoceros or elephant hide, painted black and white. His full costume, as a chief, includes a crimson robe and a head-dress of ostrich or eagle feathers. The houses of this people are built of mud and wattle; the apartments inclose a quadrangle, into which all their doors open. Their flat roofs of clay, spread upon a framework of wooden rafters and laths, are used for the storage of grain, pumpkins, and other provisions. The open space within this tembe, as the range of building is called, is occupied by cattle, goats, and fowls. The ruler of the nation is called the mtemi, and the aristocracy of chiefs are the manyapara. Their leader, the msagira, is next to the mtemi, assisting in the government as prime minister. The Wagogo levy tolls, or hongas, consisting of pieces of cloth, from every trader or other foreign traveller. When their demands are satisfied they are peaceable and friendly to strangers.

COOMASSIE.

Our Special Artist with the late British military expedition against the capital of the Ashantees has furnished to this week's publication several characteristic sketches of what he saw at Coomassie. One represents the horrible place, adjoining the city market, where the dead bodies of hundreds of human victims, slaughtered by the atrocious customs of the Ashantee kingdom, are thrown to lie unburied, or to be devoured by panthers, wild dogs, and carnivorous birds. This hideous feature of the Ashantee metropolis was described by Mr. Bowdich, and by the Rev. T. Freeman, when they visited Coomassie; and the reality was found by the officers and soldiers of our expedition, in February last, since Cramer and Co. found it necessary, on account of the French difficulties, as well as the advance made in the art of manufacturing, to make these instruments more useful as at their present time. Their heads having been engaged and their operations greatly extended, Cramers and Co. now call special attention to their Harmoniconiums, which, among many other advantages, offer a more effective, as well as a greater variety of tones, a larger number of stops, and a price much below that of all other eminent makers. Specifications and estimates of special instruments, with any required explanation of stops furnished on application. The Three-Years System originated by Cramer, and since adopted by other firms, is applied to all classes of instruments of Cramer and Co. and is carried out on a thorough, large and liberal scale only by themselves.

MEMORIAL OF BISHOP WILBERFORCE.

THE LATE MR. ALBERT WAY.

BURCKHARDT'S TOMB AT CAIRO.

THE AEROPHORE.

After an explosion of "fire-damp," the inflammable gas in a coal-mine, it often happens that men confined in the underground passages are suffocated by the "choke-damp," or carbonic acid gas, which usually follows such an explosion. To enter those passages for the purpose of rescuing the persons in danger is a service commonly attended with several hours' delay. An apparatus of French invention has lately been exhibited in the collieries at Wigan, which is designed to enable men, where there is danger from any bad gas, to walk through and even carry a light, with perfect safety. It is on the same principle as the diver's helmet and air-tube used for going about under water. The inventor is M. Denayrouze, a French engineer, who has improved on the apparatus devised by M. Rouquayrol ten years ago. There are two forms of the aerophore, as it is called, one with low-pressure action, the other with high pressure. An air-pump, or rather an air-condensing machine, is used to charge a number of portable cylinders with compressed air, which may be made of a density twenty or thirty times as great as that of the atmosphere, but this is never wanted in practice. The air in the machine is cooled and condensed by being forced through two layers of water, between which it is held inclosed. The portable cylinders, when filled with this condensed air, are sent down into the mine, with the men who are to use the air. Each man wears a mouthpiece, with a tube of vulcanised indiarubber, kept open by spiral wire, which communicates with the reservoir of air. But he could not endure to have the compressed air pass at once into his mouth and lungs. The air is therefore made first to pass through a regulator, which the man carries on his back. This regulator, the most essential novelty of the invention, as completed by M. Denayrouze, weighs only 8 lb. It is a vessel with an upper and a lower compartment. The lower, which is the larger compartment, holds the condensed air, as supplied from the reservoir at the further end of the tube. It communicates with the upper compartment, and so with the mouth-tube worn by the man to breathe the air, by means of a valve opening and closing in a cylinder with a piston rod ascending or descending. This is so adjusted that the action of the piston, and of the valve, depends on the man's breath at every draught of air inhaled by him. A smaller regulator, combined with the one for breathing air, is contrived for the air to be supplied to a lamp which the man carries with him, and which is like an ordinary safety-lamp in other respects. By means of the combined breath and lamp regulators, with the mouthpiece held between his teeth, a nose-piece closing his nostrils, and goggle spectacles, with expanding rims, serving to shield his eyes from injurious vapours, the man walks freely and safely through the most noxious compounds of subterranean gases. The office of Messrs. Denayrouze, and of Mr. R. Applegarth, their London agent, is at 63, Queen-street, Cannon-street.

THE LATE BISHOP WILBERFORCE.

A memorial cross has been erected at Evershed's Rough, near Dorking, on the spot where the late Bishop of Winchester, the accomplished Dr. Samuel Wilberforce, was killed by a fall from his horse, while riding with Earl Granville. The cross is a monolith of granite, 10 ft. high, upon a sunk mass of concrete 5 ft. deep and 10 ft. square. The inscription is the date of the Bishop's death, with no ornament but a bishop's pastoral staff across the initial letters of the name, and a floreated cross above. The sculptor is Mr. Gilliam, of Dorking. The cost of this monument has been defrayed by the late Bishop's family.

THE LATE MR. ALBERT WAY.

This gentleman, one of the most devoted and accomplished students of antiquarian learning, who died at Cannes on the 22nd ult., was highly esteemed among the British and foreign archaeologists of our time. He was a son of the Rev. Lewis Way, an evangelical clergyman residing in Paris, who established the English Protestant chapel in the Rue Marbeuf. Mr. Albert Way was employed from 1843 to 1846, as Director of the Society of Antiquaries, in compiling a catalogue of its museum and in other kindred labours. In 1844 he gave a new impetus to these studies by the formation of the Archaeological Institute of Great Britain and Ireland. Its annual meetings in different provincial towns have for many years occupied a position in the archaeological world analogous to those of the British Association in the scientific world. The local antiquities of each district have, in turn, derived permanent illustration from the dissertations delivered on the spot by such men as Professor Willis, Dr. Guest, Mr. Freeman, and Mr. Parker, as well as from the interest taken in them by the gentry and clergy of the several neighbourhoods. Mr. Way's own services to archaeology were far beyond what might have been gathered from his published contributions, numerous and valuable as they were, to the current antiquarian periodicals, or from the laborious editions which he undertook of the works of others. Even after his ill-health compelled him to retire from his official connection with the Institute, he still freely lent to every competent inquirer the advantage of his extensive acquaintance with the subjects belonging to its range of discussions, and with the persons who knew them best.

The Portrait of Mr. Way is from a photograph by Mr. G. Evans, of Worcester.

THE TOMB OF BURCKHARDT.

The famous Swiss traveller, Johann Ludwig Burckhardt, of Lausanne, died at Cairo in 1817, having passed many years in Egypt and Syria, and in the adjacent countries of Africa and Asia, disguised as a Mohammedan, under the name of Sheikh Ibrahim. He wandered about in the garb of a poor merchant or pedlar, walking barefoot, and driving an ass laden with goods for sale, while his attention was really occupied in exploring the ruins and other curiosities of the East. The ancient hewn city of Petra, in Edom, was discovered and examined by him. His grave, in the Mohammedan cemetery of Bab-el-Nasser at Cairo, has lately been cared for by the British Consul, Mr. E. T. Rogers, who has caused a marble monument to be erected over it. He was assisted in this good work by Hakekyan Bey. This monument bears on the headstone an Arabic inscription as follows:—"God is everlasting. This is the tomb of the deceased, in the mercy of God, Sheikh Hajj Ibrahim al Mahdy, son of Abdallah Burckhardt, of Lausanne. The date of his birth is 10 Moharrem, A.H. 1199. The date of his death, in the mercy of God, in Cairo, 6 Zilhejje, A.H. 1232." Around the four faces of the cenotaph is inscribed that chapter of the Koran called "Ayat ul Korsy," which is generally engraved on tombstones.

A county meeting was held at Ipswich, on Tuesday, presided over by Lord Stradbroke, at which resolutions for forming an Agricultural Labourers' Benefit Society were adopted.

At a meeting of the members of the Society of Arts, yesterday week, in their rooms, John-street, Adelphi—Sir Charles Trevelyan, Bart., presiding—a paper was read by General Sir Arthur Cotton on the Indian Famine, with especial reference to the means which should be adopted for the alleviation or prevention of future famines. Among the audience were several Hindoo gentlemen. The author dealt with the question in a paper of considerable length, which was listened to with great interest and warmly applauded.

By the report of the Printers' Pension, Almshouse, and Asylum Corporation, presented at the recent annual meeting, we regret to find that the income of the almshouses has not been sufficient to meet the expenditure. A debt of nearly £400 has been incurred, and it is proposed to raise that sum, as also, if possible, to create an endowment fund of £1000. Subscriptions in aid of these objects will be thankfully received by the secretary, Mr. J. S. Hodson, at the council chambers, 20, High Holborn. The almshouses, situated at Wood-green, are occupied by infirm printers and their wives or widows.

At the sitting of the Court of Queen's Bench last Saturday Dr. Kenely moved for a rule calling on the Crown to show cause why the case should not be sent to a new trial, upon various grounds, most of which were of a technical nature. The learned counsel also based his application on the undue influence which he alleged the Lord Chief Justice had brought to bear upon the jury in the course of his summing up, repeating, in softened language, the accusations which he had so profusely made during the trial. But he took nothing by his motion. Point after point was set up only to be knocked over. The Bench, with one accord, decided that the technical defects were of no weight whatever, while the plea of undue influence was disposed of by the intimation that if the Court had been differently constituted Dr. Kenely's exuberant zeal might have been visited with much more substantial punishments than the verbal rebukes of which he so bitterly complained.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

COMPOSITION OF THE ATMOSPHERE.

Mr. Walter Noel Hartley, F.C.S., on Thursday week began a course of four lectures on the Atmosphere and its relations to life. In his introductory remarks, after stating that this gaseous envelope of the earth was at least forty-five miles in thickness, he alluded to the opinion of Aristotle that the atmosphere is a material substance, and described and exhibited some of the defective experiments made to prove it. Galileo, however, in 1640, explained to the pump-makers of Florence why it was impossible to raise water higher than 32 feet by assuming that the pressure or weight of a column of the atmosphere could only support a column of water of the height of 32 feet; and Torricelli, his pupil, proved that, as mercury is nearly fourteen times heavier than water, a column of mercury 30 inches in height can be balanced by the air, thus discovering the barometer. Among the experiments proving that the air has weight, Mr. Hartley exhibited one devised especially for his lecture. About 20 cubic feet of air were pumped into an iron cylinder, the pressure within which amounted to fifty times that of the atmosphere outside, or 750 lb. to the square inch. By weighing it was proved that the cylinder had lost 7 oz. in weight when the air was allowed to escape. In 1774 Priestley discovered oxygen, obtaining it from red oxide of mercury by heat; and in the same year Lavoisier heated mercury in air, and found that, when the mercury was oxidised or burnt, the air had lost its property of supporting combustion and had diminished in volume; in fact, oxygen was absorbed by the mercury and nitrogen remained. After exhibiting the active property of oxygen as a supporter of combustion, and the neutral property of nitrogen which destroys it, Mr. Hartley showed phosphorus to be a very energetic absorber of oxygen. One fifth of the air in a cylinder in which phosphorus had been burnt had disappeared, the residuum being nitrogen. He then exhibited the apparatus used by Dumas and Bouscungault in 1841, with which they determined with great exactitude the true composition of the air. The nitrogen and oxygen were separated by heated metallic copper, which was converted into black oxide of copper. The following result was obtained in three days:—April 27, 22.93 O. and 77.07 N. per cent by weight; April 28, 23.03 O. and 76.97 N.; April 29, 23.0 and 76.97 N. This constancy in its composition led chemists—such as Prout, Debereiner, and Thomson—to the mistaken belief that air is a chemical compound of oxygen and nitrogen; while Dalton and Babinet erroneously imagined that the relative proportions of oxygen and nitrogen vary at different heights; that, as the air is a mixture of these gases, and as one gas is heavier than the other, the heavier will be more abundant at low levels. Mr. Hartley, in a series of experiments, showed that our atmosphere is really a mixture of its constituents. He exhibited the difference in the properties of combined and mixed nitrogen and oxygen, and even manufactured some air by mixing four bottles of nitrogen with one of oxygen. He said that the properties of our atmosphere are exactly those we should predict from such a mixture, while it has none of the properties of a compound. That the chief characteristic of a true chemical combination—namely, fixity in composition—is wanting, was shown by referring to the various and numerous analyses of Regnault, Bunsen, and Lewy, in 1851-2; while the more recent researches of Dr. Angus Smith reveal the fact that small variations in composition are constant under certain circumstances. This was proved by a diagram showing the composition of the air in various places in town and country, the average of very many analyses. This diagram explained why we feel the air at the seashore and on moors and such places fresh and invigorating; and it reduced to exact numbers what has hitherto been apparent only through vague sensations and what are apt to be termed fancies.

COMPLEMENTARY COLOURS AND NEUTRAL TINTS.

Mr. William Spottiswoode, LL.D., Tr. R.S., and Sec. R.I., gave the first evening discourse after Easter on Friday, the 17th inst. After alluding to the researches of Wheatstone, Tyndall, Clerk Maxwell, Lord Rayleigh, and others in regard to complementary colours and neutral tints, Mr. Spottiswoode exhibited and commented on some of the results obtained by himself by employing polarised light, which mainly agree with those given by Helmholtz, the eminent worker on this subject. If a beam of polarised light which has passed through a plate of crystal be analysed by a double-image prism two images appear tinted with complementary colours, which form white when made to overlap. If the plate be of quartz, cut perpendicularly to the axis, the images will change colour by a continuous sequence of tints when either polariser or analyser is turned continuously round. The colours so seen are, however, not simple colours of the spectrum, but mixed or residual tints—that is, the mixture of all those which remain when one or more have been extinguished. This is a direct deduction from the wave theory of light, and has been experimentally demonstrated by Mr. Spottiswoode. If a quartz plate of suitable thickness be used the spectrum of either of the images formed by the analyser will be crossed by a single dark band, which will move along the spectrum in one direction or the other, according to the direction in which either polariser or analyser is turned. It is this principle, said Mr. Spottiswoode, which enables us to use polarised light for investigating complementary colours; for, if we form the spectra of the two complementary images, we shall find in general that the dark band occupies one position in the ordinary and another in the extraordinary image. But, since the two images are complementary to one another, and the part extinguished in each is complementary to the part which remains, it follows that the part extinguished in one is the complementary of the part extinguished in the other; that is to say, the bands in the two spectra will always mark out two complementary portions of the spectrum. The bands thus produced are not sharply defined, like the Fraunhofer lines in the solar spectrum, but are bands with a core of minimum or zero illumination, gradually shading off at each side; so rapidly, however, that at a short distance from the core the adjoining colours appear in their full natural intensity. This being so, the colour suppressed in any band will be the tint compounded of portions of all the colours comprised within the visible limits of the band. The whole of the colour corresponding to the core will be suppressed; but of those colours on each side only portions, smaller and smaller as they recede from the core. When one band arrives at the green, moving in the direction of the red, the other or complementary band is just disappearing in the red. But at the same time another band is beginning to appear in the violet. We cannot, therefore, say that the green has for its complementary the red rather than the violet; the complementary in question is, in fact, a mixture of the two—a mixture which, when taken alone, is a reddish purple. In his experiments, by the extinction of different parts of the spectrum, Mr. Spottiswoode was enabled to deduce the composition of the complementary colours; and with an arrangement of the images and colours of polarised light, given by two double-image prisms, he produced fifteen tints or combinations of colour; and with an arrangement of the images and colours given by three double-image prisms, he produced 255 tints. The Duke of Northumberland was in the chair.

ERRONEOUS ESTIMATE OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTION.

Mr. John Robert Seeley, M.A., Professor of Modern History in the University of Cambridge, gave the first of a course of three lectures on the Age of the French Revolution on Saturday last. In his opening remarks he said that the effect of the French Revolution upon the public mind had subsided since 1866, and it was now looked upon more coolly since France had lost her superiority and power of disturbing Europe. Formerly this revolution had been regarded by some as the source of inexhaustible benefits, and to it were attributed the fall of despotism and an improved condition in regard to wealth, social condition, and government. That there was a sanguine ferment of liberty in the public mind in 1815 was evident all over the Continent, and even in the Spanish American republics; but this, Mr. Seeley said, was not due to the French Revolution. It had been said that France waged war for twenty-three years, and gained her ends: though she herself was subdued, yet liberty was victorious. Napoleon has been justified; his ambition has been styled a virtue; and he has been regarded as the founder of a school of freedom for Europe. This, Mr. Seeley said, is transparent mystification, and has produced terrible results. The excesses and unparalleled disasters of the wars of the Revolution discredited liberty, and led France back to a more terrible despotism. Napoleon has been termed the soldier of democracy; but he rather put it down, and endeavoured to pacify slaves by showing them glory. Pitt, like William III. and Richelieu, endeavoured to overcome him by coalitions; but these, for the first time, failed. After the battle of Austerlitz, 1805, all the worst fears of Europe were realised; but, after the battle of Friedland (Napoleon's "crowning mercy"), there was the silence of the grave. Then appeared an unprecedented remedy, produced by sheer necessity. A new power arose which in seven years overthrew the new universal monarchy. This power was not derived from the French Revolution, which Castlereagh acknowledged in 1802 to be crushed. It was the general rising of the peoples to resist Napoleon. It first appeared in Spain in 1808, a memorable year for liberalism; then in Germany, Austria, and Russia. Napoleon was now not met by standing armies, but by the people themselves and their resources; and this great movement began through the failure of the old despotic Governments to cope with the enemy. The Princes lost their influence, and there was a general craving for constitutional government. The people triumphed over the adversary of their country, and therefore claimed to be treated in quite another fashion than before. It had become necessary to call on them for assistance, and it was needful to give them political rights. This movement was entirely independent of the French Revolution. If Napoleon had led against the nations an army of Tartars the result would have been just the same. It may be termed the anti-Napoleonic revolution. Napoleon rendered no direct assistance to the liberty of the people. It was the resistance to and the success against him which did the world good. He was a universal tyrant; and if he is to be worshipped, because of the indirect benefits derived from his overthrow, then a great plague, such as the cholera, is to be revered, because out of it has come sanitary reform.

EXCITABILITY OF NERVES.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., in his second lecture, on Tuesday last, discussed the various influences which can elevate or depress the excitability of the Nervous System. He showed, by experiment, that cold lowers the excitability of a nerve, so that it becomes impossible to excite it. The nerve, however, is not necessarily killed thereby; for, on the elevation of the temperature, the excitability returns. Within limits, the addition of heat increases the excitability; and heat renders the nerve more mobile. A galvanic current, if transmitted along a nerve, also affects the excitability, which is increased by the negative pole and diminished by the positive pole. The Professor showed that such substances as hemlock, belladonna, calabar bean, strychnia, chloral, and chloroform affect excitability, probably by a direct action of their molecules upon the nerve-molecules in various parts of the nervous system. By the action of belladonna, the excitability of the endings of the controlling nerves of the heart is suspended; but this nervous apparatus, although paralysed, is not killed; for, under the operation of its antagonist, calabar bean, the nerve-molecules again become mobile, and the controlling influence of the nerve over the heart is resumed. Chloral and chloroform temporarily suspend the excitability of certain parts of the brain. It may be that these things increase or diminish the proneness of the nerve-molecules to be thrown into a chemical or a merely mechanical motion. Some very suggestive remarks were made by the Professor upon the effect of the nutrition of nerve-tissue upon excitability. If the nutrition be entirely suspended the excitability is lost, paralysis being the result; but if it be only somewhat defective, excitability is increased. Even the strongest persons, when weakened by starvation, loss of blood, over-exertion, want of sleep, and various other conditions, become unusually excitable. Loud sounds annoy them, a bright light pains their eyes, they are very susceptible to painful impressions, and they are easily thrown into emotional states. They have usually a difficulty in keeping their mental as well as their bodily equilibrium. They stagger in thought and action, and are generally feeble and changeable. All these phenomena are probably owing to increased mobility of the nerve-molecules, resulting from their defective nutrition or from exhaustion. The cause of this increased excitability is, however, quite unknown. Professor Rutherford then showed how the velocity with which nerve-motion travels along a nerve is measured by Fick's beautiful pendulum myograph, a new instrument for the purpose. The velocity of the motor nerve of a frog is found to be about 90 feet in a second; of the human motor nerve, 111 feet in a second. The velocity is increased by heat and diminished by cold, and the difference between the rate in a frog and the rate in man is probably due to a difference in temperature; for if the frog's nerve be heated the velocity becomes as great or greater than in the warm-blooded animal. Whatever increases the excitability of a nerve increases the velocity. Light travels at the rate of 195,000 miles a second, while electricity flies along a wire at a rate of 87,500 miles a second; so that the nerve-motion is of a very tardy nature. A bird can fly as fast, and a stone may fly from a sling, as quickly as the nerve-impulse proceeds through a nerve.

The annual meeting of the members will take place on Friday next, at two p.m. At the evening meeting Professor Rolleston will give a discourse on the Early Inhabitants of the North of England.

The Good Templars held their annual grand lodge session in the Guildhall, Carnarvon, last week. Four hundred delegates, representing 676 lodges in North and South Wales, and a constituency of 42,000 members, took part in the deliberations. The Rev. Morris Morgan, Calvinistic minister, Aberdare, was elected Chief Templar, and Mr. John Lewis, Haverfordwest, Vice-Templar. The grand lodge for next year will be held at Aberystwith.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The two earliest of the five performances of last week have already been referred to, those of the Thursday, Friday, and Saturday necessarily remaining for present comment. "Guglielmo Tell," on Thursday, brought forward, as Arnoldo, a new tenor, Signor Bolis, who achieved a decided success by the display of a resonant tenor voice and much fine declamatory singing. He possesses an exceptionally high range—commanding the B natural in the chest voice, but apparently falling short of the extreme notes (C natural and C sharp) which Rossini has required from the representative of Arnoldo, and which are, indeed, rarely to be realised. One or two transpositions and omissions were therefore necessarily made, notwithstanding which, however, the performance of Signor Bolis was one that deserved, and met with, marked approbation throughout, and should find many repetitions, as rendering possible a hearing of one of the grandest of all operas—one which is too seldom heard, on account of the difficulty of filling the all-important part of the hero lover. He was greatly applauded in the recitative "Il mio giuro," which immediately follows his entry, in his share of the duet with Tell, of that with Mathilde, and in the great trio with Tell and Walter. His delivery of the appeal to his comrades to rescue Tell, "Corriam, voliam," was characterised by great energy, and drew forth fresh demonstrations of applause and a recall of the singer, who may be considered as a valuable acquisition in leading parts of heroic opera. The Princess Mathilde of Madame Sinico and the Tell of M. Maurel were the same fine performances as heretofore; and the recent debutante, Mdlle. Cottino, as Jemmy (Tell's son), sang well in the concerted music of the first act and in that of the apple-shooting scene. Mdlle. Scalchi reappeared as Eudige (Tell's wife), and other parts were also mostly as before, the fine voice of Signor Baggiolo as Walter having again been a powerful adjunct in the great trio with Arnoldo and Tell. In the one song of the Fisherman, Signor Sabater (a recent debutant) was applauded, and other subordinate characters were filled by Signori Tagliafico, Rossi, and Ragner. In the divertissement of the third act the "Tyrolienne" was skillfully danced by Mdlles. Girod, Petrolidi, and Bicesti. The scenic splendour of this establishment was, as before, an important feature in the representation of the opera.

On Friday "Les Huguenots" was given, with Mdlle. d'Angeri as Valentina, affording another proof of the progress of this meritorious young artist. Mdlle. Marimon, as Margherita di Valois, sang the florid music of the part with much brilliancy. Signor Nicolini—who was the Raoul, as heretofore—sang and acted with great effect, as did Signor Cotogni as the Count di Nevers; the cast having included, as formerly, Mdlle. Scalchi as the Page, and Signor Baggiolo as Marcello.

On Saturday "Il Barbiere" was given again, with the same cast as on the previous Tuesday.

On Monday "Guglielmo Tell" was repeated, and the opera again included Signor Bolis's successful performance as Arnoldo, with the other important features above referred to.

On Tuesday Mdlle. Albani appeared for the first time this season, and as Lucia, in "Lucia di Lammermoor," displayed a progress in vocal power and style that will doubtless enhance the already high position held by this artist. In the opening cavatina, "Regnava nel silenzio," with its preliminary recitative; in the following duet with her lover, Edgardo; in that with her brother, Enrico; and, above all, in the music of the contract scene, her singing was characterised by brilliancy, refinement, and pathos, such as called forth repeated demonstrations of enthusiastic applause from an audience that completely filled the theatre. The impression thus produced was increased by the admirable delivery of the scene of delirium, in which the pure, fresh quality of Mdlle. Albani's voice, her fine bravura execution, and general refinement of expression formed a triumphant climax to her performance. There can be no question that this gifted and accomplished young artist will, this season, prove a greater source of attraction than ever. The occasion referred to brought back Signor Pavani, who sang with great effect as Edgardo; the admirable singing of Signor Cotogni as Enrico Aston having been, as formerly, an important feature in the opera.

For Thursday "La Sonnambula" was announced, with Mdlle. Albani as Amina; for the following evening, "Un Ballo in Maschera" was promised, with the reappearance of Mdlle. Pezzotta and the debut of Mdlle. Bianchi; and to-night (Saturday), "Guglielmo Tell" is to be given again.

The first of this season's morning concerts in the Floral Hall is to take place to-day (Saturday), with a programme of strong interest, including the co-operation of the principal artists of the Royal Italian Opera.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The promised repetition of "Fidelio," on Thursday week, was replaced by that of "Marta," in consequence of the indisposition of Mdlle. Titiens, the continuance of which also caused the postponement of the performance of "Les Huguenots," instead of which, on Saturday, "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" was given, with Madame Trebelli-Bettini as Rosina. The fine singing of this lady in Rossini's music rendered it the more a matter of regret that she should have chosen such a puerile piece as Offenbach's bolero, "C'est l'Espagne," (from "Les Bavardes"), for interpolation in the singing-lesson scene. It was, however, more applauded than anything in the opera itself. Signor Ramini, as Almaviva, rather lessened the impression which he had previously made by his debut, as Lionello in "Marta"; as did also Signor Catalani, as Figaro, that which he recently produced by his performance as Don Pizarro, in "Fidelio." The Bartolo of Signor Borella (who reappeared on this occasion) and the Basilio of Signor Agnesi were worthy of the reputation of those artists.

On Monday that estimable tenor Signor Fancelli reappeared as Lionello in "Marta," which was otherwise cast as recently given here, except that Signor Borella resumed the part of Lord Tristano. On Tuesday "La Favorita" was repeated, on Thursday "Les Huguenots" was to be given, and for to-night (Saturday) "Fidelio" is promised.

The twenty-third season of the New Philharmonic concerts began at St. James's Hall on Saturday afternoon. The promised performance of Sir Julius Benedict's symphony in G minor was postponed until the second concert (on Wednesday evening last), and Beethoven's in B flat was given instead. The overture to "Euryanthe," and that composed by Carl Reinecke in 1871, in celebration of the peace, completed the orchestral pieces, all which were finely played by a band comprising many of our best instrumentalists. Mdlle. Marie Krebs reappeared, and made a marked impression by her skilful performances of Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in C minor and two unaccompanied solo pieces by Schumann. The vocalists were Mdlles. Marimon and Scalchi. Herr Ganz and Dr. Wylde alternately officiated as conductor.

The last but one of the eighteenth series of Crystal Palace Saturday afternoon concerts included an admirable performance, by Mr. Edward Dannreuther, of a pianoforte concerto, with orchestral accompaniments by Edvard Grieg, which was heard for the first time in England on this occasion. The composer, still young, is a Norwegian whose music has already commanded much attention in Germany by its distinct individuality of character. We shall, doubtless, soon have further opportunity of speaking of this interesting work, the impression made by which, on Saturday, was highly favourable. The programme included Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, Gounod's overture to "Le médecin malgré lui," and Mendelssohn's to "Athalia," with vocal solos by Miss Blanche Cole, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Celli. The closing performances of to-day (Saturday) will comprise Beethoven's "Choral" symphony, and Schumann's overture and a selection from his incidental music to "Manfred."

The second concert of the new season of the Philharmonic Society took place on Monday evening, when the first part of the programme closed with the overture of Schumann's opera, "Genoveva," and commenced with Spohr's grandest orchestral symphony (the fourth of his nine works of the kind) composed in illustration of Carl Pfeiffer's metaphysical poem, "Die Weihe der Töne," properly "The Consecration of Sound," but long erroneously Anglicised as "The Power of Sound." Mdlle. Krebs played Beethoven's pianoforte concerto in E flat (the "Emperor") with great effect; Miss S. Ferrari sang Bach's aria, "My heart ever faithful," and Miss Sterling gave Mozart's canzonet, "Quando miro," both with much expression. The second part of the programme consisted of Mendelssohn's "Midsummer Night's Dream" music, the vocal solos by the ladies just named. The performances throughout were worthy of the reputation of the society and of its conductor, Mr. W. G. Cousins.

Mrs. R. C. Roney (Miss Helen Hogarth) gave her farewell concert at the Queen's Concert Rooms, Hanover-square, on Monday afternoon. A very full programme included the names of several distinguished artists. Mrs. Roney—who has for some time been favourably known as a teacher of music in London—has accepted an appointment as professor of singing at the Ladies' College, Cheltenham.

The competition for the Sterndale Bennett Scholarship took place last Saturday, at the Royal Academy of Music, Tottenham-street, Hanover-square. The examiners were: the Principal (Sir Sterndale Bennett), Mr. G. A. Macfarren, Mr. F. R. Cox, Mr. W. G. Cousins, Mr. F. B. Jewson, and Mr. H. C. Lunn, and the results were as follow:—Charlton T. Speer, elected; F. W. W. Bampfylde, highly commended; T. Sylver and J. C. Andrews, commended.

THEATRES.

Our account of new plays is not quite so satisfactory as might be desired. A kind of poetical piece at the Haymarket, entitled "Love's Paradise," did not prosper so well in the ear of the audience as it appears to have done in the eyes of the author, who was content to remain anonymous. Subsequently to the first night it has been neatly cut and trimmed, and is now altogether more presentable to a London audience. The legend of "Cupid and Psyche" serves for the material of the action and dialogue. The scene is Olympus, where Mercury explains to Venus the beauty of her rival Psyche diminishes the number of her own worshippers. He then disguises himself as "an oracle," and, visiting King Phniddos, declares that Psyche, one of his daughters, must be fastened to a rock on the seashore until consumed by a sea-monster. Psyche, accordingly, undergoes the fate of Andromeda; but Zephyrus captures the octopus and transmits it to the Brighton aquarium. Cupid, meanwhile, transfers Psyche to Paradise, whence she is afterwards banished for her disobedience; but Apollo renders her immortal, and thus makes her capable of sharing her husband's abode. Mrs. Alfred Mallon impersonates Mercury, and Miss Fanny Gwynne Cupid. Miss Fanny Wright as Psyche, and Miss B. Henri as Venus, are pleasant representatives of two charming deities. The scenery, which is by Messrs. O'Connor and Morris, is exceedingly good.

On Saturday a new play was produced at the Queen's, but so badly rehearsed, as well as poorly written, that it was difficult to sustain the interest of the audience. It is called "Fair France," and is founded on the story of Marshal Ney. The author is Mr. West Digges, who acts in it himself, as Grégoire, the son of the unfortunate soldier. The drama is divided into four acts, appropriated to the four seasons—spring, summer, autumn, winter. Mr. Creswick sustained the part of Ney with great ability, but the dialogue intrusted to him was so inadequate to the situations that his powers were wasted. Throughout the action there was a want of explanation, and the audience had to draw on their own knowledge of the subject. We were conducted into the presence of historical events—such as the Ball at Brussels and the Battle of Waterloo—but nothing was realised, or attempted to be realised, of the incidents. For the first, a tableau of Mr. H. O'Neill's picture, "Before Waterloo," was exhibited, preceded, however, by no ball, or "revelry," though Byron's lines are quoted on the bills. Unfortunately, too, the stage was kept waiting; during which interval the poet's description might have been declaimed with advantage. Some pathos was excited by the last scenes, particularly where Ney parts from his children; and then came "Gérôme's celebrated picture" for the concluding tableau. The audience did not appreciate the introduction of these works of art; and, minus these, the merits of the play are so small that it has no self-sustaining force.

The French plays have now their home at the Princess's. Balzac's "La Marâtre" has been a great boon to the admirers of the horrible. The repulsive incidents are better suited to a novel than to a drama. The duel between the stepmother and daughter is carried out to the bitter end. The acting of Marie Laurent and Mdlle. Kelly added, by its excellence, to the terror of the scene. On Monday "L'Honneur de la Maison" was performed for the first time in England. Madame Marie Laurent supported the principal rôle.

A reduction of 2s. per ton in the price of coals took place in the London market on Monday.

A numerous deputation on Monday waited upon the Duke of Richmond to protest against the opening of the National Museums and Art-Galleries on Sundays. His Grace promised to give the arguments on both sides his careful consideration.

Another board school, situated in Crook's-ground, Chelsea, was opened on Monday evening last. The Rev. Canon Cromwell, who occupied the chair, was supported on the platform, among other gentlemen, by the Parliamentary representatives of the borough, Sir C. Dilke and Mr. W. Gordon.

Major Frank Bolton, in his monthly report upon the metropolitan water supply, states that the number of miles of streets containing mains constantly charged with water, and upon which hydrants could at once be fixed, are as follow:—Kent Company, 64 miles; New River, 168; East London, 70; South-west and Vauxhall, 160; West Middlesex, 65; Grand Junction, 41; Lambeth, 90; Chelsea, 50—making a length of 648 miles.

THE SCULLERS' CHAMPIONSHIP.

Our last weekly chronicle of "National Sports" contained an account of the match for the Thames Scullers' Championship, and a stake of £200 each side, between Joseph Henry Sadler, late of Putney, and Robert Bagnall, of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Their race took place on Thursday week, between two and three in the afternoon. As we observed, Sadler won an easy victory, getting a boat's length ahead before they had gone 200 yards, and finishing with an advantage of six lengths. The distance from Putney to Mortlake was done in 24 min. 15 sec. Our illustration shows the scene at the end of the race, if race it may be called at that period. Sadler, who holds the championship, is thirty-five years of age, and weighs eleven stone. His competitor is a younger man by ten years.

THE LATE COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

The disaster, on Tuesday week, in the Astley Deep Pit of Messrs. B. Ashton and Co.'s Dunkirk Colliery, at Dukinfield, near Manchester, was mentioned in our last. It was fatal to fifty-two lives, including that of Charles Jones, one of the men who went down to explore the passages and to rescue the living or remove the bodies of the dead. The explosion took place near eight o'clock in the evening, when about sixty men were at work in that part of the mine, which is an incline called "the down brow," from the bottom of the downcast shaft to the north workings. This should, under ordinary circumstances, have been the safest part. The fresh air from above is drawn into the "downcast shaft" by the heat of a great furnace near its bottom. After traversing all the passages, the "levels," and the "workings," as the multitude of galleries are called, the air quits the mine by the "upcast shaft," a second deep cylindrical pit, or well, usually not far from the downcast shaft by which it entered. The Astley Pit is one of the deepest in that part of England, the depth of its downcast shaft being 681 yards. The north workings extend 1600 yards, and the south workings nearly 1000 yards. Four hundred men and boys are employed here, in two sets alternately, by day and night. There were about 150 at work, in different parts of the mine, when the explosion took place. The "down-brow" is a spacious tunnel, seventy yards or eighty yards long and quite sixteen yards wide, forming one of the main inlets of fresh air. But the roof of this tunnel had shown symptoms of giving way, and a party of five men were employed in underpinning or propping it, to prevent a fall of "dirt," as the earth, or any substance not coal, is usually called. While they were so engaged, within twenty or thirty yards of the downcast shaft, the huge mass of the roof actually fell. They all escaped injury but George Hartshorn, the engineer, who was not crushed, but was suffocated afterwards. The fallen mass almost closed up the wide tunnel, leaving but a very small space at top. There must have been a vast discharge of inflammable gas from the rent made in the roof above. This instantly took fire and exploded, but those at the mouth of the pit scarcely heard or saw anything of the explosion. The "after-damp," or "choke-damp," as usual, caused the death of many whom the fire had spared. About a dozen, whose workings lay nearer the shaft, were able to escape by the return airway. A large number of men at the surface, directed by Mr. Hilton, the colliery manager, worked diligently that night to get the entrance cleared and to search for their lost comrades. Most of the dead bodies were brought up in the next day or two. The families of the men killed are much pitied, and a subscription has been opened for their relief, which was headed by Mr. Ashton, the principal of the Dunkirk Colliery Company, with £500. Several who came up alive were taken to the local infirmary, where more than one died.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN MAY.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

THE MOON is very near and to the left of Saturn during the early night hours of the 8th, the distance between them increasing as the night advances. She is near Mercury on the 15th, Mars on the 16th, Venus on the 17th, and Jupiter during the night of the 24th. Her phases or times of change are:—

Full Moon	on the 1st	at 9 minutes	after 4h.	in the afternoon.
Last Quarter	" 9th	" 12	" 7	" morning.
New Moon	" 15th	" 17	" 10	" afternoon.
First Quarter	" 23rd	" 19	" 3	" morning.
Full Moon	" 31st	" 46	" 6	" morning.

She is nearest to the Earth on the morning of the 14th, and most distant from it on the morning of the 26th. There is a Partial Eclipse of the Moon on May 1. The beginning of the eclipse will be at 2h. 25m. p.m., the middle at 4h. 3m. p.m., and the ending at 5h. 41m. p.m. Rather more than four fifths of the Moon will be obscured. The Moon does not rise here on this day till 7h. 32m. p.m., and therefore the eclipse is not visible here.

MERCURY is a morning star till the 25th day, rising on the 5th at 4h. 1m. a.m., or 27m. before sunrise; on the 10th at 3h. 56m. a.m., or 23m. before the Sun; on the 15th at 3h. 51m. a.m., or 20m. before sunrise; on the 20th at 3h. 52m. a.m., or 12m. before the Sun; on the 25th at 3h. 55m. a.m., or 3m. before the Sun; and from May 26 to July 28 this planet rises in daylight. On the 25th he sets a few minutes after the Sun, and on the last day he sets at 8h. 56m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 15th, in his ascending node on the 22nd, in superior conjunction with the Sun on the 24th, and in perihelion on the 26th.

VENUS is an evening star, setting on the 10th day at 9h. 24m. p.m., or 1h. 49m. after sunset, which interval gradually increases to 2h. 1m. by the 20th day, and to 2h. 7m. by the end of the month (the planet setting on this day at 10h. 10m. p.m.). She is near Mars on the 4th, the Moon on the 17th, and in perihelion on the last day.

MARS is an evening star, setting on the 1st day at 9h. 8m. p.m., or 1h. 47m. after the Sun, which interval gradually decreases to 1h. 30m. by the 11th day, and to 1h. 14m. by the 21st; this planet sets on the last day at 9h. p.m., or 57m. after sunset. He is due south on the 15th at Oh. 57m. p.m., and near the Moon at midnight on the 16th.

JUPITER is visible till the morning, setting on the 2nd day at 3h. 23m. a.m., or 1h. 10m. before sunrise; on the 12th at 2h. 42m., or 1h. 33m. before sunrise; on the 22nd at 2h. 2m. a.m.; and on the last day at 1h. 23m. a.m., or preceding sunrise by 2h. 19m. He is due south at 8h. 56m. p.m. on the 1st, and at 7h. 59m. p.m. on the 15th. He is stationary among the stars on the 19th, and near the Moon on the 24th.

SATURN is a morning star, rising at 1h. 55m. a.m. on the 1st day; at 1h. 29m. a.m., or 2h. 53m. before the Sun, on the 8th; at Oh. 50m. a.m. on the 18th; at Oh. 11m. a.m. on the 28th, preceding sunrise by 3h. 44m.; on the last day he rises just before midnight. He passes the meridian or is due south on the 1st at 6h. 30m. a.m., and on the 15th at 5h. 37m. a.m. He is in quadrature with the Sun on the 4th, near the Moon on the 8th, and stationary among the stars on the 25th.

FUNERAL OF DR. LIVINGSTONE IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

FUNERAL OF DR. LIVINGSTONE.

The mortal remains of the great missionary explorer of Central Africa were brought to this country by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam-ship Malwa, arriving at Southampton on Wednesday week. They were on Saturday laid in the grave at Westminster Abbey with the honours of a public funeral. These proceedings are the subject of several of our illustrations.

A deputation of the Royal Geographical Society, with a few of Dr. Livingstone's personal friends, had awaited the arrival of the Malwa, which had been delayed two or three days. They were the Rev. Dr. Moffat, his father-in-law; Mr. James Young, of Kelly, the munificent supporter of Livingstone's expeditions; Mr. W. F. Webb, of Newstead Abbey, a distinguished African traveller and sportsman, who has also contributed largely to defray Livingstone's expense of travelling; Colonel J. A. Grant, the companion traveller with Captain Speke; the Rev. Horace Waller; Mr. H. M. Stanley, special correspondent of the New York Herald; General Rigby, formerly Consul at Zanzibar; and Mr. W. Oswald Livingstone, son of the great explorer. These gentlemen were taken out to meet the Malwa off Netley, early in the morning, by the steam-tender Aid, under the orders of Admiral Sir W. Hall, director of the Peninsular and Oriental Company, and Captain Black, superintendent. They were joined by Mr. Arthur Young, of Zanzibar, who had come in the Malwa from Aden to Suez in charge of Dr. Livingstone's body and of his papers, and had reached England from Suez by the overland route. On board the Malwa they were received by Captain Tomlin, and by Mr. Thomas Livingstone, the eldest son of Dr. Livingstone, a mercantile agent in Egypt. Jacob Wainwright, a negro youth educated by the Church Missionary Society, who had been in Dr. Livingstone's service, was also on board the Malwa. That vessel, after some delay, entered the company's dock, where she was to lie, while the body of Dr. Livingstone was to be put on board a smaller boat for landing at the Royal Pier. It was about eleven o'clock.

The gentlemen present were conducted to the mail-room, where the coffin lay, covered with the Peninsular and Oriental Company's flag. The mail-room was also draped with the Union Jack. Mr. Alderton, chief officer of the Malwa, had charge of these arrangements. Alongside the Malwa in dock now lay the small Isle of Wight steamer Queen, on board which were the Mayor of Southampton, Mr. E. Jones, the Sheriff, Mr. Gamlen, the Town Clerk, the Senior and Junior Bailiffs, the Aldermen and some Town Councillors, in their robes, but with crape arm-bands, and Sir F. Perkins, M.P. for the borough. The coffin was hoisted by a pulley from the Malwa to the deck of the Queen, while all present reverently took off their hats. The Queen conveyed it to the Royal Pier, where the procession was marshalled to escort the hearse to the railway station. A wreath of camellias and other flowers was placed on the coffin, now covered with the Union Jack, as it lay on the deck of the Queen. This was done by a lady, Mrs. Phillips. The ships and public buildings and Foreign Consulates had their flags lowered half-mast high.

The hearse, drawn by four horses, waited at the end of the pier. The coffin, enveloped in the usual velvet pall, fringed with white silk, was carried from the steam-boat along the landing-stage. The pall-bearers were Sheriff Gamlen, Bailiffs Pearce and Purkiss, and Messrs. Weston, Phippard, and G. Perkins, members of the Corporation. The procession, led by the Mayor, included the municipality and magistracy, the relatives of Dr. Livingstone, the members of the Royal Geographical Society, the clergy and medical gentlemen of the town, the Foreign Consuls, the School Board, the Council of the Hartley Institute, and committees of other literary societies. An immense throng of people stood in High-street, Bridge-street, and Oxford-street, along the mile-long road to the station. Our engraving shows the hearse, with the Rev. Dr. Moffat, Mr. Thomas Livingstone on his right, and Mr. Oswald Livingstone on his left hand, walking close behind it. Those who follow next the family are Colonel Grant, the Rev. Horace Waller, Mr. Young, and Mr. Webb; behind these are Mr. H. M. Stanley, Admiral Hall, and others; lastly, Jacob Wainwright. It was about noon when the procession took place. The coffin was conveyed to London by railway, and the members of the Royal Geographical Society took it to their house in Savile-row. A surgical examination of the body was made by Sir William Ferguson, assisted by Dr. Loudon, of Hamilton, a former professional attendant of Dr. Livingstone. Dr. Kirk, the Rev. Dr. Moffat, the Rev. Horace Waller, and Mr. Webb were present. It was proved beyond doubt that the body was that of Dr. Livingstone. The left arm-bone showed the old fracture, caused by the bite of a lioness thirty years ago, which has often been noticed as a mark of his identity.

The body was transferred from the rough Zanzibar coffin to one of English oak, bearing the inscription: "David Livingstone, born at Blantyre, Lanarkshire, Scotland, March 19, 1813; died at Ilala, Central Africa, May 4, 1873." It lay in the Map Room of the Royal Geographical Society's house till Saturday morning. Wreaths of flowers to deck the bier were sent by Lady Burdett-Coutts, Lady Bartle Frere, and Dr. Altschul; lastly, by her Majesty the Queen. This crowning gift, on Saturday morning, was inscribed, "A tribute of respect and admiration from Queen Victoria." Before the funeral ceremony a short religious service was performed by the Rev. Mr. Hamilton, a Scottish Presbyterian Minister. The chief mourners and the deputies of several learned societies were present at this service. Among them was the French Vice Admiral Baron Roncière de Nury, President of the Geographical Society of Paris.

A procession of twelve mourning-coaches was then formed, to follow the hearse to Westminster Abbey. In the first carriage were Mr. Thomas and Mr. Oswald Livingstone, the Rev. Dr. Moffat, and Mr. James Vavasour. In the second were General Sir T. Steele and Mr. Webb, who had been travelling companions of Livingstone in Africa, with two young negroes, Jacob Wainwright and Mr. Stanley's Kalulu. The third conveyed the Rev. Horace Waller, Vicar of Leytonstone, one of Bishop Mackenzie's mission on the Shire; Mr. Oswald, one of the oldest comrades of Livingstone's explorations; Mr. E. D. Young, who led one of the expeditions in search of Livingstone; and Mr. H. M. Stanley, who afterwards found him. Among those who filled the nine other mourning-coaches were the Duke of Sutherland, Lord Houghton, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir Henry Rawlinson, Colonel Grant, Sir W. Ferguson, Mr. Young of Kelly, Dr. Hooker, the Lords Provost of Edinburgh and Glasgow, and the Mayor of Southampton. Many private carriages, which were empty, followed the procession, those of the Queen and the Prince of Wales being first. They passed through St. James's-street, Pall-mall, Charing-cross, and Parliament-street, to the Broad Sanctuary, and to the west front of the Abbey.

The coffin, as it was carried in, was supported by eight pall-bearers—Sir T. Steele, Mr. Oswald, Mr. Webb, Dr. Kirk, the Rev. Mr. Waller, Mr. E. D. Young, Mr. Stanley, and Jacob Wainwright. Livingstone's two sons were joined by his two daughters, who were with Mrs. Webb, of Newstead Abbey. The procession with the coffin entered by Dean's-yard and the Cloisters. A very numerous congregation filled all the space in the nave and aisles. It included many persons of rank and distinction, the Lord Mayor of London, and deputations from all the missionary societies.

The grave was prepared in the centre of the nave, next that of Major Rennell, opposite the monument of Field Marshal Wade. The nave was carpeted with black cloth, but here was a raised dais, with a white rim, for the reading-desk of the clergy. Those officiating were Dean Stanley and Canons Conway and Leighton, with four or five Minor Canons. The music was performed by the full choir of the abbey, strengthened by voices from the Chapel Royal, St. Paul's, and the Temple Church, under Mr. Flood Jones, the precentor; Mr. Turle playing the organ. The religious ceremony was very impressive, and our illustration of this scene has a more than ordinary degree of interest.

FINE ARTS.

SOCIETY OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

From various causes—among which, we regret to say, must be included the ill-health of some leading members—the present exhibition of this society is, it seems to us, inferior to most of its predecessors of recent years, at least in the department of figures. It will be at once understood that the display must have suffered considerably when we say that the absentees are Messrs. Walker, Carl Haag, Marks, North, Shields, Holman Hunt, Bradley, and Jenkins, together with Mr. Ruskin and the rest of the honorary members. Other contributors—among whom are Messrs. Dobson, Palmer, Pinwell, Lamont, Macbeth, Marsh, Hale, and Houghton—are represented but sparingly, and the last five quite inadequately. With the exception of the president, Sir John Gilbert, few of the members of long standing have exerted themselves according to their wont, and two posts of honour are filled (deservedly) by Mr. E. K. Johnson and F. Powell. Moreover, the works are not only fewer, but they appear to have been arranged with less care than usual. A very unsymmetrical and unequal top-line of pictures may be as agreeable to some as a "picturesque sky-line" in architecture; but the effect is not, in our eyes, enhanced when the inequalities reveal shreds and tatters of drapery that must convey an impression of parsimony unexpected from this society, which is surely far from out at elbows otherwise. The members should be advised not to rest on their laurels; the junior "Institute," in its current show, is nearly, if not quite, abreast of its parent, and bids fair to continue its rapid advance.

Two new members have been elected since the last exhibition—namely, Miss Clara Montalba and Mr. W. Duncan, son of the veteran E. Duncan. Miss Montalba is a painter chiefly of architectural subjects, whose sketches we have admired at various exhibitions for their spirit and rich, harmonious colouring. These qualities, with more completeness, distinguish three Venetian views here, especially the interior of the Greek Church at Venice (66), with its gorgeously-decorated golden ikonostasis, the mellow splendour of the tones of which is rendered with the feeling for colour of a true artist. In the contributions of Mr. W. Duncan figures—not, as might be expected, landscape—form the leading element of interest. Two of them illustrate Fouché's pretty story of "Undine"—No. 115, where, giving farewell to her knightly husband, Huldbrand, she leaps from the boat into the Danube, and 247, where, reappearing, she gives him the kiss of death—a poetic incident poetically treated. The other drawings represent "Fra Angelico" (253) painting on a wall of his convent, San Marco, at Florence, a fresco of the heavenly hierarchy, somewhat similar in composition to the picture in the National Gallery (this drawing we shall engrave), and a female figure in a golden robe "Listening" (233) at a door. There is good colour in these drawings also, with other technical merits; but we shall look for more important works from both the new members.

As already intimated, Sir John Gilbert is in force. One of his finest works of later years, to our mind, is the large illustration (16) of "Othello"—the scene in the first act where Desdemona pleads her love of the Moor and her duty as a wife in extenuation of her disobedience as a daughter. The facility and felicity of the arrangement, and the exuberant picturesqueness of the execution and colouring, are all that might be expected; while the characters' actions and gestures are, as always, descriptive and suggestive; but the artist does not, this time, stop here: the several faces have a degree of expressiveness which renders the work more sympathetically penetrative and less superficial as a dramatic conception than usual. Sir John's grasp of character and expression is also displayed in the drawing entitled "Conspiracy" (34), illustrative of the first scene of the fourth act of "King Richard II." Not less capital in its way is the lusty Cavalier trumpeter sounding "A Recall" (52). Two or three drawings of smaller dimensions fully partake of the excellence of those before mentioned. Simple announcement, rather than criticism, seems all that is called for in reference to the contributions of some other painters whose styles are familiar. Mr. F. W. Topham, for instance, sends an example of his well-known manner in "The Church Porch" (123)—a handsome Spanish Señora, accompanied by her duenna, giving alms to a boy of a group of beggars. Mr. F. Taylor is best represented in "Wild-Boar Hunt—the First Spear" (135). In a drawing of "One of Cromwell's Troopers" (23) the taking air of sketchy smartness is preserved at some sacrifice of correct draughtsmanship. Of Mr. Birkett Foster's drawings we like best "The Spring" (75), with rustic children and sheep. But, in aiming apparently at a larger style, Mr. Foster seems to be losing some of the charm of earlier works. Mr. W. Goodall has a good drawing (143) indicating the evils of the lottery system in Italy, so long fostered by the Papal Government—a man is reading to a group of cottagers the blanks they have evidently drawn. Mr. A. D. Fripp's "Starring in the Provinces" (122), an organ-man (with accompaniment from a knife-grinder), is amusing; but we much prefer his coast scene called "Sea Anemones" (231), which is remarkable for its beautiful opalescent hues and open-air brilliance. Despite its conventionality, there is genuine imaginative art—the imaginative art which renders all things subservient to its ideal conception—in Mr. S. Palmer's "Old England's Sunday Evening," a landscape with peasants wending their way churchwards through golden corn-fields and the glowing haze of autumn sunset.

Among figure drawings by more recently-elected members we have to welcome one of Mr. Dobson's nearly life-size female bust studies, this time entitled "Purity" (107), with lily blossoms in her hand. We take it that samples of flesh-painting in water colour on this scale, so simple and transparent in means, so unrivalled in breadth of tone and effect, are most salutary in a gallery where first came into vogue methods of niggling in body-colours which we maintain to be mistaken, however ably supported. No artist here has made a greater advance this year than Mr. E. K. Johnson, in his gay garden scene, with ladies, who might be our great-grandmothers, collecting heaps of rose-leaves (44), and still more in "The Reader" (71), from the same period, with a young fellow reciting poetry to a couple of fair girls perched on a low-hanging tree-bough. Waiving an objection to the technical methods employed, and excepting a little monotony in the flesh-tints and some other passages, both drawings are among the most enjoyable in the room. Mr. Pinwell's single contribution, called "The Beggars' Roost" (63), represents characteristic figures, seated on a bench, from studies made at Tangiers, whither the artist repaired last winter for the benefit of his health. It is but just to Mr. Pinwell's reputation to say that this work is evidently incomplete; the female beggar to the left evinces, however, his feeling for grace. Mr. Alma Tadema sends four small Roman subjects in long narrow compartments, which are distinguished by his original taste in colour, and archaeological propriety. The gem of the four is "Autumn" (249), with idlers seated on a wayside marble bench and a couple of lovers strolling among tree-trunks and sere leaves in the distance. Mr. J. D. Watson has several meritorious pleasing drawings, with cavaliers and maidens in amatory converse. We like equally well, however, "A Check" (193), one of two sporting bits, with a truthful effect of light.

The sections of landscape, marine, and architecture are comparatively more rich; but here, also, the grateful recollection of former achievements must not blind us to the manifest falling off in some works with well-known names attached. There are, on the other hand, works by artists of long standing which take a higher place relatively than usual—as, for instance, the contributions of Messrs. T. Danby, Jackson (views about the Thames and Plymouth), Newton, S. Read, Naftel, and C. Smith. Familiar as we are with Mr. T. Danby's Welsh lake views, with their rather monotonously serene, sunny effects, and their decidedly conventional manipulation—yet this year they seem, particularly Nos. 7 and 118, to convey a novel sense of sweet repose, an exceptionally happy impression of broad, all-pervading daylight. Mr. S. Read has hardly within our recollection exhibited a drawing so rich and vigorous in colour and effect as his presentment of that fine old Low Countries' interior at Antwerp, the "Brewers' Corporation-Room" (271). The true sphere for this artist lies, we think, in subjects of this class, after due acknowledgment of the merit of his view (45) of the precipitous rocks of Handa Island on the Sutherlandshire coast, with their myriads of sea-birds. All who sympathise with Mr. Britton Willis for the loss of his life's labour by the fire at the Pantechnicon will rejoice to find no traces in his works of the severe blow he sustained. So far from that, indeed, we have never had more charming drawings from his hand than the "Scene on the Wye, near Ross" (119), and "Goodrich Castle, on the Wye—Early Morning" (160). Artificiality in the juxtaposition of hues in, we think, less noticeable in Mr. Richardson's Italian views than formerly, but we miss the decision and crispness of touch of earlier works. Mr. Dodgson, on the contrary, in his views from the Yorkshire moors, Whitby Scaur, and the "Valley of the Water-Ark, Goathland" (26 and 131), is more sparkling—must we not say, also, more spotty?—than ever; so much so that gradations of atmosphere and breadth of repose are impossible. The sterling, but occasionally too quiet and modest, ability of Mr. E. Duncan is shown in several views on the Thames; but his most effective drawing is a marine piece (139), with boats oyster-dredging. In the same category of unpretending ability may be placed the contributions from the Isle of Sark (19) and Argyllshire (123) by Mr. George Fripp; the Welsh and Surrey views by Mr. C. Davidson (who, however, is generally more painstaking); "A Caravan Overtaken by a Sand-Storm" (114), by Mr. E. A. Goodall; and Mr. Brierly's single drawing of "Admiral Blake Waiting to Attack the Royalist Fleet Anchored in the Tagus under Prince Rupert" (198). Mr. H. C. Waite's snow-covered "Cambrian Heights" (163) is one of the most successful works by this artist we have seen, though a little mannered and "woolly." By-the-way, washing and sponging appear to be coming too freely into use by other of the artists lately named, judging by the tameness and semi-opacity the employment of the expedients are apt to engender.

Three or four artists have yet to be noticed whose productions are among the choicest in the room. Of these Mr. F. Powell challenges special attention with his large drawing, "The Isles of the Sea" (180), which is a marine piece, not a landscape—the isles lying in cloud, and scud, and mist across the sea in the distance. The feature of this fine work is the painting of the heavy sea, which evinces the artist's mastery in seizing and accurately recording the form and action of great waves in conformity with the governing laws of disturbance and equipoise, and the accidents of light, shade, and reflection. We have only one objection to offer—i.e., that the network of wavelets spread over the large waves are rather mechanically regular, and not sufficiently foreshortened on the receding surfaces. Mr. Alfred W. Hunt's small Welsh and Scotch subjects (Nos. 246, 260, and 265) convey, as heretofore, a delightful and purely artistic impression of lovely phases of natural effect; but they must be seen—their charm cannot be analysed. Several equally unambitious drawings by Mr. Boyce, remarkable for truth of aspect and comparatively free from the photographic rigidity of earlier works, are likewise commended to the visitor. Lastly, Mr. A. Goodwin takes a foremost place among the newest associates with several Alpine scenes, painted with feeling and delicacy, showing on the slopes the summer tapestry of rose, and gentian, and other of the Alpine flora.

The Exhibition of the Institute of Painters in Water Colours opened on Monday. We must reserve our notice till next week.

We regret to announce the death, on the 19th inst., of Mr. Owen Jones. We are preparing a portrait of the eminent decorative artist, which will be accompanied by a memoir.

The authorities of the Mint are about to coin a large number of half crowns, none of which have been made since 1848.

A successful poultry and pigeon show, under the auspices of the Derry Ornithological Society, was held, last week, in Derry Corporation Hall, and the first annual show of the Derry Floral and Horticultural Society proved to be an attractive display.

A Parliamentary return, containing a register of the owners of lands and heritages in Scotland, has been published. It is here shown that there are 131,530 such owners; that the estimated extent of their property is 18,946,694 acres, the gross annual value of which is £18,698,804.

It is stated that the Kimmeridge clay and oil-bearing shale, 400 ft. deep, which has been discovered by the sub-sea borings in Sussex, is of great value, as from it gas for lighting purposes can be easily extracted. A bed of alabaster has also been found during the borings.

The council of the National Rifle Association has issued some amended regulations for the forthcoming Wimbledon prize-meeting. In addition to the range heretofore in use a new range at 300 yards will be opened. The targets will be circular, but will be stretched on a square frame. The points in marking will be as follow:—Bull's-eye, 5 (white disc); centre, 4 (red disc); inner, 3 (black cross); outer, 2 (black disc). The limit of weight for military breech-loaders (577 bore) has been increased from 9 lb. 8 oz. to 9 lb. 12 oz., and the length allowed will be 56 in. in place of 55 in.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD KINGSALE.

daughter of Joseph Chadder, Esq., and inherited the title at the decease of his brother, June 15, 1865. He was not married, and is succeeded by his cousin, John Fitzroy de Courcy, born March 30, 1821, now thirty-first Baron, who is son of the late Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Gerald de Courcy, fourth son of John, twenty-sixth Lord Kingsale. The historic and very ancient family of which the deceased Lord was the representative was founded in Ireland by the famous soldier, Sir John de Courcy, created Earl of Ulster in 1181, and granted the privilege that he and his successors (after first obsequies being paid) should remain covered in the presence of the King and all future Sovereigns of England. The privilege is still enjoyed by the Lords Kingsale, whose right to it was confirmed by William III., George I., and Queen Victoria.

LORD SUSSEX LENNOX.

Lord Sussex Lennox, whose death, at his residence in Brighton, is announced, was born, June 11, 1802, the sixth son of Charles, fourth Duke of Richmond, K.G., by Charlotte, his wife, daughter of Alexander, fourth Duke of Gordon. His Lordship married, April 3, 1828, the Hon. Mary Margaret, daughter of Valentine, second Lord Cloncurry. Lord Sussex had issue, Berkeley, a military officer, who died in 1857; Sussex William, Lieutenant-Colonel Madras Infantry, married, Oct. 15, 1867, to Eleanor Jane, daughter of W. H. Peters, Esq., of Harefield House, Devon; and Charles, late Captain 102nd Foot.

THE HON. MRS. ST. JOHN BUTLER.

Marianne Jane, wife of the Hon. St. John Butler, of Portrane and Walchestown, in the county of Dublin, and sister of Colonel the Right Hon. Henry Edward Taylor, M.P., Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster, died, on the 16th inst., at 15, Fitzwilliam-place, Dublin. The eldest daughter of the Hon. and Rev. Henry Edward Taylor, by Marianne, his wife, daughter of the Hon. Richard St. Leger, the lamented lady derived descent, paternally, from the noble house of Headfort, and maternally from the illustrious family of St. Leger. She was married, April 21, 1873, to the Hon. St. John Butler, of Portrane and Walchestown, second son of James, twenty-second Lord Dunboyne, the representative of a line of the great and historic Butlers, so renowned in the Irish annals under their titles of Ormonde and Dunboyne.

MR. MORRITT, OF ROKEBY PARK.

William John Sawrey Morritt, Esq., of Rokeby Park, in the county of York, J.P. and D.L., formerly of the 77th Foot, and M.P. for the North Riding of Yorkshire 1862 to 1865, died suddenly, at Brighton, on the 13th inst. He was born Sept. 12, 1813, elder son of the late Rev. Robert Morritt, and succeeded to the family estates June 12, 1843, at the decease of his uncle, John Bacon Sawrey Morritt, Esq., M.P., of Rokeby Park, the friend and correspondent of Sir Walter Scott. Mr. Morritt, whose death we record, married, May 10, 1837, Ellen Frances, only daughter of Sir Robert Wilmot, Bart., but leaves no issue. He was a leading member of the Four-in-hand Club.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated Aug. 5, 1870, of Lieutenant-General Sir John Gaspard Le Marchant, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., Colonel of the 11th Regiment of Foot, who died on Feb. 6 last, at No. 80, St. George's-square, Piccadilly, was proved on the 13th inst. by Dame Margaret Anne Le Marchant, the widow, the personality being sworn under £14,000. The testator bequeaths all his property whatsoever to his wife for her sole use and benefit.

The will and codicil, dated Aug. 1 and Dec. 9, 1871, of Lieutenant-Colonel the Hon. Richard Charteris, late of No. 16, Grosvenor-square, who died on the 16th ult., were proved on the 14th inst. by William Augustus Peel and Clement Uvedale Price, the executors, the personality being sworn under £20,000. The testator leaves to his wife, Lady Margaret Charteris, all his interest in No. 16, Grosvenor-square, with the furniture and effects therein; the rest of his personal estate and all his real estate he gives to his son, Richard Butler Charteris.

The will, dated May 9, 1873, of William Sang, late of No. 37, Glasshouse-street, Regent-street, who died on the 14th ult., was proved on the 26th ult. by John Crombie, George Nicol, and George Sang, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £50,000. There are legacies to his nephews and nieces and others, and the residue of his property, real and personal, he leaves to his nephew, the said George Sang.

The will, dated Nov. 27, 1872, of Miss Amelia Perry, late of No. 32, Avenue-road, Regent's Park, who died on Feb. 27 last, was proved on the 30th ult. by John Watlington Perry Watlington, the nephew, the sole executor, the personality being sworn under £40,000. The testatrix leaves legacies to her brother, the Bishop of Melbourne, nephews, nieces, and other members of her family; to the Portland Town Infant School, £200; to the Portland Town National School, the Portland Town Sunday and Evening School, the Portland Town District Visiting Society, the Portland Town Free Dispensary, the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, and the Church Pastoral Aid Society, £50 each; and the remainder of her property to her sister, Mrs. Mary Ann Savage.

The will, dated June 5, 1873, of Joseph Wilson Buckley, late of Merrow Grange, Merrow, near Guildford, who died on Jan. 30 last, was proved on the 10th inst. by Mrs. Louisa Jane Buckley, the widow, Richard Wilson Buckley, the brother, and William Marshall, the executors, the personality being sworn under £35,000. With the exception of two or three small legacies, the dispositions of the will are in favour of testator's wife and two sons.

The will, dated Oct. 29, 1866, of Mrs. Hannah Sarah Bray, late of No. 12, Park-villas, Regent's Park, who died on Feb. 27 last, was proved on the 4th inst. by Charles Waring Young, the sole executor, the personality being sworn under £30,000. The legatees are her children and grandchildren.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

*All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed "To the Editor of the Illustrated London News," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

M. STROGO, Alexandria.—To obtain the thirty-two numbers of the paper required you must forward a post-office order for their price (10s.), and also for the cost of postage, to the publisher. What is your object in sending us two fourpenny stamps?

D. CLARK, Siberia.—No. 1 is much too easy. No. 2 is fairly good.

FRANKFORT.—You should read what is said under the Knight's Tour No. XVII.

P. O. G., Ludlow.—We believe you are right in both cases. In future, when asking questions which involve trouble in answering, please to give your name and address.

C. W. of Sunbury.—No. 2 has been marked for insertion.

A. C. P.—Received, with thanks.

G. D. F. R., and OTHER PROBLEM COMPOSERS.—Every problem should be drawn on a diagram and the solution carefully written on the back. There is no chance whatever for a problem to be fairly examined when the solution is written on the same side of the paper as the diagram. It is surprising that composers do not understand this.

G. DE P., of Alexandria.—The solution proposed by our examiner will not do. He evidently set up the position incorrectly. But why, instead of troubling us for the solution of a doubtful problem from another periodical, do you not apply to the editor of that paper for it?

A. WOOD.—The diagram sent by you contains no White King.

H. SCHLESINGER, Bahia.—See notice above to "G. D." "F. R." &c.

SUBJECTS OFS OF HAMILTON.—It has been marked for insertion and shall appear very shortly.

ADRIAN.—The games in the match by correspondence between the City of London Chess Club and the Chess Club of Vienna, and the games in the match by correspondence between Nottingham and Derby, are being prepared for publication.

DOUGLAS.—The fifth edition of Baron Heydebrand's famous "Handbuch" is a considerable improvement upon the preceding impressions. You can, no doubt, obtain a copy of that or of any other treatise on the game, by applying to Mr. Jean Prati, 72, Rue Saint Sauveur, Paris.

JUVENIS.—Much too easy, besides admitting of more than one solution.

PROBLEM No. 1575.

By Dr. GOLD, of Vienna.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

MATCH BY CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN NOTTINGHAM AND DERBY.

A match between these clubs began early last year, consisting of two Games, has just been brought to a conclusion. In the first Game, which follows, Nottingham was represented by Mr. S. Hamel and Derby by Mr. F. Thompson. In the second, Mr. W. G. Ward represented Nottingham and Mr. Harrison, Derby.

GAME I.

(King's Bishop Opening.)

WHITE (Nottingham).	BLACK (Derby).	WHITE (Nottingham).	BLACK (Derby).
1. P to K 4th	P to K 4th	17. Kt to Q 2nd	Kt to Q 2nd
2. B to Q 4th	B to Q 4th	18. B to Q Kt 3rd	Kt to K B 3rd
3. P to Q B 3rd	Q to K Kt 4th	19. Kt to K B 3rd	P to Q B 4th

A favourite defence of the famous Italian masters, Del Rio, Lelli, and Ponziani, and of the equally famous Russian author, Von Jaenisch.

4. Q to K B 3rd

The best reply. If, instead of this move, White play K to B sq, as proposed by Mr. Perrott, Black should retreat his Queen to K's second, and he will have the advantage of position.

5. Kt to K 2nd

6. P to Q 4th

It is plain that they would have done ill in attacking the adverse Queen with their Q's Bishop, because of 7. B takes K B P (ch), &c.

7. B to K 3rd

8. P takes P

9. B takes B

10. Kt to K Kt 3rd

We should have preferred bringing the Q's pieces into action. The exchange of Queens in no respect improves Black's game, and it detracts considerably from the interest of the battle.

11. Q to K 3rd

12. Q takes Q

13. Kt to K 2nd

14. Kt takes P

15. Castles

16. R to K sq

The Nottingham Club at this crisis announced that they could give checkmate, by "force," in seven moves; and their adversaries thereupon resigned the game.

The second game, a very short affair, was also won by the Nottingham player. It presents no points of sufficient interest to render it worthy of publication.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.—The winter season of the chess world having been fitly terminated by the victory of London in the match with Vienna, and the conclusion of the handicap tournament at the City Club, there is now the usual lull. In prospect, however, are several contests of importance, foremost among which is the long talked-of match between Messrs. Bird and Blackburne. Visitors at the Divan have of late enjoyed the advantage of witnessing a series of games, nearly every afternoon, between players of the first force, such as Messrs. Bird, Boden, and Macdonnell, a very agreeable relief to the ordinary spectacle of Queen-players vainly contending at the odds of a Knight.

On the motion of Mr. Alsager Hay Hill, the council of the Working Men's Club and Institute Union has agreed to the formation of a committee for taking prompt measures to secure the establishment of metropolitan free libraries.

At a meeting of the Court of Aldermen, on Tuesday, Mr. J. H. Gresham was elected Chief Clerk at the Justice-Room of the Mansion House, in succession to the late Mr. Oke, at a salary of £800 per annum.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Ashdown and Parry, of Hanover-square, have recently issued some valuable additions to the pianoforte works of Stephen Heller. Productiveness with this composer by no means implies exhaustion of power, as evidenced by his latest works now referred to, which are classed, respectively, as op. 137 and 138. That last named is entitled "Album pour piano dédié à la jeunesse," and consists of four books comprising twenty five short, characteristic pieces, full of beauty, and well calculated to interest and improve young students. The other work is a "Tarentella," full of vivacity and impulse, and quite worthy of comparison with those earlier works of the kind which have long been among the most highly esteemed of M. Heller's productions.

Messrs. Ashdown and Parry's series of "Popular Classics for the Pianoforte," selected, edited, and fingered by Mr. Walter Macfarren, has now reached thirty-six numbers, and comprises a valuable collection of masterpieces of the best schools. Among the many interesting pieces recently issued may be specified a charming sonata by Paradise, somewhat in the older style of Scarlatti; a very interesting sonata by Woelfl, a contemporary of Dussek, little inferior to him in genius, and quite his equal in science; and some beautiful variations by the last-named composer on a Saxon air.

Although but very recently established, the firm of Messrs. Stanley Lucas, Weber, and Co. (New Bond-street) has already published a large quantity of vocal and instrumental music, some of which has previously been noticed by us. Among later publications is the elaborate pianoforte concerto of Joachim Raff, op. 185, dedicated to Dr. Hans von Bülow, by whom it was played at one of the Wagner Society's concerts in November, as noticed by us at the time. The work gains on closer study, and will be found well worthy of attention by pianists of executive skill who are not deterred by its departures from conventional form, and who desire to be acquainted with the modern tendencies of German music as displayed by one of the most remarkable of the living composers of that country; no other being Johannes Brahms, whose pianoforte works have, but only lately, been largely making way here. Brahms's set of eight songs, op. 59, just published by Messrs. Lucas and Weber, with German and English words, will well repay those who can appreciate and realise that deep and earnest sentiment which has found its best expression (that is, in vocal chamber music) in the lieder of Beethoven, Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Schumann. Another remarkable living German composer, with similar proclivities, is Anton Rubinstein, twelve of whose songs, with German and English words, after the Persian of Mirza Schaffy, have been published by Messrs. Lucas and Weber. All these are distinguished by individuality of style, and some have been sung in this country with success by Madame Otto-Alvalleben.

Messrs. Lucas and Weber have also issued various vocal pieces in a lighter style than those just referred to. Among these may be specified "My home of yore," by Louis Liebe (with German and English words); "The days of merry spring-time," the brightness of which contrasts well with the sentiment of the preceding song; "The Beacon Fire," a vigorous, characteristic song, by A. Moul; "Fly, little song, to my love," by A. Cellier, who has produced a well-marked melody; "Dark and dreary," a setting, by Madame Rudersdorf, of words by Longfellow, in which the eminent lady vocalist has furnished music well suited for a singer of declamatory power; Mr. O. A. Stead's setting of the Rev. C. Kingsley's lines, "The Nightbird," to a melody which, however taking in itself, is of somewhat too light a character for the serious nature of the sentiment to be expressed; another song by the same composer and poet being "Heigh-ho!" in which the same tempo (six-eight) is used, in this case with more appropriateness. Our present list of Messrs. Lucas and Weber's publications closes with a graceful little "Berceuse" for the pianoforte, by Mr. Charles Gardner, entitled "Chant d'Amour," which affords good practice both for cantabile and arpeggio passages.

Messrs. Lamborn Cook and Co. have published Mr. Arthur O'Leary's "Morcean de Concert" founded on the popular Scotch ballad "There's nae luck about the house," the melody of which is skillfully varied, and elaborated in a way to produce a brilliant effect when competently executed. That it requires considerable mechanical powers in the player may be inferred from its having been performed by Madame Arabella Goddard. Mr. Charles Gardner's "Deuxième Impromptu" consists of a leading melodic theme of agreeable character, supported by a prevailing arpeggio accompaniment, divided between the two hands in a manner that is not only effective, but is also calculated to afford a very improving practice for students. Besides these instrumental pieces, Messrs. Lamborn Cook and Co. have published (as No. 49 of their cheap edition of modern four-part songs) Mr. Westley Richards's "Wake, dearest love," a flowing piece of vocal harmony set to lines by the late Haynes Bayly.

Messrs. Augener and Co. have now completed their octavo edition of the pianoforte works of Robert Schumann, in four portable volumes, beautifully engraved and printed, at the price of six shillings each. Wherever the pianoforte music of Beethoven, Schubert, and Mendelssohn is prized, there, also, should that of Schumann be found, whatever may be the opinion of its merits or characteristics as compared with those of the other composer's named.

The same publishers' edition of "Six Sonatinas for the Pianoforte," by Carl Reinicke, furnishes to teachers and pupils a valuable series of easy and improving pieces, the right hand part of which lies within the compass of five notes. The interest and variety, maintained by the simplest means, are worthy of all praise.

Among the many recent musical tributes to Russian nationality are some issued by Messrs. Augener, including a bold and effective "Russian March," by Mr. Scotson Clark, and two skilful transcriptions by Mr. Kuhe—with varied ornaments and embellishments—of the Russian Hymn and of popular national airs. Other pianoforte pieces by Mr. Kuhe are two transcriptions, in similar brilliant style, of Schumann's songs "Ich grolle nicht" and "Widmung," and Eckert's "Echo Song."

Messrs. Augener and Co. have recently published some reprints of excellent pianoforte-sole music, in handsome library editions. Among these may be specified three highly characteristic marches by Ferdinand Hiller (op. 55), and some admirable pieces by Joachim Raff, including two graceful works entitled "Am Loreley Fels" and "Abends," and three excellent operatic transcriptions from Wagner's "Lohengrin," Weber's "Der Freischütz," and Bellini's "La Sonnambula," in each of which some prominent themes are happily and skilfully treated.

A complimentary dinner was given, last Saturday night, at Willis's Rooms, by the Middlesex Conservative Registration Association, to Lord George Hamilton, M.P., on his appointment as Under-Secretary of State for India. The chair was taken by Sir Charles H. Mills, Bart., M.P., president.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 3, 1874.

On Tuesday night last the House of Commons debated a question of first-rate importance in a manner which served to prove that it has lost none of its intellectual vigour. The motion submitted to it for consideration was "that it is expedient that measures should be taken to obtain possession of the Irish railways and place them under Government management." The debate was introduced by Mr. Blennerhassett, member for Kerry, by an able speech, affirmative of the proposition, which was followed by as useful, dispassionate, practical, and exhaustive a discussion as the House has been engaged in for a long time past. The answer given by it to the question submitted to it for decision was distinctly in the negative. Sir M. Beach, the Irish Secretary, expressed, on behalf of her Majesty's Government, a courteous but unequivocal dissent from the policy involved in the motion. A large majority of the House, comprising both political parties, thoroughly agreed with him, and, strange enough, the motion was supported in the main by those members who stand pledged to Home Rule.

The question is as interesting for what it indirectly points to as for what it definitely comprehends. Should the railways of the United Kingdom be purchased by the State, and be subject to the management and control of the Imperial Government? This is the ultimate form into which the question would inevitably shape itself. For the present, no doubt, the scope of it was restricted to Ireland; and it may very justly be contended that there are peculiarities in the economical and social conditions of that island which forbid any hasty conclusion that what may be found convenient and beneficial for Ireland must necessarily be convenient and beneficial also for Great Britain. Still, it is impossible to adopt exceptional legislation in regard to one portion of the United Kingdom without creating a precedent which would powerfully tell in the same direction upon the other portions. The larger theory, therefore, to some considerable extent—or, at any rate, the wider application of it—will necessarily be affected by any decision arrived at in respect of the smaller. The whole subject has passed through several changes in the public mind. At the commencement of the railway system in this country, and under sanction of the opinion of the late Sir Robert Peel, and, indeed, of most of the statesmen of that day, the idea that the construction and management of railways should be undertaken by the State was almost universally scouted. Ten years ago, or less, owing to the mismanagement, and, we may add, the embarrassed financial position, of private and competing companies, there had grown up a public opinion, if not entirely favourable to that idea, yet disposed to look at it fairly in the face and to accept any conclusion supported by a preponderance of evidence. There is now comparatively little disposition to make a transference from private to public hands of this kind of property. The amount of capital required for the change would be so enormous, the financial success of it appears so doubtful, the patronage it would carry with it would be so dangerous, the inconveniences which it would entail in the process of administration would be so numerous, and the improvement in the management of such an immense concern would be so problematical, that, whatever might have been the case at the origin of the system, it is generally felt that the purchase and control of railway property by the State at this time of day would be an operation involving responsibilities and inviting dangers far too large to be seriously contemplated.

The question, however, as it relates to Ireland is somewhat different. There is no room for doubt that the Irish railway system, as it stands at present, fails to confer upon that country all the advantage which might be reasonably expected from it. There are 1908 miles of railway in Ireland, and they are managed by thirty-nine distinct corporations, each with its own directorate and policy, its own secretary and official staff, its own solicitor, its own engineer, and its own auditors. The consequence is that railway charges, and especially for goods, are so high as to prohibit to a large extent a fair development of the resources of the country. In some cases, we are told, the rates charged are fifty or seventy-two per cent of the value of the produce conveyed. Of course, with so many managing bodies, each competing with others to obtain the largest share of profit, there is a perpetual collision of interests, and, unhappily, one which brings no good results to the public. Everyone knows how obstructive to commerce it is when it has to be pushed through the meshwork of a number of petty and oftentimes conflicting jurisdictions. Even the English public is not altogether ignorant of the inconveniences resulting from want of unity in railway management. Where the traffic is great and rapidly expanding the disadvantage has been partially remedied by amalgamation. But in Ireland, with some notable exceptions, the agricultural and trading resources of the country are neither extensive enough nor powerful enough to enforce, or even to induce, this remedy. It would seem as if some ab extra authority were indispensable for placing the system upon a sound basis. It may, we think, be taken for granted that easy and cheap means of communication tend to the expansion of a people's natural means of livelihood, and, in their turn, receive additional profit from such expansion. But it is extremely questionable whether the assumption of the railway lines by the Imperial Government could be effected on terms which would not involve serious financial loss; and it is by no means demonstrable that, even if it could be made to pay, it would not draw after it economical, commercial, social, and political consequences which the best friends of Ireland would most earnestly deprecate.

We have already alluded, en passant, to one of the most curious features of Tuesday night's discussion. The principal supporters of Mr. Blennerhassett's motion, whether by speech or by vote, were pledged supporters of the policy of Home Rule. They did not appear to appreciate the inconsistency of anticipating the revolution to which they look forward—a revolution which has for its object "Ireland for the Irish"—by placing the possession and management of the entire system of internal communication in that country in the hands, and therefore under the exclusive control, of the Imperial Government. One of them, it is true, shrewdly objected to the motion of the hon. member for Kerry on the ground that, if it were carried, English employes would instantly be substituted for Irish over every line. There is no solid ground for such a suspicion; but there is some reason, one would think, why Irishmen who desire the management of their own national affairs, should object to transfer to the Imperial Government so large a share of Irish property, and so exclusive a possession of Irish means of transport. This, however, it is for them to consider. Very little use was made of the phenomenon in the debate on Tuesday night. The question was argued upon its merits. The tone which prevailed throughout the discussion was dispassionate and practical. The conclusion arrived at by the House, whether wise or unwise, was decided; and we cannot but hope that, the question having been set at rest—for the present, at least—those who are interested in railway property in Ireland will be the more inclined to avail themselves of the ample means placed by law at their command to do that for themselves which they ask to be done for them by the Government, and to devote their own skill and energy to the accomplishment of such changes and combinations as will most effectually realise the hopes which they have vainly directed to an unsuitable quarter.

THE COURT.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove from Claremont yesterday (Friday) week to Hampton Court and inspected the stud, and afterwards partook of tea at the stud-house. Saturday last was the thirty-first anniversary of the birthday of Princess Louise of Hesse-Darmstadt (Princess Alice of England). The day was celebrated at Windsor with the usual honours. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove to Richmond Park, and visited Earl and Countess Russell at Pembroke Lodge. The Queen remained at Claremont until Monday, when Her Majesty proceeded to Windsor, arriving at the castle at a quarter past six p.m. On Tuesday the Right Hon. B. Disraeli had an audience of the Queen. Mr. E. Hutchinson, secretary to the Church Missionary Society, with Jacob Wainwright, Dr. Livingstone's attendant, arrived at the castle and had an audience of her Majesty. The Queen expressed the great interest she felt in the boy. After partaking of luncheon Mr. Hutchinson and the youth returned to London. The Queen having received intelligence of the serious illness of M. Van de Weyer, her Majesty proceeded to London for the purpose of visiting him at his residence in Arlington-street. The Queen travelled to and from town by a special train upon the Great Western Railway, leaving Windsor at five and returning shortly after seven o'clock. Princess Beatrice came to town and accompanied Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne to their residence, Dornden, Tunbridge Wells. Lieutenant-General Sir Thomas and the Hon. Lady Biddulph dined with her Majesty. The Queen has taken her customary daily out-of-door exercise.

Her Majesty has conferred the vacant ribbon of the Order of St. Patrick upon the Marquis of Londonderry.

A Levée was held by the Prince of Wales on behalf of the Queen yesterday (Friday) at St. James's Palace.

The Queen will hold a Drawingroom on Tuesday next at Buckingham Palace.

The Emperor of Russia, accompanied by the Grand Duke Alexis, will arrive at Windsor Castle on Wednesday, the 13th inst., on a visit to her Majesty. A banquet will be given by the Queen on the following day, in St. George's Hall.

A state ball will be given on Tuesday, the 19th inst., and a state concert will be given on Wednesday, the 27th inst., at Buckingham Palace.

The Queen's birthday will be celebrated on 30th inst.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales returned to Sandringham at the end of last week from town. The Tyrolean singers, under the direction of Herr Helms, sang on Saturday last at Sandringham House before the Prince and Princess of Wales and a large party of visitors. The Prince and Princess attended Divine service on Sunday. Their Royal Highnesses, accompanied by their children and the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, arrived at Marlborough House on Monday from Sandringham. The Prince and Princess afterwards drove out and visited the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Buckingham Palace, and the Duchess of Teck at Kensington Palace. In the evening the Prince presided at the 136th anniversary festival of the Royal Benevolent Society of Musicians at Willis's Rooms. The Duke of Edinburgh and the Maharajah Dhuleep Singh were present. On Tuesday the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House. In the evening their Royal Highnesses, with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, went to her Majesty's Opera, Drury-lane. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were also present. On Wednesday the Prince and Princess had luncheon with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh at Buckingham Palace. In the evening the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, were present at a ball given at the Mansion House in honour of the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. The Princess, with her children, has taken daily drives.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh received a deputation on Monday at Buckingham Palace from the Elder Brethren of the Trinity House, introduced by Sir Frederick Arrow, deputy-master, who presented addresses to their Royal Highnesses and a necklace to the Duchess. Their Royal Highnesses also received a deputation from the boys of the Worcester training-ship, who presented the Duchess with a photographic album and a fan. Their Royal Highnesses dined last week with Earl and Countess Granville, at their residence on Carlton House-terrace. The Duke and Duchess were present at a ball, on Wednesday, at the Mansion House, given by the Lord Mayor and the Lady Mayoress in honour of their Royal Highnesses.

The anniversary of the birthday of the Emperor Alexander of Russia was celebrated on Wednesday with the usual "Te Deum" at the Russian Chapel, Welbeck-street, at which the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were present. The Ambassador and members of the Russian Embassy had luncheon with the Duke and Duchess at Buckingham Palace, and in the evening the Ambassador gave a banquet at Chesham House.

The Archbishop of York and Mrs. Thomson have arrived at their residence at Queen's-gate.

The Duchess of Buccleuch and the Ladies Scott have arrived at Montagu House from Scotland.

The Marquis and Marchioness of Bath have arrived at their residence in Berkeley-square from Longleat.

Earl and Countess Sydney have arrived at their residence in Cleveland-square, St. James's, from Paris.

The Earl of Clarendon has arrived in town from Dublin.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Tait entertained a distinguished company at dinner, on Saturday last, at Lambeth Palace.

His Excellency Musurus Pasha had a dinner party, last Saturday, at the Turkish Embassy, in Bryanston-square. A small company assembled after dinner.

His Excellency the French Ambassador and the Duchess de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia had a dinner party, on Wednesday, at the French Embassy, at Albert-gate.

The Secretary of State for India and the Marchioness of Salisbury entertained a large party at dinner, on Saturday last, at their residence in Arlington-street. Later in the evening the Marchioness had an assembly.

Earl and Countess Amherst had a dinner party, on Wednesday, at their residence in Grosvenor-square.

Baroness Burdett-Coutts gave her first reception this season, yesterday (Friday) week, at her residence in Stratton-street, Piccadilly.

The Right Hon. G. J. Goschen, M.P., and Mrs. Goschen entertained a party at dinner, on Saturday last, at their residence in Mount-street.

The coming of age of Earl Grosvenor has been celebrated this week at Cliveden with varied rejoicings. An especial celebration of the auspicious event is to take place at Eaton Hall in August next.

WOMEN GRINDING CORN.

The two women grinding corn, in the customary mode among the people of India, who figure in our front page Engraving, do not look as if they were sufferers by the famine. This illustration, indeed, is from a sketch made by our Artist in India some years ago; but the scene which it represents is one that may be seen at any ordinary time. We lately gave an example of the manner in which the peasant women of the south of Ireland are accustomed to work at "the stone of sorrow," when they want a few handfuls of flour to put into the pot for their hasty stirabout or "prapeen." This feminine use of the double grindstone, we then observed, is of great antiquity in Ireland, as well as in India, and likewise in the Holy Land. An old history of the neighbouring island, by one Keating, published in 1723, cites a tradition preserved by a Celtic minstrel, concerning the first invention of the grist-mill. It is said that the Irish King Cormac Ulfada, in the third century of the Christian era, provoked the jealousy of his Queen by his preference for a captive Princess, named Ciarnute, daughter of the King of the Picts. The Queen began to treat this lady with harsh severity. Ciarnute was compelled, as a slave, to grind nine quarters of corn daily, with her own soft hands, which were soon grievously bruised. The King, her indiscreet lover, visited Ciarnute in her chamber, and pitied her distress with this painful employment. She then desired him to make peace with her father in Scotland, and to invite over from that country a skilful artificer, who would be able, she was sure, to make her an engine for grinding corn without using her hands to turn the heavy mill-stone. King Cormac did as she wished, and sent for the clever Scotchman, who came and presently invented the first corn-mill. But, though Ciarnute thus gained relief, sixteen hundred and fifty years ago, from the irksome task of a barbarous process, not very different from that practised by African negroes at this day, it seems that there are thousands of women in Ireland, and millions in Bengal, who are still doomed to that primitive task of their sex. The man, their lord and husband—we here speak only of the Indian household—is seen in the background, sitting very much at his ease, and enjoying the fumes of his pipe. It may be, indeed, that this indolent gentleman is not their husband, but only their master. Perhaps in the other two men, whom we perceive with their shovels in the field beyond, these women may claim an interest beyond that of fellow-servants. However this may be, the scene is an instance of one of the commonest experiences in the domestic life of an Asiatic people.

The British Museum closed on Friday, and will be reopened on the 8th inst.

The Rev. Marmaduke C. F. Morris, B.C.L., M.A., Head Master of St. Michael's College, Tenbury, has been appointed diocesan inspector of schools for the archdiocese of York.

At the meeting of the London School Board on Wednesday, a deputation presented a memorial praying that the offer of Mr. Peek should be declined, and another body opposed the erection of a board school in Queen's-gardens, Brompton. The propriety of accepting Mr. Peek's gift was discussed for over four hours, at the end of which time the debate was adjourned.—A portrait of Lord Lawrence, subscribed for by the staff of the London School Board, and painted by Mr. Edgar Williams, has been accepted by the board. It is exhibited at the Royal Academy, and will be formally presented at the first board meeting in the new offices.

The forty-fifth anniversary meeting of the Zoological Society of London was held, on Wednesday, at the society's house, in Hanover-square. The chair was taken by Viscount Walden, F.R.S., the president of the society. The total income of the society in 1873 was £28,099, being £1371 more than that of 1872, and exceeding the income of any previous year. The total number of visitors to the society's gardens in 1873 was 713,046, being 64,958 more than the corresponding number in 1872, and exceeding that of any previous year since the gardens had been open to the public. The number of animals in the menagerie on Dec. 31, 1873, was 2187. Many of the accessions during the year had consisted of specimens of rare or little-known animals, of which full particulars were given.

On Monday the friends and supporters of the Baptist Union held their annual meeting at the Mission-House, Castle-street, Holborn, when the opening address was delivered by the Rev. Charles Stovel, of Commercial-road, Whitechapel. In the annual report, read by the secretary, the Rev. Mr. Millard, allusion was made to the adoption of the new constitution as a distinct sign of progress, and as the commencement, perhaps, of a new era in the history of the denomination. Reference was made to the action of the body in regard to the Elementary Education Act and to the marriage of the Duke of Edinburgh. Thirty-one new churches had been formed. The number of new chapels was thirty-four, supplying accommodation for 11,760 persons, at a cost of £77,957. Fifty-seven brethren had been introduced to the pastoral office. In the evening there was a soirée at the Cannon-street Hotel, at which the Rev. Charles Stovel presided, and at which the speakers were the Revs. John Aldis, J. Owen, W. G. Lewis, and J. T. Brown.

Mr. Justice Blackburn on Wednesday delivered the judgment of the Court of Queen's Bench upon the recent application of Dr. Kenealy for a new trial in the case of the claimant to the Tichborne estates. In the course of an elaborate review of the points which had been raised, his Lordship said it must not be supposed that by entertaining the motion for a new trial the Court expressed any opinion as to the competency of the Judges to rehear and reconsider points of law already decided by the same Court when sitting at bar. It would be time to decide this point when it became necessary to do so, but they were desirous of guarding themselves against any inference in favour of such a proposition from the fact of their having heard the application. They were all of opinion that no ground whatever had been shown for doubting that the proceedings from first to last had been perfectly regular, that the verdict was properly obtained and was quite satisfactory, and that sentence was properly passed by the Court sitting in banco. The whole of the points raised were untenable, and the rule was accordingly refused.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

When we complained, last week, of the parsimony and inactivity of the ruling powers at Newmarket, we imagined that such wretched programmes as those of the Tuesday and Wednesday could scarcely be equalled. There was, however, a lower depth, and the Friday's card ought to be preserved as one of the curiosities of racing in 1874. It was made up of the appropriately-named Refuse Two-year-old Selling Plate, a £50 plate, and a selling stakes. Happily, we were not there to witness the sport (!), nor have we been able to meet with anyone who was; but we should imagine that the starter and judge, and one or two members of the Jockey Club, had all the fun to themselves. We are not one of those who wish to see the sacred heath disfigured with a monster grand stand, or to have it invaded by the motley throng who annually swarm to Epsom; indeed, it is too far from town to be in any danger of such a misfortune; but we do desire to see some radical reforms, which would make the racing at Newmarket more what it should be at a place with a thousand horses in training, and more worthy of such classic ground. The Claret Stakes on the Thursday was a really interesting event. Gang Forward made his first appearance in public since he failed in his St. Leger preparation, and Flageolet was brought back from France to oppose him. The finish between those old opponents, Fordham and Chaloner, was very interesting; but the former got the best of it at the distance, and won cleverly by a head. When it is remembered that Boiard has twice recently beaten Flageolet in a canter, he must be quite unapproachable over long courses, and we may confidently expect a French invasion about Ascot Cup time. A Sweepstakes over the D.M. enabled Peeping Tom to win his first race; but, as Regal and Volturmo were his only antagonists, and the victory was secured in slovenly style, his City and Suburban status was not improved thereby. M. Lefevre's success with Roquefort in a small sweepstakes was dearly purchased by the loss of that very useful horse, who was claimed for £500; and Kaiser's virtual walk over for a Biennial brought the day's proceedings to a close. Fordham won eight races during the week, including walks over, and M. Lefevre was as successful as usual at Newmarket, securing no less than nine events.

Epsom, with its large fields and exciting finishes, presented a pleasant contrast to Newmarket, and the "comparisons" which were made were particularly "odious." Nineteen ran for the City and Suburban, but the race was a good deal spoilt by an unfortunate accident which occurred in the course of it. Just as the horses swept round Tattenham Corner into the straight, Bugle March (5 st. 7 lb.) struck into the rails and fell, bringing down Bullseye (7 st. 4 lb.) and Petition (5 st. 10 lb.) also. From that point Minister (6 st. 11 lb.) held a clear lead till within the distance, when Aldrich (6 st. 4 lb.), who was beautifully ridden by little Morbey, caught him, and won easily by a neck. It is almost unnecessary to add that Oxford Mixture (7 st. 4 lb.) obtained a place. The winner, who is the property of Lord Rosebery, only started once last year, when he secured a maiden plate at Abingdon, and, having been beaten in his trial by Lowlander, was almost friendless in the betting at 40 to 1. After the race, Lord Rosebery's offer of £300 for Lowlander was declined, though it is an unprecedented price for a hurdle-racer. Algebra (5 st. 10 lb.), who was said to be a Derby horse, was never prominent in the struggle; still, Mr. Gretton is convinced that he did not show anything like his true form, and is determined to give him a chance of proving this in the Two Thousand next week. Lemnos (7 st. 4 lb.) has grown into a beautiful animal; but, like nearly all the Thunderbolts, does not care to go beyond the T.Y.C. Wycherly, the rider of Petition, was much injured by his fall, and the other two jockeys were a good deal shaken; while Bullseye broke his back, and had to be destroyed. The Westminster Stakes produced a splendid struggle between Lady Rosebery, by Lord Clifden—Violet, and Cachmere. The former, who was in receipt of 5 lb., held the lead till a few strides from the judge's box, when Cachmere got up and made a deal-heat of it, and a division was arranged. On the following day the pair met again in the Hyde Park Stakes—a new race, to which £500 was added—and Lady Rosebery, again in receipt of 5 lb., was beaten easily. In spite of her 10 lb. penalty, Cachmere won cleverly by a head, but was disqualified on the ground of a cannon, and the race was awarded to Prince Bathyan's Galopin, who is by Vedette—Flying Duchess, and therefore an own brother to the very speedy Vex. The Great Metropolitan proved rather a failure, as there were but six starters, and they only represented four stables. Aldrich (7 st.) found the extra weight too much for him over this long and trying course, and Royal George (7 st. 7 lb.) won pretty easily from Inquietude (5 st. 9 lb.) M. Lefevre thus having the mortification of running second for both the important handicaps of the meeting.

It has been arranged that Colonel Jelf-Sharps shall hunt the Essex and Suffolk country, with a guaranteed subscription of £1000 per annum.

Favoured by splendid weather, the Richmond C.C. brought off its annual athletic sports last Saturday. There were immense entries for all the events, and the proceedings were unusually successful.

A most interesting billiard-match will be played at the Guildhall Tavern, on Friday evening next, for £100 a side. The competitors will be W. Cook (the champion) and F. Taylor, the latter receiving 300 points start in 1000. Both men are apparently in their best form, and some very brilliant play is sure to take place.

Messrs. Yarrow and Hedley, of Poplar, are fitting out a number of steam-launches for numerous parts of the world.

An oyster-bed, about six miles off Shoreham, has been discovered by the master of a dredger. The oysters are said to be of excellent flavour, and twice as big as "natives."

The annual general meeting of the members of the Art-Union of London was held on Tuesday morning in the Adelphi Theatre. The chair was occupied by Mr. Godwin. The report stated that the amount of subscriptions for the year just closed was £11,311. The amount allotted for prizes was £6154; and for print of the year, almanack, report, &c., and reserve, £2764. The payments made on account of prospective works and liabilities incurred in relation thereto amount to about £20,000. The amount to be expended on prizes will obtain 129 works of art, valued at from £100 to £10 each, and an oil-painting by E. W. Cooke, R.A., "The Dutch Trawlers," value £120, to which will be added a great variety of other prizes, which, with the prizes given to unsuccessful members of ten years' standing, raises the total number to 940. For the coming year the council has prepared an engraving of the great wall-painting in the Palace of Westminster of the meeting of Wellington and Blucher after the Battle of Waterloo. To do justice to the important undertaking, the council has paid the engraver £3150. With the idea of helping forward art-education, the council has offered two premiums of £25 and £15, to be competed for by students of painting in pottery. The report was adopted, and the distribution of the amount subscribed for the purchase of works of art for 1874 proceeded with.

CIVIL WAR MONUMENT AT BILBAO.

The evil habit of Spanish political faction fighting, which prevailed forty years ago as it does now, has left its monument in the chief town of the Basque Provinces. Bilbao, as we recently observed, was more than once an object of contention, from 1833 to 1839, in the warfare between the Carlists and the Christinos, as the partisans of the late Queen Isabella, then an infant, were called from the name of her mother, Queen Regent Christina. The army of the Queen, which had the active support of England, under Lord Melbourne's and Lord Palmerston's administration, was commanded by General Espartero; that of Don Carlos, grandfather of the present Don Carlos, was led by Zumalacaregui, a famous Basque chieftain, in some respects like the "bonny Dundee" of Scottish Jacobite history. The garrison of Bilbao was reinforced by a British Naval Brigade of our sailors and marines, under Colonel Wyld, Captains Ebsworth, Lord John Hay, Lapidge, and Henry, who maintained the defence, through a sixty days' siege, in the winter of 1838, with a high degree of skill and valour. The siege was at length raised by enabling the army of Espartero to cross the river Nervion on rafts, under cover of the English guns, when the Carlists, then commanded by Eguia, after the death of Zumalacaregui, were forced to quit their positions on the right bank. The monument at Bilbao was erected to commemorate those slain in the repeated conflicts that took place thereabout, when Queen Isabella, now a deposed Sovereign and exile, was a little girl, but one whose title was regarded by many Liberal politicians as the symbol of constitutional liberty for Spain. The Don Carlos of the present day, who is now holding the fortified lines of Somorrostro, three miles from Bilbao, against Marshal Serrano and the Madrid Government, was in those days not yet born. His cause, was then pretty much the same as it is now—that of Absolutism in Church and State.

MONUMENT AT BILBAO TO THOSE SLAIN IN THE SPANISH CIVIL WARS FORTY YEARS AGO.

THE CITY OF RICHMOND

The City of Richmond was the last steamer built in the well-known yard of Messrs. Tod and Macgregor, at Partick, on the Clyde. They constructed for the Inman Line alone steamers of the aggregate tonnage of 42,000 tons. The City of Richmond is in many respects similar to the Montreal and other vessels belonging to the company. She is 450 ft. in length over all by 43 ft. beam, and 36 ft. in depth from the spar-deck to the keelson. Her engines, which are on the compound principle, and of the largest size ever made for the merchant service, are of 900-horse power nominal, but are capable of working to 5000-horse power. Like the engines of the City of Chester, they are on the high and low pressure principle, with direct-acting cylinders, the larger 120 in. in diameter, and the smaller 76 in., with a stroke of 5 ft. They are supplied with steam by ten boilers, heated by thirty furnaces, the boilers having surface condensers, and all the other modern means to ensure economy in the consumption of coal and efficient working of the motive power. The builders have departed from the models of the other boats, by giving two funnels to the City of Richmond, so as to afford additional draught to the furnaces. The funnels add to the beauty of the vessel, by aiding to fill up the great space between the main and mizen masts. This new steamer is most strongly built. Every modern appliance which can in any way contribute to her stability and her safety has been employed. Viewed fore and aft, her lines are so beautifully fine that she resembles a very large yacht. It is only by an internal examination that her enormous proportions and her carrying capacity can be seen or understood. She is a full-rigged ship, and carries sufficient canvas to enable her to proceed on her voyage, quite independent of steam, should her machinery meet with an accident or break down. But such is the enormous spread of her canvas that, in a gale of wind, her crew, numerous as they are, would find some difficulty in managing the sails without the steam-winch with which she is provided. These winches are also used for raising the anchors and for lifting and casting overboard the ashes which are formed in the stokeholes. When in port, their chief use is for loading and unloading cargo. Communication between the bridge and the engine-room and wheel-house is maintained by Chadburn's telegraph. In the wheelhouse is Macfarlane Gray's steam steering gear, by which the vessel may be guided with the greatest ease even in the face of a gale of wind.

The steamer is built to carry 150 saloon and 1300 steerage passengers, for the cooking of whose food and for other domestic purposes many hundred gallons of water are daily required. This indispensable article is supplied by means of a condensing apparatus which is capable of furnishing all that is ever likely to be required by passengers and crew. It is assuring to know that provision is made on board for extinguishing that most dreaded of all calamities to sailors—a fire at sea. Steam fire-annihilators are connected with every department of the ship. In addition, there is a powerful steam centrifugal pump capable of raising 2000 gallons of water per minute, which could be thrown upon a fire. If, by any casualty, a large body of water had entered the engine-rooms and threatened to extinguish the engine fires, the pump could be employed to clear the water off. Hanging in the davits are ten life-boats of great capacity, furnished with the best appliances for safely lowering in case of emergency.

The internal arrangements of the City of Richmond are very convenient. The saloon, as near midships as it can be placed, is a splendid apartment, 44 ft. by 42 ft., fitted in a luxurious and tasteful manner. The room is wainscoted in bird's-eye maple, with the outer framework of walnutwood, in the centre of each panel is an elaborate example of inlaid wood. The panels are separated by Corinthian columns of walnutwood, with gilded capitals. To each window there are crimson curtains, adorned with gold lace. The delicate painting of the ceiling, the richness of the velvet coverings of the lounges, the artistic arrangement of plate glass at each end of the saloon, and the other decorations, are all in perfect taste. They combine to render the saloon as beautiful and as comfortable as any drawing-room could be made at sea. The state-rooms are well ventilated and commodious. They are supplied with hot and cold water, and are fitted with electric communication and Broadfoot's washing-basins. In addition to the rooms already mentioned, are two ladies' boudoirs, one on the upper deck and one immediately adjacent to the saloon. For those who are fond of tobacco there is a capacious smoking-room. For all the saloon passengers an additional promenade-deck has been constructed forward of the funnels. But, in thus providing for the comforts of the saloon passengers, the requirements of those in the steerage have not been overlooked. Their quarters, chiefly on the main-deck, are capacious and airy—the most important considerations where great numbers of persons congregate together by night. In all the arrangements made by the Inman Company, special attention is paid to the comforts of the steerage passengers, as the numbers carried by this line attest.

THE QUEEN AND THE NAVAL BRIGADE.

The inspection by her Majesty of the sailors and marines of the Royal Navy who so well bore their part, with three regiments of the Army, in the campaign against the Ashantees, was an interesting ceremony. It took place on Thursday week (St. George's Day), in the Royal Clarence Victualling-yard at Gosport. The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, crossed from the Isle of Wight in the steam-yacht Alberta, commanded by Prince Leiningen, at half-past two in the afternoon. Her Majesty was attended by the Marchioness of Ely, the Hon. Horatia Stopford, General Ponsonby, and Colonel Byng. His Royal Highness Captain the Duke of Edinburgh, attended by Commander Ramsay, R.N., was also present, having come with the Lords of the Admiralty from London. He went on board the Royal yacht when it arrived at the floating pier.

The usual compliment of firing a salute from the guns of the Duke of Wellington and other ships in harbour was dispensed with, by her Majesty's desire, though a salute had been fired to greet the Lords of the Admiralty a short time before. The First Lord, the Right Hon. G. Ward Hunt, with Admiral Sir A. Milne, First Naval Lord, and Mr. A. Egerton, Secretary to the Board, Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, commanding at Portsmouth, and Lieutenant-General Sir Hastings Doyle, commanding the military district, received the Queen on her landing. Her Majesty was further attended by Vice-Admiral Sir J. W. Tarleton, Captain Sir J. E. Commerell, K.C.B., Captain the Hon. H. C. Glyn, Col. Williams, R.M., and Capt. Lord Gilford.

The Royal Clarence Yard was decorated with flags on poles set up all round the open space, and joined together by festoons of laurel. On the side next the harbour was an estrade covered with crimson cloth having a yellow fringe, with some pots of flowers, and an arm-chair; but this the Queen did not use. The sailors, the marines, and the Marine Artillery, were drawn up on three sides of the square. On the south side were the seamen, 327 in number, with sixty-one officers, under Captain Walter Grubbe, C.B., who for some time commanded the Naval Brigade in the late campaign, and was wounded at the battle of Amoaful. On the west side were about one hundred men, in four companies, of the Royal Marine Artillery, under Colonel F. W. Festing, C.B. On the north side were the Royal Marines, above 200, of the Portsmouth, Chatham, and Plymouth divisions, under Colonel de Courcy, C.B. The remaining space at the sides was occupied by a multitude of spectators. On the right of the Queen's raised platform were inclosed places for the municipal dignitaries, and for officers not on duty.

The Queen, attended by the two Lords of the Admiralty, and Princess Beatrice with the Duke of Edinburgh, walked along these lines of the brave seamen and marines, and looked upon them with gracious approval. Her Majesty was preceded by the naval aides-de-camp, Captain Sir John Commerell, Captain the Hon. H. Carr Glyn, and Colonel Williams, with Captain Prince Leiningen, Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, General Sir Hastings Doyle, and the staff. Her Majesty bowed in passing the officers not on duty. When she had gone round, and took her place on the raised floor at the south side, the band of the Royal Marine Artillery came forward into the centre of the square, and the march past began.

The sailors came first, the pioneers, who cleared the road to Coomassie, leading the way, and Captain Grubbe marching at the head of his men. They went by in "fours," for the ground was not large enough to admit the usual order in column of companies. Then came the Artillery of the Marines, headed by Colonel Festing, and the light infantry under Colonel de Courcy. These troops began their march in column of companies, but, on passing the saluting-point, were compelled to break into "fours." When all had passed and the square was formed again as before, the First Lord of the Admiralty brought up the following officers for presentation to her Majesty:—Captain Percy Luxmoore, C.B., of the Druid; Captain Parkyn, of the Victor Emmanuel; Captain Grant, of the Himalaya, and Colonel de Courcy; also Colonel F. W. Festing, C.B. This gallant officer, whose portrait we gave last week, is now Sir Francis Festing, having been made a Knight of the Order of St. Michael and St. George.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, April 30.

The dulness consequent upon the vacation of the Assembly has been enlivened this week by an extraordinary speech made at Nice by M. Piccon, one of the deputies for the department of the Alpes Maritimes, annexed to France, as will be recollected, after the war of 1859. It appears that meetings had been held at Nice concerning a proposed railway between that town and Coni in Piedmont, which were followed by a banquet given by the municipality of Nice to that of Coni. At the close of the dinner M. Piccon made a speech in Italian, in the course of which he is reported to have exclaimed—"In presence of my dear Italian compatriots my heart bounds with joy; all my Italian sentiments spring again into life. I have the firm conviction that at an epoch which is not very distant our beautiful and heroic Nice—sacrificed as the ransom of Italian independence—will once more be united to the mother country. To bring about such a result I am prepared to sacrifice all my own interests as well as those of my family." The publication of this speech was immediately followed by an outburst of indignation on the part of all the Parisian and provincial journals, and in answer to this M. Piccon wrote an equivocally-worded letter accusing the journalist who originally gave publicity to his remarks of being an eavesdropper, as the banquet was a private one, and denying the exactitude of his version. Having subsequently heard that the Government intended to ask permission of the National Assembly to prosecute him for his unpatriotic, if not criminal, language, M. Piccon has telegraphed to the Duc de Broglie requesting him to defer any such resolve until he has heard his explanation. By way of protest against M. Piccon's insinuations, a veritable anti-separatist manifestation appears to have taken place at the close of the session of the Nice Council-General, the President assuring his hearers of the fidelity of the Savoyards, and the members separating amid shouts of "Vive la France!"

Renewed intriguing is going on in favour of the restoration of the Count de Chambord, and the language used by the Royalist organs when speaking of the present Government is growing positively menacing. M. Ferdinand Boyer, another leader of the Right, has followed the example of his colleagues, M.M. de la Rochette and Lucien Brun, by publishing a definition of the Septennat, and publicly vindicating the rights of the Monarchists to intrigue for the return of their "much-loved Prince." The dispute between the Government and the Marseilles Council-General has terminated by the latter petitioning the Council of State for the restitution of its rights, and by the Duc de Broglie announcing his intention of demanding from the Assembly permission to get rid of the council altogether. The recent sitting of the Commission de Permanence was signalled by a bitter altercation on the subject between the Republican members and the Government, as well as by an animated discussion apropos of Prince Napoleon's recent journey to Corsica.

The Figaro has been calling attention to a recent mania on the part of English people to commit suicide in the French capital. Some short time ago a Miss Eliza Levison threw herself into the Seine, and about the same time a young Englishman was discovered shot through the head. The deaths of both had been brought about by their own act, and it was asserted that a connection existed between the two suicides. A few days afterwards there were two suicides at the Hotel St. Petersbourg, in the Rue Caumartin. A young Englishman and his wife arrived from London during the afternoon, and were shown to an apartment; they declined any refreshment, and did not make their appearance that evening at the table-d'hôte nor leave their room in the course of the following morning. Eventually, at two o'clock, the servants knocked at their door, but no one answered; and the landlord at once sent for a commissary of police and a locksmith. The door was forced open, and the two young people were found lying dead in one another's arms. By the side of them was a small bottle, which had contained prussic acid; but there were neither letters nor papers to furnish a clue to their names, and the marks in their linen had been unpicked. The bodies were removed to the Morgue, and it has since been ascertained that their names were Charles and Ann Hall, and that they formerly resided in Bath. The husband, it seems, had already attempted to commit suicide, last year, at Ilfracombe, and had undergone a sentence of imprisonment in consequence.

The Correctional Tribunal of Lyons has just condemned twenty-nine members of the International Working Men's Association to different terms of imprisonment, varying from three months to five years, in virtue of the law interdicting that society in France.

SPAIN.

Stormy weather has delayed military operations at Somorostro, but Marshal Serrano has sent a telegram to Madrid, announcing that he recommenced hostilities on Tuesday. The cannonading ceased at nightfall, but was to be resumed next morning. Advice received at Santander states that Marshal Serrano would merely make a feint against San Pedro Abanto while the real attack was carried out by Marshal Concha upon Valmaseda.

ITALY.

In Monday's sitting of the Chamber of Deputies the debate on the bill modifying the tax on personal property was resumed. On clause 4, as amended by the Committee and accepted by the Government, being put to the vote, it was rejected by 157 votes against 104. The Chamber subsequently, by 156 against 101, approved the clause as brought forward by the Ministry.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William inspected the 1st Regiment of the Guards, yesterday week, in Potsdam. His Majesty went on foot past all the three battalions, and was out two hours.

In Saturday's sitting of the German Parliament the Press Bill was read the third time and passed. The Church Penalties Bill also went through its final stages, and was carried by 214 votes against 108. At a night sitting the report upon the administration of Alsace-Lorraine was discussed, and a resolution passed declaring that the requirements of the law had been satisfied by the presentation of the report. On Sunday the Parliament was closed by the Emperor in person with a speech, in which his Majesty reviewed the measures of the Session, and expressed his satisfaction with them, and his conviction that the Fatherland had a prosperous future before it, and that Europe would find a pledge of peace and progress in the care bestowed by the Parliament upon the mental, moral, and material strength of Germany. The telegram says that the passage of the speech referring to the maintenance of peace was much applauded. The ceremony concluded with cheers for the Emperor, proposed by the Bavarian Minister.

Herr Camphausen, the Prussian Finance Minister, has had the felicity of announcing a surplus of twenty-one million thalers for the year 1873. The ordinary revenue was 24½ million thalers, and the extraordinary 103½ millions, the corresponding expenditures being 222 millions and 104 millions. As a sequel to these disclosures, Herr Camphausen, on Tuesday, submitted a scheme for the liquidation of the public debt. It would take effect from the commencement of next year, and effect an annual saving of over two million thalers.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In the sitting of the Upper House of the Reichsrath, on Thursday week, the final estimates for 1874 were approved. In Friday's sitting the special debate took place upon the Government bill providing funds for defraying the expense of Catholic worship. The bill was passed. The House also adopted, in special debate, the first Ecclesiastical Bill, which has now been approved by both Chambers.

Almost entirely in the form in which it was brought forward by the committee, the Convents Bill has passed the second reading in the Lower House.

GREECE.

M. Bulgari announced in the Chamber on Tuesday, before any debate had taken place, that he and his Ministerial colleagues had tendered their resignation.

AMERICA.

The Senate has refused to pass the Currency Bill over the President's veto. The voting was 34 for the bill and 32 against; the majority was, therefore, smaller than the two-thirds requisite to annul the Presidential action.

In Arkansas the Republican Governor, Mr. Baxter, has convened the State Legislature in order to obtain its decision between him and his rival in the governorship.

More disastrous floods are reported. A telegram of Saturday says the Lower Mississippi has overflowed its banks. The Onachila Valley, the town of Monroe, and twenty-seven plantations are inundated. Thousands of persons have been rendered utterly destitute by this calamity.

INDIA.

The Viceregal telegram of the 25th ult. from Calcutta concludes with the intelligence that there had been no fresh deaths from starvation. In the more distressed districts Sir Richard Temple's new system of task work in the villages instead of on the roads is being rapidly extended. He reports the public health to be good, and the physical appearance of the people to be improving. Only in Western and Central Tirhoot is there much aggravation of the famine.

One or two items of famine news were telegraphed by the Times correspondent at Calcutta on Thursday:—"The rates for task-work have been raised and the people are returning to the relief works. There has been rain generally throughout Tirhoot. Fires are of almost daily occurrence. The famine is extending among the cultivating classes at Durbungah."

A Parsee merchant in Bombay, Sir Cowasjee Jehanghier, whose public benefactions, extending over thirty years, are estimated to amount to £180,000, has given the Public Works Department a donation of ten thousand rupees for furnishing the Cowasjee Jehanghier University Hall.

AUSTRALIA.

We learn from Melbourne that the elections to the Victoria Parliament have terminated, and that they are unfavourable to the Government. Mr. McCulloch has been elected, but Mr. O'Shaughnessy has been defeated.

The new Exchange at Brussels was opened last week.

The Pope has nominated Lord Granard a Knight of the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Gregory the Great.

The marriage of the Grand Duke Vladimir of Russia with the Duchess Marie of Mecklenburg is to take place in July.

Disturbances are reported from Hayti, where, according to a Jamaica telegram, the mob has burnt many houses.

Prince Charles of Roumania has issued a decree at Bucharest convoking an extraordinary Session of the Chambers for one month, commencing on May 7.

The Grand Duke Nicholas Constantinovich has started from St. Petersburg with a completely equipped party for the scientific exploration of the valley of the Amou Daria.

The Danish Minister of Justice, M. Klein, whose election to the Diet had been annulled, has been re-elected at Aalborg by a large majority.

It is telegraphed from St. Petersburg that the navigation is again open, a German steamer having arrived with fruit. The channel between Cronstadt and the capital is free from ice.

The Government has resolved to sanction the completion of the survey of Captain Sprye's proposed overland route from Rangoon to Western China.

Though continually repulsed, the Achinese make repeated assaults on the Dutch position, and, on the 16th ult., vigorously attacked the Kraton, keeping up an engagement for eight hours.

It is officially announced that M. de Lesseps has accepted the decision of the Porte in reference to the Suez Canal tonnage dues fixed by the International Commission. The difficulty which had arisen in this matter is now, therefore, at an end.

The Russian Government has, at the recommendation of an Imperial Commission appointed to consider the question, resolved to establish a college at St. Petersburg, in which ladies are to be trained for the calling of schoolmistresses, both for the lower and higher grades of girls' schools.

The commissioners sent to the Fiji islands, according to a Melbourne telegram, have conditionally accepted their annexation to the British empire. A provisional Government under the British Consul is administering the country until the session is formally accepted by the home Government.

The 3rd Administrative Battalion Suffolk Rifle Volunteers will form a camp at Lowestoft from July 20 to July 25.

Lord Kesteven has been appointed Custos Rotulorum of the Liberty of Peterborough, in place of the late Hon. George Wentworth Fitzwilliam.

The exhibition of the Society of French Artists in New Bond-street, as also an exhibition of Alpine pictures by M. Loppé at the Conduit-street Gallery, opened on Monday last; but we must reserve our notices till next week.

Mr. Cross has appointed Mr. Edward Montague Earle Welby, of the Hollies, near Sheffield, as the stipendiary magistrate for that borough, in the room of Mr. J. E. Davis. The salary is £1000 per year. Mr. Welby is the son of Sir Glyne Earle Welby-Gregory, of Denton House, Lincolnshire, and was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in 1863. He is a member of the Midland Circuit.

ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

The great annual art-display which opens to the public on Monday is, if we may trust a first impression, more than usually varied and interesting, and of rather higher average of merit than its predecessors. We cannot, of course, expect an enormous advance to be made in a single year; yet, if we travel back in memory to the old gatherings in Trafalgar-square, it must be felt at Burlington House that art is progressing among us; it is striking its roots deeper, and bearing riper fruit.

In every large exhibition such as this disappointment must be experienced in any given year by finding old favourites conspicuous by their absence or making a less conspicuous mere act of presence. On this occasion, for instance, many will regret to learn that, owing to various causes, the important works expected from Mr. F. Goodall, Mr. F. Walker, and others are not to be found. On the other hand, several well-known members and Associates have surpassed themselves or have seldom been seen to greater advantage. It is, however, the works by artists still outside the Academic ranks which, by their number and diverse excellence, mainly convince us that English art is taking a higher tone and standing. Thanks to the liberality of the Academy in lowering the dado in the great room (thereby considerably increasing the wall-space), and to generally more careful hanging than formerly, the ever-increasing proportion of deserving new aspirants have an improved chance of meeting the public eye. This year, too, the Lecture-Room is appropriated exclusively to oil paintings, the architectural drawings being transferred to Room IX.

Yearly the pressure on the Academy for a place on its walls increases; as many as 5400 works are said to have passed, this time, before the Council, though only 1624 items are in the catalogue. A yet larger number—i.e., over 6500—are, it is true, stated to have been offered for the present selection of the French Salon; but it should be remembered that Paris has practically no other exhibition of current art. In all probability the number of works annually destined for the Salon would be largely exceeded with us if the Royal Academy were our sole national exhibition—if there were no other bodies of artists possessing galleries of their own; no Societies of Painters in Water Colours, no International—though this last can scarcely be included, so many of the pictures having been previously exhibited.

It is this enormous productiveness, with the corresponding demand and wealth which it implies, that is, perhaps, the most encouraging circumstance relatively to the prospects of British art. Wealth is naturally selective, and extensive competition compels improvement. Still, however, there is much need of education for our "collectors," as well as our artists. After making the circuit of these rooms, the visitor will probably feel that our artists are imperfectly trained in the material, mechanical, and technical parts of their profession; they do not generally receive a thorough Academic education in the—so to speak—grammatical and rhetorical laws of art (which impose fetters only on the feeble), nor do they undergo that finishing process which the foreign artist passes through as the pupil of some master, or in intimate contact with refined artistic and social circles. Nevertheless, we do not find that the aims of English artists are lower than those of most foreign schools, or their sentiment in art less pure. We have not at Burlington House, like our Gallic neighbours, scores of sprawling nudities, acres of battle-pieces, miracles of ingenious labour expended on boudoir trivialities and inanities, or the costumes of galvanised historical dummies; we have not the specious dazzle of the newest Italian school; we have not a regiment of landscapes by painters, all like the Germans, drilled to match; we have not the bourgeois insensibility to beauty and grace of much Belgian art: we certainly have a great deal of weak draughtsmanship and garish colouring; but the taste is not often irretrievably artificial or dull, and scarcely ever indecent. Doubtless we have much to learn from the Continental schools, and we are glad to see a sprinkling of foreign works in the Piccadilly rooms, which afford some data, however scanty, for instructive comparison. Notwithstanding, we are arriving at the conclusion that every year there are solid grounds for hopefulness regarding our native art. As a nation we are unsurpassed in poetry, literature, science, commerce, and enterprise. Why should we not be equally illustrious in art?

This year we can, at all events, point to Mr. Millais's works, and feel that it would be safe to challenge the Continent to produce his equal in his own walk—nay, more, we confidently assert that he is one of the artists who for posterity will mark an epoch. The head of the sailor-veteran in his figure picture and his two landscapes are transcendent feats of painter-power, such as have not before been equalled by the artist himself, and, in our opinion, they are worthy of any time and any master. To one of his two landscapes (both of which are "upright" in form) is given the appropriate line from Wordsworth, "The Silence that is in the lonely woods." A group of noble "Scotch Firs" (68) in some Highland solitude rear their bronze-coloured, mast-like trunks and bristling tufts of sombre foliage, telling black almost against a silvery, lustrous sky. At their feet is a thick undergrowth of stunted oak and bushes, dwarfed by the giant firs, with grasses and blossoming epacris. Force of effect is the dominant quality in this landscape; in the other, called "Winter Fuel" (75), it is richness of colour. Here we see a rude timber-wain laden with stems and branches of the silver birch, the metallic sheen of the bark, cracking and peeling here and there, and splashed with ochreous and purplish lichens, forming a splendid contrast with the reds and russets of the few sere leaves still clinging to some oak-branches, to the tangle of smaller firewood bound in faggots beneath, and the glowing autumnal hues of the Birnam Wood of Macbeth in the middle distance. The woodcutter's little daughter sits with his dinner waiting the father's return. There is landscape-painting outside, and it may be beyond, this absolute and ultimate realism—an infusion of imagination and feeling into the impression conveyed—but never was Nature transferred, so to speak, before the eye with more truth or force. There can, however, be no qualification whatever as regards the male head in "The North-West Passage" (320). Nothing more can be required of art than to place a head, full of character, instinct with passion—Nature's masterpiece, in short—so vividly on canvas that it shall tell the story of a life. Any modifying "treatment" would be utterly out of place here. The subject is an old Arctic explorer seated near an open window affording a glimpse of calm sea, with a chart before him, and a glass of grog (of old Jamaica—stiff) by his side, listening to a fair girl who sits at his feet and holds his hand, as she reads the log-book records of his former perils. At some stirring passage he clenches his hand, and fires at the thought that England yet should and must wrest the secret of the frozen seas. The print of Nelson on the wall, the bunting hangings—everything has a nautical aspect and savour. The face of the girl is almost too evanescent in the contrast of its delicacy with the furrowed, old, weather-beaten countenance of the sailor. As for the latter—to which we cannot refrain from recurring—it is worthy of Tintoretto, or Velasquez, or Rembrandt; and the technical marvel of it is that, while these masters would have relied on dark backgrounds and chiaroscuro for their relief, our English painter attains quite equal force whilst preserving an almost illusive effect of clearest daylight. Mr. Millais likewise sends a charming portrait (484) of a little girl (one of the artist's children) nursing a pet dog; and a half-length of a rather elder daughter, in walking winter costume (152), rightly entitled "The Picture of Health," which is altogether exquisite—see especially the subtle drawing and modelling of the sweet features, the lovely colouring of the complexion, its fresh young beauty, all aglow with healthful exercise. There are, besides, a portrait of Master Nathaniel Rothschild (95), and a half-length of a lady seated in a pensive attitude, with much of the feeling of Gainsborough, entitled "A Day Dream" (1432). Mr. Millais is a type of that individuality which is characteristic of our painters, but might be less so if they all went through the same routine of tuition. He certainly owes nothing to academics, nor to other masters. He has this year been more painstaking, and has resisted the temptation to indulge in executive bravura, by which he seemed likely to be led astray when he had emancipated himself from the hardness of his early works and acquired full freedom of hand.

Mr. Frith sends one of those large representations of contemporary familiar life with countless figures, which he selects and arranges with so much tact and intelligence, so as to tell the story in all its minutiae, whether pleasing or painful, vulgar or "genteel," and which he paints so cleverly, smartly, and natively. True to his sympathy with popular experiences, Mr. Frith has chosen a scene which many Londoners have witnessed in their trips to Boulogne—i.e., "Blessing the Children" (243), an incident in the great annual procession in honour of the Blessed Virgin at that favourite Anglo-French watering-place. But the subject appeals to feelings more gentle, pure, and humane than the "Derby Day," the "Baden Kurstaal," and parts of the "Railway Station." It will, we believe, prove not less generally attractive on that account. Moreover, the scene affords a wider scope for picturesque treatment, play and gaiety of colour, and even greater variety of character. The work has been a labour long and patient, but evidently one of real enjoyment; the figures are on a larger scale than in those of Mr. Frith's pictures with which it admits comparison; and the extremely multifarious details are painted with much initiative skill, and with a care that is only too uniformly precise. By taking advantage of an angle in the Boulogne High-street, the whole of the procession, with the waving banners, the canopied image of "Our Lady of Boulogne," the ecclesiastics, the contingents—military, naval, and civil—together with the crowd of spectators (including the artist himself) on the trottoirs and at the windows, are brought into view. On our right the major part of the procession is receding towards the distance, and the perspective linear and aerial of the retiring lines, both of the figures and houses, is capitally managed. More immediately in the foreground to our left we have the principal incident—the Bishop of Arras in his sumptuous vestments, preceded by his crosier-bearer, and chanting canons, followed by two vicaires généraux, and attended by other clergy, attached to his function, raising his hand in benediction of the children, some of whom are afflicted, that are pressed from all sides by mothers and bonnes towards him to kiss his robes. This gives occasion for some pretty touches of shyness in the little ones, and of joy in the mothers, who kiss their cherubs after the consecrating ceremony. There are, of course, some representatives of perfide Albion, particularly at a balcony, with the pious if not complimentary inscription beneath, "Priez pour l'Angleterre;" there are young lady zealots on their knees; and there is the inevitable gendarme despoiled to "run in" an obtrusive boy past blessing, with many other episodes impossible to enumerate within our limits. We will only object that some of the faces seem to us too ivory-smooth and clean—not tanned by sun and salt, or modelled and characterised with the force of the accessories. Something of the same remark applies to Mr. Frith's lifelike single female figure-subjects, though otherwise charming—viz., "Wandering Thoughts" (167), "Pamela" (74), "Asleep" (420), and "Prayer" (1331).

Mr. Faed reminds one of former triumphs in a pathetic incident of Scotch cottier family life, which he has rendered feelingly and naturally though approaching perilously near to sentimentality and clasp. The title is "Forgiven" (227), and the domestic drama of which the situation depicted is the dénouement is indicated in extracts quoted in the catalogue from a letter, real or imaginary, of the mother. The daughter, having married in disobedience to her father's wishes, and been forsaken by a worthless husband, has now returned to the old home, and in grief and shame buries her face in her hands. Her mother, in whose comely, kindly, and sagacious old face the chief interest of the picture centres, bends over her in pity, and gives a tacit welcome by extending her arms to the babe on her daughter's knee. But the father, still proud, though aged and broken, cannot quite relent, and turns from the loaf he was cutting to go out and calm his resentment. A puppy, a cat, and a kitten have their share in the scene. If not quite so vigorous or as admirable in colour as some previous works, the play of varied hues is pleasing, and the handling is descriptive yet unobtrusive. A little more concentration with solidity seems desirable, and might have been attained by the toning of parts. Mr. Faed has two smaller figure-subjects, which are rather vague in treatment.

Mr. Pettie justifies his recent election to Academic full membership. His chief picture represents a scarlet-robed Cardinal, lean, astute, and audacious, burning a document containing "A State Secret" (223), the dangerous nature, the probable treachery or possible treason, of which is suggested by the grim care with which he holds the last remnant of the document while the flame is turning it to tinder, and by the terrified air with which a monk in attendance watches the proceeding. The bronze on the table, of Hercules strangling Antaeus, is also not without suggestiveness. The mass of red (rather artificially lighted, as we think, and with reflexes too strong) cannot fail to catch the visitor's eye; the energy both of the conception and execution will almost as certainly strike his imagination, and he is not likely to readily forget the vengeful look of the Cardinal—watching the combustion as the Master of the Holy Inquisition might gloat over an auto-da-fé. The effect of the flame against the scarlet robe is an exceedingly clever bit of imitation. A smaller picture, full of spirit, character, and humour, shows a young Cavalier drawing on a tennis-court wall a caricature in charcoal of "Old Noll," to the intense delight of two other Royalists, whose natural exclamation or cacchination, "Ho! ho! ho!" (1363), furnishes the title. An expressive and graceful picture of "Juliet and Friar Lawrence" (132) is a third contribution. Mr. Pettie has made a decided advance this year. The vigour of these works is unquestionable, and even the first just escapes the melodramatic exaggeration chargeable to some previous efforts. We can only object that the artist's skill of hand is only too palpable, and, therefore, apt to intrude between the subject and spectator.

Mr. E. M. Ward continues, within the intime conditions of "genre," to illustrate the more-than-ever neglected domain of English history. The theme of his largest picture—intelligently selected and dramatically conceived as always—is that of Lady

Rachel Russell at Whitehall imploring of Charles II. her husband's life. The heartless, obdurate King stands fondling his spaniels as he listlessly turns from the petition in his hand. His brother James, no friend to the condemned man, keeps out of view behind a screen; in the background the Duchess of Portsmouth, who, it is said, was offered a bribe of £30,000 to use her influence in favour of Lord Russell, is seen entering a side door as a messenger is leaving a farther room with a letter sealed with black, presumably containing the order for execution. A minor work shows Marie Antoinette sleeping her last sleep in the prison of the Conciergerie (43). In the water-colour room is the original design (761) for the mural-painting at Westminster of "William and Mary receiving the Lords and Commons." There are also two small graceful single figures of ladies, entitled "Midsummer" (482) and "Christmas" (485). Mrs. Ward is not less felicitous than her husband in choice of subject, and the choice is always perfectly appropriate to a feminine pencil. This time it is an incident in the heroic defence of Lathom House by Charlotte Tremouille, Countess of Derby. The Countess is seated with her children at table in a room of the Eagle tower, to which, for greater safety, she had retired; a shell penetrates, however, into the apartment and explodes; yet she and her children, steadied by her courage, remain collected, though an officer in the room is excusably startled. Through the open door some of the defenders are watching the besiegers from a staircase.

Mr. Calderon has divided his attention between that romantic and picturesque fifteenth century of his early predilection, when all the "damosels" were lovely and all the knights were handsome, and this modern time when, according to the artist, all the ladies are still charming, and all the men—well, they are literally or metaphorically nowhere! His chief work represents a beautiful and buxom "Queen of the Tournament" (335) standing on a dais in a tapestried hall, and placing a golden chaplet on the brow of the victor of the jousts, who, clad in steel and wearing her primrose colour on his arm, kneels at her feet. Behind him are his squires, holding his lance and casque, and around stand a gay throng of spectators. A smaller picture, wickedly entitled "Half Hours with the Best Authors" (166), discovers three young ladies, in muslin deshabille, reclining on a double sofa, two of them asleep over their books, whilst a third, with her back towards us, seems to be making merely a semblance of reading. The somnolency of the fair students must, however, in charity, be attributed less to the influence of the "best authors" than to the heat of a summer afternoon sun, the glare of which is not quite excluded by the closed window-shutters. A half-length portrait of a lady is noteworthy for the pure and delicate tones of the very fair complexion. Mr. Calderon's painting is sweeter and more luxurious than ever; but we could wish for a little reality of a sterner sort, by way of contrast.

Mr. Horsley proves that there is "sterner stuff" in him than would be looked for by those who associate his name not with his frescoes at Westminster, but with those lightest, brightest, and pleasantest of pictures which he derives from a time when Old England seems to have been always en fête galante. We allude to his colossal composition celebrative of "The Healing Mercies of Christ" (123) in raising Jairus's daughter and the Widow of Nain's son, in restoring sight to the blind, and making the lame to leap "as a hart." Children, also—representing the Kingdom of Heaven—together with Saints John and Peter, whose names are associated with similar acts of mercy, surround the Saviour. The picture is painted for a large lunette in the chapel of St. Thomas's Hospital, as a gift of the late Sir William Tite. It is executed on canvas, in the so-called "marble medium," invented and used by the late Mr. Parris in his restoration of the paintings of Sir James Thornhill, inside the dome of St. Paul's. Wax is an essential constituent of the vehicle, which, unlike fresco, admits of the use of all colours; but it must be admitted that the effect is rather cold and opaque. Mr. Horsley's other pictures are in his customary vein. "The Poet's Theme" (344) is a young lady in a ravishing riding-costume of the eighteenth century, whose charms assuredly warrant the complimentary verses just placed in her hand by an enthusiastic youth resembling the poet Keats. Another picture presents some unforeseen as well as truthful "Sunny Effects" (52) from a large oriel, one of which is the sleep that has fallen upon a young lady, and the advance on tiptoe of a gallant who has evidently designs on her unconsciousness.

Mr. H. S. Marks likewise appears as a mural decorator in a large composition (978) illustrative of "Winter," one of a series of mediæval designs of the seasons for a billiard-room. It is a snow scene: a serving-maid, standing on a doorstep, is giving ale from a "leathern bottel" in a cup of horn to an itinerant piper and fiddler—the "waits," perhaps, of the period. The work is not, of course, of high aim; but it exemplifies the flat treatment required in mural decoration of its class. The motto is "A Quart of Ale is a Dish for a King." A more elaborate sample of the painter's rich humour and keen sense of character is his sixteenth-century version, in oil, of the never-ending dispute between "Capital and Labour" (179). A baron, who is having additions made to his hall, is summoned by his architect to the workmen's scaffold to listen to their grievances, as preferred through their spokesman, the master mason. The "capitalist" is a lofty but not implacable personage, and, to do the labourers justice, they seem to prefer their claims civilly enough; the freemasonry and trades guilds of those times were, however, hardly a counterpart to the Union of the modern working man, so the dispute will probably end without either strike or lock-out. The scene of another amusing picture is the interior of a milliner's shop, with the male proprietor recommending to a lady customer a hat, surmounted by the tall steeple of the fifteenth century, as "The Latest Fashion" (125); a strolling gentleman in long robe smiling sardonically over "A Page of Rabelais" (388) is a fourth contribution by the same painter.

Mr. Hodgson once more gathers his pictorial materials from the North African sea-board, and, although he has nothing perhaps quite so irresistible as his "Jack Ashore," there is little in the exhibition to compare with his pictures in their combination of racy humour, physiological truth, and general technical completeness. His largest work (286) represents the Bay of Tangiers, seen under a brilliant and beautiful effect of sunlight. H.M.S. Sultan has just arrived in the offing, and the volumes of smoke from the salute of her great guns drift majestically towards the horizon. The difficulties of the Tangierese in returning the salute are indicated in the foreground, where on the ramparts of a fort a black slave is compelled, despite his infinite reluctance, to try to fire a disused, rusty, old gun, corded to a most primitive gun-carriage. The dubious anxiety of the bystanders as to the result of the experiment is intimated by their extreme shyness of the gun. In another picture we have a Riff market-scene, with a girl—a Jewess, because unveiled—bargaining for some very "Odd Fish" (363) at a fishmonger's stall. Smaller, but not less admirable, is Mr. Hodgson's little picture (150) of an Algerian knife-grinder, whose expression alone, with his lips twisted tightly awry as he scrapes away on his wheel, is enough to turn one's teeth on edge.

Here we must pause for the present.

MAY DAY IN THE FIE

FTEENTH CENTURY.

The Extra Supplement.

ALBERT DURER SKETCHING ANTWERP.

There is a personal interest, besides what belongs to the history of art, in the anecdotes which are told of Albrecht or Albert Dürer, the good painter of Nuremberg, who sympathised with the Protestant Reformation in Germany, and who suffered considerable domestic anxiety from the unsympathising temper of his wife. Two English works of biography—those of Mrs. Charles Heaton and Mr. W. B. Scott—have been devoted to this subject, and we need only refer to them for whatever information any of our readers may now require. In July, 1520, being then nearly fifty years of age, Albert Dürer visited Flanders, and sojourned a few months in the city of Antwerp, where he sought the patronage of the Lady Margaret, Duchess of Savoy and Regent of the Netherlands, sister to the Emperor Charles V. Among the works he produced or commenced at this period was a panoramic view of Antwerp, sketched from a barge on the river Scheldt; and he appears to be engaged in this task of sketching, accompanied by his host and other friends, in the picture which has been copied for our engraving. This picture, by Mr. J. Neuhuys, of Antwerp, was exhibited, a year or two since, in the Belgian National Exhibition held in that city. It is said to be a faithful representation of the old-fashioned costumes and architecture of Antwerp three hundred and fifty years ago.

MAY DAY IN THE OLDEN TIME.

The Londoners of 400 years ago, in the reign of that popular monarch King Edward IV., who liked feasting with aldermen and flirting with their wives and daughters, used to keep their first day of May in the merriest fashion. At midnight of the last of April they would assemble in parish bands or companies, and take their way out of the City gates across Moorfields to Islington, to Highgate or Haringhay, or through Clerkenwell westward to the Royal park of Marylebone. Here they would cut and collect an immense quantity of birch boughs and branches of other trees, so beautiful at this season with their fresh green foliage. After a night of such pleasant work, having also felled and stripped a straight fir-trunk for the maypole, they would march back to town with songs on the glad May-Day morning, while the maypole would be drawn by a team of oxen, each beast wearing a garland of flowers on its horns. The grandest of the City maypoles was erected on Cornhill, in front of St. Andrew's Church; and, because the pole or shaft was taller than the steeple, that church was called St. Andrew Undershaft. Flags were hoisted at the top of the maypole; it was bound about with leafy branches from the ground to the summit; and a ring of arbours, constructed of these spoils of the greenwood, was made about the extemporised theatre in the City street. The first business there performed was to elect the Lord and Lady of May, who were expected also to play the parts of Robin Hood and Maid Marian. Those of Little John, Friar Tuck, and the other familiars of Sherwood Forest, were not left unrepresented. Besides the romantic outlaws of popular ballad story, there was a jester or witty "fool," a juggler tossing his gilt balls and sharp swords, a hobby-horse to caper and curvet, and a troop of morris-dancers, in their antic dress with chiming bells fastened to their caps and jackets. The milkmaids, too, came out on May Day, each bearing a trophy of borrowed silver or pewter cups piled on her wooden milkpail, and singing a song, for which largesse was freely given. It was a scene of continual festivity and revelry throughout the day, and in the evening there was a blaze of bonfires. An old rhymester speaks of May Day as follows:—

Ho! you, I say, of this same noble town,
Come lift aloft your velvet heads and slipping off your gown,
With bells on legs, and napkins clean unto your shoulders tied,
With scarfs and garters as you please, and "Hey for our town!" cried,
March out and show your willing minds, by twenty and by twenty,
To Hoxton or to Newington, where ale and cakes are plenty;
And let it ne'er be said, for shame, that we, the youths of London,
Lay thrumming of our caps at home, and left our custom undone.

In the reign of Henry VII. a May-Day entertainment at Greenwich was got up by some lords, knights, and gentlemen of the King's Court, who exhibited feats of tilting, fencing, archery, and wrestling, "as servants of the Lady May, and in honour of that month." Hall's Chronicle relates how, in the seventh year of Henry VIII., that King joined a company of 200 tall fellows, all clad in Lincoln green, on the high ground of Shooters' Hill, and saw their skill with the bow, Queen Katherine being among the spectators. This was on a May-Day morning. The anniversary festival of this spring-time advent was still kept up after the Reformation; and, though suppressed by the Puritans in the seventeenth century, was revived under Charles II. The chief maypole was in the Strand, nearly opposite Somerset House, or where St. Mary's Church now stands. It is the subject of a well-known allusion in Pope's "Dunciad." Our Illustration of May Day in the fifteenth century is an interesting study of ancient English manners and costumes.

Last year the total liabilities of bankrupts were estimated at £4,045,127, and the assets at £675,023.

The visit of the Belgian Garde Civique to Brighton has been arranged for June 28.

Mr. Thomas Proctor, alderman, has given a Mansion House, value £16,000, to Bristol, which has had none since the Reform Riots of 1831, when that in Queen-square was destroyed.

The Mayor of Liverpool convened a public meeting yesterday week in aid of for relieving the sufferers from the famine in Bengal. A committee was appointed, and subscriptions amounting to about £2000 were promised at the meeting.

The Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, accompanied by a numerous suite, visited Aldershot camp, on Tuesday, and made his usual spring inspection of the troops—the infantry, at the North Camp drill-ground; and the cavalry, the Royal Artillery, and the Royal Engineers, on Cove-common.

At a meeting of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce, on Monday, it was announced that the Marquis of Salisbury had nominated Mr. Andrew Cassells, of the firm of J. Peel and Co., to the vacant seat in the Indian Council. Mr. Cassells is an ex-director of the Manchester Chamber of Commerce.

The first report upon the "Distribution of Flowers amongst the Sick and Infirm Poor of Hull" has been published, showing that last year 8654 bunches were placed in the hands of the bedridden and dying with the best effects. This movement was organised by Mr. S. Walliker, postmaster of Hull.

The Irish Church Synod began, on Tuesday, the discussion of the Athanasian Creed. The Rev. Mr. Verschoyle proposes that it should be struck out of the Prayer-Book; Colonel Ffolliott, that the damatory clauses be omitted; and the Dean of Limerick wishes to prefix to it a declaration that it is to be taken as warning, not condemnatory.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

There have been in the last few days some remarkable appearances in the House of Commons. Those who remembered Mr. Smollett when he sat in Parliament up to 1863 were prepared to welcome his reappearance, having lively recollections of many a laugh raised by him; and probably when his advent was known gossip about his peculiar powers was sufficiently current to cause the neophyte members to expect a hilarious scene. Besides, as his motion was an impeachment, on constitutional grounds, of Mr. Gladstone in the matter of the sudden "dissolution," it was to be expected that that right hon. gentleman would be on his mettle, and would execute a grand act of elocution. Nevertheless, there was no eager crowding of members and strangers at the early hours, and when Mr. Smollett rose there was only an ordinary assemblage. At once those who formerly knew him recognised the old, sharp, metallic tones of his voice, the snapping of his words, and the epigrammatic turn of his sentences. Soon, too, there came shooting out, like discharges from a gun, bits of that biting humour and sarcastic illustration for which he was always famous. But it seemed as if the four years of exile from the House which he has gone through has curdled every drop of the milk of human kindness which he once possessed, and which formerly tended slightly to dilute his caustic rhetoric. Now it was all gall and bitterness, and even when humour mingled with the acid it scarcely subdued the rasping effect which was generally produced. In fact, despite the laughter which was inevitably raised, it was universally felt that the seriousness of an attack on a distinguished statesman was marred by the profuse use of phraseology which even the wit with which it was impregnated did not take the speech out of the region of "Billingsgate." The consequence was an utter failure. Those who laughed must have felt annoyed with themselves for giving way to mirth when they ought to have been indignant; and doubtless everyone was glad to hear the statement of Mr. Smollett that he had taken counsel with no one, and that his motion (as well as his speech) was his alone. This was proved by the silence and the pause which ensued when he concluded, and the shrinking of everyone from seconding the motion. It was saved from an ignominious collapse by the interposition of Mr. Whalley, who, moved by that spirit which induces him to take up causes with which no one else will have anything to do, performed the formal act, which rendered the resolution a living Parliamentary thing and capable of being dealt with.

It would have been better, perhaps, for Mr. Gladstone's sake, if the motion had fallen through amidst the contempt of the House; for his exoneration would thus have been far more complete than it was made by his speech. He had a rehearsal of a new style of speaking the evening before, when, in commenting on the Budget, he was gentle, even subdued, and, when critical, kindly. Now he at once and in his first sentences betrayed that he was deeply stung by the organised attack upon him. He thought it worth his while to break a moth upon a wheel by heaping bitter sarcasm wrapped up in heavy banter upon poor Mr. Whalley, and renewing that sort of thing again and again. In regard to his treatment of Mr. Smollett, no doubt, he was excusable for anything he may have said on such provocation as he had received; but it is just questionable whether the more dignified course would not have been to have taken higher ground in his reply, and not to have condescended to caustic sarcasm faintly infused with jest; thus in a manner, and to a slight extent, adopting the style which had been practically condemned by the audience in his aggressor. It would have been better, too, if he had not suffered himself, once at least, to rise into a very whirlwind of passion—which, possibly, was just what Mr. Smollett wanted to produce. However, when he concluded, sympathy was expressed for him by the warm cheers of the Liberals; while the silence of the Ministerialists, and their acquiescence in the resolve of the Opposition not to allow the motion to be withdrawn, but to be summarily negatived without further discussion, was equally a proof of the fiasco of Mr. Smollett.

An idea which has been prevalent that the new House was deficient in Parliamentary "Yoricks," who would now and again set the assembly in a roar, has been to a great extent dissipated by one or two appearances of nascent legislators in the funny line. Note has before been taken of the development of a rough and rugged humour in Mr. Davies, of Cardigan, who plays the part of the honest, jolly, and facetious working man—which is in the minds of some folk the ideal of that personage—with great vigour and decided intention. There has been another début in the facetious style, which has been a stupendous success. One night when the question of the purchase of Irish railways was in consideration, and when out of the plump of Home Rule Irish members came demands for the realisation of that project, some whining and some blustering, there arose out of their midst a gentleman of lofty stature, very large girth, and a handsome countenance, who addressed the House in a voice "loud as a trumpet with a silvery sound." At once it was perceived that here was a bold and a jovial spirit, who could declare serious and assured opinions under cover of uproarious humour; that here was a gentleman "who could not ope his mouth but out there flew a trope;" and whose bluff and rotund manner was in felicitous keeping with his grand personal configuration, as well as with the decisive and practical character of his opinions. No written description can give any notion of the vocabulary and the demeanour of Major Purcell O'Gorman, and all that can be done towards personifying him is to say that he has proved that some of those pictures of overflowing humourous and original Irishmen which were drawn by Charles Lever are not, as has sometimes been supposed, exaggerated, but that it would take two or three of these characters rolled into one to come up to the standard and compass of the new member for Waterford. In the last Parliament it was thought that Mr. Delahunty was the acme of Irish eccentricity in phraseology and demeanour, but he was faint and shadowy and feeble to the gentleman who has succeeded him in the representation of Waterford, and who will probably amply supply the places, as humorists, of both the late members for that city, Mr. Delahunty and Mr. Bernal Osborne. Once Major O'Gorman was corrected by the Speaker; but it was by misapprehension, for, happening to use a phrase which is proverbial in Ireland, and which is said to have originated with Cromwell, in which an alternative was given to those to whom it was addressed to go to Connaught or a place which by itself is not mentionable to ears polite, the Speaker caught only the word by which that place is designated; and as that phrase, when sounded in its simplicity and without "Connaught," is so brusque as to be inadmissible in ordinary discourse, it is also decidedly unparliamentary, and was therefore noticed from the Chair. Of course if the whole of the words had been heard, they would have been treated as a quotation from a distinguished personage such as Cromwell, and have been allowed to pass.

Certainly, in the list of remarkable appearances Mr. Hanbury is entitled to a high place. This gentleman is not exactly a new member, having been returned for Tainworth in 1872; but he has not been prominent as a speaker until now. Opportunity was afforded him by a motion about British policy on the Gold Coast, which he propounded, to give evidence of the quality that is within him, which is a quality far above mediocrity and nearly reaching to excellence. He is a personable gentleman, with a good voice, though rather wanting in flexibility; fluent, but by no means washy, in speech; assured, though not dogmatic in opinion; and he had so filled himself with his subject that he spoke for two hours without a check, and in a way to hold attention even for that length of time. It happened that he spoke at a period of the evening when the House is always very thin, and had an audience which was small and, perhaps, not as fit as it might have been. The reappearance of Mr. Hubbard, after his five years' enforced Parliamentary seclusion, is noticeable; and it may be said that he seems as fresh, spruce, and active in body, and as quick, perceptive, and suggestive in mind, as ever. The Parliamentary resurrection of Mr. Fawcett by his having become member for Hackney was notable in the recent history of the House. It happened that when he came to take his seat the circumstances of the House were such that it was easy for the Liberals to make his entry a triumphal one.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

At the instance of the Duke of Argyll, the policy and administration of the late Government were considered yesterday week, and both were approved by the Marquis of Salisbury, but a little criticised by Lord Napier of Ettrick, while Lord Lawrence gave some practical opinions on the best mode of dealing with the situation.

Lord Delawarr, on Monday, obtained a commission to inquire into railway management and accidents; and the Lord Chancellor's Land Bills were committed pro forma for the insertion of amendments, the actual consideration in Committee to be taken on Monday next.

It was ascertained from the Government, on Tuesday, that the troops who were employed on the Gold Coast will have divided among them some of the gold dust rendered by King Coffee, and that honorary distinctions will be conferred upon them; Captain Glover, in particular, receiving a knight commandership of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Lord Sidmouth was informed that the Government is not in a position to modify the Education Act so as to permit districts in which school-board schools have failed to return to the voluntary system.

On Thursday Earl Beauchamp (the Lord Steward) read her Majesty's reply to the address to the Crown agreed to on Monday last. It was as follows:—"I have received your address praying that a Commission should be appointed to inquire into the causes of accidents on railways, and into the possibility of removing such causes by legislation, and I will give directions that a Commission shall be issued for the purposes which you have suggested."

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The principal matter, yesterday week, was a motion of censure, by Mr. Smollett, on the late Government for the abrupt dissolution of Parliament. The hon. gentleman stated his case in a speech of mixed caustic humour and invective, and he found a seconder in Mr. Whalley. Mr. Gladstone replied, vindicating the course he had taken in dissolving Parliament, and retorting with much force on Mr. Smollett. Without further discussion the motion was negatived. The Civil Service Estimates were taken in Committee of Supply, and the whole of the votes in class I were agreed to.

On Monday the policy of this country in regard to the administration of the settlements on the Gold Coast was discussed. Mr. Cross introduced a bill amending the laws relating to the sale and consumption of intoxicating liquors. This he proposed to do by enacting, first, that the hours for closing public-houses should be fixed by statute, and not left to the discretion of the magistrates. It was not intended to alter the hours in the cases of beer-houses, nor those of public-houses on Sundays; but on week-days in London all public-houses would be placed on the same footing, be closed at half-past twelve o'clock, and the system of exemptions put an end to. In country towns with a population of over 10,000 the time for closing would be half-past eleven, and in rural districts eleven, as at present. With regard to convictions, he proposed that for a first offence the amount of the penalty should be left to the discretion of the magistrate, that the indorsement of licenses should be optional, and that there should be no police supervision after a conviction unless ordered by the Judge. Further, the adulteration clauses of the Act of 1872 were to be repealed. Provision would also be made as to occasional licenses at fairs and races, and magistrates would be empowered to grant provisional licenses to persons desirous of building public-houses, after inquiry made into the wants of the district. After a short discussion the motion was agreed to, and leave given to bring in the bill. The Real Property Limitation Bill, the Land Titles and Transfer Bill, and the Real Property Vendors and Purchasers Bill were passed through Committee without amendment. The Local Government Provisional Orders Bill was read the third time. Sir Stafford Northcote stated the total amount of the National Debt at £779,294,000, of which the sum of £723,514,000 is funded, the sum of £4,479,000 is unfunded, and the sum of £52,000,000 is in the form of terminable annuities.

A long discussion took place, on Tuesday, upon a motion for the purchase of the Irish railways by the State, which was rejected by a large majority. The Building Societies Bill and the Parliamentary Elections (Returning Officers' Fees Bill) were read the second time, and ordered to be referred to Select Committees; the Game Birds (Ireland) Bill was passed through Committee; the order for committing the Municipal Privileges (Ireland) Bill was discharged, on the motion of Sir M. Beach, and the bill referred to a Select Committee; and the Betting Bill was read the third time and passed.

Colonel Hogg moved the second reading of the Metropolitan Buildings and Management Bill on Wednesday. It was by general consent read the second time and referred to a Select Committee. Mr. M'Lagan then moved the second reading of the Game Laws (Scotland) Bill. Colonel Alexander moved as an amendment that it be read the second time that day six months, and upon a division the bill was thrown out by 192 votes against 127.

On Thursday, in reply to Mr. W. Egerton respecting the high duty upon British salt in France, Mr. Bourke said that negotiations were going on between her Majesty's Government and the French Government upon the subject, under the treaty of commerce. On the subject of the Suez Canal Company in connection with the International Commission, Mr. Bourke stated, in reply to Mr. O'Donnell, that to the International Commission which assembled at Constantinople, at the invitation of the Porte last October, an invitation was sent to all the maritime Powers. Neither the Suez Canal Company nor any of the ship companies interested in the matter were represented. M. de Lesseps, who was trying to bring his case before the Commission, never showed any disposition or expressed any wish to attend. But, in point of fact, his views were fully considered by the Commission, and fully stated and powerfully advocated by one of the French delegates. The House went into Committee of Supply on the Navy Estimates, the discussion upon which occupied the remainder of the evening.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Bank rate of interest was, on Thursday, raised from 3½ per cent (to which it was lowered on Jan. 15) to 4 per cent.

The Italian Legation has been transferred from Hill-street to 25, Lower Grosvenor-street.

The Marquis of Bath has accepted the post of trustee of the National Portrait Gallery.

The award of certificates to students at the Crystal Palace school of practical engineering took place last Saturday.

A hall on behalf of the building fund of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage was given on Thursday, at the Terminus Hotel, Cannon-street.

According to a return to Parliament the bank notes of the Bank of England held by the public, on Dec. 31 last, amounted to £25,807,000, and the amount of bullion was £22,619,000.

The spring general meeting of the National Rifle Association will be held at the Royal United Service Institution, Whitehall-yard, on Saturday next, May 9; at 2.30—Field Marshal the Duke of Cambridge in the chair.

Two houses in course of removal in Newgate-street fell, on Tuesday, burying in the ruins a number of men and lads employed upon them. Six of these were so injured as to necessitate their removal to St. Bartholomew's Hospital.

A donation of £1000 has been made to the funds of the Swedenborg Society by an anonymous admirer of the Swedish seer's writings. The society was founded in 1810, solely for the purpose of publishing to the world the works of Swedenborg.

The annual dinner of the News-vendors' Benevolent and Provident Institution was held, on Wednesday evening, at the Criterion, Piccadilly, Mr. Beresford-Hope taking the chair. The subscriptions included £20 from the chairman and ten guineas from the Earl of Derby.

At the Mansion House, on Wednesday, the Lord Mayor gave a ball in honour of the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, at which their Royal Highnesses were present, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Teck, the Duke of Cambridge, and many other distinguished personages.

The biennial festival of the Royal National Hospital for Consumption at Ventnor, in the Isle of Wight, was held on Wednesday evening, at Willis's Rooms. Dr. Harold Browne, Bishop of Winchester, presided. A long list of subscriptions, amounting to upwards of £5000, was read.

Lords Hatherley and Selborne, referees in a matter between the authorities of King's College Hospital and St. John's House, have made a report which, together with certain recommendations appended by their Lordships, will be discussed at the adjourned general annual meeting of the hospital to-day (Saturday).

At a grand lodge, held in the Temple, Great Queen-street, on Wednesday, the Marquis of Ripon was installed Grand Master of the English Freemasons. His style and titles having been proclaimed by the grand director of Ceremonies, his Lordship was saluted by the brethren. He afterwards appointed Lord Carnarvon Deputy Grand Master for the ensuing year.

As a prelude of the early reopening of the Alexandra Palace, a private view was given, on Saturday, of the section intended to illustrate the dwellings and domestic dress of all nations. The two principal buildings represented were a modern Egyptian villa, modelled at Cairo, and a Moorish residence. Mr A. Enden, who was the Secretary to the Dublin Exhibition, has been appointed superintendent to the Alexandra Palace.

The annual distribution of prizes to the successful pupils, boys and girls, of the Borough Jewish school took place, on Sunday, at the Lecture Hall, Carter-street, Walworth, under the presidency of Baron Henry de Worms. Recitations were delivered by several of the boys and girls in a style which evinced considerable training and intelligence, after which the prizes were distributed. The school contains sixty-five boys and fifty-two girls.

Lord Lyttelton presided, on Tuesday, at the 173rd annual meeting of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. The report for 1873 stated that the gross income of the society had reached £110,259. The staff of the society comprises 484 ordained missionaries, 141 students, and 822 catechists. Resolutions were adopted pledging the meeting to use every effort for maintaining the success that had been realised during the past two years.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the number of paupers last week was 100,441, of whom 35,277 were in workhouses and 65,164 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 7637, 11,736, and 32,108 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved was 648, of whom 440 were men, 169 women, and 39 children under sixteen.

At a meeting of the friends of the National Hospital for Incurables, held on Tuesday, in Willis's Rooms, the Duke of Northumberland, who presided, set forth the urgent need of funds to furnish the completed section of the hospital. Sufficient accommodation has been prepared for eight or ten patients, and it was stated that before commencing operations provision would have to be found for an annual expenditure of £600. A liberal subscription was made.

At a meeting of the council of the Metropolitan Hospital Sunday Fund, held at the Mansion House, under the presidency of the Rev. Canon Miller, it was resolved that the council, while recognising and highly appreciating the laudable efforts of the working men to aid the object for which the Hospital Sunday Fund was established, and wishing them "God speed," felt that, under existing circumstances, it was expedient that the working men of the metropolis should be left to take any independent action they might think desirable in regard to the Hospital Saturday Fund.

From a series of the more recent papers written by Dr. Livingstone, extracts from which were read on Monday evening at the Geographical Society's meeting, hopes were expressed by Sir Bartle Frere that, with the assistance of Jacob Wainwright, a connected narrative of the great traveller's later history may be possible. Lord Derby received yesterday week a deputation from the friends of the late Dr. Livingstone, who are anxious that provision should be made for his family in such a manner as to express the gratitude of the nation for his eminent services as an explorer. It was affirmed, in support of the claim, that Dr. Livingstone had in his explorations spent at least £11,000 of his own money. Lord Derby replied that he had no doubt the memorial would be favourably received.

SKETCHES IN COOMASSIE.

Three sketches made in the Ashantee capital by our Special Artist with the military expedition under Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley are engraved for this week's paper. One is a view of the interior courtyard of King Coffee Calallee's palace. We borrow a part of the description of this building and its contents from Mr. H. M. Stanley's newly-published volume, "Coomassie and Magdala; the Story of Two British Campaigns in Africa," which came out last week. Mr. Stanley first describes the horrid scene in the grove, called the Sammon-pome—that is to say, the "Home of Ghosts"—where the unburied corpses of the victims slaughtered by a cruel superstition are left to decay, not far from the market-place. This was the subject of our two-page Engraving last week. Mr. Stanley goes on to say:—

"From this Golgotha we proceeded to the King's Palace. It was situated about 300 yards off, and occupied a level area in the valley or depression dividing the two eminences on which Coomassie is situated. The first view of what was designated 'the Palace' was a number of houses with steep thatched roofs, clustered together, and fenced around with split bamboo stakes, occupying an area 400 ft. or 500 ft. square, at one corner of which rose a square two-storied stone building. In appearance it was like any of those merchants' residences which we saw at Cape Coast Castle. The first court we entered was similar, though larger, to the court of the King of Adansie's residence at Fomannah, already described. The lower part of the lofty walls of stucco was painted red, the upper part white. The designs, diamond-shaped, scrollwork done in alto-relievo, were bolder than anything of the kind we had yet seen. The columns were square, with simple pediments and capitals. The alcoves were spacious, probably 14 ft. long by 8 ft. deep. Other courts were after the same style as this; but the columns were circular and smooth in some, while others were curved.

"The alcoves were littered with curious articles. One contained a large number of war-drums, stained with blood, and decorated with ghastly trophies of war and triumph, with human skulls. Another contained a number of cutlasses, rusty sabres without scabbards, accoutrements plated with gold, old worn-out guns with bands of silver and gold, horse-tails, and wisps of elephants' tails; a great number of ivory horns, each with its human jawbone; and in another we beheld any number of tall umbrellas, of silk, satin, velvet, crimson damask, and woollen cloth, bespangled with bits of gold and silver, or fringed with small gold, silver, and brass bells.

"On proceeding finally to the stone structure, which is the King's private residence, we found the interior court and the rooms opening upon it filled with curious, but intrinsically valueless, articles; while the upper story contained much valuable plunder. The following hastily-written inventory taken on the spot will serve, better than any description, to convey information as to the nature of these articles:—A breakfast and dinner service of silver, with English cutlery, Bohemian vases, large glass goblets, strings of the valuable aggrs beads, gold nugget, and bead bracelets and necklaces, piles of faded Kidderminster carpets, Persian rugs, leopard skins, fetiches and charms covered with leopard skins, European regimental drums, European and native swords, yataghans and scimitars of Arab make, gold and silver headed canes, regalia staves; gold-topped royal stools, beautifully carved, and ornamented with gold and silver; seven gold masks, each weighing several ounces; golden toys, damask bed-curtains and counterpanes, silk and cotton cloths, enormous silk umbrellas, African teak boxes and trunks, English engravings, glass bottles, an oil-painting of a gentleman, silver tankards and cups, skull-caps of leather and velvet, leather shakoes, an old uniform of a West India soldier, gold-decorated muskets; a sword, the gift of Queen Victoria; several knives, with bits of gold on the hafts; sandals, gold-plated; a pistol or two and brass blunderbusses, porcelain and china ware, common European delf ware, prints from illustrated newspapers; a copy of the London Times, Oct. 17, 1843; a copy of a Bristol newspaper, of the same year, and so on, ad infinitum, valuable, curious, and worthless things heaped together in every room. An old curiosity shop could not exhibit a more miscellaneous variety of things than the interior of the King's bed-chambers, his private apartments, and store-rooms contained.

"From the flat roof of the palace, which is surrounded by battlements, a very extensive view of the city and the surrounding forest and swamp was obtained. During the day the prize agents went into the palace and the principal chiefs' houses, and proceeded to pack up the most costly things they could discover to sell for the benefit of the army after its arrival at Cape Coast. The trophies were sold at Cape Coast, and netted about £5000. Beyond the King's Palace and the Golgotha, nothing else of interest remained to be seen."

We take this opportunity of stating that Mr. Stanley's volume, "Coomassie and Magdala," published by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle, is illustrated, by permission of the Proprietors of this Journal, with a number of Engravings which have appeared in the Illustrated London News. They also appeared in our special publications, "The British Expedition to Abyssinia," in 1868, and "From Cape Coast to Coomassie, an Illustrated Narrative of the Ashantee War," which we issued a month since, immediately upon the return of the British troops and their commander to this country. Mr. Stanley, as correspondent of the New York Herald, was one of those newspaper reporters who accompanied Sir Robert Napier's army through the Abyssinian campaign six years ago, when we had the services of our own Artist, Mr. Simpson, with the expedition, as well as the sketches contributed by several officers of the General's Staff. The first half of Mr. Stanley's volume is occupied with the more recent Ashantee War. His experiences and observations of the war in Abyssinia fill the remaining half of the book, or rather form a second book, which might have been published, some readers will think, more properly and conveniently in a separate volume. An essay or commentary, to compare the strategical and administrative features of these two British "little wars" in Africa with each other, could be made both interesting and instructive. If any competent author, having the requisite practical acquaintance with military affairs, should hereafter be disposed to write such a treatise, he may, perhaps, find Mr. Stanley's two narratives, in some respects, useful for reference. We understand, however, that Major Henry Brackenbury, R.A., one of Sir Garnet Wolseley's Staff, is preparing an authentic military history of the Ashantee campaign.

An incident which was mentioned by the newspaper correspondents at the time happened on the day our troops left Coomassie, Feb. 6, having first set fire to the town. Great care had been taken to drive out all the people from the houses, which were thoroughly searched before kindling the conflagration. But there was one little boy, a child of seven years, who had lost sight of his parents or friends, and was met wandering about alone. He was kindly taken care of by the English sailors and soldiers until the hour came when they were ordered to march out of the city. They would gladly have carried the child with them, on their road to Pra-su and Cape Coast Castle, trusting to the chance of some opportunity, if the King sent messengers suing for peace, to send back this little fellow in safety. But the boy refused to go with them; and it was considered that if he were left at Coomassie, well out of the reach of danger from the flames, his friends might come and find him when the army was gone. So they gave him plenty of food, and left him, at last, in the middle of the wide street. We trust that he escaped all harm, and that his parents soon came back to find him amidst the ruins. Our Artist's sketch of the parting scene represents the last few lingerers of our soldiery trying in vain to coax the poor child to follow them. They had not a minute to lose.

LIVINGSTONE'S BIRTHPLACE.

The efforts which are now being made to solicit from our Government the grant of a moderate pecuniary provision for Livingstone's two sisters, his two sons, and his two daughters, appear deserving of support. That illustrious man, having constantly devoted himself, during thirty-two years, to the laborious and perilous work of exploring Southern and Central Africa for the spread of civilisation, legitimate commerce, and Christianity, was not in a position to make a fortune for his family. He was, at the time of his death, in the service of her Majesty as British Consul; and it is to be hoped, therefore, that the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will see the strict official propriety of recommending such a public reward as is now asked. The deputation that waited on Lord Derby for this purpose last week, including the Lord Provost of Glasgow, Sir Bartle Frere, President of the Royal Geographical Society, and Mr. W. F. Webb, of Newstead Abbey, met with an encouraging reception. We present three views of the birthplace and early home of David Livingstone, which are unpretending in aspect, his parentage and family connections being of humble rank, but which have a high degree of interest from the character and achievements of such a man. He was born, March 19, 1813, at Blantyre, in Lanarkshire, a village on the Clyde, eight miles south-east of Glasgow. The extensive factory of cotton-spinning, calico-weaving, and dyeing, established here so long ago as 1785, gave employment to many workpeople. Among these was Livingstone's father, as had been the case with his grandfather before; and the future great traveller himself, when a little boy, worked as a piecer in the same cotton-mills. The small country town of Hamilton, where his sisters and daughters still reside, is two miles beyond Blantyre and ten miles from Glasgow. Between these places, a mile from Hamilton, is Bothwell Brigg, where the Covenanters were defeated in 1679, as described by Sir Walter Scott in his "Old Mortality." The ruins of Blantyre Priory, the massive pile of Bothwell Castle, the ducal Palace of Hamilton, and Cadyow, with the remains of the primitive forest and its white wild bulls, are close to the home of Livingstone's childhood. He was certainly familiar with all their historic and romantic associations. They may have crossed his mind sometimes, with snatches of Sir Walter's poetry, as he kept his lonely vigils, with sleeping negroes about him, by the bush-fire in a South African jungle, listening to the distant roar of the lion, and the jackal's bark yet farther off. His wife, daughter of the Rev. Dr. Moffat, died in April, 1862, at Shupanga, on the Shire river.

ELECTION ITEMS.

The official declaration of the poll at Hackney was made last Saturday morning, the number of votes recorded for Mr. Holms (L.) being 10,905; for Professor Fawcett (L.), 10,476; and for Lieutenant Gill, the Conservative candidate, 8994. In returning thanks for his election, Mr. Holms said he thought his triumph was one of which Liberals might be proud. Professor Fawcett complimented the defeated candidate, Mr. Gill, on having fought a stand-up, manly fight. Mr. Gill told the electors that, though he was not entirely satisfied with the result, it was a consolation for him that they had chosen a gentleman whom they knew and honoured, and another whose name was a household word throughout the world.

Judgment in the Wakefield and Windsor petitions was given yesterday week. In the former case Mr. Justice Grove decided that Mr. Green, the Conservative member, was not duly elected, and ordered him to pay the costs of the proceedings. At Windsor Mr. Baron Bramwell decided that the sitting member, Mr. Richardson-Gardner, should retain his seat, but pay his own costs. Monday next has been fixed for the polling at Wakefield. The candidates are Mr. Mackie, Liberal, who was unsuccessful at the late election, and Mr. Kemp Sanderson, Conservative, who was defeated by Mr. Somerset Beaumont in 1868.

The scrutiny in the Petersfield petition was brought to a close last Saturday, and the last vote struck off was from Mr. Nicholson's poll, thereby giving a majority of one to the Hon. Captain Jolliffe, the sitting member. Several important questions upon the construction of the Ballot Act are reserved for the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, upon whose decision the ultimate right to the seat must depend.

The Athlone petition came on for hearing yesterday week. At the general election Mr. John James Ennis and Mr. Edward Sheil each polled 140 votes, and both gentlemen claimed the seat. The judgment of the Court was in favour of Mr. Sheil.

In the case of the Stroud petition Mr. Baron Bramwell has decided that the sitting members had not been duly elected. He acquitted the agents of any knowledge. The members were unseated simply by the folly and imprudence of injudicious friends. He was very sorry for them, but he must order them to pay the costs.

The petition against the return of Mr. Reed for Pembroke has been withdrawn.

The Kerry petition has also been withdrawn.

The working men of Oxford have subscribed £130 towards a testimonial to be given to Mr. Lewis, the unsuccessful candidate at the late election.

Meetings have already been held by the opposite parties interested in the new Licensing Bill to consider the statement made by the Home Secretary on Monday evening in the House of Commons. The representatives of the trade have refrained from passing formal resolutions till the more general opinions of the main body can be ascertained; but the members and friends of the United Kingdom Alliance have lost no time in pledging themselves to resist by every legitimate means "the pernicious proposals of the Government."

The seventy-six annual meeting of the Essex Congregational Union was held at Chelmsford on Tuesday. The Rev. A. Goodrich, of Braintree, the president of the year, delivered an earnest inaugural address on the growth of attention to the doctrine concerning the Church, and the relation of Congregationalists thereto. There was a large attendance of ministers and lay representatives from different parts of Essex. In the evening a dinner was held, under the presidency of Mr. F. Wells, followed by a public meeting, of which Mr. Grimwade, of Ipswich, was chairman.

THE NEW HOUSE OF COMMONS.

MR. EDWARD JENKINS, M.P. FOR DUNDEE.

MR. J. COWEN, M.P. FOR NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

The Portraits of four gentlemen recently elected members of the House of Commons, who were not in Parliamentary life before, are presented on this page. They are Mr. Edward Jenkins, M.P. for Dundee, Mr. Joseph Cowen and Mr. C. F. Hamond, the two representatives of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and Mr. Arthur Mills, M.P. for Exeter.

Mr. John Edward Jenkins is a son of the Rev. Dr. John Jenkins, minister of a Presbyterian church at Montreal, in Canada, and he is nephew to Mr. David James Jenkins, the newly-elected M.P. for Penryn and Falmouth, and to the Rev. Ebenezer Jenkins, the chairman of Wesleyan Indian missions. He was born in 1838 at Bangalore, in India, but was educated in Canada at the Montreal High School and College. Coming over to England, he was called to the Bar at Lincoln's Inn in Michaelmas Term in 1864, and joined the Home Circuit. He is well known as the author of "Ginx's Baby," "Little Hodge," and "Lord Bantam." Some years ago he went to British Guiana, on the part of the English Anti-Slavery Society, to investigate and report upon the condition of the coolies. He has published a book on the subject. He is in religion a Presbyterian, like his father; and he is married to a daughter of Mr. Philip Johnstone, of Belfast. Mr. Jenkins, who lately made a lecturing tour through the large towns of the United States and Canada, has been appointed agent for the Dominion Government for emigration and other purposes in London. He contested Stafford, Truro, and Dundee, on the first occasion, without success. At the late general election he was again candidate for Dundee. The other Liberal candidates for the second seat there—Mr. Yeaman's being secure—were the late member, Sir J. Ogilvy, and Mr. J.

M. D. Meiklejohn, author of some valuable improvements in modern education and English scholarship. Mr. Jenkins, however, was elected in Sir J. Ogilvy's place.

Mr. Joseph Cowen, of Stella House, Blaydon, in the county of Durham, chosen in the advanced Liberal interest for Newcastle-on-Tyne, is eldest son of the late Sir Joseph Cowen, of Stella Hall, who represented Newcastle in the last two Parliaments, by his wife, Mary, daughter of Mr. Anthony Newton, of Winlaton, in the county of Durham. He was born in the year 1831, and was educated at private schools and at the University of Edinburgh. He is described as a coal-owner and fire-brick manufacturer, in the neighbourhood of Newcastle. He is also proprietor of the Newcastle Daily and Weekly Chronicle. He married a daughter of Mr. John Thompson, of Hatfield, in the county of Durham. Mr. Cowen was first returned to Parliament, it will be remembered, a week or two before the late dissolution; but, as he had never taken his seat in St. Stephen's, he may be allowed to count as a new member.

MR. ARTHUR MILLS, M.P. FOR EXETER.

MR. HAMOND, M.P. FOR NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE.

Mr. Charles Frederick Hamond, of Lovaine-place, Newcastle-on-Tyne, barrister-at-law, who is returned for Newcastle in the "independent" Conservative interest, is the son of a gentleman who was formerly a magistrate for Kent. He was born about the year 1840; was called to the Bar at the Middle Temple in Easter Term, 1865, and joined the Northern Circuit, and is a magistrate for the "town and county" of Newcastle-on-Tyne. Mr. Hamond has been an active member of the School Board of Newcastle, as the advocate of religious and biblical education. He has been twice an unsuccessful candidate for the representation of the borough—namely, at the general election of November, 1868, and again, little more than a month ago, on the occasion of the death of Sir Joseph Cowen.

Mr. Arthur Mills, of Budehaven, Cornwall, who has been returned for the city of Exeter, in the Conservative interest, is the youngest son of the late Rev. Francis Mills, of Barford, Warwickshire, by Catherine, daughter of the late Sir John Mordaunt, of Walton, in the same county. He was born in the year 1816, and was educated at Rugby, and at Balliol College, Oxford, where he took the usual degrees. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in Easter Term, 1842, and is the author of "Colonial Constitutions" and of "India in 1843." He is married to Agnes Lucy, youngest daughter of the late Sir Thomas Dyke Acland, M.P., of Killerton, Devon. Mr. Mills is a member of the London School Board for Marylebone and Hampstead. He represented Taunton as a Conservative from 1857 to 1866. He was an unsuccessful candidate for Taunton in 1868; and it will be remembered that he was returned for the city of Exeter a few weeks before the dissolution in the place of Sir J. D. Coleridge; but, as he never took his seat in the late House of Commons, he may fairly be included in the list of new members.

The portrait of Mr. E. Jenkins is from a photograph by Sarony, of New York; those of Mr. Cowen and Mr. Hamond, from photographs by Messrs. W. and D. Downey, of Newcastle; and that of Mr. Arthur Mills, from one by Mr. Owen Angel, of Exeter.

NEW MUSIC.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM, solid dark Oak Case by Alexander. Price FOUR GUINEAS. This Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. Alexander have been enabled to make this a marvel of cheapness, elegance, and good quality of tone. It will be found invaluable for small class-rooms, cottages, or library.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered); with color stop; one four octaves; price FIVE GUINEAS. Manufactured expressly for CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered); compass, five octaves; price FIVE GUINEAS. Manufactured expressly for CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.

CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN-HARMONIUM, with two rows of keys, double and eight-foot tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 2 octaves, F to F. The combined keyboards have a compass of 64 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made.—CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CRAMER'S HARMONIUMS.—Some years since Cramer and Co. found it necessary, on account of the French difficulties, as well as the advance made in prices by the manufacturers, to make to this Institute means as their own factory. The best hands having been engaged and their operations greatly extended, Cramer and Co. now call special attention to their Harmoniums, which, among many other advantages, offer a more effective, as well as a greater variety of tone, and a larger number of speaking stops, at a price much below that of all other eminent makers. Specifications and estimates of special instruments, with any required alterations of stops, furnished on application. The Three-Year System, originated by Cramer, and since adopted by other firms, is applied to all classes of instruments of Cramer's manufacture, and is carried out on a thoroughly large and liberal scale only by themselves.

"UNE PAYSANNE FRANÇAISE" (TERRA COTTA). BY J. DALOU; FROM THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION OF LAST YEAR.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The second appearance this season of Mdlle. Albani took place on Thursday week, when her reception was of the same enthusiastic kind as that which greeted her return on the previous Tuesday. As Amina, in "La Sonnambula," the singer again displayed a voice of increased brilliancy and power, with a corresponding enhancement of dramatic feeling and declamatory force in the more passionate scenes of the opera. The graceful delivery of the opening aria, "Come per me sereno"—the exquisite feeling imparted to Amina's share of the duet with Elvino, "Prendi l'anello," the despairing pathos of the bed-room scene, and the joyous impulse of the final bravura, "Ah! non giunge," each called forth special demonstrations of approval from a brilliant audience. Signor Nicolini, as Elvino, sang with much effect in the duets with Amina and in his scene, "Tutti è sciolto," the cast having included, as heretofore, Signor Baggiolo as Count Rodolfo.

On the following evening Mdlle. Pezzotta (who made her debut here towards the close of last season) reappeared, and was again favourably received in the same character—as Amelia in "Un Ballo in Maschera," the performance of which opera included the successful first appearance of Mdlle. Bianchi as the page Oscar. This young lady has a voice of light and agreeable quality, and her delivery of the canzone "Saper vorreste" pleased so much that it had to be repeated. Signor Cotogni sang finely as Renato, in which part he replaced M. Maurel, in consequence of the illness of the latter. Signor Pavani, as the Duke, sang well; and Mdlle. Scalchi was the same excellent representative of Ulrica as heretofore.

On Saturday "Guglielmo Tell" was to have been given for the third time this season, with the same powerful cast as before, including the Arnolde of Signor Bolis; but in consequence of the continued indisposition of M. Maurel—the representative of Tell—the opera was suddenly changed to "Il Trovatore," in which Signor Bolis achieved another triumph as Mauricio, Mdlle. D'Angeri having been much applauded in her performance as Leonora. In the part of the Count di Luna Signor Cotogni, as substitute for M. Maurel, again proved his readiness and efficiency.

This week's performances commenced with "Il Flauto Magico," which brought back Mdlle. Smereschi in the small part of Papagena. The chief effect of the evening was produced by the brilliant singing of Mdlle. Marimon in the bravura songs of the Queen of Night, the second of which ("Gli angeli d'inferno") was encored. Her florid execution, excellent staccato, and command of the extreme possible soprano range were admirably displayed, and again proved that this fine singer has gained largely in power since last season. Mdlle. d'Angeri, as Pamina, sang with considerable effect in the aria, "Ah! so lo." Signor Pavani, as Tamino, was less successful than in his previous performance above referred to. Signor Cotogni was the same vivacious Papageno as formerly, and Signor Baggiolo's fine bass voice was very effective in the music of Sarastro.

On Tuesday "Lucia di Lammermoor" was repeated, "Il Trovatore" was announced for Thursday, "Faust" for Friday, and "I Puritani" for to-night (Saturday), with Mdlle. Albani as Elvira for the first time.

The first of this year's concerts given in the Floral Hall, adjoining the Royal Italian Opera-House, took place last Saturday afternoon, and included performances by most of the principal artists of that establishment—among the many effective features of the programme having been the fine singing of Mdlle. Albani and Mdlle. Marimon.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The two closing performances of last week consisted of "Les Huguenots," on Thursday, and "Fidelio," on Saturday, the first-named opera having included the fine singing and acting of Mdlle. Titiens as Valentina, the cast in other respects having been a strong one. Signor Fancelli, as Raoul, was especially successful in the duet-septet, and the great duet with Valentina in the fourth act. Mdlle. Alwina Valleria sang the music of Margherita di Valois with refinement; in that of Marcello the fine bass voice of Herr Behrens was highly impressive; other efficient features of the cast having been the San Bris of Signor Agnesi and the Di Nevers of Signor Galassi. "Fidelio" also included the admirable performance of Mdlle. Titiens as the heroine, with other features as recently noticed.

On Monday "Faust" was given, with the return of Mdlle. Marie Rose as Margherita, of Signor Rota as Mefistofele, and the reappearance (after an interval of three years) of Mr. Bentham as Faust, each artist having been well received. The recent debutant, Signor De Reschi, again proved himself to be a valuable acquisition by his performance as Valentino.

"Les Huguenots" was repeated on Tuesday, "Semiramide" was to be given on Thursday, and "Faust" was announced for to-night (Saturday).

The eighteenth series of Saturday afternoon concerts at the Crystal Palace closed last week, with the usual supplemental performance for the benefit of Mr. Manns, the conductor. The programme was one of special importance, having comprised fine performances of Beethoven's choral symphony (the vocal solos by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley); and of Schumann's overture, and four of the pieces of incidental music composed by him for the drama of "Manfred"—these last having been given for the first time in England. It is to be hoped that the whole of the fifteen movements may be heard before long, the entire series being characterised by great beauty and power. A new violinist, Herr Peiniger (a pupil of Joachim), executed Ernst's "Hungarian" Fantasia, and was well received. Miscellaneous vocal solos by Mesdames Otto-Alvleben and Sherrington, Miss Sterling, and Mr. Santley completed the programme. A new series of nine "summer concerts" commences to-day (Saturday).

The 136th anniversary festival of the Royal Society of Musicians took place at Willis's Rooms, on Monday, when the Prince of Wales was the president of the evening. Various loyal and other toasts were given and responded to, that of "Prosperity to the Royal Society of Musicians of Great Britain" having been proposed by the Royal President. There was a large attendance, and the total amount of subscriptions and donations realised upwards of £1000. The proceedings of the evening were agreeably diversified by various musical performances. Vocal pieces were contributed by Miss Antoinette Sterling, Signor Caravoglia, and the members of the London Vocal Union; and Mr. W. G. Cousins played Thalberg's "Mosé in Egitto" Fantasia with great effect on a splendid "concert grand" pianoforte furnished gratuitously by Messrs. Broadwood for the occasion.

The Sacred Harmonic Society terminated its forty-second season last night (Friday), when the second and greater of the two oratorios composed by its conductor, Sir Michael Costa, was announced for the closing performance. "Naaman" had been promised for a much earlier date, but was voluntarily put aside by the composer to allow of the production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," in March last.

The competition for the Parepa-Rosa Scholarship took place at the Royal Academy of Music on Saturday, when Miss Annie Elizabeth Bolingbroke was the successful candidate.

The Leeds Musical Festival has been fixed to begin on Oct. 5, and will last four days. Sir Michael Costa will be the conductor. Accommodation will be afforded in the Victoria Hall for 2350 persons. The Mayor is chairman of the general committee. The guarantee fund amounts to nearly £6000.

It has been arranged to hold a musical festival in Liverpool, similar to the festivals which have been so successfully carried out in Birmingham and other towns. A preliminary meeting of the promoters was, on Tuesday, held at the Townhall, the Deputy Mayor, Mr. E. Whitley, presiding, and Sir J. Benedict being among those present. It is proposed to offer a number of valuable prizes for competition.

THEATRES.

Considerable interest continues to be excited by Mr. Phelps's frequent appearances at the Gaiety. The public have been much pleased with his assumption of the part, with him a great favourite, of Baillie Nicol Jarvie, in "Rob Roy." Mr. Vezin, too, has gained by the representation. He played the hero of the piece with vigour and intelligence; and we may add that Mr. Charles Harcourt, as Thornton, was very good. Bishop's music also is given in a satisfactory manner.

Mr. Toole appeared on Saturday at the Globe in three pieces. In the first he represented John Puddicombe in Mr. Tom Taylor's farce of "Our Clerks," and convulsed the audience with laughter. In the second, "Off the Line," he played very amusingly the part of Harry Coke, the engine-driver, occasionally, however, proving to be very pathetic. In the third, "Ici on Parle Français," as Mr. Spriggins, the lodging-house keeper, Mr. Toole excited the hilarity with which his appearances in the part are usually attended.

Mr. Toole has also appeared in a piece at the Globe, written by Mr. C. M. Rae, and entitled "Billy Doo." The hero is a billsticker, who is much annoyed by a nervous old gentleman, who continually pulls down his bills. A grocer's assistant in love excites the suspicion in both parties as both the sticker-up and puller-down of the obnoxious advertisements. The confusion thereby caused is the source of much mirth. The thing is a skilful trifle—it aims at no higher merit.

The Criterion shows signs of managerial activity. The last production, entitled "Normandy Pippins," is a pleasant little piece. With no great pretensions, it affords an opportunity for Miss Fanny Holland, Miss Hughes, and Mr. Dewar, of which they judiciously take full advantage. Some very lively music, selected from the popular composers of the day, is introduced. With Mrs. John Wood and Mr. Byron in the "American Lady," a pleasant evening's entertainment is afforded.

At the Court "Le Voyage de M. Perrichon" supplies the foundation for a piece, which has been ruined by incongruities of costume. The part of Perrichon is played in an admirable manner by Mr. Hill. He properly appears in an ordinary tourist's suit, but he is supported (?) by a number of young ladies in satin knickerbockers, utterly out of keeping with the scenery of Wales and the apparel of the principal characters.

At the Lyceum the drama of "The Bells" has been revived, and Mr. Irving has again had the opportunity of portraying the terrors and death of the guilty Mathias, and again fully justified the reputation which he had obtained by the original performance.

A new and original comedy by Mr. James Albery, entitled "Fride," has met with decided success at the Vaudeville. The plot is somewhat perplexed, but the dialogue is smart and telling. The piece is, perhaps, a little too long, and the third not quite so good as the previous two acts. The interest of the action lies in the love making of Frank Leyton (Mr. C. Warner) and Gertrude Cadbutton (Miss Amy Fawcett), the daughter of J. Cadman Cadbutton (Mr. W. Farren), to whom Frank acts as secretary. As such he falls on a track of inquiry which goes far to identify his employer as the father of one Barnabas Smith, and guilty of much dishonesty. Defects in the development of the plot preclude any attempt at describing the incidents; but the acting is throughout excellent, and the scenery most admirable. It is probable that the defects in arrangements may, in the course of a few nights, be remedied.

At the Strand a new farce by Mr. Martin Beecher has been produced, under the title of "A Crimeless Criminal." The whole affair turns on a mental aberration and the possession of a watch, obtained under circumstances of nervous excitement, which causes much distress to the unfortunate hero. His great anxiety is to get rid of the watch, and he takes many strange methods of effecting his purpose. At length it reaches its proper owner, and the ludicrous distress terminates. Mr. W. H. Terris, as the nervous possessor, Verdi Verdanti, succeeds in provoking the merriment of the audience at his eccentricities and imaginary dangers.

At Astley's Mr. Charles Reade's powerful drama of "It's Never Too Late to Mend" has been revived, with accessories which ensure its long run. Mr. Calhaem supports his original rôle of Jackey.

The directors of the London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway have made arrangements to keep their booking-offices at London Bridge and Victoria, and at their stations generally, constantly open every weekday, from eight a.m. to seven p.m., for the sale of tickets and for the purpose of affording information to passengers. Passengers' tickets to all stations on the line, as well as to Paris and the Continent, will be issued at branch offices in Waterloo-place, Regent-circus, and Ludgate-circus, dated to suit the convenience of the passengers.

By a small majority the Metropolitan Board of Works has adopted a resolution asking the general purposes committee to report on the practicability of continuing the Albert Embankment from its present termination to Vauxhall Bridge. Mr. Fowler, the mover of the resolution, reminded the board that Vauxhall Bridge had been the originally intended termination, and that the embankment had been shortened only because of the difficulty of obtaining the requisite land. This difficulty had since been materially lessened, while the recent high tide proved the urgent need of the poorer inhabitants of Lambeth to be protected from the overflow of the river.

About 200 gentlemen attended the annual dinner of the French Hospital and Dispensary, on Saturday last, presided over by M. Gavard. The toast of the "The Queen and the Royal Family" was proposed with Gallican courtesy and grace. In describing the position of the hospital, M. Gavard stated that 150 in-patients had been admitted during the past year, and 3250 out-patients had received medicine. M. Rimmel, the secretary, announced subscriptions to the amount of fully £1000, including £100 from the Duc d'Aumale, £48 from the French Government, £15 from the French Ambassador, £8 from the chairman, £31 10s. from Messrs. Rothschild, £30 from the Comptoir d'Escompte, £20 from Sir Richard Wallace, and a Belgian contribution of £10.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

CONSTITUENTS OF THE ATMOSPHERE.

Mr. Walter Noel Hartley, F.O.S., gave his second lecture on Thursday week. In reference to his preceding lecture, it should be stated that the iron cylinder on that occasion employed to ascertain the weight of air contained about $7\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet of air, and that about $6\frac{1}{2}$ cubic feet of air was shown to weigh 7 oz. The present lecture began with explanations of the way in which M. Tessié du Mothay solved the difficult problem of obtaining oxygen on a large scale for ordinary use by alternately passing steam and air over heated manganese of soda, the first operation producing oxygen, the second reproducing the manganese of soda and nitrogen. Mr. Hartley having proved by various methods of analysis that the air of the lecture-room consisted of four volumes of nitrogen and one of oxygen, proceeded to consider the very minute constituents of our atmosphere, such as water-vapour, carbonic acid, ammonia, and ozone. The presence of water-vapour in the apparently dry air of the room was demonstrated by some oil of vitriol gaining weight by exposure to the atmosphere, and by the behaviour of a new substance, the iodide of cobalt, a rapid absorber of moisture, and densely black in colour, which at first became a green liquid, and then changed its colour to various shades of brown, and finally to pink, as more and more vapour was taken up. This is the most remarkable of all deliquescent substances. After some further illustrations, Mr. Hartley adverted to Dr. Black's observation, that caustic lime became mild after exposure to the air, and that in losing causticity it increased in weight. By this, the first employment of the balance in the investigation of chemical changes, Mr. Hartley said that he may be safely termed the founder of modern chemistry. Black's next observation was that the passage from the caustic to the mild state was accompanied by the absorption of a large quantity of air by the lime, and that this air could be expelled by heat or by the application of strong acids. This air he named "fixed air," and he showed its difference from atmospheric air, and that it is really a product of respiration, combustion, and fermentation. It is now termed carbonic acid and carbon dioxide. The properties of this gas, such as its extinguishing flame, its weight (permitting it to be poured out from vessel to vessel), and its rendering lime-water turbid, were exhibited by Mr. Hartley; and he then explained and illustrated the usual methods for determining the amount of carbonic acid in the air, beginning with those of Bunsen and Pettenkofer. The "household" method, the minimetric method, and that of Dr. Angus Smith were employed in the lecture-room, and the carbonic acid in it was found to be 0.055 per cent. The value of the determination of this gas solely rests on its being a measure of the pollution of the air; and from Dr. Angus Smith's diagrams it was demonstrated that, even in open places, the amount of carbonic acid varies greatly within small limits. The different metropolitan postal districts showed different figures, according to their population; but it is chiefly indoors that the state of the air we breathe varies so considerably. The lecture concluded with observations on the presence of ammonia and ozone in the atmosphere and illustrations of their properties.

SEA WAVES.

Mr. C. W. Merrifield, F.R.S., in beginning his discourse on Friday evening, April 24, pointed out the special importance, in understanding the subject, of knowing that the advance of a wave is neither necessarily nor generally accompanied by any corresponding advance of the water itself. There are many other forms of motion in which this advance of form only occurs, and he exhibited large models of screws, pointing out that when the barrel on which the screw is cut is simply turned round without advancing, the screw-threads appear to advance like a series of waves; but that when the screw works in a nut, so that the screw advances, then the screw-threads remain apparently at rest. In the same way, in sea waves which appear to advance rapidly the water has no sensible motion of advance, while in the series of waves often seen below a bridge or shoal in a rapid river the water does advance, and the waves stand still. What really constitutes a wave is that each particle of water shall go through the same little dance of its own, while the successive particles "take up the dance" in regular order. There will then be a wave or series of waves, whether there be any general movement or current in the water or not. As the motion of a trembled sea is too complex to be understood without first considering the simpler forms of wave-motion, the lecturer selected for illustration the simple succession of waves called "swell" or smooth ground sea of deep water. This, as is well known, consists of a series of long unbroken ridges of water, apparently moving with considerable speed and force; yet, what the particles of water are actually doing is simply going round and round in circles in vertical planes; these planes being at right angles to the lines of the ridges, and the diameters of the circles being the height of the wave from valley to crest. There is no appreciable advance of the water; the advance of the wave being due to the particles taking up the dance in regular succession. If a disk or circle be rolled along the foot of a wall, a nail sticking out from it anywhere between its centre and its edge would trace on the wall the same curves (only upside down) as the profiles of the wave. A screw-threads drawn in suitable perspective also gives the same curve. After giving this general notion of the sea-wave, Mr. Merrifield pointed out its internal mechanical structure, showing that it consists of a series of undulating stratified layers (forming horizontal planes when the water is still), which undergo no mixing with one another. In the same way the water may be also ideally separated into vertical columns, which again do not mix, but only sway to and fro like stalks of barley when the wind sweeps over the field of corn. Only in the sea-waves the columns lengthen as the wave crest approaches and shorten after it has passed away, always leaning towards the crest of the wave. The swell or ground-sea of deep water thus simply heaves the mass of water, without stirring or mixing it, and without any general motion of advance, notwithstanding the apparent rapid motion of the waves. In this absolute form the kind of wave described is perhaps rather the limiting condition which the waves tend to assume when left to the action of gravity alone than a state of things absolutely realised. Still, the departure from it is much smaller than might be supposed; and the apparent confusion of motion, when once the wind ceases, is rather due to several systems of swell, of different dimensions, existing at the same time and place, than to any essential difference in the character of the motion. Mr. Merrifield, after giving some details respecting the combination of waves and their height and length, concluded with some remarks on waves of shallow water, and on the formation of waves in a rising storm. The lecture was illustrated by diagrams. Mr. George Bask, F.R.S., treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

REAL OBJECT OF THE FRENCH REVOLUTIONARY WAR.

Mr. John Robert Seeley, Professor of Modern History at Cambridge, in his second lecture, on Saturday last, reverted to what he considered the popular mistake in attributing the emancipation of Europe wholly to the French Revolution;

whereas it was principally due to the anti-Napoleonic revolution. This great movement began in 1808, when the Revolution was really dead and buried, French liberty having been utterly destroyed by the great war. But how did this war begin, and why did it rage so long? In such an age of enlightenment it surely was a great anachronism, and demands investigation. In the popular conception the Revolution was a new creed or gospel, against which, it was said, "the kings of the earth set themselves and the princes took counsel together." Defenceless France, when invaded by the Sovereigns, rallied with desperate gallantry. She struggled against the old despotic Governments, and became unawares a conqueror. A great military genius then arose to help her; her free principles faded gradually, and eventually he became her ruler. This has frequently been the case with great Generals in other countries in former ages. Europe banded together to put him down; but, though he fell, he accomplished his work and delivered her from despotism. In this notion, the Professor said, there are two mistakes. It is wrong to throw the responsibility of the war upon the Sovereigns, and it is wrong to say that France fought in self-defence and for unselfish motives, and that, because she chose her own government, she was attacked by an overwhelming host. This view did not exist here in 1815, but has come to us since 1830, from modern French writers, and we have indolently and unthinkingly adopted it as any other new fashion. It is an error to suppose that France was so feeble when the war began. She was certainly in great peril in 1792 and 1793, and was then saved by the want of unity in the Sovereigns. At that time both her government and army collapsed. She began war with as much self-confidence in 1792 as in 1870; but she soon rose above her first failures. The citizens of France in arms were vastly stronger than all the armies of their antagonists put together. In proof of the great desire for war, and confidence of success, Professor Seeley read extract from violent speeches of the orators in the National Assembly, especially from those of Brissot, the Girondist, who vehemently urged war against the Sovereigns. The conflict certainly did not originate in self-defence; and the declaration against the Emperor of Germany came from the Republic. He certainly had no desire for war; and Brissot dilated upon the unsettled state of his dominions as a strong motive for attacking him. With success the desire of conquest rapidly increased. The origin of this desire the Professor attributed to the lively sense of the decline of France in Europe for nearly half a century, and the aggrandisement of her enemies. The Revolutionary war was a desperate attempt by her to procure an equivalent for the large acquisitions of territory made by the other great Powers. The late wars had been very ignominious to her. She had lost her colonies and her commerce, while they had gained provinces. Yet in her successes she always professed that her real object was to maintain the balance of power. In 1796 the negotiations for peace by Lord Malmesbury failed because the Directory considered it treason to give up Belgium; and Napoleon in 1805, and Caulincourt, his representative, in 1814, professed to claim no more territory than was required for the natural boundaries of France and to maintain her proper position in relation to the other Powers of Europe.

NERVE EXCITEMENT.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., began his third lecture, on Tuesday last, by demonstrating, by means of Thomson's galvanometer, that electrical currents are produced in nerve in its living state, and that, as the current is present only in living nerve, it probably results from chemical changes peculiar to the living condition; which is further confirmed by the fact that the current is diminished by cold and increased by a gentle heat. It was then proved that when a nerve is excited there is a diminution in the current it generates, the cause of which is unknown. Dr. Rutherford said that nerve excitement is a kind of motion which may be termed nerve motion or nerve energy. It is quite a mistake to suppose that this energy is only produced in nerve-cells; for, if it were so, we could not explain the fact that when a motor nerve-fibre is cut off from its nerve-cell it can be stimulated to action, and a muscle is thrown into motion thereby, just as if the nerve-fibre had been in connection with the nerve-cell. The right way, in the Professor's opinion, is to regard nerve-excitement as an invisible motion which may be set up in the nerve-cell by chemical motion, or at the peripheral ends of the nerve-fibres, and, indeed, in the trunks of the nerve-fibres (where there are certainly no nerve-cells), by the operation of various forms of motion, electrical, mechanical, thermal, or otherwise. The nature of nerve-motion is unknown. It may be chemical or mechanical, but it is, most likely, not electrical, because it will not pass through the portion of a nerve that has been frozen, which electricity does easily. The nerve-fibres are probably always the same; but they give rise to different effects, such as muscular motion, secretion, and sensation. These depend upon the nature of the organ to which the nerve-excitement is communicated. The efferent nerves are therefore classified into motor and secretory; while the afferent nerves are grouped into sensory, excitomotor, excitosecretory, and inhibitory. Secretory nerves are always involuntary, although they may be affected by thought, as shown in the production of tears by emotion, and the secretion of saliva by thinking on food. Motor-nerves may be voluntary or involuntary; and both may be affected by emotion. The excitement of sensory nerves gives rise to sensation, when there is consciousness; and the attention is arrested by the stimulation. Sensation, the Professor said, may be defined as a state of consciousness; but we are entirely ignorant as to how it is that a state of consciousness results from exciting a sensory nerve-cell. The activity of some part of the brain appears to be necessary for consciousness. If this activity be suspended by a blow on the head, or by chloroform, the conscious state disappears, and only returns when the nerve molecules are again able to pass into a state of action.

Professor Seeley will this day, in his concluding lecture, consider the "Relation of Napoleon I. to the French Revolution." On Friday evening next, Mr. Sedley Taylor will give a discourse on an Historical Enigma in the Trial of Galileo before the Inquisition. On Saturday next Mr. R. A. Proctor will begin a course of five lectures on the Planetary System.

Sir Henry Peek's "Cinque Cottages," which he founded in 1872, are to benefit by his gratitude for the honour conferred upon him by Mr. Disraeli. He has given two thousand guineas to found annuities for pensioners connected with the cottages.

Cardinal Cullen's May pastoral was read in the Dublin churches on Sunday. His Eminence states that at the present time the Church is persecuted in almost all the countries of Europe. Her supreme head has been deprived of his liberty, and many of her bishops are doomed to imprisonment or exile. He looks to the Cross for triumph over persecution, and announces that the Pope has given him a large piece of the real cross on which our Lord died, to be deposited in a new church which they are building.

NEW BOOKS.

NOVELS.

Plenty of amusement, especially for those who are of a hilarious and rollicking turn, is to be derived from At Her Mercy, by the author of "Lost Sir Massingberd" (Richard Bentley and Son). Meditative souls, profound philosophers, psychological students and persons who like to feel their flesh creep are not warranted to receive satisfaction; and yet, towards the end of the third volume, there is a death-bed scene which may possibly meet the views of people who are fascinated by the spectacle of a beautiful young woman steeped in sin to the very lips dying repentant, but almost hopeless, finding it agony to draw her breath, and yet persisting in speaking "against time" and in going through with an almost wholly supererogatory confession. It is a story of rivalry—at least, if the term be applicable when the feeling which it implies is confined and concealed within the bosom of one wicked woman; for the injured heroine, the sweet creature who is a charming type of that which is most feminine and amiable, has scarcely the faintest lurking suspicion of any contention. Not but what, for all her dovelike softness, she has quite enough of latent spirit; indeed, your dove, as is well known, can peck as well as coo, and is accused of being combative. By what arts and wiles and diabolical proceedings the beautiful demon supplants the beautiful angel and secures the coveted prize, which, of course, is a captain, may not be here recorded, and will be more agreeable, if not conveniently, discovered from the volumes themselves. Suffice it to say that the successful she shows such a trust in—one cannot, under the circumstances, say Providence, but—some disposer of events as could hardly have been expected from even the celebrated Micawber; for, if a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush, it argues either an excessively sanguine disposition or the co-operation of supernatural powers to reject present certainties for a futurity which depends upon so unlikely a conjunction or sequence of incidents as that a lady should accidentally poison herself, that a given person should accidentally see her do it, and that her husband, having accidentally become cognisant of the fact, should instantly, under the influence of a panic, lose his common-sense, his self-respect and his respect for the dead. However, let not beautiful demons, even if they do succeed in the teeth of probability, hope that their success will be of long duration; or, if they so hope, let them not go a hunting on a big steeple-chaser: a word to the wise. The merits of the romance, one would say, are to be found not amongst the tragic but amongst the descriptive and the comic portions; the latter are remarkable for vivid touches and bursts of fun and geniality.

Several bright jewels of description, personal and scenical, are strung upon a rather slender thread of connected plot and continuous story to form the very pleasant and readable contents of Young Mr. Nightingale, by Dutton Cook (Sampson Low and Co.). The date of the tale carries the reader back some fifty years, more or less. There was then a King of England, who had a sergeant-painter; and that sergeant-painter is one of the chief characters described. The other principal characters—for "Young Mr. Nightingale" himself, the autobiographical narrator, is not of much account—are a wicked, drunken, ruffianly lord, of the "Corinthian" order; a couple of farmers; male and female rustics, with a peculiar dialect, judiciously and amusingly employed; a very pretty actress, originally a rope-dancer; a versatile, kindly, needy, pompous, extremely comical strolling-player; a nondescript young gentleman, with good looks, a good heart, and a bad constitution; an elderly lady, a winning type of injured wife, excellent mother, and tender woman; and a young lady, whom to see and even to read of is to love. To all these must be added a lawyer's managing clerk. Of the many scenes to which the reader is introduced, those which are most calculated to produce an impression are, probably, the first meeting between "Young Mr. Nightingale" and Lord Overbury at the "dark tower;" the various incidents connected with "Dripford Fair;" the rescue of half-frozen Rosetta and its immediate sequel; the first visit to the lawyer's office, presided over by an invisible principal; the discovery of the fair copying-clerk; the "release" of the mysterious principal; the disturbance at the "silver hell;" the reconciliation, all too late, of the long-parted husband and wife; and, a very pretty picture, the meeting with Rachel at the church and the subsequent proposal and acceptance. It may possibly occur to the reader that some of the personages are, to use the vulgar phrase, "beggars to talk," and that the dialogue is occasionally a little wearisome; but, in a free country, it is permissible to skip, especially when, by the adoption of that sometimes perilous course, no necessary link in the narrative is in danger of being missed. The author takes the opportunity, which his choice of materials affords him, of discoursing in chatty style about painting and the drama; and he writes so neatly, and with so facile a command of quiet and even sly humour, that his bits of critical digression give buoyancy rather than heaviness to the whole lump.

Both sad and true is said to be the story entitled One Love in a Life, by Emma M. Pearson (Hurst and Blackett); and it certainly is more sad than enough. Though it is warranted true, the warranty, it is reasonable to suppose, is not meant to apply to more than the chief incidents in the heroine's life. Otherwise, truth is stranger than fiction to a degree beyond anything that it could enter into the heart of any common individual to conceive, and the world is peopled by a more extraordinary race of beings with more extraordinary ways of going on than a dreamer of dreams would imagine in a nightmare. It may be that a limited experience has been to blame for the view thus taken and expressed; and, whether or no, it has not prevented a high estimate from being formed of the power with which the author can write and of the dexterity with which the unfamiliar puppets, if it be permissible to call them so, are handled. The tale told is that of a woman, endowed with many excellent physical and other gifts, who, from girlhood onwards, in spite of a double jilting and a disgraceful proposal of a dishonourable elopement, is true to her one first and last love, and who, when the object of it is removed by death, feeds on its memory. It is, indeed, a sad and melancholy story; but there are some sad and melancholy stories which fail to evoke sympathy. Whether we sympathise or not with the heroine in the present instance will depend upon whether she strikes us as having been a noble, loving woman or a blind, infatuated idiot. And it is not at all impossible that a majority of readers may adopt the latter view, for if a young lady will not see, when it is as plain as a pikestaff, that she has mistaken Brian de Bois-Guilbert for Ivanhoe, it looks very like infatuation.

The authoress of "Lady Shakerley," a spirited and characteristic sketch of highborn English life in the time of Charles I., has successfully repeated her experiment in this line of mixed historical and domestic fiction. The Exiles at St. Germain's (Hurst and Blackett) is a story of the same kind, related by an old lady, born in 1787, whose grandmother, Ann Ogilvie, was a young married lady in 1700, taking us back the length of two life periods, each of eighty-seven years. Mistress Ogilvie, indeed, lived a few years longer, so that Mrs. Grey, the present editor of the grandmother's written recollections, is able to describe her personally and to share her attachment to the Royal family of the Stuarts. As the wife of Captain Ogilvie, an officer in the Highland regiment that adhered to King James II., the writer of the more ancient journal went to France with the Court of the deposed Sovereign. She was charged with the education of the sweet young Princess Louisa, whose character, and that of her mother, Queen Mary Beatrix, have the charm of high moral beauty. Isabel Grey, too, the granddaughter—herself now very aged—of old Mistress Ogilvie, has an interesting passage of her youthful experience to relate. We are glad that the favourable reception deserved and gained by "Lady Shakerley" has encouraged the authoress to produce this new volume, which ought to be equally successful.

The popular lessee and manager of the Gaiety Theatre has collected into three pleasant volumes a number of his sketches, tales, and essays written for Household Words, All the Year Round, the Cornhill Magazine, and other periodical issues of light reading. These Miscellaneous Works of John Hollingshead (Tinsley Brothers) contain much that is worth preserving, and will secure him a permanent literary reputation beyond the weekly or monthly publications in which they first appeared. Their tone and style are that of a school which arose from the example of "Sketches by Boz," and from the influence of Dickens, as an editor of this kind of articles, among the contributors to his own journal and their imitators elsewhere. Mr. Hollingshead, indeed, has an original vein of humorous fancy and an ample stock of knowledge, chiefly that of middle-class English social and domestic life, but more especially among City men engaged in mercantile business, whose habits of mind he perfectly understands. He has great fertility of invention and skill in the arrangement of plots and incidents, with a singularly happy faculty, as might be expected from his success as a dramatist, of playing off characters against one another in a scene of familiar dialogue. We are delighted with the little story called "Shop," in which we see young Hackblock, the runaway soldier-son of a Greenwich barber, come home disguised with a big beard, after fourteen years of absence, to be shaved by his own father, in the presence of his uncle, the old sailor of Greenwich Hospital, and his faithful cousin Fanny. The author has a keen perception of the weaknesses and meannesses of his fellow-creatures; but his motive for exposing them is not unkindly, and his revelations may serve to put the unwary on their guard. The tricks of low picture-dealers, of jobbers in secondhand pianofortes, and the concoctors of patent medicines, are displayed to view with remarkable precision; and there will be no excuse for any of Mr. Hollingshead's readers who shall hereafter become their dupe. His satire is frequently directed against the unscrupulous promoters of bubble joint-stock companies and other hollow business concerns, the working of which he seems to have closely observed. Affectation, and pretension to gentility, and the indulgence of troublesome eccentricities in matters of taste, are more gently rebuked by his good-natured satire. The quantity and variety of topics, both incidents of real life and themes of fiction, which Mr. Hollingshead has treated so cleverly in these papers, exceed what could be enumerated within the space we are able to afford them. Some remarkable features in the progress of what is called our material civilisation, the appliances of mechanical arts and arrangements to social convenience, are described by Mr. Hollingshead, as an eye-witness and investigator of their first appearances amongst us. Such are the launch of the Great Eastern steam-ship, and her earliest trip down the Channel, with the frightful explosion of a steam-funnel on board. He rides on a locomotive engine, by day and night, with the express train between London and Dover, but he still condescends to travel to Birmingham from the City-road Wharf, by the slow barge of the Grand Junction Canal. He has explored the main sewers, and surveyed the gas-pipes and water-pipes of "Underground London." He comprehends the official machinery of the Post Office and the telegraph system. He has made himself at home in Aldershot Camp, on the top of the Monument, in the Whitstable oyster-beds, and in many other curious places, high or low, which one is apt to speculate upon in the indulgence of an inquisitive fancy. There is an immense amount of real information, with a great deal of wholesome amusement, to be got out of these three volumes.

CURIOUS WILLS.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors, &c.")

A Poitevin gentleman, dying in 1595, made a singular will, reported by P. Garasse, who prefaces the account by stating that he was an old atheist.

In the first place, he orders that his body shall be enveloped in a tanned pig-skin and buried perpendicularly before the high altar of the church, on a pile of charcoal; giving as a reason that "there is no other god in the world than the incorruptibility of the body, and that charcoal and tanned leather are two agents sufficiently powerful to prevent putrefaction."

This man had amassed considerable wealth and held the bulk of it in coin and jewels; these he kept concealed in a large ground-floor room, on the ceiling of which he had had painted the twelve signs of the zodiac and the planets. The walls were covered with the word Grippillemini, repeated over and over again. On the door was written, in large and grotesque characters, Qui potest capere, capiat; and in the centre of the vault the inscription, Quærite et Invenietis.

In his will he apprises his executor that his treasures are all contained in this room, and, according to the directions which follow, the doors were to be thrown open to the public, and each was to be allowed to take whatever he could find and was able to defend from the rapacity of less fortunate searchers. He desired that his funeral might be conducted with every species of mirth and hilarity, and that all who assisted at it should carry a laurel branch instead of a taper. It was at the conclusion of this ceremony that the vault was to be opened and the marauding scramble was to take place. Alas! for the speculators; during their master's illness, the servants, it was found, had one by one decamped after clearing out between them the entire hoard.

A baronetcy has been conferred on Mr. John Kelk, the well-known contractor.

At Rhyl a children's home and convalescent hospital was opened on Thursday week by the Bishop of Bangor.

An emigrant-ship, the Somersetshire, bound from London to Melbourne, with 300 passengers on board, ran upon the Plymouth Breakwater, last Saturday morning, during a fog. Fortunately assistance was at hand, and the ship was got off without being much the worse.

An inquiry instituted by the Board of Trade at Penzance, concerning the loss of the Ranney, which struck on the Spanish Ledges, Scilly Islands, on March 10, has resulted in the suspension of the certificate of the master, Moses Tyrer, for two years, it having been proved that the accident was caused through the master's intoxication.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LORD THURLOW.

The Right Hon. Edward Thomas Hovell Thurlow, fourth Lord Thurlow, of Thurlow, in the county of Suffolk, J.P. and D.L., died on the 22nd ult. He was born Oct. 26, 1837, the elder son of Edward Thomas, third Lord, by Sarah, his wife, only daughter of Peter Hodgson, Esq., and was grandson of Edward, second Lord, who succeeded to the barony at the death of his uncle, Edward, Lord Thurlow, Lord Chancellor of England. His Lordship was not married, and the peerage which he inherited at the death of his father, March 2, 1857, now devolves on his only brother, the Hon. Thomas John Thurlow Bruce, present and fifth Lord Thurlow, born Dec. 5, 1838, who married, in 1864, Lady Elma Bruce, elder daughter of James, eighth Earl of Elgin, K.T., and has issue. His Lordship has long been in the diplomatic service.

LADY ELLENBOROUGH.

The Right Hon. Isabella, Lady Ellenborough, died at Holly Spring, Bracknell, Berks, on the 22nd ult. Her Ladyship, third wife of Charles Edmund, present Lord Ellenborough, to whom she was married Aug. 26, 1863, was only child of Alexander Ogilby, Esq., of Fellipar, in the county of Londonderry, and great-granddaughter, maternally, of John Christian Curwen, Esq., of Ewanrigg and Worthington Hall, Cumberland. She leaves two daughters, Gertrude Edith and Emily Julia.

LADY KENYON.

The Right Hon. Georgina, Lady Kenyon, widow of Lloyd, third Lord Kenyon, died, at 15, Cavendish-square, on the 22nd ult. Her Ladyship, who was born July 7, 1813, the youngest daughter of Thomas, fourth Lord Walsingham, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of Brownlow North, Bishop of Winchester, married, June 29, 1833, the Hon. Lloyd Kenyon, afterwards third Lord Kenyon, and was left a widow, July 14, 1869, with several children. Her grandson, only child of her eldest son, the Hon. Lloyd Kenyon, who died vitâ patris 1865, is Lloyd, present and fifth Lord, born July 5, 1864.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The Scotch Confirmation under Seal of the Commissariat of Edinburgh, dated the 16th ult., of the Right Hon. Duncan M'Neill, Lord Colonsay, late of No. 73, Great King-street, Edinburgh, who died at Pau on Jan. 31 last, was sealed in London on the 21st ult. The executors are the Right Hon. Sir John M'Neill, G.C.B., the brother, the Hon. David Mure, Archibald Campbell Swinton, and Duncan M'Neill and Malcolm M'Neill, the nephews. The personal estate in England and Scotland exceeds £70,000.

The will, with two codicils, dated respectively April 15 and Oct. 10, 1862, and Oct. 5, 1864, of the Rev. Edward Francis Beynon, late of Slimes Oaks, Chelsham, near Croydon, Surrey, who died on March 10 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by the Rev. William Albemarle Bertie Cator and Dr. Edmund Lloyd Birkett, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The will contains numerous legacies, including £1000 to each of the executors for their trouble, and the Rev. Samuel Bryan Crowther is appointed residuary legatee. The following is a list of the charitable bequests—viz., to the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge, the Church Missionary Society, the National Society, St. George's Hospital, and the Northampton General Infirmary, £1000 each; to the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts, the Pastoral Aid Society, the Surrey Church Association for Building, &c., Churches, King's College Hospital, the Middlesex Hospital, the Convalescent Asylum, Walton-on-Thames, and the Consumption Hospital, Brompton, £500 each; to the Prayer-Book and Homily Society, the Westminster Hospital, and the City of London General Pension Society, £300 each; to the Charing-cross Hospital and the Shipwrecked Fisherman's Association, £250 each; to the Surrey Church Association for Schools, the National Benevolent Association, and the London Orphan Asylum, Clapton, £200 each; to the Royal Free Hospital, Gray's Inn-road, the Royal London Ophthalmic Hospital, and the City of London Truss Society, £100 each; to the minister, churchwardens, guardians, and overseers of the parish of Carshalton, £2000 upon trust for the support and maintenance of the National Schools, £1000 upon trust for the Infant School, and £1000 upon trust to purchase with the interest coals and suitable clothing for the poor at Christmas; £1000 upon trust for the National Schools at Beddington; £1500 upon trust for the school in connection with the Established Church and the coal and clothing clubs at Chelsham; £1000 upon trust for the school in connection with the Established Church and the coal and clothing clubs at Wallington; £2000 upon a similar trust for the parish of Croydon, near Northampton; and £500 upon trust for the school in connection with the Established Church at Woodford, near Thrapstone, Northamptonshire.

The will, dated Jan. 11, 1871, of Neil Arnott, M.D., F.R.S., late of No. 2, Cumberland-terrace, Regent's Park, who died on March 2 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by Mrs. Marianne Arnott, the widow, and Dr. Alfred Swaine Taylor, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths £100, free of duty, to each of his executors who shall prove; £3000 upon trust for each of the five children of his brother, James Arnott, and additional sums to them on the death of his wife; to his wife the income of £15,000 for life and the residue of his property absolutely or an annuity of £500 at her option. The deceased gives to Dr. Taylor and Mr. Alexander Bain, the other executor named in his will, the copyright of his work, "Elements of Physics," and of all his published works, in the hope that they will revise and publish new editions, to be sold at moderate prices and to be extensively spread among the industrious classes of the community.

The will, dated Oct. 13, 1869, of Joseph Kowley, late of Osmett-street side, Dewsbury, Yorkshire, worsted-spinner and manufacturer, who died on Feb. 27 last, was proved on the 16th ult. by Edwin Rowley, the son, and William Gartside, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. Subject to some legacies and provision for his two daughters and their children, testator bequeaths the residue of his personal estate to his son Edwin absolutely, and devises the residue of his real estate to him for life, and after his death to his sons.

The will, dated Nov. 23, 1872, of the Rev. Sir Francis Jarvis Stapleton, Bart., late of Mereworth Rectory, Kent, and of Greys Court, Oxford, who died on Feb. 11 last, was proved on the 17th ult. by Dame Margaret Stapleton, the relict, the Rev. Eliot Henry Stapleton, the son, and Julius Talbot Airey, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. The widow is named residuary legatee.

The will and codicil, dated March 24, 1871, and Dec. 27, 1872, of Mrs. Mary Keating, late of the Royal-crescent, Bath, who died on March 29 last, were proved on the 17th ult. by Charles John Cox and the Rev. Charles Kegan Paul, the nephews, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The persons benefited by testatrix's will are her sister and nephews and nieces.

JAMES PIERCE AND VICTOR GORGIA.—Your joint production admits of a second solution—a very easy one—1. R to Q 5th, 2. Q to K 2nd (ch). The other problem, not numbered, is apparently correct, but, being somewhat intricate, requires to be again and again examined.

OLD COLONNA.—A reply very shortly. Many thanks.

A. DENDRINO.—1. There is no published collection of the admirable problems mentioned. The author is an Englishman. 2. Your last compositions are in the examiners' hands, and shall be reported on speedily.

EUGENIA COMAS, Barcelona.—You have correctly solved Problem No. 1573.

R. D. T.—You fail to see that Black can take Queen with Queen.

W. S. B. TIMBER AND DEALS, Quebec, and Others.—Problem No. 1570 is perfectly right.

The error is in the solution, which should have been—

1. R to Q 5th, 2. Q takes Kt P (ch). 2. R to K B 2nd, dia. ch. and mate.

W. McARTHUR, Cork.—The key move of No. 1295 is 1. Kt to K R sq. You must work the rest out for yourself.

F. DE B. DEVENTER.—They are both marked for insertion.

A. D. G.—Yes; the move suggested would have expedited Black's defeat.

D. CLARK of Siberia.—1. The game is too weak for publication. In the opening, White's fifth move is mere loss of time, and towards the end his opponent overlooks (at move 22) an obvious mate in two moves. 2. Your second problem has been marked for insertion.

CHESS PROBLEMS received, with thanks, from A. Dendrino, W. B. Mason, J. Pierce, Victor Gorgia, F. H. Bennett, Dr. Gold, S. H. Thomas.

WORCESTER AND BIRMINGHAM CHESS CLUBS.

(To the Editor of the Illustrated London News.)

Worcester, April 18, 1874.

Sir.—In the chess column of the Illustrated London News of to-day, April 18, in a quotation from the annual report of the Birmingham Chess Club, it is stated that, in their second match with Worcester, they (the Birmingham Club) won by three games. This is not correct; the difference was one game only. I refer you to the report of the same, with the score, in the Illustrated London News of June 14, 1873. Your kind insertion of this will oblige,

Yours, faithfully,
Hon. Secretary to the Worcester Chess Club.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The very fine game, published recently in the Field, between Herr Zukertort and Mr. S— (the former giving the odds of the Knight), was part of a match played under very remarkable circumstances. Mr. S— is no other than the famous Russian player Schumoff, many of whose games with Petroff, Jaenisch, and the Princes Urussoff our readers will find in earlier volumes of the Illustrated London News. He and Herr Zukertort met some years ago at Wiesbaden, and after a series of even games had ended, without exception, in favour of the German master, Mr. Schumoff proposed in joke that he should receive the odds of a piece. In consequence, a little match was arranged for a nominal stake, Mr. Schumoff receiving the odds of the Knight, but having to win seven games before his opponent scored four. The first two games were won by the giver of odds, the next by Mr. Schumoff, and the fourth by Herr Zukertort; upon which the Russian player resigned, not without reason. This chess feat is almost without a parallel in the history of the game, if we except the match in which Mr. Staunton successfully gave the odds of Pawn and two moves to Harwitz a few years before the drawn match between the latter and Andersen. It shows Herr Zukertort to be probably now the greatest connoisseur in this department of the game, of which an admirable instance is given in this month's number of the City of London Magazine in the game between Herr Zukertort and Count Euphrano. We shall insert, in a future Number, one or two of his games at odds, never before published in English periodicals.

The only pending chess-match—that between Messrs. Bird and Lord, the former betting two to one—is still unfinished. Mr. Bird has won four games out of the required seven, his opponent not having succeeded in even drawing one. The present pause is not an uncommon feature in a match under such circumstances.

At a recent meeting of the committee of the London Chess Club a hearty vote of thanks was passed to Messrs. Potter and Steinitz, the managers of the correspondence match with Vienna, and by a unanimous vote the whole available balance of the winnings was handed to them, as a slight recognition of the immense ability and energy they had devoted to the task.

CHESS ENCOUNTER.—A chess-match between the Worcester and the Cheltenham Clubs took place on Thursday in the Lecture Hall of the Natural History Society, Worcester, on invitation of the former club. Play commenced about 2.30 p.m., and was carried on until the last train to Cheltenham became due. The result proved in favour of the Worcester Club, the score being 7 games to 6, and 4 drawn games. The combatants afterwards partook of an elegant repast, provided by Mountford, and presided over by the Right Hon. Lord Lyttelton, the Rev. Sir Gilbert F. Lewis, Bart., occupying the vice-chair, beside whom we noticed the following present, most of whom had taken part in the match:—Revs. C. Moore (president of the Cheltenham Club), C. E. Ranken, F. R. Drew, and F. J. Eld, Drs. Philson, Jeanneret, F. J. Young (honorary secretary of the Cheltenham Club), Messrs. H. H. Young, F. Dingle, J. Wood (honorary secretary of the Worcester Club), W. Coates, D. A. Cooper, J. Rose, &c.

Archæology of the Month.

Two collections of fine old porcelain have been dispersed during the past month. First was the collection of the Hon. Francis Forbes, deceased, late of Geneva, sold by Christie and Co.; rich in specimens of fine old Dresden, Vienna, and Marcolini services; Berlin, Furstenburg, Frankenthal, Oriental, and other porcelain; snuffboxes, watches, and old German clocks. Among the other rarities were a pair of groups of Dresden figures, "Asia and Africa," sold for £108; and a magnificent old centrepiece, a basket pierced and encrusted with figures, birds, and flowers, on an oval plinth, painted with plants and mounted with metal-gilt, four Chinese figures riding on birds, and groups of swans, hen and chickens, all en suite, brought £913; the three days' sale, £2660.

The second celebrated collection sold was that of Mr. W. Edkins, comprising the finest known examples of Bristol and Plymouth porcelain, sold by Sotheby and Co., and attesting the growing appreciation of the beauties of the finest old English manufacturers, as well as the increasing rarity of really good examples. Amongst them was a pair of Worcester hexagonal vases and covers, each painted with exotic birds in a landscape, brought £300; a Worcester vase, painted with exotic birds, £111. The total of the three days' sale was upwards of £6100.

At Jerusalem has been discovered a marble head of natural size, on the edge of the old Nabulous road, thirty metres north of the Tombs of the Kings—that is, some minutes' walk from the Damascus Gate. The head is that of a man; the beard is short and curly; the hair is abundant, with thick locks, which cover a portion of the forehead. He bears a crown of laurels, the two branches of which are attached to a medallion, on which is engraved very distinctly a camel and an eagle, symbol of sovereign power. The style is entirely Roman, and the effect of the whole is striking and imposing, clearly a portrait, and not a vulgar type—the head of the Emperor Hadrian, who placed his own statue in the temple of Jupiter Capitolinus. On the site of the temple were two statues. St. Jerome expressly says, in his commentary on Isaiah, "Where were formerly the temple and worship of God are now placed the statue of Hadrian and the idol of Jupiter;" and the same writer speaks of "the equestrian statue of Hadrian, which to this day stands upon the site of the Holy of Holies." Pausanias, too, speaks of a statue of Jupiter and that of Hadrian, and of two statues of Hadrian standing before the temple of Jupiter Olympus.

Among the fragments lately brought over to the British Museum, in continuation of Mr. Wood's excavations on the site of the Temple of Diana at Ephesus, are some portions, principally bas-reliefs, of the older temple, on the same site; dedicated to the same goddess, and erected in the sixth century. These sculptures in some respects resemble those from Branchidae or Miletus. At the Royal Institution, Mr. Newman, of the British Museum, has illustrated Mr. Wood's recent discoveries at Ephesus, and the uses to which the newly-discovered temple has been applied. It was at once a museum, a bank, and a mint, containing great stores of bullion and bars of gold; and an inscription from the temple stated that it lent money both to the State and to individuals, and received deposits and leased lands. Mr. Newman, while pointing out that the Ephesian Diana was a purely Asiatic deity, and not to be confounded with the Greek huntress, remarked on the facility with which the Greeks, on settling in Asia Minor, adopted the unknown goddess and grouped around her a number of new legends.

A curious Greek sun-dial has been discovered by M. O. Rayet, at Heraclea (Patmos). The style was the only part wanting in the dial when discovered. But, most remarkable about this ancient dial is the presence of seven parallel arcs of circles, at such a distance apart that each of them would be traversed by the shadow of the point of the style when the sun was in the middle of one of the signs of the zodiac. A Greek inscription states the instrument to be dedicated to Ptolemy, the King of Philadelphos, and its date is probably the early part of the third century B.C.

London topographers will regret to hear that the large old house on Chiswick Mall, formerly Whittingham's Chiswick Press, has been pulled down, and its materials sold. It was formerly an appanage to Westminster School. Some architectural remains and carving, parts of an ancient structure, have been excavated.

The Somerset Archæological and Natural History Society is in treaty for the purchase of Taunton Castle, its fixtures and furniture.

A number of fine old tapestries, from the palaces of the Marquis of Salamanca, at Madrid and Vista Allegra, have been sold by Messrs. Christie and Co. Of the old French were four pieces of Gobelins tapestry, which were presented by Louis XVI. to the Spanish Ambassador, Count d'Aranda, and are similar to the tapestries in the great drawing-room at Windsor Castle, representing subjects taken from the story of Jason and Medea, with the arms of France at the top and fleur-de-lis at the corners, signed "Cazette, 1744," sold in one lot for £3885.

The excavations at the Coliseum, Rome, are proceeding, and on the Esquiline continue to furnish interesting results. A statue of Fortune has been found in an ancient Roman house recently unearthed, and an exact reproduction of the sculpture had been painted in fresco on one of the walls. Among the discoveries made in the Villa Alteri is an admirable onyx cameo of oval form, 58 millimetres by 43, the relief representing two half figures, veiled. On the left side of the Via Meru Lana has been brought to light a vast hall, one end terminating in a circular apse, around which five square niches open out. The walls are covered with a couche of vermillion, on which are designed griffin-shaped ornaments, comic masks, &c. In the interior of the niches are painted garden views, with exotic plants and flowers, on which are perched birds, gracefully designed, which archaeologists, says the Morning Post, propose to preserve.

The discovery of the bones of John Talbot, first Earl of Salop, in Whitchurch parish church, has excited considerable interest. The bones are, beyond doubt, none other than those of the great Talbot, who fell at Châtillon, in France, A.D. 1483.

Some interesting relics of antiquity have been recently found on the irrigation farm which is situated between Croydon and Beddington, both in Surrey, and about two miles from the former place. Mr. Waterall has inspected these curiosities, which were dug up by some workmen whilst doing their work on the farm previously mentioned at the depth of only 18 in. from the surface. They consist of portions of a broken shield, spear-heads, some small pieces of pottery, and a few human teeth, perfect. It is conjectured that these objects formerly belonged to a Roman warrior, and that a battle was fought at this spot. These Roman relics have been taken to the house of a gentleman close to where they were found, and it is suggested eventually to place them in the Public Hall at Croydon. On the irrigation farm, also, near the spot where these articles were discovered, the remains of a Roman villa have been brought to light; but, unfortunately, very little of it can be seen, as one of the sewers belonging to the Croydon local board of health has been carried through it.

"A YOUNG GREEK WOMAN."

In this water-colour drawing, which we engrave from the exhibition at the Dudley Gallery, the accomplished lady artist, Miss Edith Martineau, sets us speculating as to whence she derived her model. It may be that the model is a veritable modern Greek maiden, but it is perhaps more likely that she is an Englishwoman, selected for the antique purity of her type, and with her hair bound with fillets and knotted behind, after the Greek mode, and her thin white robe, also fashioned and fastened in accordance therewith. We Britons may well be proud of the beauty of our sisters. It is a constant theme of admiration with foreign visitors; and what astonishes them most is the great variety yet purity of the types both of the fair and dark races to be found amongst us. Besides the tall, distinguished beauties with blonde ringlets and slightly aquiline noses, which by the untravelled Frenchman are supposed to be the essential characteristics of the Mees Anglaise, we have smaller nutbrown maids with raven hair, witch-like eyes, and provoking petit nez-retroussé, like the Spaniards; we have noble, golden-haired creatures, fair, and round, and strong, like the North Germans; we have pale, olive-tinted, stately queens, majestic as the true Roman women of the Trastevere; we have, in Scotland and elsewhere, Greek goddesses, such as we see here, with adorable red hair; the purity of Raphael, the expressiveness of Leonardo, the luxurious forms and hues of Titian, the redundant sensuousness of Rubens, are all to be found in English models—even occasionally the fascinating elegance of the Frenchwoman, who can afford to dispense with the higher traits of beauty. In this drawing the pale background, the white drapery, the greyish colouring, and rather flat treatment, help to complete the resemblance to an antique fresco or bas-relief tinted.

"PARTED FRIENDS."

The group by Mr. Halse which we have engraved has a meaning too simple, direct, and well expressed to require comment. Many and pleasant, doubtless, were the associations of the two friends; many were the joyous rambles, the playful frolics, the exciting escapades which they enjoyed in company. Death has now taken one, and, be sure, not the least faithful, of the friends; but affection is not wanting in the survivor, and many another sad dog will find no mourner so sincere.

"A GIPSY."

Our Engraving can but suggest the rich colouring of the original picture by the favourite German painter G. Richter. It does, however, closely indicate the picturesque characteristics of the Roumanian tribes, which this little waif embodies so vividly, and which the picture reproduces with so much truth and spirit. Few things are more remarkable in the history of humanity than the isolation of the gipsy race. In the case of another Oriental people—the Jews—such isolation is easy to understand; for they have an elevating and elaborately exclusive religion, which encourages the egotistical illusion that they are a divinely-chosen and peculiar people. But the gipsies possess, it seems, scarcely any religion whatever. Yet, contemned and despised outcasts as they are, placed as they have been under the ban of every country and creed of Europe, they, notwithstanding, preserve every trait, and even a language, that bespeaks their origin in the far East; they still regard themselves as forming the aristocracy of wild nature; and to this day it is for them a degradation worse than death to ally themselves to the Christian. This little urchin is a pure type of his breed. We see it in the rough and ragged garments with which he is partially clad, in his bronzed skin tanned to a deeper hue by exposure to all weathers, in that matted shock of unkempt raven hair, in that fervid face all athirst for fresh adventure; in those gleaming, restless black eyes, so full of intelligence, that must, perforce, degenerate into cunning.

"UNE PAYSANNE FRANCAISE."

In this country, where the public is so cold to even the finest works of sculpture (witness the Outram and Hardinge of Foley), a furor has seldom been excited so great as that which, on its exhibition last year at the Academy, greeted the group, by M. Dalou, which we have engraved. The material was novel, for visitors had seldom, if ever, before seen at Burlington House or Trafalgar-square a work so large in terra-cotta. Then, the unflinching realism, the complete absence of idealisation, was a surprise. This woman, with her sabots, her rough, scant raiment, and her swathed head, was in very truth a French peasant—in coarseness of form and commonness of feature, as well as in dress. No doubt the model was copied from the life with extraordinary fidelity. Then, again, the sentiment of maternity was as unquestionably conveyed with great force and firmness. The action of the mother giving suck to her babe (so unconscious of indecency), though rendered as the French themselves might phrase it, with a naïveté brutale, was so touchingly natural as to become quite pathetic. That the group, however, with all its rare and undeniable merit, possessed qualities of a genuinely high order, or that it exemplifies a right employment of sculpture, we are far from admitting. We shall, however, probably have another opportunity shortly for discussing M. Dalou's talent.

FINE ARTS.

INSTITUTE OF PAINTERS IN WATER COLOURS.

The exhibitions of this society have gained largely in recent years by the freedom with which new members have been added from at home and abroad. This was, the first body of English artists which attached to itself a class of honorary members. In addition, this society has lately elected several new associates without requiring from them the formality (which some artists might not unreasonably regard as a humiliation) of entering their names or soliciting for admission. This last liberality has secured an accession to the ranks of Messrs. J. Hardy, jun., J. W. Oakes, W. Simpson, J. Tenniel, and J. Wolf; all of whom, with the exception of Mr. Oakes, are represented, though sparingly.

The Institute is to be warmly congratulated on its policy. Any art-society might be proud of the fellowship of John Tenniel, though this time he sends only a small, but withal humorous and spirited, version of the "Arabian Nights" story of "Alnaschar and His Basket of Glass." J. Wolf, too, is a valuable acquisition; his great merit in his own specialty is widely known through book illustrations and designs in this Journal, though he has very rarely exhibited in public galleries. We need hardly say that for extensive and accurate knowledge of the life and character of wild animals, and for imaginative use of that knowledge, he is without a rival in this country. He contributes only one example, but that one is characteristic of his power—"Broken Fetters" (148), a great golden eagle soaring sublime through the misty air to its native mountain eyrie with a severed chain hanging from its talons. Of Mr. W. Simpson we lately spoke in reviewing the exhibition of his works in Piccadilly. He has sent a "Group of Figures from the Marriage Procession of the Emperor of China, Peking" (227)—one of the sketches made by Mr. Simpson during the journey round the world which he undertook as special artist of the Illustrated London News.

From the honorary members the collection is enriched by a

In no drawing now publicly exhibited can we recall figures so accurately drawn, so completely achevé, as this hawker or sculptor and two or three of those lacy and limp signoras and signoras. Moreover, the drawing has very rare qualities of soft harmonious colour and tone in a quiet, broken key.

Mr. Herkemer furnishes a contrast to the last-named painter in his neglect of chiaroscuro and tone. His figures cast no shadow on ground or wall, though they are modelled under a sufficiently direct effect of light and shade. The influence of Mr. Frederick Walker, of the other society, is, oddly enough, more perceptible here (in the works of Messrs. Herkemer, Small, Gow, and Green) than in Pall-mall East. An undue insistence on the outlines, which is apt to be engendered by designing (as do the artists named) for the wood-engraver, is also more observable in this gallery. Both peculiarities are distinctly apparent in Mr. Herkemer's "Arrest of a Poacher in the Bavarian Alps" (158). For ability in draughtsmanship and vigour of characterisation (pushed, however, almost to caricature) this drawing must stand high. But, owing to a too free use of body-colour and that hardness of contour alluded to, the figures are not sufficiently rounded and relieved, the lights are chalky or pasty, the shadows confused and embroiled.

Mr. Small likewise employs body-colour extensively, but with more reference to local colour and gradation. His wild "Cannemara Peat Girl" (48), with her creel at her back, and "Evening" (166), with children gathering felled wood, have something of the technical complexity of the works of the late Mr. Mason, though they have little pretence to the charm of sentiment which pervaded all he did. Mr. Gow's workmanship is much more minutely elaborate, but, at the same time, rather insubstantial and wanting in breadth. His intelligence and humour are, however, not the less acceptable in "Lord Foppington's Levée" (50). Mr. C. Green is less a mannerist than any other of this group of artists: see his "Council of War" (200), in which a British General of the Duke-of-Cumberland period, a young Austrian officer, and a Polish hussar are seated in a stable consulting a map.

Mr. H. B. Roberts has, with some of the mannerism, a great deal of the merit of the Scotch school. There is truth to Nature, as well as genuine drollery, in "The Dawn of Love" (36), a country lass inserting a rose in the button-hole of a radiant young clothopper; and still more, perhaps, in "The Old Gardener" (210), a small vividly-lifelike study of a comical, weather-beaten old face. In "A Fisherman's Home, Scheveningen" (23) Mr. H. Carter has closely imitated his master, Israels; but something is still wanting in subtlety of feeling and purity of method to complete the resemblance. With mention of Mr. Kilburne's illustration of Dickens's "Edith and Florence" (137); "The Tyrant-Convalescent" (42), by Mr. W. L. Thomas; and contributions by Messrs. Abeolon, Skill, and E. H. Corbould, we must close our observations on the more noticeable figure-subjects.

The landscapes seem to demand detailed notice in a less degree. It is enough to say that the following well-known members are represented, viz.:—Mr. L. Haghe, in Italian as well as Low Countries' interiors, most important among the former being a large drawing of Pope Pius IX. "administering the communion to the gentlemen of his household and to persons of distinction in the Sistine Chapel of the Vatican" (142), in which, however, the great frescoes of Michael Angelo are rendered with a distinctness that is far from justified by their actual appearance; Mr. Leitch, in drawings marked by the artists' unflinching feeling for grace of composition and sweetness of effect; Mr. Vacher, in a panorama, as broad as ever, of the "Pyramids of Glizeh" (19); Mr. Rowbottom, in subjects at home and abroad, as deft, and not more artificial than usual; Mr. D'Egville, in Venetian views, mellow and pleasing, but trite; Mr. J. Mogford, in "Cader Idris" (154), where the artist is seen to more advantage than in his coast scenes, which have begun, palpably, to betray studio sophistication; Mr. Carl Werner, in a careful—only too careful—view of the great bazaar at Damascus (172); Mr. H. Johnson, in a more than commonly meritorious drawing of "The Umbrian Apennines" (153), which recalls the grace in arrangement and amenity of effect of Mr. Leitch; and Messrs. J. C. Reed, J. W. Whimper, W. M. May, and Fahey, father and son, in their customary specialties.

Strange to say (though the same thing obtains as regards Mr. F. Walker), David Cox finds more followers here than in the society to which he belonged. Messrs. T. Collier, E. M. Wimperis, and J. Orrock draw their inspiration, more or less, from that master's large and noble readings of nature, yet each maintain differences of distinctive merit, as may be seen by comparing Mr. Collier's "Mountain Gloom" (145) and "Arundel Park" (74), Mr. Wimperis's "Carting Hay" (45), "A Moorland" (31), and "The Ogwen Valley" (7), and Mr. Orrock's "Lincoln" (130) and two views of Stirling (89 and 144). Mr. Penson's "Peat Gatherers" (55) is also remarkable for breadth. Breadth of another kind—less frank and masculine, but tender and refined, and very happily expressive when employed, as it almost invariably is, to render the twilight time in its serene moods—will be found in Mr. Hine's "Chanctonbury Ring" (62) and "Folkington Hill" (133). Nevertheless, we confess we begin to tire of the tame monotony of these Sussex downs. "Tilling the Ground in Normandy" (27) is the single contribution of Mr. Beavis, who paints human figures, animals, and landscape with equal ability, and unites the whole with spirit and in harmony. Mr. R. Carrick's "Boy and Cows" (116) is singularly brilliant—indeed, somewhat forced—in colour and effect. Mr. E. Hayes's "Morning Storm Clearing off—Scarborough" (69), with boats with slackened sails weltering in the "swell," is the most striking marine piece here. Lastly, Mr. Hargitt, though, according to his wont, unequal, has two exceptionally good drawings—an extensive view of "Brading Haven, Isle of Wight" (40), and "Evening" (117), with Scotch cattle, and swelling cumuli tinted by the last rays of sunset.

"PARTED FRIENDS." BY G. HALSE

study (94) for the remarkable picture by Mr. Herbert, R.A., exhibited at the Academy a few years back under the motto "Laborare est orare," representing the monks of St. Bernard's Monastery, Leicestershire, cutting their harvest; "A Tiff Between Two Old Lovers" (15), by the distinguished but now aged Belgian painter, Madou, in which the imminent reconciliation of the old couple in laughter or in tears is most humorously indicated; and by the Dutch master, Israels, a drawing of a girl making a child's under-garment in "The Orphan House" (47). There is true artistic keeping between the pathetic suggestiveness of the figure of the sempstress seated solitary and silent at the window near twilight, and the sad and broken, yet broad, simple, and clear tones of shadow which pervade the poor apartment.

Among the works by regular contributors there is nothing more remarkable than Mr. J. D. Linton's "Lotus-Eaters" (58), a party of fifteenth-century Italian gallants and ladies whiling away the time in a cloistered pleasure, where, perhaps, they have sought sanctuary from alarms of war, or, like Boccaccio's refugees, from terror of the plague. Two fair young dames listlessly inspect a bronze of Cupid held towards them by some itinerant hawker of antiques or poor Cellini of the period.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 9, 1874.

On Saturday last the siege of Bilbao was raised, by the entrance into the city of the third corps of the National Army of Spain, under the command of General Concha. The relief was effected not a day too soon. It is doubtful whether Bilbao could have held out above a week longer against the beleaguering Carlist forces, strongly established on the neighbouring heights. The fall of the city into the hands of Don Carlos, though perhaps it would not have done much towards ensuring the success of his cause, would have destroyed the prestige and influence of the Spanish Government, of which Marshal Serrano is President. Not long since there seemed reason to suppose that the military strength of Spain—so much of it, at least, as could be organised and concentrated by the President Marshal—might prove unequal to the task of breaking up the formidable lines of defence established by the skill of the Carlist leaders. General Moriones had rushed upon those lines and found defeat. Marshal Serrano had subsequently pushed hard against them and obtained some partial success, but he also ascertained by his reconnoitring experiment that further reinforcements and a different plan of attack would be required to accomplish the object he had in view. To gain time for the bringing up of a third army corps was a necessity for his success, which probably led him to connive at, if not to originate, negotiations between the two armies, which, while they excited strong discontent at Madrid, served to amuse and to delude the enemy whom he sought to dislodge. As yet, no one can say with certainty what messages—or, peradventure, what conditions of peace—were interchanged between the chiefs of the confronted armies. Thus much, however, is now clear. Serrano made the best use of the time so gained to bring upon the ground large additional reinforcements. The issue is now before the world. The strong positions of the Carlists were turned by General Concha, and were successively abandoned by his antagonists, and on Saturday last Bilbao threw open its gates, not to the besieging host, but to the National Army, which had at length achieved its relief.

How is this event to be interpreted? What is the meaning with which it is fraught? Its importance may, perhaps, be over-estimated; but, on the other hand, it touches at almost every vital part the national interests of the Spanish people. Judging from a similar passage of history relating to the same part of the world some forty years ago, the relief of Bilbao does not necessarily imply the immediate dispersion of the Carlist forces, nor the instantaneous conclusion of the civil war. It is doubtful, however, whether the Carlist army can much longer be held together as a military unity. The spring of its hope has been broken. The bond of its faith has been torn asunder. Its success has touched its zenith. It can no longer retain the discipline and strength which a week ago were nourished by the inspiration of a confident reliance upon the realisation of its mission. Why it was ever permitted to come together and to organise itself into a formidable army, it will be for the Government of Spain to explain hereafter. It needs not, however, any superhuman foresight to divine that the time will not be very long before the Carlist army will melt into detached shreds, which, scattered over the mountainous districts of the Biscayan provinces, like sparks from a conflagration already mastered, will serve only to prolong a vague sense of danger, and to disquiet the population upon whose resources they will prey.

The raising of the siege of Bilbao appears likely to infuse something approaching to vitality into the Government installed at Madrid by the daring intervention of General Pavia. The conclusion of the Carlist war, following the suppression of the Intransigent insurrectionists who had seized upon Carthage, will furnish to the public of Spain a raison d'être for the usurpation. Probably the Spanish people will acquiesce, not merely of necessity, but also in goodwill, in leaving the reins of supreme government in the hands which for some time past have held them. Very much, however, will depend upon the use made by Serrano and his associates of the power which they wield. It is to be borne in mind that both Marshal Serrano and General Concha are Monarchists by preference. It is not at all certain that they will be fanatical in the practical assertion of their principles. The antecedents of both render it extremely unlikely that they would be able to agree as to the application of their theory to any particular individual. Still, the supremacy of Serrano in his civil office and the rehabilitation of a national army at the disposal of his Government may prove immensely useful at the present time in suppressing any insurrectionary attempt which may have been contemplated by the Federal Republicans in populous cities. Indeed, the relief of Bilbao may well be interpreted as the destruction of their anarchical hopes.

But no Spanish Government can hope to be permanently established unless it be founded upon a broader basis than that which is supplied to it by military violence, even though it can boast of great military success. The Cabinet extemporised by General Pavia, and subject to Marshal Serrano as the nominal Chief of the Republic, may be competent for some months to come to continue to direct the public affairs of the country. Theirs, however, can be but preparatory work at best. It is not to be expected that Spain will resume her place in the comity of European States, or will be recognised by other Governments of the first class as normally organised, until, by some means or other, the will of the Spanish people has been legitimately expressed. The last Cortes was a political abortion, and became very soon a political nuisance. But it is to be remembered that in its election only one section of the people, and that the extremist democratic section, took part. It never had any real constitutional authority. It never exercised any moral influence for good. It was never, in any intelligible and true sense, representative of Spain. That may have been the fault, and was the fault, of the constituent bodies, swayed by the bad example of the chiefs of political parties. The large majority of the electors selfishly and sulkily declined to perform their duty. It is not likely they will do so a second time. It is even less likely that they will be encouraged to do so by Serrano and his supporters. It may, therefore, we think, be surmised that as soon as the way is cleared for action a new Cortes will be called. At this point, provision becomes misty and uncertain. One can only conjecture, and that with extreme diffidence, as to the form of government which Spain will indicate her will to establish. Carlism is clearly out of the question. Alfonsoism presents but few attractions, save to a small party. The same may be said of Montpensierism. The Monarchists will find it difficult, if not impossible, to agree upon a Monarch. The nation does not appear to insist upon a return to Royalty. They did without it under Prim, and they have done without it since the abdication of Amadeus. Probably they are not Republicans by conviction, but they are willing to acquiesce in Republicanism if it be only conservative of political and social order. But all this, we repeat, is mere speculation. Those who look upon Spain from a stand-point outside of her are naturally perplexed as to her future, though they cannot despair of it. [This, however, is a conclusion which they will generally adopt—that the present Government, whatever may be the value of their services and however brilliant the victory they have lately achieved, have still before them the most arduous and dangerous enterprise which their usurpation has imposed upon them—namely, to reconstitute an organised political authority to which all the patriotism of the country will contentedly do homage.]

THE COURT.

The Queen gave an audience to the Right Hon. Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.S.I., President of the Royal Geographical Society, on Thursday week, at Windsor Castle, when the right hon. gentleman presented to her Majesty Messrs. Thomas Steele and William Oswald Livingstone, the sons of Dr. Livingstone. Prince Arthur arrived at the castle from Maidstone. The Queen's dinner-party included Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Beatrice, Prince Arthur, the Countess of Caledon, Colonel E. M. and Lady Ann Manningham-Buller, Major-General Parke, C.B., and Sir Howard Elphinstone. The following day was the twenty-fourth anniversary of the birthday of Prince Arthur. The band of the 1st Life Guards, under the direction of Mr. Waterson, serenaded under the windows of his Royal Highness in the morning, and the usual Royal salutes were fired. The Prince left the castle in the afternoon for London. The Hon. Mrs. Henry Byng dined with her Majesty. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne returned to London on Saturday. The Judge Advocate-General had an audience of the Queen. Her Majesty visited Lady Julia Lockwood (sister to the late Duchess of Inverness) at Ravensbury. The Countess of Clarendon dined with her Majesty. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Dr. Vaughan, Master of the Temple, officiated. The Countess of Clarendon, the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley, and the Rev. Dr. Vaughan, dined with her Majesty. On Monday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left the castle for London. Her Majesty travelled by special train upon the Great Western Railway to Paddington, and drove thence, escorted by a detachment of Royal Horse Guards, to Buckingham Palace. The French Ambassador, the Duchess de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia, had audience of her Majesty at the palace. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, visited Mr. J. E. Boehm's studio, to see the monument of the Duke of Kent which he is executing for her Majesty. The Queen afterwards visited the Duchess of Teck at Kensington Palace. Prince Leopold arrived at the palace from Oxford. Her Majesty's dinner-party included the Princess of Wales, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), Princess Beatrice, the Countess of Caledon, and the Hon. Mrs. Stonor. Prince Leopold went to the Royal Italian Opera. On Tuesday the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, visited M. and Madame van de Weyer at their residence in Arlington-street. Her Majesty held a Drawingroom, described below. Prince Leopold afterwards returned to Oxford. The Queen's dinner-party included the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Count Gleichen, the Duchess Dowager of Athole, Lady Frances Baillie, the Lord Chamberlain, and Lieutenant-General Sir Francis Seymour, C.B. Princess Beatrice went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. On Wednesday the Lord Steward had an audience of her Majesty to present addresses from the House of Lords. The Duc de Nemours visited the Queen and remained to luncheon. Princess Beatrice visited the Royal Academy, Burlington House. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left the palace for Windsor. Her Majesty was escorted by a detachment of the 2nd Life Guards to Paddington, where Princess Christian met the Queen and travelled with her to Windsor. Her Majesty arrived at the castle at half-past five o'clock. Princess Christian drove to Cumberland Lodge. The Queen has taken her usual daily drives.

The Duchess of Athole has succeeded the Countess of Caledon as Lady in Waiting. The Hon. Caroline Cavendish and the Hon. Flora Macdonald have succeeded the Hon. Horatia Stopford and the Hon. Frances Drummond as Maids of Honour in Waiting.

Lieutenant-General Francis Seymour, C.B., and Mr. Donald Cameron (of Lochiel) are the Grooms in Waiting, and Major-General Lord Alfred Paget has succeeded Major-General H. Ponsonby as Equerry in Waiting to her Majesty.

The Queen will hold a Council at Windsor Castle on Tuesday next.

THE QUEEN'S COURTS.

By command of the Queen, a Levée was held yesterday (Friday) week at St. James's Palace by the Prince of Wales on behalf of her Majesty. The Prince of Wales, attended by his suite and escorted by a detachment of the Royal Horse Guards, arrived at the palace from Marlborough House at two o'clock, and was received by the great officers of state and the Royal household. The Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, and the Duke of Teck were present at the Levée. The usual state ceremonial was observed. The principal members of the Corps Diplomatique were in attendance, and various foreigners of distinction were presented to the Prince. In the general circle nearly 400 presentations were made to his Royal Highness on behalf of the Queen. This being a collar day, the knights of the several orders wore their respective collars.

The Queen held a Drawingroom on Tuesday at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Beatrice, Prince Leopold, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duc de Nemours, the Comte d'Eu, the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Duke of Teck were present at the Court. The Queen, accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales and the other members of the Royal family, entered the Throne-Room at a quarter past three o'clock. The diplomatic circle was attended by the principal foreign Ambassadors and Ministers, with the ladies of their respective families, by the Earl and Countess of Derby, and Colonel Bagot. Various ladies and gentlemen, foreigners of distinction, were presented to her Majesty. In the general circle about 400 presentations were made to the Queen.

COURT ARRANGEMENTS.

The Emperor of Russia will arrive at Windsor Castle on Wednesday next. The Queen will give a dinner-party in the Oak Room to the Emperor and to members only connected with the Royal family.

On Thursday next her Majesty will give a banquet in St. George's Hall, for which upwards of 150 covers will be laid.

On Monday, the 18th inst., the Czar will be entertained by the Lord Mayor at the Guildhall.

On the following day a grand review will be held at Aldershot in honour of the Czar. A state ball will be given in the evening at Buckingham Palace.

On Wednesday, the 20th inst., his Imperial Majesty will visit Woolwich, where a review will also be held.

Her Majesty's birthday will be celebrated on May 30.

The state concert announced to be given on the 27th inst. at Buckingham Palace will take place on Wednesday, June 10.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, dined, on Saturday last, with Sir Francis Grant and the members of the Royal Academy at Burlington House. On Sunday the Prince and Princess of Wales attended Divine service in the Chapel Royal, St. James's. The Rev. the Sub-Dean and the Rev. Thomas Helmore officiated. On Monday Prince and Princess Christian arrived at Marlborough House on a visit to the Prince and Princess. The Prince visited the Queen at Buckingham Palace. The Duc de Nemours and the Count d'Eu visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House. The Prince and Princess and Princess Christian went to the Princess's Theatre. The Princess dined with the Queen. On Tuesday the Prince, accompanied by Prince Christian, visited the Duc de Nemours and Count d'Eu. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Leopold visited the Prince and Princess. Their Royal Highnesses attended the Queen's Drawingroom. The Prince, accompanied by Prince Christian, was present at a banquet given by the members of the Senior United Service Club to Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, at their club, in Pall-mall. On Wednesday the Prince, accompanied by the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz and Prince Christian, went to Newmarket. The Princess has driven out daily. The Prince has taken Armitage Hill, Sunningdale, for the Ascot week. Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, attended by the Rev. J. N. Dalton and accompanied by the Rev. William R. Rogers, have visited the Middle-Class School, in Cowper-street, Finsbury. Lieutenant-Colonel Teesdale has succeeded Major Grey as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince.

The Duke of Edinburgh presided at the one hundredth anniversary festival dinner of the Royal Humane Society, last Saturday, at the Freemasons' Tavern. His Royal Highness, with the Duchess of Edinburgh, went to Her Majesty's Opera, Drury-lane, on Monday evening. Their Royal Highnesses dined with the First Lord of the Admiralty and Mrs. Ward Hunt on Wednesday. At the request of the Queen, the Duke will open the Chelsea embankment to-day (Saturday). His Royal Highness will be accompanied by the Duchess.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, M.P., have taken up their residence at Argyll Lodge.

The Duc de Nemours and the Count d'Eu have arrived at the Pulteney Hotel.

Entertainments have been given during the week by his Excellency Musurus Paasha, his Excellency the French Ambassador and the Duchess de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia, the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Earl and Countess of Derby, Lord Carlingford and Countess Francis Waldegrave, Viscountess Combermere, Baroness Budett-Coutts, the First Lord of the Admiralty and Mrs. Ward Hunt, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cairns, Lord and Lady Wolverton, Count Metaxa, Sir Edward and Lady Manningham-Buller, Sir Matthew White Ridley, and the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen-at-Arms.

Notices of the Exhibition of the Society of French Artists, of M. Loppé's Alpine Pictures, and of M. Doré's new painting, "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," are, with other matters, unavoidably deferred.

About 300 gentlemen met at the works of Messrs. Siemens Brothers, Woolwich, last Saturday, to see the placing on board the steam-ship Faraday of the first portion of the Direct United New Hampshire. The cable, which varies in size from 2½ in. to 3 of an inch in diameter, will have a total length of 3000 miles.

ROMAN COLISEUM NEAR TUNIS.

When Northern Africa was a province of Imperial Rome, the vast Flavian amphitheatre was copied at Thydrus, a city of Byzacium, above one hundred miles south of Tunis and Carthage. The place is now called El Djem, and the grand ruins of the Coliseum there are shown in our Illustration. This is from one of a set of photographs which were sent us, last June, by Mr. F. Ritchie, photographic artist, from Biserta, in the Regency of Tunis. He wrote us an account of his three-days' journey, accompanied by his brother, from Tunis to El Djem, with a description of the place. The Coliseum was seen miles away, rising high above the plain, from amidst the surrounding olive-groves. Mr. Ritchie says:—"On the last day of our sojourn at El Djem we measured the length and breadth of the building two or three times, so as to be quite sure as to the accuracy of the dimensions. We found it to be 488 ft. in length by 404 ft. 6 in. in breadth. When we had finished, one of our many followers wanted us to descend into a pitch-dark room, from which, he said, there was a subterranean passage; but, having no lights with us, we declined the offer. The thing that strikes one most on seeing the African Coliseum for the first time is its grandeur; and then, the wanton neglect and destruction of it by the Arabs. Somewhat more than a century ago it was in almost a perfect state of preservation, until the Arabs, in a rebellion about that time, made a fortification of it; and the Bey then reigning had such difficulty in dislodging them that he pulled down the western gate and part of the southern side, so as to render it useless as a fortification for the future. Since that time the Arabs have been pulling it down and carrying it away piece by piece; in fact, all the village of El Djem, which has a population of 1000, is built with these materials. There being no stone whatever near El Djem, the Romans must have brought the stone for the Coliseum at least forty miles, as that is the nearest point where stone is to be found. The interior is in an almost entire state of ruin as regards the seats; but the feature of this Coliseum, which excels all others, is in its exterior and circular façades. These, which constitute the chief characteristic beauty of such an edifice, are almost in a perfect state of preservation. There is one satisfaction here which is not found in examining other famous remains of antiquity at the present day. In wandering through the building one can look at its walls and stroll through the lofty galleries, thinking of the past, without being rudely recalled to the present by seeing the name of Jones, Brown, or Robinson, or some other English or American name staring one in the face. Indeed, I might include names of all the other European nations, as this mean and silly practice is not confined to the vulgar of our own country."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

On Wednesday the price of house coals was raised 6s. per ton on the Coal Exchange.

A mule and donkey show has been held this week at the Crystal Palace.

The British Museum was reopened on Thursday. The public will be admitted on Mondays and Saturdays till eight o'clock to Aug. 15, and on Wednesdays and Fridays till six o'clock.

The Lady Mayoress's receptions recommenced on Tuesday.—The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress will attend in state the dedication service at the City Temple on the Holborn Viaduct on Tuesday, the 19th inst.

The report of Lords Hatherley and Selborne, to whom was referred the matter in dispute between the authorities of King's College Hospital and St. John's House, has been accepted as the basis of a new agreement.

The number of visitors to the British Museum last year was 442,264, exclusive of readers, against 424,063 in the preceding year. The number of readers was 103,971, giving an average of 359 daily. Each reader appeared to consult on an average thirteen volumes a day.

At the usual meeting of the executive committee of the Mansion House Fund, on Monday, the secretary reported that the subscriptions had increased to £95,000, of which £30,000 had been remitted to Calcutta. The Lord Mayor estimated the total amount raised throughout the kingdom at £150,000.

In the metropolis 2459 births and 1256 deaths were registered last week, the former having been 4, and the latter 242, below the average numbers. The deaths included 40 from measles, 16 from scarlet fever, 9 from diphtheria, 43 from whooping-cough, 21 from different forms of fever, 20 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox.

Colonel Henderson has caused notices to be distributed stating that every person who shall permit any dog to go at large after having information or reasonable ground for believing it to be in a rabid state, or to have been bitten by any dog in a rabid state, is liable to a penalty of £5. The police, it is stated, have orders to destroy every such dog, and also to enforce the penalty against the owner.

A conference of licensed victuallers, held at the Terminus Hotel, on Tuesday, approved of the Licensing Act Amendment Bill, with a few minor reservations. It expressed regret that the Government had not applied a uniform rule to all places outside the metropolitan district, and suggested that if the graduated scale of population was retained the line should be drawn at 2500 instead of 10,000. In small towns the hour of closing recommended was midnight instead of half-past eleven.

Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley was entertained, on Tuesday, at a banquet given by the United Service Club—the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Christian honouring the entertainment by their presence.—On Wednesday the Clothworkers' Company conferred the freedom and livery of their guild upon Sir Garnet Wolseley. A banquet was afterwards given by the Company in their fine corporate hall, in Mincing-lane.

On Wednesday the London School Board resumed the discussion respecting the offer of Mr. Francis Peek, to give £500 for the encouragement of religious education. The Rev. Bardsley took up the adjourned debate, and he was followed by Mr. Wallace, Canon Barry, Mr. Chatfield Clarke, the Rev. L. D. Bevan, the Rev. Dr. Rigg, Mr. Lucraft, and other members. On a division Mr. Picton's amendment, refusing the offer, was negatived by a majority of 24 to 1. Other amendments bearing upon the question stand over.

The Duke of Sutherland, the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord Monson, Colonel Yolland, Captain Tyler, and other gentlemen interested in engineering, were on Wednesday present, at West Brompton, to inspect and test a new kind of tramway-car, with a steam motive power, but with no visible machinery or other drawbacks such as have hitherto militated against the employment of street locomotives. This experimental trial was in every way successful, showing the car to be adapted to all the requirements of street traffic. Mr. Grantham, the inventor, has availed himself of the Bogie system to take the sharp curves more easily, and thus allowing a longer wheel base.

GATHERING MAY DEW.

GATHERING MAY DEW.

The tricks of Madame Rachel once seemed clever,
To make a woman beautiful for ever;
And Parson Primrose caught his idle daughters
Concocting once "a wash" of beauty-waters;
But for the fairest faces' best adorning,
Go to the meadow, glean the dew of morning!

Sweet morning of sweet May! Oh! what's the reason
These days are put into the London season?
And Maud, instead of tripping through the garden,
At early sunrise, or, like Dolly Varden,
Flopping with daisies in the field, is taken
Half-stilled from the ball-room, strained and shaken!

If I said more, I'd get into a passion!
Confound both night and day, ye slaves of Fashion!
Spend all your spring and summer months in London!
Do always something that were better undone!
But your complexions, daughters of the wealthy,
Shall not be fresh, until your life be healthy!

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, May 7.

The political situation remains unchanged, all attempts to bring about a reconciliation between the Government and the majority having as yet signally failed. The ultimatum presented to the Cabinet by the extreme Right was the unreserved abandonment of the contemplated constitutional laws, to the bringing forward of which the Duc de Broglie pledged himself on the eve of the recess. The natural effect of these measures would be to consolidate Marshal MacMahon's present precarious tenure of power, a consummation which the Royalists appear most anxious to prevent. The Government has refused, however, to accept their ultimatum, and we may look forward to some exciting Parliamentary contests on the meeting of the Assembly.

Following the persecution of the Republican municipalities comes that of the Republican professors. M. de Fourton, the Duc de Broglie's present Minister of Public Instruction, only came into office a few months ago, but he has already effected a complete revolution in educational affairs. One of his numerous victims is M. Joubin, principal of the Angers Lycée, removed simply because the Lycée, under his skilful management, was rapidly becoming a redoubtable rival to the clerical schools of the town, which happened to be patronised by the Archbishop, Mgr. Freppel. Another victim is M. Duvaux, professor at the Lycée of Nancy, who owes his dismissal to the fact of his being a member of the departmental general council, and to his not having always voted in accordance with the views of the préfet. M. Alglave, of the Faculty of Douai, has thrice had his lectures suspended during the last six months simply because he occasionally combats the Government's educational schemes in a scientific journal which he edits. The Minister has, moreover, removed a young professor of the Lycée of Dieppe from his functions for having published a volume of verses, the sentiments expressed in which were not precisely in accordance with his own reactionary doctrines, besides having dismissed M. Albert Leroy, professor at Versailles, a staunch Republican, who repeatedly suffered under the Empire for his freedom of language. The last proceeding of this singularly active Minister has been the changing of the name of the former Lycée Bonaparte, which the Government of Sept. 4 had re-christened the Lycée Cordoret, to that of the Lycée Fontanes, after one of the most unprincipled of the time-serving Frenchmen who gave the coup de grâce to all political morality in the early part of the nineteenth century.

Marshal MacMahon has profited by the recess of the Assembly to make a brief excursion into the provinces. He left Paris in company with the Minister of War on Sunday night, arriving at Tours early on Monday morning, where he was received by General de Cissey and the municipality. At nine o'clock the Marshal laid the first stone of some new barracks, and, after paying a visit to Messrs. Mame's printing establishment, passed the garrison in review, in the environs of the town, leaving late in the afternoon for Saumur, the cavalry school of which he was desirous of inspecting. The Marshal returned to Paris on Tuesday night. He appears to have been respectfully received everywhere, but was invariably greeted by the crowd with shouts of "Vive la République!"

A congress of the Legitimist organs of the provincial press has been held at Tours, at which some sixty of the more insignificant newspapers published in France were represented. Forty of them have coolly signed a declaration expressive of their regret that the Assembly has not yet established the Monarchy, and indicating that, in their opinion, the restoration of the Count de Chambord is the only means of saving France! M. Piccon, the Separatist deputy for Nice, whose recent speech caused such a sensation, has forwarded his resignation to the President of the National Assembly.

The Salon has opened this year with almost as large a number of works of art exposed as used to line the walls of the Palais des Champs Elysées in the palmiest days of the Second Empire. Among them are plenty of mere costume and furniture pieces from Alma Tadema's tenth plague of Egypt in the days of the Pharaohs to M. Edouard Morin's Boulevard scene after the latest Parisian mode; with no end of archaic interiors peopled with draped manikins, classical and biblical epics illustrated by artists' models, neo-Greek and late Bois de Boulogne idylls, battles, bacchantes, bathers, and Bedouins, and Spanish, Italian, Norman, and Breton peasants. There is one grand work, however, which stands prominently forward—the crucified Christ of M. Bonnat, an incident which has been painted ten thousand times, but never in a more reverent, earnest, and conscientious spirit. The subject is simply Christ nailed to the cross, without any accessories beyond a dark, lurid sky and some patches of rocky ground. The treatment, however, is highly poetical, and at the same time scrupulously realistic. One is awed and painfully fascinated by the agonised expression of the upturned face, while lost in admiration at the marvellous rendering of the muscles, the skilful foreshortening of the features, and the wonderful anatomical knowledge which the perfect delineation of the nude frame displays. The flesh tints, too, are singularly transparent, and their strong light and shade are rendered with consummate skill. The white drapery which girds the Saviour's loins, the crown of thorns encircling his brows, the wood-work and nails of the cross, have all been painted with the most scrupulous care. This work is destined to surmount the judgment-seat of the new Criminal Court at the Paris Palais de Justice; and, often while fixing the gaze of some penitent prisoner, will quite unconsciously attract towards it thousands of idle eyes.

M. Gérôme exhibits three very dissimilar works, all in his habitual and almost painfully elaborate style, one of which, termed "L'Eminence Grise," is being much canvassed by the Paris critics just now. The scene is the staircase of the palace of Cardinal Richelieu, with the grey friar his secretary, who was commonly credited with the possession of equal power with Louis XIII.'s imperious minister, loitering on the landing, pretending to be occupied with his breviary, that he may avoid acknowledging the obsequious obeisances which the tribe of courtiers indulge in as they pass beside him on their way to an audience with the Minister Cardinal. The subject was hardly worthy of M. Gérôme's dramatic powers; but, except that the action is somewhat extravagant, and that the marble staircase, metal balustrade, friar's coarse habit, and courtier's rich garments are of a uniform smooth texture, the picture, so far as execution is concerned, rivals M. Gérôme's best works. And yet in point of detail it is very inferior to the same painter's "Rex Tibicen," which introduces us to an apartment at Sans Souci, every feature of which has been marvellously reproduced by M. Gérôme's skilful pencil. Here we have the great Frederick, his cane and old three-cornered cocked hat dashed carelessly on the ground, profiting by a few moments' relaxation which he has seized from his multitudinous pursuits to play some air on his favourite flute. The King has his back turned towards us, and M. Gérôme has not shown himself above petty national prejudices by representing him not only in an undignified, but in an ungainly and even ridiculous attitude as he leans forward to scan the piece of music he is playing. Perched above is the bust of some musical celebrity of the epoch smiling contemptuously down on the Royal performance, which appears to have sent the King's dogs—one of whom has taken possession of his master's chair, while the others lie stretched full length on the ground—sound asleep. Every single detail of this picture is painted to perfection, from the features of Frederick down to the ormolu writing-table, and the music-book, inkstand, and papers that encumber it, the letters with which the floor is strewn, the maps and books in various bindings which fill the recesses, not forgetting the hairpowder which smothers the collar of the King's old blue coat, or the mud with which his tall boots are liberally splashed. All are reproduced with photographic exactness.

SPAIN.

Bilbao has at length been relieved, and Marshals Serrano and Concha have entered the city. Some details of the operations are given at page 450, which contains a plan of Bilbao and Somorrostro. Marshal Serrano was received at Madrid on Wednesday with great rejoicings.

On Sunday an attempt was made in Madrid to assassinate Senor Pi y Margal by an insane priest, who, after firing two or three shots from a revolver without effect, killed himself.

ITALY.

A decree has been issued giving effect to the convention concluded between Italy and Switzerland relative to the demarcation of the frontier.

The Chamber of Deputies has approved all the clauses of the Grist Bill, with some slight modification. The Chamber has concluded the discussion upon the bill on franking letters. The system of franking is retained in so far as regards correspondence with the King, the Pope, and the Holy See.

At a consistory, on Monday morning, the Pope performed the ceremony of closing, and subsequently of reopening, the mouths of the new cardinals, giving them their titles and rings.

GERMANY.

The Czar, with the Grand Dukes Constantine and Alexis, arrived in Berlin on Sunday afternoon. They were received at the eastern station by the Emperor and his distinguished officers of State. From the station the Imperial party drove direct to the Royal palace to greet the Empress. Thence the Czar proceeded to the Russian Embassy. His Majesty paid visits to Field Marshals von Wrangel, von Moltke, and von Manteuffel. On Monday the Czar visited Prince Bismarck. The Emperor William and his illustrious guests were present at the manoeuvres of a brigade combined from several corps. A Court dinner was given in the evening, to which 170 persons were invited. The Czar resumed his journey on Tuesday evening, proceeding by the nine o'clock train to Stuttgart, arriving there on Wednesday afternoon.

Both the exalted invalids at Berlin are recovering fast. The Emperor has attended soirées, inspections of troops, and public places; while Prince Bismarck is able to walk in his garden, and is waiting for fine weather in order to ride out.

A Berlin telegram states that the Emperor proposed to start for Wiesbaden on Thursday, and to remain a fortnight at that watering-place.

The betrothal of the Grand Duke Vladimir with the Duchess Marie of Mecklenburg was promulgated at the Royal castle, Berlin, on Monday.

The German Federal Council has approved the Press Bill recently passed by the Reichstag.

In the Prussian Chamber of Deputies the bill for the administration of vacant bishoprics has passed the second reading. Clause 13, intended to regulate the stoppage of state salaries paid to members of cathedral chapters, was rejected.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

Some compliments have been paid to Italy. The Emperor has conferred the grand cross of the Order of St. Stephen upon Signor Minghetti, the Italian Premier, and Signor Visconti-Venosta, the Italian Minister of Foreign Affairs. His Majesty has also conferred the grand cross of the Order of Leopold upon Count de Robilant, the Italian Minister at Vienna; and the grand cross of the Order of Francis Joseph upon Signor Agnemo, the Chef de Cabinet of King Victor Emmanuel.

In a sitting of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, last week, M. Ghyczy, replying to an interpellation on the bank question, made a statement similar in purport to that communicated by him at the conference of members of the Deak party. The House, by 134 votes against 77, passed a resolution taking cognisance of the Minister's declaration.

AMERICA.

The New York papers contain descriptions, many columns in length, of the devastation caused by the floods throughout the district traversed by the Mississippi and its tributaries. Nothing like it has occurred, the newspapers say, during this century, and the damage already done exceeds, it is declared, that caused by the Chicago and Boston fires ten times over. Hundreds of square miles of the most fertile and best-cultivated land in America have been swept by rapid currents. The cities of New Orleans and Nashville and many smaller towns were under water. Hundreds of cattle have been drowned, houses and farms swept away, and immense damage done. At Boston and elsewhere subscriptions were being raised for the sufferers. A cable telegram of Monday's date says that the floods are extending, and some rich cotton plantations in Arkansas have been ruined. Daily among the sufferers 50,000 rations are distributed by the Louisiana relief committee.

More faction fighting is reported in Arkansas. In an encounter which took place at Newgacony the rival Republicans and Democrats had nine killed and twenty-seven wounded.

Mr. Archibald, the British Consul-General in New York, gives a denial to a statement contained in placards posted in certain towns of England, asserting that 40,000 labourers who have emigrated to America are ready to return home if their passage be paid. This statement has been made without his authority or knowledge, and is untrue.

CANADA.

The House of Commons has passed the Estimates. The Session of the Dominion Parliament will close on the 23rd inst.

In order to meet the deficit of the coming year, the custom tariff has undergone modification. Green tea will pay four cents and black tea three cents per lb. All articles which have formerly paid a duty of 15 per cent are in future to pay 17½ per cent; anchors, cables, masts, wire rigging, copper sheathing, and pig iron will be admitted free, but on other iron a duty of 5 per cent is imposed. The duties on sugars are unaltered, but in those on wines some modifications are made.

INDIA.

There was news of the Indian famine, on Monday, by the Viceroy's official telegram and by despatches from the special correspondents of the Times and the Daily News. The official despatch consists, in the main, of statistics. It states, however, that the public health is good—there is no epidemic among men or beasts—and no more famine deaths have been reported. The Times' account is hardly so favourable. The writer says that prices are rising in the worst districts, and the cultivating classes in North Chumparun are in the greatest distress. Relations are turning widows adrift, and uneasiness—almost panic—prevails there. Great anxiety is felt about North Bhaugulpore. Rungpore is worse, and in Maunbhoom the peasantry are consuming seed grain. Want and consequent fever have reduced Western Burdwan to wretchedness, and it is alleged that suicides have occurred from starvation. It is added that Sir R. Temple, after his tour, sees no hope of escaping trouble of magnitude. The Daily News' correspondent says that the early rice crop, ripening in July and August, gives luxuriant promise, adding, "with that harvest the pressure ceases."

A special telegram from Calcutta, dated Monday evening, appears in the Standard. It says that the Government has ceased to purchase rice, considering that its present stock is sufficient for all emergencies. In addition to that stock there are in Bengal accumulations to the extent of 280,000 tons brought from Rangoon, and 40,000 tons from Saigon. The distress, it is added, has been completely mastered.

In illustration of the present state of the poorer classes in the famine districts of India, it is stated in a Calcutta telegram of Tuesday's date that the people have now but one meal of rice a day, and in some places only one in two days.

The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphed on Wednesday as follows:—"The transport companies' cattle are dying and the carters are deserting. The Government transport reserve is active. Six hundred camels have crossed the Ganges. The sales of Government rice are increasing. There is a marked improvement in North Tirhoot. Cases of severe distress are comparatively few. Yesterday I saw many children in Nuggurbustee South being slowly starved."

AUSTRALIA.

We learn from Melbourne that the Victorian Parliament will meet on the 19th inst.

Judge Williams has retired from the Bench, and is succeeded by Mr. Stephen.

The Sultan has conferred the order of the Osmanî in brilliants upon Prince Milan of Serbia.

A telegram from Aden announces the death, at Zanzibar, of Richard Brenner, the celebrated African traveller.

Owing to the hostile attitude of the Achinese, 1600 extra troops and two war vessels are to remain with the Dutch garrison in Acheen.

There has been a serious riot in the French settlement at Shanghai, where the Chinese mob stoned the foreigners and sacked and burned several houses.

The appointment is gazetted of Major-General the Hon. St. George Gerald Foley, C.B., to be Lieutenant-Governor of the Island of Guernsey, in the room of Lieutenant-General Edward Frome, whose period of service has expired.

The general results of the seven days' sale of the late Duke of Brunswick's jewels are as follow:—Sum realised, 990,030f.; estimated value, 768,558f.; estimated value of the lots withdrawn, 846,355f. No decision has been come to respecting the disposal of the unsold jewels.

Only the sovereignty and government of the Fiji Islands are, it appears from recent despatches, offered to Great Britain by the unanimous voice of the King and the native chiefs. No crown lands, that is to say, are included in the cession, as the territory belongs to tribes, families, and individuals.

Recent advices from Bagdad, received in Constantinople, describe the famine in Asia Minor as very bad. In the district of Angora alone the mortality reaches a hundred a day. While Asia Minor suffers from famine Bagdad is a victim to terrible floods. The waters of the Tigris rose to a great height, and overflowed the surrounding country. Not the least important item of damage done is the carrying away of a large portion of telegraph line.

There were serious disturbances at Ling, in Austria, on the 1st inst., in consequence of a rise in the price of beer announced by the brewers, Messrs. Hatscheck. About 10,000 people assembled outside the brewery, and set about smashing windows, breaking open doors, and throwing machinery, barrels, furniture, and all they could lay hold of into the Danube. The riot did not subside till the proprietors of the establishment declared their willingness to sell at the old price.

The Queen has approved of Mr. Newton Crane as Consul at Manchester for the United States of America; and of Mr. Georg Adolphus Mullens as Consul-General at Liverpool for the Kingdom of Denmark.

The Earl of Rosslyn has been gazetted her Majesty's High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland; and Sir H. Carstairs Pelly, Bart., M.P., as Deputy Lieutenant of Huntingdonshire.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart have published a new song, words and music by Lady William Lennox, entitled "Give me your hand once more!" The melody is pleasing, and the ballad will, doubtless, be popular.

An arboretum was opened on Monday at Walsall, the ceremony being performed by Lady Hatherton, in the presence of several thousands of the inhabitants. The greater part of the site is the property of Lord Hatherton, who has contributed £500 to the cost of the undertaking. The area of the arboretum is 18 acres, of which 7½ acres are covered by ornamental waters. The grounds have been laid out with great taste, and the whole enterprise will be a valuable acquisition to the inhabitants of the Black Country.

THE CHURCH.

PREFERMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Best, William, to be Vicar of Dun's Tew, Oxfordshire.

 Hayman, Dr.; Rector of Aldingham, Lancashire.
 Hinder, W. H.; Curate of Berkeswell-with-Barston, Warwick.
 Manning, F. J.; Rector of St. Leonard's, Colchester.
 Moore, Stephen R.; Vicar of Mickley, Ripon.
 Norman, G. E. W.; Priest, Chaplain, and Curate of St. Mary's, Warwick.
 Radcliffe, H. J.; Vicar of Ivinghoe, Bucks.
 Sadgrove, F. E.; Vicar of Norton, near Malton, Yorkshire.
 Sanders, Samuel Dickson; Vicar of Bishop Middleham.
 Thomas, W. Atterbury; Vicar of Llanvihangel-nant-melan, Radnorshire.
 Wood, Albert; Rector of South Reston, Louth.

The living of Aldingham, in the county of Lancaster, in the gift of the Crown, has been conferred on Dr. Hayman.

The Bishop of Durham has received an address from the laymen of his diocese thanking him for his efforts to put down Ritualism. A guarantee fund of £7200 has also been presented to his Lordship to meet the legal costs entailed upon him.

On St. Mark's Day was opened, at Abbots Bromley, near Rugeley, St. Anne's School for Girls, the first of a series which it is in contemplation to found under the direction of the Provost and Fellows of St. John's College of Lichfield, and in alliance with St. Nicholas's College, Shoreham.

The Bishop of Exeter has consecrated the church of Huish, North Devon, which had been rebuilt by Lord Clinton at a cost of £4000. In addition to this, Lord Clinton has added a considerable piece of ground to the churchyard, and inclosed the whole with an ornamental wall. Mr. G. Street is the architect.

The new Church of St. Peter-le-Bailey, in Oxford, was consecrated by the Bishop last week. It has been built from designs by Mr. Basil Champneys, in fourteenth-century Gothic, in place of the very plain building that has been pulled down to widen the road at the bottom of Queen-street. The chief external feature of the church is a tower 85 feet high.

On Sunday two more missionary bishops for North America were consecrated in Lambeth church by the Archbishop of Canterbury, both of whom have been labouring for many years abroad. The Ven. J. M. Lean, D.D., D.C.S., Archdeacon of Assinobin, in the diocese of Rupert's Land, was consecrated as Bishop of the Saskatchewan territory; and the Rev. W. C. Bompas, M.A., who has laboured so successfully in the Mackenzie River district, was consecrated as Bishop of Athabasca territory.

An address expressive of the affectionate regard in which he is held by his parishioners has been presented to the Rev. C. T. Proctor, Vicar of Richmond, accompanied by an Easter offering amounting to £210; a testimonial of respect has been received by the Rev. J. C. Lyons, late Curate of Kimbolton, Herefordshire; and the parishioners of Maker have presented their Vicar, the Rev. F. T. Winkle, with a purse of 100 guineas, to meet expenses incurred during a forced absence from the vicarage, which has been under repair.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The heads of colleges have elected as Bampton Lecturer the Rev. William Jackson, M.A., F.S.A., late Fellow of Worcester.

The following elections have taken place at Magdalen Hall:—G. H. Damart, St. Paul's School, to the Lusby Scholarship; G. N. Willmer, commoner, St. Edmund Hall, and A. F. Thornhill, Magdalen Hall, to the Lucy Scholarships; W. S. Rouse, of Worcester Cathedral School, to the Meeke Scholarship; F. C. Fox, King Edward's School, Birmingham, to a Brunskill Exhibition.

W. S. Brook (Magdalen College School) and H. V. Pigot, New, have been elected to scholarships at Oriel of £80 per annum, tenable for five years; and E. H. Keed, Lincoln, to an Adam de Brome Exhibition of the same value.

H. G. S. Codd, of Sherborne School, and C. J. Moore, of Dublin University, have been elected to classical postmaster-ships at Merton, of the value of £80 a year.

The following gentlemen have been elected to scholarships at Brasenose:—R. W. Rucker, of Clifton College; H. May, of Forest School, Walthamstow; F. G. Rucker, of Uppingham School; W. B. Taylor (commoner), of Brasenose College; and, for proficiency in mathematics, R. A. Germaine, of University College, London. These scholarships are of the annual value of £80, and tenable for five years.

One of the exhibitions founded at Wadham by Dr. Hody for the encouragement of the study of the Hebrew language has been conferred upon A. T. Hare, scholar of Wadham.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Chancellor's classical gold medals have been adjudged to W. Leaf, Trinity, and F. H. Rawlins, King's (equal). The above-named gentlemen were also bracketed equal at the head of the classical tripos in March last.

Sir William Browne's gold medals have been adjudged thus:—For the best Greek ode, E. C. Selwyn, King's; for the best Greek epigram, H. S. Salt, King's; for the best Latin epigram, E. C. Selwyn, King's. The medal for the Latin ode was not awarded.

The vacant Lightfoot Scholarship has been adjudged to C. D. Cooper, B.A., St. John's.

The order of merit in the examination for scholarships, &c., at King's is as follows:—1, A. H. Cooke; 2, C. Bryans; 3, E. W. Howson; 4, E. W. Collin; 5, W. D. Grant. A. H. Cooke, C. Bryans, and E. W. Collin were selected for Eton scholarships; E. W. Howson, of Haileybury College, for an open scholarship. The second open scholarship was not awarded.

The Price Exhibition has been awarded to W. D. Grant, pensioner of this college and formerly of Uppingham School.

The Vintner Exhibition for Natural Science was awarded to A. G. Richardson, of the City of London School.

The annual distribution of prizes of the Cambridge local examinations, London centre, was held in the theatre of the London University on Thursday.

At a meeting of the Glasgow University Court it was agreed to found two new chairs—one of clinical surgery and the other of clinical medicine, each with an endowment of £100 a year.

The board of Trinity College, Dublin, on Saturday, appointed Dr. Robert S. Ball to the post of Astronomer Royal for Ireland, vacant by the resignation of Dr. Brunnov.

Friends of Rugby School will be glad to know that the entries this term quadruple the departures; that work has been found for Mr. Scott at the school-house without displacement of the two tutors appointed by the late Head Master; that Mr. Sidgwick is reappointed; and that Mr. Nutt, First Classical Master at Cheltenham College, joins the Rugby staff.

The Rev. Herbert Snow, M.A., of St. John's College, Cambridge, and assistant master of Eton College, has been appointed Principal of Cheltenham College, in succession to Dr. Jex Blake, the new Master of Rugby.

RELIGIOUS AND BENEVOLENT INSTITUTIONS.

The Duke of Edinburgh presided, on Saturday evening, at the hundredth anniversary dinner of the Royal Humane Society, held at the Freemasons' Tavern. His Royal Highness, in acknowledging a reference made by one of the speakers to his marriage, mentioned that the Duchess of Edinburgh's granduncle, the Emperor Alexander, was one of the first persons who received a medal from the Royal Humane Society for rescuing a man from drowning. In the course of the evening the Duke presented the Stanhope gold medal of the society, as well as one of the ordinary silver medals, to a seaman named Matthew Webb. The subscriptions amounted to £525.

The annual court of the Earlwood Asylum for Idiots was held, on Thursday week, at the London Tavern. There are now 576 inmates in the asylum. The total income for the year amounted to £34,273, and £2900 had been advanced by the bankers to make up the deficiency of income.

In noticing the third annual ball in aid of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage, which was held, on Thursday week, at the Cannon-street Hotel, the Times mentions some facts of interest concerning the institution. Of 10,612 officers and constables who compose the city, metropolitan, and dockyard police, 10,459 are regular subscribers to the charity, and their contributions alone, averaging one penny each per week, bring in £2214 annually. The orphanage is situated at Twickenham, and the inmates are at present 121 boys and girls. The committee are anxious to remove to a larger building in the same locality, known as Welleley House, which is capable of accommodating 200 children; but there is still wanting a sum of about £5000 out of £17,000 to complete the purchase. The income of the charity last year was £8318, and the expenditure £7586.

Exeter Hall, on Monday evening, was well filled by the annual meeting of the Wesleyan Missionary Society. From the report it appears that thirteen chapels and other property of the Mission at the Gold Coast were destroyed or seriously damaged during the war. The whole of these it is proposed to rebuild during the year. The receipts last year amounted to £167,995, and the expenditure to £168,458.

The new and extensive premises of the London City Mission in Bridge-street, Blackfriars, were opened yesterday week, the Earl of Shaftesbury presiding at the ceremony. The cost of the building was £11,000, of which about £1500 has yet to be obtained. The staff of missionaries numbers 147.

Under the chairmanship of Mr. Spurgeon, the annual meeting of the Baptist Young Men's Association was held, yesterday week, in the Metropolitan Tabernacle.

Mr. Corry, M.P., presided, yesterday week, at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society.

Exeter Hall was crowded on Tuesday with the members and friends of the Church Missionary Society, assembled under the presidency of the Earl of Chichester. The meeting was addressed by the Primate, the Bishop of Ripon, and others. It was shown by the report that the ordinary income of the year had been £196,525, and the expenditure £186,118. The society's establishment embraces 158 mission stations, directed by 207 European clergymen.

The anniversary festival in aid of the funds of the Metropolitan Free Hospital was celebrated on Tuesday evening, at the London Tavern, the Lord Mayor presiding. The secretary announced subscriptions amounting to about £2500, including a sixth subscription of £1000 from "E. G."

Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., M.P., presided at a banquet given at the Freemasons' Tavern in aid of the funds of the National Hospital for the Paralyzed and Epileptic. Donations amounting to £800 were announced.

Lord Shaftesbury presided, on Wednesday, at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In the financial report for the past year it was stated that the gross revenue of the society had reached £220,964, and the gross expenditure had been £210,183. During the year the issue of Bibles, Testaments, &c., exceeded two million and a half copies.

Lord Coleridge presided at the dinner of the Royal Literary Fund, on Wednesday evening. Subscriptions and donations of over £1800 were announced.

At the annual meeting of the Religious Tract Society, in Exeter Hall, on Wednesday evening—Sir Charles Reed in the chair—it was stated that the receipts from all sources amounted to £137,705, exceeding that of the previous year by £10,000.

The sixteenth annual festival of the Royal Hospital for Diseases of the Chest, City-road, was celebrated, on Wednesday night, at the City Terminus Hotel—the Marquis of Lorne in the chair. The subscriptions amounted to £1500.

ELECTION PETITIONS.

The hearing of the Dudley petition was brought to a close on Saturday, when Mr. Justice Grove decided that the rioting which prevailed on the polling-day vitiated the return of Mr. Sheridan, and rendered the election null and void. His Lordship ordered each side to pay their own costs.

At Barnstaple Mr. Justice Mellor has decided that Messrs. Cave and Waddy, the sitting members, were duly elected, and the petitioners have to pay costs.

After hearing counsel for and against the Mayo petition, the Dublin Court of Common Pleas has decided that the return of the two members, Messrs. Browne and Tighe, was null and void, and that the costs of the inquiry be borne by them.

The Haverfordwest petition, which was appointed for hearing on Monday, has been turned into a special case for argument in the Common Pleas in the early part of Trinity Term.

Mr. Justice Mellor opened the Launceston inquiry on Monday. The validity of the return of Colonel Deakin, the Conservative member, was disputed on the ground that he improperly influenced those of the voters who resided upon his property by conceding to them, a few days before polling, the right to destroy rabbits. On Wednesday judgment was given, Mr. Justice Mellor deciding that Colonel Deakin's concession to his tenantry was an act of bribery within the statute. The claim of the petitioner, Mr. Herbert Drinkwater, to the seat is to come before the Court of Common Pleas.

Mr. Justice Grove arrived at Poole on Monday and opened the commission. There are two petitions against the sitting member, Mr. Charles Waring (Liberal), the first alleging general bribery, treating, undue influence, and personation, and the second charging particular acts of bribery, in addition to the general allegations.

There remain only five more petitions to be disposed of arising out of the late general election. The Durham city petition is for the 19th inst.; Bolton, Durham (northern division), and Durham (southern division) for the 22nd inst.; and Boston, the last petition on the list, for the 29th inst.

Mr. Kemp Sanderson, the Conservative, was, on Monday, returned for Wakefield, the representation of which had been rendered vacant by the unseating of the Conservative member, Mr. Edward Green. He polled 1814 votes against 1627 recorded for Mr. Mackie, the Liberal candidate.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

Visitors to Newmarket during the present week have, so far, had no reason to complain of the quality of the sport, for on Tuesday and Wednesday there was some capital racing, even exclusive of the Two Thousand. The Bathynany Post Sweepstakes fell to Lord Falmouth, by the aid of Lady Love, a very nice filly by Blair Athol—Vergiss-mein-Nicht; Prince Bathynany very appropriately put in a strong bid for the stake with Peripatetic, and secured the following event, the Prince of Wales's Stakes, with Delay, who, for once, ran as straight as possible. For the last two or three seasons the green jacket of the Hungarian Prince has been so terribly unlucky that his successes are very popular. The match between Oxonian and Trombone was a very sporting affair, the latter, who was in receipt of 5lb., being the favourite; but old Oxonian jumped off with the lead, and all Fordham's exertions could never get Trombone on terms with him.

The weather on the Two Thousand day was thoroughly enjoyable, being far milder than on the Tuesday, and but for the clouds of dust the drive to the heath would have been very pleasant. It appeared a certainty that Prince Charlie would beat Blenheim over the T.Y.C., as they met at level weights; but M. Lefevre, in the most sportsman-like way, brought out his horse to have a cut at the mighty chestnut for the third time. He was well rewarded for his pluck by seeing a magnificent struggle, at the end of which the Prince only won by a head. It may be that Prince Charlie does not care to do more than he is obliged, or that Parry does not understand him as well as French did; but we fancy that his action is scarcely so brilliant as last season, and that the constant work he has done is beginning to tell on him. The May Stakes furnished a genuine sensation, as Tangible (9 st.) and Tintern (7 st. 9 lb.) ran a dead-heat, and, only a head behind them, the Curacao filly (6 st. 11 lb.) and Luisette (6 st. 13 lb.) made a second dead-heat for third place. Such an occurrence is without parallel, and was a wonderful triumph of handicapping. Immediately after this race there was a rush to the bird-cage to inspect the field for the Guineas. Ecosais was naturally the great centre of attraction; and when it was seen that, though he wore plasters on his fore legs, he looked bright and well in his coat, and seemed to have done plenty of work, his position in the betting improved rapidly, and, before the flag fell, 5 to 4 was the longest offer against him. In point of condition nothing was quite equal to Atlantic, who, though a trifle leggy, has grown into a fine lengthy colt. Spectator also looked thoroughly fit; but his stable companion, Boscobel, was decidedly backward. A slight want of size was the only fault that could be found with Trent, who is a very compact, muscular colt, and may do better at Epsom. We did not see Farnfield and Reverberation, who were saddled at the Ditch stables; and of the rest, only Whitehall—who had evidently had a thorough Yorkshire preparation—attracted much attention.

There was only a slight delay at the post, and as soon as the flag fell Atlantic showed in front, and was never headed from start to finish. At the Bushes nothing but Reverberation and Ecosais had the least chance with him, and the latter, whose badly-shaped fore-legs are terribly against him in making a descent, nearly fell on to his nose in coming down the Bushes hill. A few strides more and Fordham began to ride him in earnest, and Reverberation went on in pursuit of Atlantic. Lord Falmouth's horse is a very lazy one, so Archer kept hard at him all the way, and, having the best of the struggle throughout, landed him a clever winner by a neck. Ecosais, who was eased in the last hundred yards, was beaten four lengths for second place; Trent was quite double that distance behind him, and then came Lacy, Boscobel, Spectator, and Dukedom, in the order named. Atlantic was beautifully ridden by little Archer, who carried nearly 3 st. of dead-weight, and in future he will probably have all Lord Falmouth's mounts in the great weight-for-age races. Reverberation stayed better than any Thunderbolt that we can call to mind; and, though Ecosais might have been nearer, the descent from Tattenham Corner must prove a fatal bar to his success at Epsom, where the tricolour seems likely to be carried by Novateur.

The Polo Club played the opening games of the season at Lillie Bridge on May Day. Great improvements have been made in the ground since last year, and the game promises to be more popular than ever. No special interest attached to the play, which was regarded merely as practice. The Hon. T. W. Fitzwilliam appeared in as good form as ever, and scored all three goals for his side in the first match.

CROSSING A RIVER IN INDIA.

Notwithstanding the great improvements of late years in the construction of railways, roads, and bridges in India, travellers in some districts are often obliged to cross rivers in very primitive fashion, with much delay and alarm, not unfrequently accompanied by danger and loss. The frail but buoyant coracle or native boat of wickerwork covered with ill-prepared hides may answer its purpose well enough, provided no sunken rock or plunging horse should make a hole in it. But the appearance of this vessel is not very assuring to the timid traveller, unaccustomed to this mode of crossing rivers at times and places where crocodiles abound. His belief in "there's nothing like leather" is rudely shaken by the very patent fact of its being the only barrier betwixt his person and those hungry jaws or the depths of the eddying stream. He embarks with trepidation, and lands, when he does it safely, with great thankfulness. The river, except in the rainy season, flows far below its perpendicular banks, down which a wide path is cut for cattle and conveyances, and a narrow one for foot-passengers at the crossing-places. In the engraving we see bullocks laden with bags of grain coming down to the river. To the left is the baggage-cart, with tents rolled up, mattresses, and clothing. To the right are natives cooking on the edge of the water, a bullock-man swimming across with his bullocks, and native servants being conveyed in a boat with the usual two-wheeled coach, which is put bodily into the coracle and more than fills it. The "sahib," or English gentleman, with his "mem-sahib," or lady, his baby and boy, servants, and dog, pretty well crowd another, whilst the horse-keeper swims the horse and makes him assist in dragging the boat. Generally horses are much alarmed at the boat following, and sometimes they do not take well to the water, but attempt to get into the coracle, and either sink or upset it. When the rivers are in full flood the boat goes wheeling down the current, and lands sometimes a quarter of a mile further down. The native boatmen are often more of fatalists than suits the nerves of inexperienced travellers. A somewhat nervous gentleman trembled as he saw the palanquin containing his wife and infant put into the boat. He stepped in himself with many misgivings, and when, to his horror, the thirteen bearers jumped in too he inquired, in dismay, "Will this carry us over?" "How do I know?" was the answer; "it is what the Government has provided. Shove off!" With this comforting reply they went wheeling down the swift and muddy stream; but they landed safely.

CROSSING A RIVER IN INDIA.

"THE PARTING." BY WILHELM KOLLER.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Amongst the comparatively few things Parliamentary that are noticeable in the present Session there is this, that the Prime Minister has adopted a style of answering questions which is in direct—perhaps intentional—contrast with the mode of his predecessor, who was accustomed to deliver an oration on the provocation of the smallest interpellation. The manner, in this respect, of Mr. Disraeli is more like that of Lord Palmerston, with a difference; for whereas the latter was quick, short, and mocking, the former is slow, brief, and mocking. At any rate, he generally creates mirth by his answers, which was especially the forte of Lord Palmerston.

Predictions which were current that there would be a ponderous debate on the state of the Navy have been duly realised. Mr. Childers appeared one evening with a box full of papers, and very early in the discussion proceeded to make that exaltation of his administration at the Admiralty which he pathetically declared he had never had an opportunity of delivering, though one has an impression that one has heard, if not in bulk, piecemeal, several vindications of this sort from him. This time he had his way for something like two hours, and if his mind is not wholly liberated it is not the fault of a patient House that suffered him to say his say without let or hindrance. Of course such a portentous oration could not be attacked in force by the First Lord of the Admiralty impromptu, so Mr. Algernon Egerton, the secretary to the board, was put up to manoeuvre, like a frigate, around the huge floating battery of Mr. Childers's speech. The duty was neatly and hardly done by Mr. Egerton, whose well-bred calmness and adequate cognoscentia of what he was talking about were conspicuous. The naval critics were, as ever, active and persistent. There was Mr. Bentinck the greater, as is his manner, sending a hot all-round fire, like that of a turret-ship, on all and sundry connected with Admiralty administration; and there was a miral Elliot, who is a stern, not to say crabbed, commentator on naval matters, and who developed the original idea that the Channel fleet and the flying squadron should have been sent to the Gold Coast the moment the war broke out, when short work would have been made with the Ashantees. Could it have been meant that this would have been done by the bombardment of Coomassie by the united squadrons? Then, too, Mr. Shaw Lefevre, glib and dexterous, took his part in the defence of the ex-Admiralty; and there was much more palaver and controversy to and fro; so that time was obtained for Mr. Ward Hunt to mature his speech, which was to be a summing-up of the debate at a late hour. Certainly he came out in quite a new rhetorical line. Not only was he emphatic and earnest, but he was almost impassioned; and he proved that he has in him a vein of smart retort and sharp, caustic humour, for which he has never yet obtained credit. His voice, too, is sonorous and rolling, and in its higher tones rich; while his stately configuration is in keeping with the manliness of his elocution. When he was vigorously laying it on the late Admiralty, his appearance, with his full, flowing beard, massive head of hair, flashing eyes, trumpet tones, and eager gesture, somehow he might have suggested recollections of the typical Neptune of artists, particularly when that ruler of the ocean was rebuking the errant and rebellious winds which nearly destroyed the fleet of Aeneas. The speech was a decided success as a rhetorical effort, no matter what the substance may have been.

The strong Conservative Government has received a defeat, and it was administered by the Irish section of the House. A motion was made by Mr. Synan for State aid to the Irish sea-coast fisheries, which have fallen into woeful decay, notwithstanding that crowds of anxious fishermen stand daily on the shore and millions of fish are gambolling before their eyes and mocking them with invitations to come and catch them—if they can. Practically the demand resolved itself into this—that public money should be given to the Irish fishermen, where-with to buy boats and tackle and to hire deputies to catch fish, then to sell them, and bring the money to be enjoyed by the nominal fishers. The question being the touching of public money, as may be supposed, Irish members, new and old, were on the alert, and floods of eloquence issued from them, whatever their political persuasion; and at last Mr. Butt put the matter in a plain, simple, and tangible form when he said, in effect, "Come, now; give us £20,000, and you will see if we do not produce a miraculous draught of fishes." Although Sir Michael Hicks-Beach was wonderfully conciliatory, and offered something in the way of small loans, this was rejected as too vague, and nothing would do but the promise of an instant vote—money down—of £20,000; and so a division took place, and Mr. Synan, beaming all over with smiles, while Mr. Hart-Dyke's (the Ministerial "whip") countenance was clothed in gloom, announced a victory of three over the Government, and of course there was a great hullabaloo.

A debate on the Gold Coast was interesting, and had its features. Sir Wilfrid Lawson was facetious and epigrammatic as usual, and contrived to insinuate some of his anti-liquor ideas into his speech, and was emphatic in his statement that all the civilisation which England had introduced into West Africa was rum and gunpowder. Admiral Sir W. Edmonstone, who knows the Gold Coast, hinted slyly that, however unconsciously, missionaries were the originators of wars with savages; while Mr. Richard—speaking, of course, in the name of the Peace Society, and with the dogmatism and the intonation of the conventicle—was profuse in his denunciations of the horrors, the slayings, and the burnings of war—subjects which he has by rote. On this occasion Mr. E. Jenkins made a determinate bid for the suffrage of the House. His speech was a set one, was able, suggestive, and illustrative, while his elocution was fair. But all this was marred by a pretentious and self-confident manner, giving the idea that he believed he was conferring a favour in speaking at all to the assembly he was addressing. His is precisely the style that the House has never endured, and, accordingly, the Ministerialists jeered and interrupted all through, and at last grew so boisterous that the speech was truncated. The Opposition did not overtly express disapprobation, but sympathy was very little if at all expressed. In a quiet way, Sir Rainald Knightley is a humourist, and it was in a drolly mischievous way that he managed to get the debate adjourned to July 31, which was, in effect, getting rid of it altogether.

When Mr. Eustace Smith was, one evening, dilating on the feebleness of the Board of Trade and its inability to deal with its numerous duties and responsibilities, those who looked at the Treasury Bench might have thought that he was satirically personal. Else why did he not say that feebleness was somewhat redeemed by the accession to the Board of Sir Charles Adderley and Mr. Cavendish Bentinck, who were representing it in their respective characters of President and Secretary. Nothing could be more calm and sedate than the demeanour of Sir Charles Adderley, but Mr. Cavendish Bentinck was evidently nervously conscious of the responsibilities which had been so portentously dwelt upon. He listened to every word that was uttered with all his might, he took copious notes (one would have liked to see the holograph); he was restless, palpably anxious, and priming himself—he had, of course, loaded himself before—for his first official speech. Hour after hour passed, and still he fidgeted, and still he came not. At length the discussion reached that point of repletion at which no more could be stuffed in, and so, doubtless, a powerful exposition of the capacity and zeal of the present staff of the Board of Trade has not been recorded for posterity.

It may be just mentioned that Mr. Roebuck speaks occasionally, and notably he did so in the Gold Coast Debate; and verily, after listening to the slipshod talk which was prevalent, it was refreshing to hear his neatly-cut, well-balanced sentences, his simple but forcible phraseology, his clear argumentation, his pointed illustration, and his original suggestiveness. He is, perhaps, the only remaining representative of a school of Parliamentary speaking which was once characteristic of the House of Commons, and which was an admirable school.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Lord Delawarr stated, yesterday week, that it was under the consideration of the Government what should be done in the matter of the Endowed Schools Act, which is about to expire; and some bills were passed a stage, during a brief sitting.

Earl Russell moved, on Monday, for copies of papers relating to the maintenance of the peace of Europe; but upon receiving the assurance of Lord Derby that he had looked through the papers and had not found any which might be produced without inconvenience to the public service, the noble Earl withdrew his motion. The Hertford College (Oxford) Bill was read the second time; and two motions of the Bishop of Bath and Wells asking the disallowance of two schemes of the Endowed Schools Commissioners framed for schools in his diocese were agreed to. The Loans to School Boards Bill was read the second time, and the Bishop of Calcutta (leave of absence) Bill was passed its final stage.

The Lord Chancellor's Land Bills were on Tuesday discussed and passed through Committee; the Courts (Colonial) Jurisdiction Bill and the Game Birds (Ireland) Bill were read the second time; and the Hertford College (Oxford) Bill was passed through Committee.

On Thursday her Majesty, through the Lord Steward, withheld her assent from the schemes of the Endowed Schools Commissioners for the endowed schools at Crewkerne and Timberscombe and Cutcombe, in Somersetshire, in accordance with the addresses presented by their Lordships. Lord Blachford moved the second reading of the Colonial Clergy Bill, the object of which was to repeal the provisions of the Act 59 Geo. III., which rendered it impossible for any colonial clergyman to officiate in England without having first obtained the consent of the Archbishop or the Bishop of the diocese within which he intended to officiate. The Earl of Carnarvon assented to the necessity of the measure. The bill was read the second time. The Hertford College (Oxford) and the Public Works Loan Commissioners (Loans to School Boards) Bills were read the third time and passed. The Judicature (Ireland) Bill was introduced by the Lord Chancellor and read the first time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A motion for a grant of public money for the advancement of the Irish Sea fisheries was debated yesterday week, and the Government, by whom the motion was opposed, was defeated by 95 votes to 93, the majority being made up of 64 Irish, 24 English, and 7 Scotch members; and the minority of 76 English, 15 Scotch, and 2 Irish. Sir J. Lubbock next submitted a resolution declaring the desirability of modifying the code of regulations issued by the Committee of Privy Council in such manner as to give more encouragement to the teaching of history, geography, elementary social economy, and other "extra subjects," in the public elementary schools; but after some discussion the motion was withdrawn. The subject of a warning given by the Irish Government to the Flag of Ireland newspaper was then discussed with much vigour by the Irish members until a quarter past twelve, when the subject dropped, and the report of the Committee of Ways and Means was agreed to. The East India Annuity Funds Bill was read the third time and passed.

On Monday the subject of the policy of England in regard to the Gold Coast was discussed, the debate being adjourned to July 31; and the House went into Committee of Supply.

There was a long discussion, on Tuesday, upon the constitution, powers, and responsibilities of the Board of Trade; a bill to secure and extend Ulster tenant-right in Ireland was introduced; the subject of the alteration of the standard applicable to children of outdoor paupers by the Education Department was debated—a motion condemnatory of the course pursued being rejected by 265 to 202; and Sir Edward Watkin introduced a bill to provide compensation to workpeople of joint-stock companies and private employers in cases of accident arising from causes beyond the control of the persons employed during the hours of lawful employment.

The afternoon's sitting on Wednesday was spent in discussing the Factory Act Amendment Bill, of which Mr. Mundella moved the second reading. Mr. Cross, on the part of the Government, proceeded to expound a scheme which the Government were prepared to introduce whereby the hours of labour would be reduced to fifty-six per week; that the hours for half-timers should be thirty-two hours a week; and that up to 1875 the age at which children might be permitted to work should be fixed at nine years and thereafter at ten. Mr. Mundella said he should keep his bill on the paper pending the introduction of the promised Government measure; and the debate was accordingly adjourned.

On Thursday the Speaker announced the receipt of the report of the Judge appointed to try the merits of the petition against the return of Messrs. Brown and Tighe for the county of Mayo, which report declared the said election to be null and void. A new writ was subsequently ordered to issue for a new election. The House was occupied during the greater portion of the evening with the consideration of motions relating to naval matters, previously to going into Committee of Supply upon the Navy Estimates.

The Ross and Monmouth Railway was opened for the first time yesterday week in its entirety.

Snow is reported to have fallen heavily in Perthshire and along the Grampian range. In the Strathpey district there have been severe storms of hail.

A meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday evening, at 8, Adelphi-terrace, when Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., M.P., was elected a vice-president.

The triennial conference of the Society for the Liberation of the Church from State Patronage was begun on Tuesday, at the City Terminus Hotel. The morning sitting was held under the presidency of Mr. Henry Richard, M.P., who gave an opening address. Various resolutions in support of the objects of the society were adopted; and, after a recess, the conference met again in the evening, when Sir Wilfrid Lawson, M.P., took the chair.

"THE PARTING."

A scene that might belong to some gentle love-story of old German chivalry, such as we may read in the pages of Tieck, or Fouqué, or Uhland, is delineated by Wilhelm Koller in this picture. The true and faithful knight, a virtuous servant of public duty, is about to depart for the wars, in the pure spirit of a devout Crusader. His horse is held by a page outside, where the comrades and followers of his martial journey await his coming forth. A tender, but resolute and cheerful, word of due farewell must be spoken to his grieving wife before he leaves the house. He has endeavoured to console her and to set her an example of courage. But the sight of her comfortless sorrow, which he must now leave, he fears, to grow still more painful in his long-expected absence, seems almost to have brought him down to equal sadness. Perhaps, like the brave fellow of whom our English young ladies sang in that once popular ballad, "The Soldier's Tear," this noble Freiherr of the romantic ages will presently be fain to wipe some drops of heart-water from his manly cheek and eyes. "Oh, do not deem him weak!" as the young ladies used to sing.

Go, watch the foremost ranks in battle's fierce career,
Be sure, the hand most valiant there has wiped away a tear!

Not a doubt of it; so did the heroes of the Iliad and the Æneid, if we trust the report of Homer and Virgil. The artist, Wilhelm Koller, is a native of Vienna, and about forty years of age. He studied at Düsseldorf, under Cornelius, Lessing, Bendemann, and Rethel. During some years, till 1859, he resided at Antwerp, but is now settled at Brussels, where his talent is fairly esteemed.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Mdlle. Albani has added another successful representation to those which had already secured her so high a position here. As Elvira in Saturday's performance of "I Puritani" she displayed those enhanced powers of which we have already spoken in noticing her three previous performances this season. The brilliant yet sympathetic quality of her voice, the exceptional beauty and high range of her upper notes, her facile execution of florid bravura passages, and the general grace and refinement which characterise her delivery even of the most declamatory scenes, were again admirably manifested in the several situations of the opera. The impression created in the duet with Giorgio in the first act was surpassed by that which followed the execution of Elvira's polacca, "Son vergin vezzosa," and this was exceeded by the demonstration that followed the scena, "Qui la voce," in which Mdlle. Albani's best powers and accomplishments were fully displayed. Here the singer achieved a perfect triumph, having been applauded to the echo and several times recalled by an audience that completely filled every part of the theatre. Signor Cotogni as Riccardo, and Signor Bagagiolo as Giorgio, contributed largely to the general effect of the opera, as did Signor Pavan (as Arturo) in the latter scenes thereof, his singing in which was far more satisfactory than in the earlier portions.

On Thursday week Signor Bolis repeated his performance as Manrico in "Il Trovatore," with the same success as that which attended his first impersonation of the part on the previous Saturday, as already noticed.

Yesterday (Friday) week "Faust" was given, with Mdlle. Smereschi as Margherita, in which this meritorious artist was fully as successful as during last season, the year of her debut. Signor Bagagiolo's Meisostefe was still more effective than heretofore, and the cast was efficiently completed by Mdlle. Scalchi as Siebel, Signor Nicolini as Faust, M. Maurel as Valentino, Signor Tagliafico as Wagner, &c.

The first two performances of this week were repetitions—on Monday "L'Africaine," and on Tuesday "I Puritani." For Thursday "Il Guarany" was announced, for Friday "Les Huguenots," and for to-night (Saturday) "Rigoletto," with the return of Signor Graziani.

The reappearance of Madame Adelina Patti is to take place on Tuesday next, in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia."

The second Floral Hall concert of the season will be given next Saturday, May 16.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The closing performances of last week, on Thursday and Saturday, consisted of repetitions of "Semiramide" and "Faust," cast as on the occasions recently noticed.

On Monday "Fidelio" was repeated, and on Tuesday "La Traviata" was given, with the first appearance in this country of Mdlle. Imogere Orelli as Violetta. Although favourably received and occasionally applauded (most so after the aria, "Ah! fors'è lui"), the lady made but little impression, and we must await further opportunity for estimating her powers and acquisitions. Signor Galassi as Germont, and Signor Fancelli as Alfredo, sang artistically, and contributed its best features to the performance.

"Les Huguenots" was announced for Thursday and "Norma" for to-night (Saturday).

An Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" is to be produced on Tuesday next, with the debut of Mdlle. Singelli as Catarina.

The forty-second season of the Sacred Harmonic Society came to a successful close yesterday (Friday) week, when a fine performance of "Naaman" was given, directed by the composer and the conductor of the society, Sir Michael Costa. The oratorio was to have been given earlier, but was voluntarily withheld by Sir M. Costa so as to allow of the production of Mr. G. A. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist" in March. The solo vocalists at the concert of last week now referred to were—Mesdames Otto-Alvleben and Patey, Mrs. Suter, Mr. Cummings, Mr. M. Smith, and Mr. Santley. Sir M. Costa was received with great applause by an audience that filled the hall.

That skilful pianist and clever composer Miss Agnes Zimmermann gave her annual evening concert, at the Hanover-square Rooms, on Thursday week, when her own performances were the chief features of the evening. These were heard in Schumann's solo pieces entitled "Carnaval" in Beethoven's sonata for piano and violoncello in G minor (with Herr Daubert), her own sonata for piano and violin (with Madame Norman-Néruda), and in Brahms's quartet with stringed instruments. Miss Sterling and Mr. Santley were the vocalists.

The annual series of summer concerts at the Crystal Palace began last Saturday, when the first of nine afternoon performances took place, with a programme consisting of German music, some of the forthcoming occasions being intended to be illustrative of the music of France, Italy, Russia, and the Scandinavian countries. Saturday's performances included Dr. Stainer's skilful organ-playing in a pedal fugue by Bach, one of whose chorales was sung by the Crystal Palace choir. Beethoven's symphony in A was finely rendered by the orchestra; and Mendelssohn's pianoforte concerto in G minor was played with great effect by Mdlle. Krebs. Part-songs were sung by the choir, and solos by Madame Otto-Alvleben and Herr Conrad Behrens, and the selection closed with a waltz.

by Lanner, the programme having been subdivided into five headings—"Music for the Church," "Music for the Concert-Room and Theatre," "Music for Home," "Popular and Patriotic National Songs," and "Music for the Ball-Room." The second concert will take place on May 23; to-day (Saturday) being appropriated to the great flower show of the season, and next Saturday to the visit of the Czar.

The third of this season's concerts of the Philharmonic Society took place on Monday evening, when the performances began with a fine overture by Spohr (in F), composed in 1821 expressly for the society, and still remaining in manuscript. The other orchestral pieces were Beethoven's "Eroica" symphony, Sir W. Sterndale Bennett's overture, "Paradise and the Peri," and that by Mendelssohn to "Ruy Blas." Herr Straus played the violin concerto of Max Bruch (previously performed by him at a Philharmonic concert in 1868), and vocal solos were contributed by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington.

The third New Philharmonic concert (the second of the afternoon performances) took place on Saturday, when Sir Julius Benedict's symphony in G minor was repeated, with the same success that attended its first performance at the previous concert. M. Duvernoy executed with much brilliancy Mendelssohn's first pianoforte concerto and two unaccompanied solos; and the remaining instrumental pieces consisted of the overture to "Ruy Blas," by the composer, just named, and a new overture, entitled "Otto der Schütz," by Herr Rudorff, which was favourably received. Mdlles. Smeroschi and Nita Gaetano were the vocalists.

Herr Pauer has begun a new series of his interesting historical performances of pianoforte music at the Hanover-square Rooms. The programme of his first matinée, on Monday, comprised pieces by Scarlatti, Bach, Mozart, Beethoven, Hummel, Schubert, Mendelssohn, and Heller.

The fourteenth season of Mr. Charles Hallé's pianoforte recitals was to begin yesterday (Friday) at St. James's Hall. The programme comprised a pianoforte trio by Gernsheim, a nocturno (trio) by Schubert, Brahms's pianoforte quartet in A, Beethoven's solo sonata, "Les Adieux," and detached pieces by Bach. Madame Norman-Néruda was the violinist, and Herr Franz Néruda the violoncellist.

Among the concerts of the week have been those of Miss Purdy, and Herr and Madame Sauerbrey, both the ladies being favourably known as vocalists, and the gentleman as a pianist and conductor.

The annual performance of "The Messiah" by the Royal Society of Musicians was to take place at St. James's Hall yesterday (Friday) evening, when the solo vocalists announced were Mesdames Otto-Alvæben and Patey, Misses Blanche Cole, Severn, and Maudsley, Mr. Guy and Mr. Cummings.

The sixth and last concert of the second season of the Wagner Society (postponed from April 10) is to take place on Wednesday next.

The sudden death of Signor Mongini (which occurred at Milan a few days ago) has deprived the lyric stage of one of the most eminent tenors of modern times. He was endowed with a voice of superb quality, with a rare command of the extreme high chest-notes (including the C sharp, as often displayed in the great trio in Rossini's "Tell"). His style was unequal; sometimes singing finely, at others he gave cause for regret that such great natural gifts were not coupled with more assiduous and continuous study.

THEATRES.

Many playgoers will hear with satisfaction that the St. James's was reopened on Saturday. The new manager is Mr. Francis Fairlie, of provincial celebrity. He has begun his season with spirit, reviving a meritorious play of the late Mr. T. W. Robertson, entitled "Progress," an adaptation from the French of M. Victorien Sardou, remarkable for brilliancy of dialogue and novelty of plot. Mr. Fairlie himself acts in the piece, and, as the representative of Mr. John Bunthorne, deservedly wins the applause of the audience. The revived comedy was followed by an opéra bouffe, an adaptation by Messrs. Herman and Richard Mansell, of Offenbach's "Vert-Vert." This piece is very slight in structure and motive, and was incompetently acted. Mdlle. Manetti, who made her first appearance in this country, and sings with grace, and Mdlle. Savelli, who shows great talent, must be exempted from the general censure. The scenery by Mr. Julian Hicks is good, and the dancing of the Orpheon troupe from Vienna and Berlin vigorous; but the whole affair must be revised and re-rehearsed, and that effectually, if "Vert-Vert" is to have the chance of living on an English stage.

Mr. Toole appeared at the Globe on Saturday morning, in the part of Caleb Plummer, and realised, probably, all that Dickens intended by the character. The version used is that of Mr. Dion Bouicault, called "Dot," which perhaps arranges the incidents in the best form for stage-representation. Mr. Toole was well assisted by the performers of the other characters. These farewell performances of Mr. Toole, previous to his departure for America, are warmly patronised.

Miss Soldene is adding to her laurels at the Opéra Comique in the character of Mlle. Lange, one of the leading heroines of the apparently most popular of modern operas, "La Fille de Madame Angot," the Saturday morning performances of which have proved very attractive. Miss Beesy Emmett, as Clairette, shares the honours of the occasion. With bright scenery and dresses and an efficient band, these performances are likely to prove extremely popular.

The pleasing comedy of "The Little Treasure" has been revived at the Royalty, with Miss Augusta Wilton as the heroine, who performs with much grace, and effectually secures the sympathies of the audience.

A new version of "East Lynne" has been produced at the Standard. The drama consists of five acts, and goes well with the audience. Mrs. Charles Viner, as Lady Isabel Carlyle, acted with well-practised skill, as well as with natural pathos. She produced some marked effects without apparent effort, and, we may add, was efficiently supported by the other artistes.

Mr. John Lucas, the well-known portrait-painter, died, on Thursday week, in his sixty-seventh year; and Mr. Frederick Pellatt, to whom the glass manufacture of this country is much indebted for the rapid progress which it has lately made, died on the 30th ult., aged sixty-seven.

The labour market is still in a most disturbed state. While the strikes of miners have at some places come to a close, the men going in at a reduction of 10 per cent in their rate of wages, a gigantic strike has begun in Durham, 25,000 colliers having struck work rather than submit to a reduction of 10 per cent on their earnings. But on Thursday, delegates representing 216 collieries being present, at Durham, it was carried by a large majority that the masters' terms should be accepted. There does not appear any sign of a settlement of the dispute between the farmers and the labourers in the eastern counties.

THE BENGAL FAMINE RELIEF FLEET.

Among the efforts made by the British Indian Government to relieve the distress from the failure of the crops in Bengal, there are special arrangements for inland water transport of rice and grain up the rivers and canals of that country. One of the earliest acts of the Marquis of Salisbury, Secretary of State for India, as soon as he took office, was to contract for the speedy construction of a small fleet of iron barges and steam-tugs, of very light draught, for this purpose. His Lordship, on Feb. 24, gave orders to Messrs. J. and G. Rennie, of Blackfriars and Greenwich, for the building of six steamers and five barges, while Messrs. Hamilton, of Liverpool, were ordered to build four steamers, from the designs of Messrs. Rennie. The whole fleet, ten steamers and five barges, have been completed and put on board the powerful steam-ship Duke of Buccleuch, which left the Thames on Thursday week, and will proceed to India by the Suez Canal, arriving at Calcutta, probably, by June 1, in time for the opening of the Bengal inland navigation.

In designing these vessels regard has been had to the shallowness of the waters they will have to navigate, and to their rapid transport from this country to Calcutta. They are, therefore, of very light draught, and are built in four sections, each section having a water-tight bulkhead. They were put together here with bolts in a temporary manner for trial, and were afterwards taken apart and shipped in sections for India. The steamers are precisely similar in every respect, so that a description of one suffices for all. Taking, then, the one first launched and officially inspected, she is 90 ft. in length, 14 ft. in breadth, 5 ft. 6 in. in depth, and with a draught of 2 ft. 9 in. when fully equipped with coal, &c., and carrying a load of 21 tons of rice; carrying 27 tons of rice, her draught will be increased to 3 ft. She is, of course, iron built, and is divided into four independent compartments, as already observed. The forward compartment contains cabin accommodation for the crew, and also affords considerable hold space. The second section is devoted entirely to hold space, in the third are the engines and boiler, while the fourth is wholly for stowage. The holds are all furnished with hatchways and tarpaulins, the latter being specially suited for the Indian climate. The engine-room is open, but can be covered in when required, a light iron framework being provided to carry the covering. The steamer is propelled by twin screws, each screw being 3 ft. in diameter and 6 ft. pitch. Each screw is driven direct by its own independent horizontal engine, having a 12-in. cylinder with 10-in. stroke, the pair indicating 100-horse power. Steam is supplied from a short horizontal tubular boiler, and the working pressure is 60 lb. per square inch.

In dimensions and build the barges correspond with the steamers, but, of course, are without engines, as they are to be towed by the steamers. They are to carry 50 tons of grain at 2 ft. 9 in. draught, and 60 tons at 3 ft. draught. All the vessels are so arranged that they can be put together and got ready for work within a few days after their arrival in India.

The first of the steamers launched by Messrs. Rennie had her contractors' trial on the 4th ult. Upon that trip, which was down the river, with her engines running at 250 revolutions per minute, she developed a speed of nine miles per hour, indicating 100-horse power, and in every way gave perfect satisfaction. On the 11th ult. the Secretary of State and Council for India made an official inspection of this steamer, in several short runs between Westminster and London Bridges. There were present on board the Marquis of Salisbury, Sir R. Montgomery, Sir W. Baker, Sir Thomas Piers, Sir A. Cotton, the Hon. G. C. Talbot, General Strachey, and Mr. Ritherdon, Surveyor of Shipping to the Secretary of State for India, with Messrs. J. and G. Rennie, the designers and builders. The vessel had on board 12 tons of ballast, with which her mean draught was 2 ft. 6 in. During her runs a boiler pressure of 60 lb. per square inch was steadily maintained, the revolutions of her engines averaging 220 per minute. Her speed was very good, and she proved herself exceedingly handy, readily answering both her rudder and her screws. The short and intermittent runs prevented her power being indicated; but both power and speed were points satisfactorily demonstrated at the contractors' trial. The build and arrangement of the vessel and the results of her working met with the expressed approval of those who inspected her upon this occasion.

It is not to be supposed that the work of the little famine fleet will be concluded when its mission of mercy is ended. There are many purposes to which these vessels are applicable, and to which they will be put as soon as their present object has been effected. They will probably then enter upon a wide field of usefulness, and will solve important questions of internal transport now under consideration. In fact, the opinion was expressed that the present vessels would possibly form the pioneers in India of a very large number of their class. However that may be, there can be but one wish, that their first mission may be speedily and satisfactorily accomplished.

THE EASTERN MONARCH.

This fine ship, the first of the fleet belonging to the Royal Exchange Shipping Company (Limited), has been lying in the South-West India Docks taking in her cargo for Canterbury, New Zealand, with 520 emigrant passengers. She is the largest iron sailing-ship ever built at Sunderland. Her builders were Messrs. Mounsey and Foister, of that port. The dimensions of the ship are—Length over all, 270 ft.; breadth, 40 ft. 6 in.; depth, 23 ft. 6 in.; carrying capacity, 3200 tons. She was built under special survey, and is registered in the highest class at Lloyd's. Her shape being one of the finest model, she will have great sailing speed. She is furnished with all the best appliances for working the ship—steam-engines, steam-winch, and condenser. There is saloon accommodation for twenty-five first-class passengers, with every comfort and luxury. The fittings and furniture are of oak, walnut, rosewood, and bird's-eye maple, with gilding. The Eastern Monarch, under the command of Captain Donaldson, is expected to make the passage to Port Lyttelton, Canterbury, in seventy days. At the same time, the New Zealand Shipping Company, by whom she is dispatched, are sending out vessels to Otago, Wellington, Auckland, Napier, and Southland, the other chief provinces of New Zealand.

A service of plate, valued at £10,000, has been manufactured for the King of Siam by Messrs. Elkington and Co. The design is after a style peculiar to Siam, and may be indicated by a brief description of the centrepiece. This represents the three-headed sacred elephant, bearing basins for floral decorations, the Royal arms being at the base, and a couple of Siamese standard-bearers standing on the plateau.

Lord F. Cavendish presided, on Thursday week, at a meeting to prepare the constitution and elect the board of governors for the York College of Science, to be inaugurated at Leeds in the early autumn. It was agreed that the objects of the college should be the following:—The supply of instructions in those sciences which are applicable to the manufacturing, engineering, mining, and agricultural classes of Yorkshire; also in such arts and languages as are cognate to the foregoing purposes.

THE DERELICT FRENCH STEAMER.

The French Transatlantic Steam-Ship Company has been unfortunate of late with its fine fleet of ships. The disaster of the Ville du Havre, on Nov. 23, with the loss of 226 lives, will long be a topic of mournful remembrance. The Europe, belonging to the same line, foundered at sea on the 3rd ult., but all her passengers and crew were saved. Eleven days after this misadventure a third one of the French company's ships, the Amérique, was abandoned by her crew, within a hundred miles of Brest, in apparent danger of sinking. She had encountered a violent storm that day, after a good run from New York, which she left on the 4th. Her passengers numbered 83, and her crew 152. Three vessels—an English, a Norwegian, and an Italian—were near enough for her signals of distress. They took off all the persons who were on board, except the second officer, M. Garay, who alone was drowned. The removal of the crew and passengers was effected in good order, in spite of a tremendously high sea. The Italian and Norwegian vessels, with 218 persons saved from the Amérique, soon arrived at Brest. The English vessel brought eighteen others to Plymouth. A steamer was sent out to look for the derelict, which was found still afloat and adrift, and was towed to the above-named port. The Devonport dockyard authorities, by order of Admiral Sir William King Hall, gave their assistance. The Admiralty steam-tugs, Carron and Scotia, were sent alongside the Amérique, lying in the harbour. Hand-pumps and a steam fire-engine were put on board, and were kept at work on Sunday week during many hours; but the quantity of water in the vessel did not seem to be lessened. It was therefore directed that she should be removed into shallower water, and there grounded. For this purpose she was next day taken in tow by the harbour steamer, Sir Francis Drake, and the two steam-tugs, which led her into the creek of Catwater. There, at low tide, she grounded in the mud, but floated again at high tide. It was proposed to take out her cargo, but the agent of the French company, who had come to Plymouth, did not think this needful. The water having been pumped out, an examination was made by Mr. Leslie, ship-builder, of Newcastle, with Messrs. Converse and Colombe, marine engineers, of Paris. They found no leak whatever in the hull. The water had got into the vessel by several valves accidentally or carelessly left open, one of which had been tied open with a bit of rope. The cargo was not much damaged.

The officers and crew were then summoned from France by telegraph. They reassembled at Plymouth, where the Amérique had undergone some refitting, and had had her boilers cleaned. On Saturday last, after being inspected by Lloyd's surveyors and found seaworthy, she left Plymouth for Havre, to prepare for another Atlantic trip.

WILHELM VON KAULBACH.

Notwithstanding the ungenerous sneer of Ingres that Kaulbach was but an indigestion of Michael Angelo, we are disposed to regard him as the greatest monumental painter of modern times. His art has living as well as ideal interest; his conceptions range from the homeliest, broadest humour to the loftiest and most epical abstractions.

The late Director of the Munich Academy (whose death we have already recorded) was born in 1805, at Arolsen, in Waldeck. His father, who was a goldsmith by trade, and also an engraver and painter, early destined his son to be a painter; but the young Kaulbach did not, strange to say, at first manifest a liking for art. His childhood, owing to his father's embarrassments, is said to have been unhappy, and to have laid the foundation for his satirical humour and a degree of misanthropy. He, however, learnt drawing under his father, and a book of engravings illustrating the dramas of Schiller, which fell into his hands, is stated to have decided his vocation. In 1822 he was sent to the Academy of Düsseldorf, where he became a pupil of Cornelius. Being engaged to paint in the chapel of the hospital for the insane in Düsseldorf, he made studies from the inmates of the hospital, from which he afterwards (in 1828-9) produced his famous "Irrenhaus," or madhouse. Till he indulged in the audacious realism of this work Kaulbach was a docile follower of his austere idealist master, Cornelius, at whose request he was invited to assist in executing a great series of frescoes at Munich. Accordingly he went to Munich in 1825, where he painted six symbolic figures in the open arcade on the west side of the Hofgarten; also some of the earliest works in the revived art of fresco, "Apollo with the Muses" (in encaustic) on the ceiling of the Odéon; several designs on the walls of the Glyptothek; and, subsequently, a series of frescoes in the new palace of the art-loving King Ludwig, drawn from the story of "Cupid and Psyche," together with illustrations (in the Queen's apartments) of Klopstock, Goethe, and Wieland, in which last-named works his style became more independent. At this early period he also diligently studied our Hogarth, and caught some of his spirit, as evinced in illustrations to Schiller's "Criminal from Lost Honour," Goethe's "Faust," and other works. Still, however, his attention was mainly directed to poetic subjects. In 1837, when he had released himself from pupillage, appeared the famous "Hunnenschlacht," or Battle of the Huns, a subject suggested by Von Klenze, the architect, from an old ballad, in which the spirits of the Hunnish heroes, whose bodies lie slain under the walls of Rome, are represented as continuing the warfare in the air. This work is certainly one of the greatest achievements of modern art. In the following winter were produced the remarkable designs for the engraver, illustrative of Goethe's "Reineke Fuchs," or Reynard the Fox; the splendid group of "Bedouins," and the first sketch for "The Fall of Jerusalem," afterwards painted in oil on a colossal scale for the King of Bavaria, and placed in the Pinacothek of Munich. The artist gives full play to his imagination in this famous composition, the historical event being combined with many symbolical adjuncts. The five prophets who foretold the fall of the Temple appear above as Titus plants the Roman eagle on the high altar, while the future triumph of Christianity is indicated by angels conducting the Christians from the doomed city.

The artist's reputation throughout Germany now led to his being invited to Berlin to decorate the entrance-hall of the new museum with the great works in stereochrome, which constitute his capo d'opera. Kaulbach began this gigantic epic of the world's history in 1847. The first subject completed was the vast painting of "The Tower of Babel," the (full-size) cartoon for which was exhibited at the Leeds Exhibition of Art Treasures. Two other of the principal compositions are reproductions by himself and his pupils of "The Battle of the Huns" and "The Destruction of Jerusalem." The remaining principal compartments treat of "The Prime of Greece," "The Crusades," and "The Reformation." These compositions are connected and their significance extended by colossal figures, historical and mythological, by monochrome paintings of remarkable events, by painted ornamental, architectural, and arabesque divisions, and by an arabesque frieze surmounting the whole, in which the history depicted below is, as it were, recapitulated in a most fanciful, graceful manner, through the medium of amorini. The summer months of several years were devoted to this great task, but during the winter months (when mural painting had to be discontinued) he was not idle. In the winters of those years he returned to Munich and executed a series of wall paintings in the Pinacothek, representing the history of art since the Renaissance. Nor did these Titanic labours prevent Kaulbach executing a multitude of portraits, designs, and illustrations to divers works, among which we may name a folio edition of the Gospels and the plays of Shakspeare. To the Paris Universal Exhibition of 1867 he sent a remarkable picture, "The Epoch of the Reformation," for which he was awarded a médaille d'honneur. Kaulbach was decorated with many orders, was a member of several academies, a corresponding member of the French Institute, and an officer of the Legion of Honour.

The greater number of his works have been engraved, some on a very large scale. We may specially cite the engraving of "The Destruction of Jerusalem," by Wagen and Merz, which occupied eight years. Many fine and well-known sets of photographs from Kaulbach's works have likewise been published.

For depth of thought, fertility of invention, alternate grandeur and humour—genial or satirical—and beauty of execution, Kaulbach is unquestionably the first of German mural painters. He solved the difficult problem of uniting ideality with naturalism; he is vigorous, yet correct; his design is pure and beyond reproach, except, perhaps, for its tendency to grandiose exaggeration; and his colouring is far superior to that of the average of German wall-painters. We need hardly add that qualities so diverse are very rarely united.

The portrait of Kaulbach is from a photograph supplied by Mr. F. Bruckmann, Henrietta-street, Covent-garden.

ADVENTURES IN MOROCCO AND A JOURNEY THROUGH THE OASIS OF DRAA AND TAFILLET. By Dr. GERHARD ROHLFS. Gold Medalist of the Royal Geographical Society. Edited by WINWOOD READE. In 1 vol., demy 8vo. Map, and Portrait of the Author, cloth extra, 12s. [This day.]

Extract from Mr. Winwood Reade's Introduction:—"Many books have been written on Morocco, but their authors for the most part have merely acquainted with Mogadore and Tangier. Gerhard Rohlfs adopted the garb and religion of the Moors, entered as surgeon the service of the Sultan, resided at Fez, explored the Atlas, visited the oases of the desert, and enjoyed the warm friendship of the Grand Sheriff. . . . Of all those countries Morocco, though the nearest, is the least known; and this work, describing the adventures of a pseudo-romance, contains many curious and valuable facts, and will, it may be hoped, prove interesting to the public."

THE OCEAN; Its Tides and Currents and their Causes. By WILLIAM LEIGHTON JORDAN, F.R.S.

"A very valuable addition to the list of works advancing our comprehension of the ocean."—Scientific Review.

"The author of this book gives us a new Principle. Still the book is the production of one who is well up in his own subject and many others collateral with it. It is one that may be safely commended to the study of all who are interested in the subject of ocean currents."—Ivan.

"Here we have the valuable point of Dr. Carpenter's modified resuscitation of the old theory of oceanic circulation clearly indicated, and a home-thrust of clear, sound reasoning fairly delivered through it. As this point is the very heart of Dr. Carpenter's contribution to the subject, the theory is fatal. It is followed by further and equally clear and able discussion of the details of Dr.

Carpenter's arguments, and of the theories of Murray, Bennedict, Herschel, &c. This Chapter XX. of Mr. Jordan's book is really excellent, and worthy of careful reading."—Quarterly Journal of Science.

The reports received from H.M.S. Challenger are confirming the views expressed in this work with a distinctness exceeding the most anguished anticipations of the Author.

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE. PULVERMACH'S PATENT. GALVANIC CHAIN-BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, &c. RECENTLY IMPROVED.

Approved by the Academy of Medicine at Paris and other Medical authorities in England and abroad. This Self-Applicable Electric Cure is of an efficacy vastly superior to all other external remedies. Owing to the physiological, physical, and chemical effects of the Electricity they gently and permanently impart into the system, these appliances exercise an internal action, promoting the digestion, circulation, and nutrition, thereby assisting Nature in her efforts to restore the normal balance of health and vigour in a debilitated constitution. Hence the remarkable cures they daily effect in cases of Rheumatism, Head & Tooth Ache, Epilepsy, Indigestion, Liver Complaint, General and Local Debility, Paralysis, Nervous Deafness, after all other remedies have failed, and thus popularising Electricity in accordance with the scientific conclusions in the medical and scientific press. Recent improvements in these appliances by the inventor render their self-application extremely comfortable and effective, and thus remediate former inconveniences. Medical and scientific extracts, and a selection of the daily increasing number of Testimonials, together with Price-List, are embodied in pamphlet, "Nature's Chief Restorer of Impaired Vital Energy," sent post-free on application to the sole inventor and Patentee, J. L. PULVERMACH, GALVANIC ESTABLISHMENT, 124, REGENT-STREET, LONDON, W.

NEW MUSIC.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM, solid dark Oak Case, by Alexandra. Price
FOUR GUINEAS. This Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. Alexandra have been enabled to make this a marvel of cheapness, elegance, and good quality of tone. It will be found invaluable for small class-rooms, cottages, or library.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM
(Registered), with celeste stop; compact, four octaves; price FIVE

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM
(Registered), compact, five octaves;
price FIVE GUINEAS.
Manufactured expressly for
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-
GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM, with TWO ROWS OF KEYS, four-feet and eight-feet tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 5 octaves, F to F. The combined keyboards have a compass of 40 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made. CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S NEW ORGAN MODEL.
Two Rows of Keys: Knees Pedal to swell for upper row; five feet; four-feet, eight-feet, and sixteen feet tone (sub-bass), adapted for Church or Drawing-Room. The a-p-p-a-r-a-n-c-e is elegant and the tone round and full. Price—Oak, 25 gu.; Rosewood or Walnut, 30 gu.
CHAPPELL and CO., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PORTABLE
AMERICAN ORGAN, with automatic swell, compact four

CRAMERS' THREE YEARS' SYSTEM of HIRE, by which the Pianoforte, American Organ, Harmonium, Organ, or Harp becomes the property of the hiree, though partially adopted by others, is carried out on a thoroughly large and liberal scale only by themselves.

CRAMER and CO. cannot too frequently repeat that their Three Years' System of Hiring Pianoforte is not confined to those of their own manufacture, although they are as good as any, and better than most,
but includes instruments by all the eminent manufacturers, BROADWOOD, COLLARD, EWARD, and KIRKMAN, of whose Pianofortes Cramer and Co. have always in stock a very extensive and complete selection, ready to be sent out at any time.

BROADWOOD'S PIANOFORTES.

HIRE at the usual rates—Pianoforte Gallery, 507 and 508, Regent-street, W.

CRAMERS' HARMONIUMS.—Some years since Cramer and Co. found it necessary, on account of the French difficulties, as well as the advances made in music by their own factory. The best hands having been engaged and their operations greatly extended, Cramer and Co. now call special attention to the Harmoniums, which, among many other advantages, offer a most effective, as well as a greater variety of tone, and a larger number of speaking stops, at a price much below that of all other eminent makers. Specifications and estimates of special instruments, with any required combination of stops, furnished on application. The Three Years' System originated by Cramer, and since adopted by other firms, is applied to all classes of instruments of Cramer's manufacture, and is carried out on a thoroughly large and liberal scale only by themselves.

RUSSIAN BRIDAL SONG and the

THE LATE MR. OWEN JONES, DECORATIVE ARTIST.

BOMBARDMENT OF FORT MASNAAH, GULF OF OMAN.

THE LATE MR. OWEN JONES.

The death of this eminent professor of decorative art, which took place a fortnight ago, has been noticed in our Journal. Mr. Owen Jones, who was born in Wales in 1809, early showed a talent for art, and became a pupil of Mr. Lewis Vulliamy, the architectural designer and decorator. After studying under him, Mr. Jones made a tour of four years in Egypt and the Levant. In 1834 he was in Spain, where he made a thorough examination and study of the Alhambra. He then began, with M. Gourey, a French artist and antiquary, a work of great value upon this subject. This work, entitled "Plans, Elevations, Sections, and Details of the Alhambra," with an historical notice by M. Pascual de Gayangos, appeared in parts. The publication, began in 1836, was completed in 1845. The work was carried on, after the death of M. Gourey, by Mr. Owen Jones, who devoted himself to the task not only of drawing the details, but of printing in colours the plates when they were prepared. In 1842 appeared "Designs for Mosaic and Tessellated Pavements." In 1846 "The Polychromatic Ornament of Italy" was issued, comprising examples of frescoes and decorative works of the sixteenth century. Mr. Jones had prepared a plan for the decoration of the pavements of the Houses of Parliament which attracted great attention. His knowledge and activity were shown in many ways. He was appointed a superintendent of the works for the Great Exhibition, 1851, and took part in the decoration and arrangement of the building. The principles of decorative design associated with his name were comprehensively declared in an essay, entitled "An Attempt to Define the Principles which Regulate the Employment of Colour in Decorative Arts," 1852. He brought the principles thus described before the public in lectures delivered at various places, and became the chief authority in works of the kind. In 1852 he was appointed director for the decoration of the Crystal Palace, and, with Sir D. Wyatt, visited most of the fine examples of ancient decoration on the Continent. In the course of these journeys the greater part of the casts and other reproductions in the Crystal Palace were collected. He designed the decorations for the Egyptian, Greek, Roman, and Alhambra Courts in the palace, and superintended the decoration of the whole building. These works caused much controversy, and the artist published an "Apology" for what he had produced. These tasks occupied about three years. In conjunction with Messrs. G. Scharf and J. Bonomi, he produced handbooks to the Egyptian, Greek, and Roman Courts at Sydenham. The Alhambra Court, on which he wrote the handbook, is, as might be expected, his masterpiece. Besides the works above named, he produced, in 1847, a second edition of the "Alhambra," with 101 plates. In 1856 his elaborate "Grammar of Ornament" was issued; it still remains a text-book of examples. In 1864 came "1001 Initial Letters," and, in the same year, "702 Monograms." Mr. Jones's last important publication was "Examples of Chinese Ornament," 1867.

The Portrait of Mr. Owen Jones is from a photograph by Messrs. Watkins and Haigh, of Regent-street, but one which was taken some years ago. His appearance was latterly changed by advancing life.

BOMBARDMENT OF MASNAAH.

Two vessels of the Royal Navy, H.M.S. Rifleman and H.M.S. Philomel, with the Hugh Rose, a vessel of the Bombay Marine service, were engaged, on March 27, in reducing the fort of Masnaah, on the Batinah coast of the Gulf of Oman, fifty miles from Muscat, a province of South-East Arabia. The fort and district of Masnaah belong to Syud Tourkie, the Sultan of Muscat, but had lately been seized by a rebel chief named Ibrahim bin Kais, a brother of the late Sultan. His followers plundered the goods of some British subjects at Masnaah, and killed one Banyan, or trader from Bombay. Lieutenant-Colonel Ross, the British Political Resident on the shores of the Persian Gulf, demanded satisfaction, and required Ibrahim bin Kais to quit Masnaah. This he refused to do. The Resident then asked Commander R. M. Gillson, the senior officer of our naval squadron, to enforce the demand. The Hugh Rose was placed at his disposal to aid the two gun-vessels of the squadron, and was manned by seamen under Sub-Lieutenant H. G. Grey, to work her 10-inch gun. The three vessels arrived off Masnaah, with Lieutenant-Colonel Ross and Major S. P. Miles on board. They anchored in front of the fort, about 600 yards distant. The fort, constructed by the Portuguese at the beginning of the seventeenth century, was a large square building, with four massive towers, mounting several heavy guns. Ibrahim bin Kais had four or five hundred men in the fort, and did not believe that the ships would be able to destroy it. Some days were spent in negotiations, messages and letters passing to and fro. At length, on the 27th the ships opened fire on the fort with double shell, making excellent practice, from a quarter past one in the afternoon to half-past three. The garrison surrendered, having already run short of provisions, so that they could not have maintained a defence. One shell from the Philomel struck the flagstaff tower and brought down a large portion. No damage was done to the village. This example at Masnaah will have a beneficial effect on all the disorderly tribes of the coast. We have to thank two officers—Navigating Lieutenant G. L. Ralph, of the Philomel, and Sub-Lieutenant H. G. Grey, of the Rifleman—for sketches of the scene and the action.

The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland received deputations, yesterday week, from the Irish Rifle Association and the Royal Horticultural Society. His Grace promised to present a cup to the former, and to become the patron of the latter.

A May-Day festival took place, yesterday week, in the Mechanics' Large Hall, Nottingham, decorated in the old English May-Day fashion, and a concert was given by 500 children, who in the course of the evening crowned a little girl Queen of the May.

A banquet was given, on Thursday week, by the inhabitants of Portsmouth and Gosport to the soldiers, sailors, and marines from the Gold Coast on the Governor's Green, where a spacious tent and marquee had been erected, which were tastefully decorated. The Mayor presided.

The tenant-farmers occupying land belonging to Mr. Christie M.P. for Lewes, have received the following notice from his steward:—"I am directed by Mr. Christie, your landlord, to inform you that the game and rabbits on your land all belong to you, and that no one has a right to shoot over it without your permission."

The ancient custom of singing a Latin hymn on the top of Magdalen College tower, Oxford, on May morning was duly honoured on the 1st inst., at five o'clock, by the choir, under the direction of Mr. Parratt, the organist. Upwards of 120 persons were admitted to be present at the ceremony, among them being Prince Leopold; and in the street below there was an immense concourse of spectators. After the hymn had been sung a merry peal was rung on the bells.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

SECOND NOTICE.

Place aux dames! In justice as well as courtesy we should hardly delay longer in inviting attention to Miss E. Thompson's "Calling the Roll after an Engagement, Crimea" (142). As the virtual debut of a young lady, this is one of the most remarkable pictures within our recollection. We say "debut" because, although we have in our reviews of some other recent exhibitions lauded for their great spirit works by this artist of a sketchy character, more or less, this is her first finished oil picture of importance, so far as we remember. In every way it is a surprise. The subject is about the very last which we should expect from a female pencil; yet by force of imaginative sympathy the terrible havoc of war is realised with a vraisemblance that could only be expected from an eye-witness; and, so far from betraying any signs of technical immaturity or feminine weakness, it borders on hardness in its completeness, and is almost too painful in its reality, though quite free from sensational horrors. The scene is laid in the snow—tintured with blood in the foreground. A sergeant passes down the ranks of a company of grenadiers thinned by a recent battle, followed by a mounted officer, whose mingled expression of exhaustion, compassion, and fortitude is very finely conceived. The men are eager to respond as their numbers are called, though several are severely wounded. But one poor fellow has fallen dead even at the muster; a comrade feels in vain for the beating of his heart; another wounded man sickens at the sight; one near him stares at vacancy, frenzied by a wound in the head; another binds up his bleeding hand: the hardy veteran and the raw recruit, the sickly and the strong, the insensible and the impressionable, are there; but all are still stanch, and each is an admirable study of character and expression. In the distance the enemy is seen in disordered retreat.

M. Alma Tadema sends a large and important example of his ingenuity in rehabilitating the classic past, representing the interior of a Roman collector's "Picture Gallery" (157). Some of the collector's friends are inspecting a panel picture on an easel—one of the encaustic paintings, let us suppose, of Pausanias or Nicias, so much prized by rich Roman connoisseurs. A fervid-looking youth, seated in an ebony chair with ivory inlays, scrutinises the work closely; an older man examines it more deliberately, and a handsome young lady forgets to toy with her fan as she gazes at it with less critical admiration. The proprietor stands behind, gallantly offering some remark to the lady; two other friends inspect the paintings on the walls. The idea of the picture, apart from the guise in which it is presented, is trite enough. The technical merits, and they are great and original, are the artistic tone and harmony of warm, broken tertiary hues, the dexterous and exact imitation of textures, and the skilful lighting, which, however, secures hardly sufficient rotundity to the figures to relieve them with due relative value from the multifarious details of background and accessories. With all respect for M. Tadema's archaeological learning, we doubt whether the tesserae of the pavement are not of too common a kind for the situation, and whether there is authority for the satin of the lady's footstool. The collector in the picture is a portrait of M. Gambart; and this, with a companion work of a sculptor's studio, containing portraits of the artist and his family (which has been sent to the Paris Salon), are said to have been painted for M. Gambart's villa at Nice, as a memento of long subsisting business relations. M. Tadema's not less familiar acquaintance with Egyptian antiquities, and also his tendency to eccentricity, are shown in a small picture of "Joseph, Overseer of Pharaoh's Granaries" (300). Joseph stretches his arm out, holding his staff of office in a very peculiar attitude as he sits on a curious rush-woven chair or throne, that seems barely worthy of the high station to which he was elevated. A scribe stoops at his side reading a papyrus-list of the stores, with samples of various kinds of grain spread on a cloth before him. This design is overcrowded with Egyptian devices, patterns, and decorations in violation of pictorial requirements.

Another of the most remarkable pictures of the year is "Applicants for Admission to a Casual Ward" (504), by Mr. Fildes. A greater contrast to that gay boating scene which first brought this artist into notice it would be difficult to imagine. Huddled for the most part against the wall by the workhouse door, dimly seen through dismal yellow fog and bitter driving sleet and alush of snow, are a series of types of the most abject forms of London misery, whether arising from misfortune, crime, sickness, drunkenness, or ignorance. There are the hungry, cold, and seedy yet half-respectable adventurer listening to the directions of a good-natured policeman; the bloated sot propping himself up in brutalised stolidity; the young widow, or female outcast, hastening for shelter with her babe and a little weeping toddler at her side; the out-of-work artisan, with a large family hanging about him and his broken-hearted wife; the ruffian gartotter or ticket-of-leave burglar cowering in the shadow; the starveling cad, with his staring eyes and hydrocephalic head; the professional beggar, with his crutch and red coat;—"Dumb, wet, silent horrors," as Dickens styled them; "Sphinxes set up against that dead wall, and none likely to be at the pains of solving them." Some exaggeration there may be in this representation as a whole, but it is essentially true in its elements. There may be something theatrical and melodramatic in the mise en scene, the execution may betray an approach to flippancy which we would rather not see in the work of so young a painter, yet the originality, vigour, and fidelity of the conception, the suggestiveness of the manipulation, and the "keeping" preserved in the peculiar effect are beyond question or cavil. All honour to the artist also for his courage in dealing, undeterred by its repulsiveness, with a subject in the sad moral of which we are all more or less deeply implicated. Since the days of Hogarth, the scope of art as a moral teacher has been very imperfectly understood and practised among us.

"The Adoration of the Magi" might seem at first mention to be one of the tritest of themes, and one of those most frequently conventionalised. Something more, however, than the mediæval and renaissance painters give us should be expected from the application of modern research, knowledge, and intelligence. These Mr. Herbert has brought to bear in No. 308, together with an apparent earnestness of conception resembling the most ascetic exaltation of the early painters. The result is that in his version the event has a new aspect. It is a moonlight scene; so that the magi may be supposed to have never for a moment lost the guidance of the star in the East. The magi themselves are costumed not arbitrarily, but in ancient Persian garments; their offerings assume more special symbolic forms and meanings, as set forth in the catalogue; the adoration and presentation take place at the mouth of the cave, beneath the present Church of the Nativity, and the outlook thence presents the actual topography of the country with the isolated mount on which stood Herod's palace-fortress, the Herodium, and the range of Moabite mountains. There are, however, strange disproportions in the figures, and the colours are surely too positive for moonlight, even in the East. We confess we greatly prefer the small replica of "The Sower of Good Seed" (431), with its expressive figure and brilliant landscape, with sunny effect so full of fair harvest promise; and the water-colour drawing of "Christ and the Woman of Samaria" (798), with its equally brilliant and beautiful landscape.

Mr. Leighton's primary aim in art, unlike that of most painters of our school, seems to be a decorative one. He shrinks fastidiously from all the rougher, ruder actualities of life and nature. He lives in a region of fancy, peopled only with graceful, classic, unsubstantial forms, tinted with floral hues, where every asperity of surface is smoothed away, and even a crumpled rose-leaf could not be endured; but, though a Sybarite realm, beyond affording pleasure to the eye there is no approach to sensuous voluptuousness. Witness this nearly nude figure of "An Antique Juggling-Girl" (348), standing tossing her gilded balls before a drapery suspended mediæval fashion, which drapery is, however, too ivory-like in its smoothness and hardness in relation to the golden-hued flesh. The figure, though beautiful in its flowing contours, is insufficiently modelled to ensure due relief, the type of form is not quite feminine; and the draughtmanship, particularly of the arms and legs, is not beyond reproach—the former especially seem to us too bulky for the thorax. Two other pictures are derived from the artist's recent visit to the East. The scene of one is the interior court of a house in "Old Damascus: the Jews' Quarter" (303), where a fair lady, as she shifts her flower-pots, is directing a servant engaged knocking fruit from a lemon-tree, which are caught by a little girl in her rose-coloured dress lifted to receive them. The costumes, flowers, lemon-tree, and rose-tinted marbles and blue tile inlays of the elegant Moorish architecture, form delicious though too evanescent harmony of colour. In another picture full of twilight languor, appropriately called "Moorish Garden: a Dream of Granada" (131), a little maiden carries a copper vessel, followed by a green and a white peacock; behind are arched creepers, groves of cypress and orange, a marble-basined water-course, and a glimpse of a domed palace—it may be the Alhambra. A far truer, manlier idealism than these pretty artificialities is, however, attained in No. 981, "Clytemnestra from the Battlements of Argos watches for the Beacon Fires which are to announce the Return of Agamemnon." The large-moulded figure standing in the moonlight is grandly monumental in its resemblance to antique sculpture, and the murderous resolve of the adulteress is finely indicated by her knit brow and fiercely-locked hands.

Mr. G. D. Leslie has two more young ladies of the last century; this time engaged at a sunny bay window (the diffused light from which in the apartment is admirably rendered) overlooking a trim garden, making "Pot-pourri" (129) for the china jars of the family from heaps of rose petals, lavender, orris root, and so forth. Mr. Leslie renders the sweet naïveté and innocence of pure maidenhood with rare delicacy. He alone enjoys the entrée to an eighteenth-century arcadia in which none of his rivals or followers has found the key. He reminds us of "Pamela" Richardson, only that the painter's creations are far less elaborate in details than those of the novelist. A critic of mere technicalities might, nevertheless, complain of the artist's pictures generally, that the contours are not faultless, the modelling merely hinted at, the colouring rather opaque and faded. Mr. Leslie may be advised against relaxing his efforts, as likewise against remaining too long in the same groove. His "Nut Brown Maid" (197), with her yoke and her pails, beside the shady moss-grown spring, where the glint of light above cannot penetrate, will hardly take a place in memory beside the lovely "Lavinia."

Another Associate, Mr. Yeames, divides his energies among several pictures of moderate size. One shows the interior of the old hall of Cothelie, with the trophies of ancient arms, armour, and antlers on the walls. Visitors are inspecting the place, one of them, a stalwart young gentleman, steals an admiring glance at a fair young lady, who, followed by a noble bloodhound, is bearing flowers, newly arranged by children, at the window, "For Hall and Bower" (412). Two pictures represent the interior of the church of Tong, in Staffordshire, with a christening party in one (555), and young ladies preparing "Pulpit Decorations" (510) for a harvest-home service in the other. But Mr. Yeames's best picture is "The Little Suppliants" (280), the scene of which is laid within the Bargello, Florence. Three children kneel at the foot of the great staircase to crave pardon for their father of the Podestà, who, with his suite, is descending. The mother directs them from the covert of a side door, and a group of courtiers stand aside to witness the result of the petition. The artist has carefully painted the curious old Palazzo of the chief criminal Judge of the Florentine Republic.

Mr. Armitage sends one of the few pictures from sacred story, "St. John taking the Virgin to his own home after the Crucifixion" (218). The beloved disciple, with eyes reddened by weeping, is supporting over his threshold the drooping form of the mother of our Lord, henceforth to be his mother. Thunder-clouds swell in the sky, the very air is thick and red-hot, as though the sun were setting in anger on the rabble as they return along the roadway with the blood-stained instruments of the crucifixion. The artist's deep and reverent feeling is obvious; but the effect is not favourable to harmonious colouring, and the subject may suggest hazardous comparisons with those intensely pathetic pictures of episodes relating to the tragedy of Calvary by the artist's master, Paul Delaroche. Mr. Armitage has also a second series of his frieze-like coloured decoration, "A Dream of Fair Women: The Women of Ancient Greece" (1029). Other painters of Academic rank are represented in their customary styles—styles so well known that any fresh attempt at definition would be superfluous. It may, for instance, suffice to say that Sir John Gilbert's "Field of the Cloth of Gold" (620) is an example of the painter of more than ordinary importance—so fertile and facile in the conception and arrangement of its multitudinous figures, so appropriately rich and pompous in colouring, so exuberant in its handling; in short, a pictorial pageant so gorgeous that the artist could well afford neither to care for great accuracy to contemporary portraits of the French and English Kings, nor to discriminate very carefully the types of the two nationalities in the heads generally. Mr. Lewis's four Eastern subjects are, as usual, miracles of patient elaboration, in which, however, the sense of atmosphere is more than ever wanting, owing, we think, to a method of hatching and stippling (appropriate only in water colours) with pigments, especially blues, too dilute with oil and varnish. "The Bezenstein Bazaar of El Khan Khalic, Cairo" (332), the "Lady Receiving Visitors" (354) in the "mandarah" of her house, and the two smaller studies of "Outdoor" and "Indoor Gossip" (352 and 353), are not the less wonderful as illustrations of Cairene life, manners, habits, costumes, and architecture in a thousand minutiae. Mr. Dobson has two pictures, pure and sweet in feeling as, and perhaps more pleasing in colour than, usual—"Father's Welcome Home" (339), a little fellow standing with outstretched arms beside an elder sister carrying a baby, at the garden gate of a cottage; and another child-group, "Tending Goats" (405). The artist's large drawing, "Nursery Tales" (904), we shall have occasion to notice later. Mr. Poole sends but three slight studies of rustic scenes, alone or grouped with children. Mr. E. Nichol also has only two single-figure subjects, not very vigorous, but of characteristic humour—i.e., "A Dander after the Rain" (256) and "When there's nothing else to do" (351)—a thrifty old Scot knitting a stocking at his cottage door. We had hoped to see Mr. Elmore represented by a far more important picture than his small but effective illustration of Scott's "Peveril of the Peak" (327). Mr. Poynter's sole contribution is a tiny classic figure of a girl tying her sandal after a bath, called "Rhodope" (172), the Greek hetaira. Mr. Orchardson's best picture shows a couple of bloodhounds arrested on the banks of a stream whereon floats a man's cap, intimating that a fugitive has "Escaped" (1415). His illustrations of "Hamlet and the King" (265) and "Ophelia" (380) possess a feebleness as difficult to define as the clever yet thin, meagre, unmeaning execution—those least acceptable characteristics of the recent Scotch school.

We must conclude the present article with mention of "The Prompter" (315), by Mr. Webster—a school incident, in which it is gratifying to see the veteran artist retaining so much of the humour and technical merit of early works; Mr. Le Jeune's pleasing picture of "Innocence" (299); Mr. Cope's illustration of "Taming the Shrew" (201), in which the conception is superior to the harsh colouring; a figure of Ophelia and Scotch landscapes by Mr. H. O'Neil; poetical subjects by Mr. Frost; and "The Gospel in the Glen: Incident in Olden Time" (558), by Mr. Thorburn.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

CONSTITUENTS OF THE ATMOSPHERE.—DIFFUSION AND VENTILATION.

Mr. Walter N. Hartley, in his third lecture, on Thursday week, resumed the consideration of the more minute constituents of the atmosphere. Beginning with ammonia, he said that its great solubility in water and its falling in dew accounts for Fresenius finding its proportion during the day and night to be 1 and 1.7 respectively. The mean result of Fresenius's analyses, 1.3 parts by weight in 10,000,000 parts of air, agrees pretty nearly with that obtained by Mr. Horace Brown in 1869. Ozone, a condensed form of oxygen, with greatly increased chemical activity, was next considered. Having produced some ozone by means of a silent electric discharge through atmospheric air, Mr. Hartley showed that, although very small in amount, its variations in quantity, according to locality and climatic changes, can be detected by the depth of the blue shade given to paper steeped in starch and iodide of potassium. As nitrous acid, which is found in the air, also has this property, the existence of ozone was long considered doubtful; but, in 1868, the question was decided simultaneously by Schönbein, of Bale, its original discoverer, and Andrews, of Belfast, who demonstrated its presence by different methods. Mr. Hartley then explained the effect of temperature in causing the mixture of the light and heavy constituents of the atmosphere by the production of currents, both violent and imperceptible, his remarks being elucidated by various experiments showing the change of density in carbonic acid gas when the temperature is raised. In an aquarium filled with this gas some floating soap bubbles sank, when the gas was heated by the introduction of a hot flask; and a paper balloon rose to the ceiling when filled with some of this heavy gas made light by heat. Mr. Hartley then explained the principle of the ventilation of mines by means of heat—there being two shafts, one for the supply of fresh and one for the escape of foul air. He next illustrated the phenomena of gaseous diffusion, or the tendency of the particles of a gas to separate as far as possible from each other, and thus mix with other gases in spite of their different weights. This property, discovered by Dalton, was investigated by Graham, who established the law that the rate of diffusion of two gases is inversely with the square roots of their relative weights. Thus hydrogen diffuses four times as quickly as oxygen, which is sixteen times heavier. The diffusibility of gases through porous media was also exhibited. A bell-jar of hydrogen was held over a porous vessel and the free exit was closed by water. The hydrogen passed through so much more rapidly than the air escaped, that the water was projected upwards like a fountain to a considerable height. Advertising to ventilation, which he defined as the art of supplying fresh air at a rate less than 19 in. a second, Mr. Hartley said that the creation of draughts by recklessly opening windows in our homes was quite as hurtful as bad ventilation. After referring to Dr. Angus Smith's analysis of the air of workshops, theatres, and law courts, he gave the following proportions of carbonic acid gas in 10,000 volumes of air, obtained by himself at the Money Order Office, Aldersgate-street, on a dark day, with the gas lighted, 22; ordinary state, 17.6; windows wide open, 4.2. Covent Garden Theatre, April 28, 1874, at 10.10 p.m., 22, doors open between the acts; doors open, 17.6; at 10.20 p.m., draught near a door, 14.8. Drury Lane Theatre, at 9.40 p.m., mean of three analyses, 25.9. The ill effect of this air upon the audience was painfully evident. The estimation of the carbonic acid is strictly the measure of the pollution of the air. Mr. Hartley next alluded to Pettenkofer's demonstration of the passage of air through walls of brick and stone in various degrees; and concluded with remarks on the production of nitrous acid by thunderstorms; referring to some experiments of Mr. J. Miller Thomson, of King's College, who had ascertained that the entire quantity of the oxygen in the air may be used up in the form of nitrous acid.

EARLY INHABITANTS OF THE NORTH OF ENGLAND.

Professor Rolleston, F.R.S., of Oxford, began his discourse, at the Friday evening meeting on the 1st inst., by referring to various objects before him, such as urns and their contents, ornaments, and other relics, procured from the graves of the various races who successively inhabited the North of England. He then described the discovery of a very large number of Anglo-Saxon cremation urns in a part of the East Riding of Yorkshire which is connected with the names of Edwin, Paulinus, and Coifi; a fact affording strong confirmation of his opinion, propounded to the members March 25, 1870, that the Anglo-Saxons were exceedingly numerous in Britain. He then exhibited and described some sets of ornaments obtained by him in the same district from Anglo-Saxon burials, which afford evidence of a stage between Heathen cremation and Christian burial, as described by him in the "Archæologia," vol. xlii., 1870. With these relics some much older implements as well as others quite modern have been accidentally or purposely mixed up in the graves themselves, and have thus led, or may lead, to various fallacies. The Professor then gave a brief summary of the way in which cremation sepulture in England during the period of Saxon heathendom, from A.D. 450 to 630, gave way in Roman Britain to inhumation, from the date of the generation subsequent to Septimius Severus down to A.D. 450. Before passing to the description of the Pre-Roman and pre-historic modes of interment practised in the North of England, the Professor made some remark on the rationale, or, as it may be termed, the genesis of cremation, and expressed his mingled assent and dissent to the recently published views of Professor Unger; and the account of the "Funeral Ceremonies of the Ancient Hindus," given by Babu Rajendralala Mitra in the Journal of the Asiatic Society, No. 4,

1870. Affection for a deceased relative may have suggested two objects to the survivors of all ages; firstly, the preservation of the surroundings of the deceased in the very condition in which they were at the time of death, this object being felt to be a right one, as the mourner did not realise the fact of death in all its bearings at once. Secondly, it was felt to be right to have the remains of the departed preserved under the protection and in the proximity of kinsfolk. The chambered long barrow with its inmates ranged in a crouching position along its wall, having food and other things placed side by side with them, in imitation of the home tenanted by them in life, answered both purposes. Difficulties of transport, death in war, or by plague, or the natural consequences of a hot climate, as described by Tiresias in the "Antigone" of Sophocles, often made cremation the only possible mode of securing at least the second of these objects. The Professor concluded with a description, illustrated by diagrams, of the round and long barrows of the North of England, at the examination of which by the Rev. Canon Wm. Greenwell he had many times assisted. The following passage from Wordsworth's "Prelude" (Book xiii., near the end) is beautifully illustrative of the subject of his discourse:—

Time with his retinue of ages fled
Backwards, nor checked his flight until I saw
Our dim ancestral Past in vision clear:
Saw multitudes of men, and, here and there,
A single Briton clothed in wolfskin vest,
With shield and stone-axe stride across the wold;
The voice of spears was heard, the rattling spear,
Shaken by arms of mighty bone, in strength,
Long mounded, of barbaric majesty.

George Buak, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

RELATION OF NAPOLEON I. TO THE REVOLUTION.

Mr. John Robert Seeley, M.A., Professor of Modern History at Cambridge, in his third lecture, on Saturday last, reverted to the two theories respecting the French Revolution, which he named the "Satanic wickedness" and the "Divine madness" theories, and which he showed to be overdrawn and untenable. It was a mistake to attribute to Napoleon the passage from an enthusiastic ambition to the desire of despotic power. Dumourier possessed as much desire for conquest as Napoleon; and the Revolution, like Minerva, was born armed from head to foot. The war was really the diversion to the purposes of foreign conquest of the energy which ought to have been devoted to political reconstruction, and Napoleon was the chief agent. When France acquired liberty, she viewed it as a new means for recovering her former ascendancy. It was like the discovery of a new military weapon, not a new phase of civilisation. For successful war absolute despotism is considered most favourable; and such was the case with Alexander the Great; but that liberty is not unfavourable to conquest was shown by Athens. French freedom had far more power than the decrepit despotisms of the houses of Hapsburg and Bourbon; and France was rejuvenated by the Revolution, and liberty became the "mode," from 1789 to 1791, the time of Mirabeau, who said that "the chance of recovering our ascendancy has come; but we have renounced conquest." In 1792, however, the thought arose, "May not the two go together?" This was the fundamental idea of the Revolution. It led France from her most luminous to her darkest period, and was the cause of all the sanguinary horrors of the time. Liberty became a military instrument, not a source of happiness. This idea closely connects the Revolution and Napoleon. In regard to government, the Revolution was a failure from beginning to end. The National Assemblies became politically worse and worse; they gave examples of mere constitution-mongering, and none of the schemes would work. The great achievement of the Convention was the levée en masse, which alone preserved it from contempt. In 1793 France put forth fourteen armies and 1,100,000 men. It was not merely patriotic ardour which subdued the hired troops of the Sovereigns; they were actually outnumbered. The nation thus became accustomed to great armies before the rise of Napoleon in 1796; and in considering this wonderful career of Napoleon we must recollect the enormous scale of his operations and the vast and unexampled supply of troops willingly placed at his disposal. The want of these checked the progress of other great Generals, such as Turenne, Marlborough, and Frederick. He introduced no new system, but merely followed out the principles of the Revolution. While doing this France readily accepted the change from a free democracy to a hereditary despotism, the revival of Catholicism, the restoration of the nobility, and other mediæval institutions which had been indignantly swept away. The Revolution meant pre-eminently the ascendancy of France over Europe; and to this idea Napoleon was faithful to the last, preferring abdication to accepting France with the limits of 1791. Thus he failed to attain the great object of his life—to secure for France an equivalent for the acquisitions of the other great Powers, and her condition in 1815 was worse than in 1789. During the peace which followed she was still hankering after her lost ascendancy, not without hope, and the cry for war was mixed with that for democracy. Eventually imperialism was revived by a disciple of Napoleon who thoroughly knew and understood his theory. France again attained somewhat of her former position, and in the Italian war of 1859 gave an honest stroke for liberty. But she again fell in 1870, when she attempted to revive the idea of the revolutionary period, and made war simply for increase of territory.

FUNCTIONS OF THE SPINAL CORD.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., began his fourth lecture on the nervous system, on Tuesday last, by describing the mechanism of reflex actions, and indicating the probable mode of action of the inhibitory nerves, which inhibit or control excito-motor actions. He then passed to the consideration of the special physiology of the nervous system, and narrated how its functions have been ascertained, to some extent, by experiment, by the observation of diseased conditions, by comparative physiology, and by a study of the development of the individual. The physiology of the spinal cord and its nerves was first elucidated, and the experiments were described by which the anterior roots are known to be motor and the posterior roots to be sensory; the sensory impressions cross from one side to the other in the cord, while the motor impulses cross in the medulla oblongata. Reference was made to the discoveries of Sir Charles Bell in relation to this subject. Motor impulses are principally conveyed by the anterior and lateral columns of the white matter of the cord, while sensory impulses are conveyed by the grey matter of the cord, and, according to Schiff, by the posterior columns also. If the posterior columns be divided, there is, according to Schiff, a loss of tactile sensibility, and disordered motion on the part of the body behind the point of section. The lecture was illustrated by many coloured diagrams.

Mr. R. A. Proctor will this day begin a course of six lectures on the Planetary Systems; on Thursday next Mr. Nevil Story Maskelyne, keeper of the mineral department in the British Museum, will begin a course of four lectures on the Physical Symmetry of Crystals; and at the next Friday evening meeting Dr. C. William Siemens will describe the steamship Faraday and her appliances for cable-laying.

John Tyndall, LL.D., F.R.S., was re-elected Professor of Natural Philosophy on Monday. The managers announced that they had appointed John Hall Gladstone, Ph.D., F.R.S., Fullerian Professor of Chemistry.

At the annual meeting of the Royal Institution of Great Britain, on Friday, May 1—Dr. Warren De la Rue, vice-president, in the chair—the annual report of the committee of visitors for the year 1873 was read and adopted. This report testifies to the increasing prosperity and efficiency of the institution, and congratulates the members on the fact that the new laboratories have been constructed and fitted up by means of funds contributed by themselves, and that this heavy charge is not larger than the surplus income of a few years will probably be able to reimburse. The following gentlemen were unanimously elected as officers for the ensuing year:—President, the Duke of Northumberland; treasurer, Mr. George Buak; secretary, Mr. William Spottiswoode; as well as committees of managers and visitors.

PARIS SPRING FASHIONS.

The warm weather has developed both the flowers and the fashions earlier than usual this year, and the new creations of Parisian modistes show considerable originality, but only so far as shape is concerned, the prevailing tints being much the same as were in vogue twelve months ago. The fashionable colour of the moment is grey in all its different shades, such as gris argenté, gris vert, gris de plomb, gris perle, gris de nuage, vert de gris—iron, ash, mouse, and slate grey. Gayer tints will, however, predominate in the course of a few weeks, and many of these have already made their appearance at the weekly gatherings at the Longchamps and Auteuil racetracks, including marine and cerulean, peacock and heron blue, mignonette green, dove colour, havannah brown, écarl and light mauve. Among the fashionable materials for toilettes de visite and de promenade are foulards, the plain and striped varieties of which are worn combined; also a very fine poplin, termed La Sicilienne, made in every shade of colour; while for dinner and evening dresses a semi-transparent silk of a novel écarl colour, and termed the Gosly, has made its appearance. The fichu Marie Antoinette has once more reappeared, but in competition with its more coquettish and graceful rival the fichu Charlotte Corday.

The chapeaux for the coming season will be the Montéglin and the d'Harcourt, descriptions of which will be found below; the Directoire, made of white straw, with a high front lined with pink silk, and ornamented with a garland of pinkish pansies, while surmounting the whole is a large bow formed of numerous coques of reddish brown ribbon; the Clairrette, named after the heroine of the "Fille de Madame Angot," which is very like the Marie Stuart both in shape and ornament; together with the Béatrix, formed of a toque of beaded black tulle, encircled with a garland of leaves, mignonette blossoms, and pansies.

THE ILLUSTRATION.

Toilettes de Promenade and de Visite.

Fig. 1. Robe à demie-traine of the hue known as gris d'argent glacé, the taffeta jupe being robed on each side with a deep ruche edged with grey velvet, and simulating to some extent a manteau de cour. The tunic, which is of cashmere, is bordered with similar velvet bias, and trimmed with large silver buttons. It is gathered up en pouff behind, with a broad sash falling below the knees. There are large cuffs to the sleeves, and ruffle-like plaits to the neck. The chapeau is of mauve faye, edged with violet velvet and trimmed with bunches of lilac and bows of ribbon.

Fig. 2 shows the vêtement de promenade, known as the Montfort jacket, which is made adjusted to the waist with large open facings and pouff behind. It is bordered with guipure and trimmed with ornaments of passementerie. The chapeau, which is of white straw, is turned up on each side, and trimmed with flowers and feathers, a large bow falling behind.

Fig. 3. Toilette of cerulean blue taffeta, with flounces and trimmings of foulard, striped blue and white. The tunic, cut in polonaise fashion and crossed on bias from left to right in front, is trimmed with a plissé à la vieille of striped foulard, edged with a small flounce in the same material. The cuffs of the sleeves, which are of medium size, are trimmed with bows and plaitings of similar foulard, while the jupe is ornamented with flounces of the same, on which are placed bias of blue taffeta. Chapeau d'Harcourt of rice straw, edged with blue velvet and surmounted by a tuft of lilies of the valley, a bandeau of blue velvet and persane being wound round in turban fashion and falling in ends of medium length behind.

Fig. 4. Veste manon of marine blue drap d'été, worn with a faille waistcoat of the same tint, and trimmed with seven pipings of faille, with passementerie buttons forming frogs. The chapeau, which is turned up at the sides and edged with blue ribbon, has a large blue bow in front and a white ostrich feather falling behind.

Fig. 5. Robe of light mauve poul-de-soie, the corsage cut à la Princesse, and the jupe trimmed with ruches separated by bias of darker mauve, and a deep plaited flounce touching the ground. With this toilette is worn a fichu Charlotte Corday in black gros de suez silk edged with lace. The white straw chapeau rond, worn at the back of the head, is surmounted by a bouquet of white and red roses, with the customary bow of mauve ribbon falling behind.

Fig. 6. Robe à demie-traine of havannah brown and dove-coloured striped taffeta. The under-jupe, which is of the darker shade, is trimmed with alternating brown and dove-coloured flounces placed en biais, and surmounted by dove-coloured bands. The dove-coloured upper-jupe, which is trimmed with havannah bias and guipure of the same shade, is buttoned at the side and caught up en pouff behind. The corsage-paletot is of havannah brown, being edged with guipure, like the upper jupe, and trimmed with dove-coloured bias, cuffs, and facings. On each side are worn large brown bows, secured to the paletot by steel buckles. Chapeau Montéglin, made of white straw and trimmed with a bouquet of field flowers and havannah ribbon.

Fig. 7. Robe à demie-traine of gris perle Sicilienne, the jupe of which is trimmed in front with bias placed diagonally, and gathered up into a succession of plaits behind. With it is worn a hussar pelisse of white serge, braided and edged with marabout trimming. The chapeau is of white straw, surmounted by a foulard turban secured on one side by a bunch of roses, and on the other by an aigrette.

Fig. 8. Robe of mignonette-coloured taffeta, trimmed with three superposed flounces, edged with rows of tiny ruches, and set off on each side by large bows. The vêtement in cashmere of the same shade is embroidered in chain-stitch, and scalloped round the border. The chapeau, in faye of a corresponding tint, is trimmed in front with a double ruche, placed in coronet fashion, and finishing off in a large bow behind, while the summit is crowned with curled feathers, a wing being placed at the left side.

In the right hand corner of the Engraving is shown a mantilla of the fashionable shape, trimmed with jet and passementerie.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN.

The conflict in the neighbourhood of Bilbao, the chief town of Biscay, between the Carlist army, which besieged that town, and the forces of the Madrid National Government, has ended in the defeat of the Carlists. Marshal Serrano and Marshal Concha, in command of the two divisions of the National army, having successfully carried out their operations and forced the Carlists to raise the siege, entered Bilbao last Saturday evening. Their combined forces were 37,000 regular troops, with seventy guns. The Carlists, under General Elio, accompanied by Don Carlos de Bourbon, whom his partisans call King Charles VII., numbered about 20,000, and their artillery was defective. They abandoned, on the night of the 28th ult., Tuesday week, their strongly intrenched position on the hill of San Pedro de Abanto, in front of the village of Somorrostro. This place is seven or eight miles north-west of Bilbao, commanding Portugalete, where the river Nervion, on which Bilbao stands, has its mouth on the shore of the Bay of Biscay. The iron-mines of Somorrostro were formerly of some note, and furnished material for the Bilbao manufacture of swords and armour.

The positions occupied a month since by the army of the National Government, at the commencement of these late operations, should be described. Their line extended southward inland from the seacoast at the mouth of the small fordable river of Somorrostro, seven or eight miles along its left bank. Mountains or hills of considerable height rise on each side of the river. The high road from Castro Urdiales to Portugalete and Bilbao runs parallel to the sea, in a valley, and intersects the line at right angles, the village of San Juan de Somorrostro being in the centre. Facing the left of the position is a range of mountains from the coast to the Church of Santa Juliana, past which runs the high road above mentioned. One of these mountains, named Mandrea, is conical in shape. Upon its steep and unsheltered sides the Carlists defeated General Moriones on Feb. 25. Lower down is a ridge of hills, with a few cottages on them, called San Fuentes. At a short distance from them on the road is the village of San Pedro de Abanto, which was the centre of the Carlist line. On the right, starting from there, the mountains continue to rise as far as Galdames, which is on the extreme right.

While one part of the National army, under the Dictator, Marshal Serrano, was engaged in front of the lines of Abanto, the division under Concha moved on Balmaseda, to the east of Bilbao, by the valley of Sopuerta. Their object was that of giving time for the troops concentrating at Miranda del Ebro, Puebla, and Vitoria to come up to Orduña, on the border line of Biscay and Alava, with the intention of cutting off the retreat of the Carlists from the latter province. The Carlists, who had for a good while past expected an attack on that side of Biscay, had thrown up strong defensive works on the approaches to their positions. They had concentrated at and near Balmaseda some of their troops. At Ovoso, to the right of Balmaseda, only a few miles distant, the Carlists had amassed large stores of provisions and ammunition. They had established between Ovoso and Durango, the temporary headquarters of Don Carlos, a series of intrenchments, passing in a direct line by Villaro from the first to the latter point. It is evident they had done for their defence as much as they possibly could, and more than was supposed. Indeed, the Carlists seem to have provided for the worst; for they have taken measures, in case of a check, to secure by Villaroal and Archivaleta, near the well-known Pass of Salinas, the means of falling back towards Guipuzcoa and Navarre.

In the meanwhile Ernani and Renteria, near San Sebastian, were surrounded by Carlists, and in the latter town the sound of cannon was heard from the heights of Santa Barbara, which command the town of Ernani. Shots were now and then exchanged between the volunteers of Fontarabia and Carlist marauders. The heights of San Marcial, above Irun, were fortified by the Carlists.

Our Map of the Basque Provinces and adjacent parts of Spain will help to explain the recent military events. The sketches by our Artist, M. Dick de Lonlay, from the headquarters of the Spanish national army, at Somorrostro, give several different views of the Carlist positions, and one of the battery of San Lorenzo. The following extracts from the last week's letters of the Times' correspondent seem a good description of the scene of this warfare:—

"Never had a picturesque valley like that of Somorrostro a more appropriate name. It is surrounded by solemn mountains, the sombre caverns and bushy sides of which seem to be the haunts of witches and evil spirits. The word Somorrostro is derived from the Basque and Spanish—Somorra meaning in Basque some awful supernatural being, and rostro being the Spanish for face. The Carlist positions, silent and formidable, must certainly have looked portentous to Serrano lately; but it appears that, with Concha's help, he is about to get rid of the bugbear.

"Somorrostro is in a hollow surrounded by heights, some of them so lofty and precipitous that to take them, even from a very inferior force, would involve an impracticable sacrifice of men. Nearly all these heights—the most formidable—are in the hands of the Carlists, who could make the plain below untenable if they had proper artillery; but, in the absence of this, the Republicans have been able to force their way up the gradually ascending hollow, surrounded everywhere but in the rear by foes, and to make straight for Bilbao. The farther they advance the more foes they must leave behind them. As the hills occupied by the Carlists converge towards the upper—that is, the Bilbao—end of the hollow, near the village of Murieta and the Church of San Pedro Abanto, the key of the Carlist position, the Republicans, in advancing to take these two places, were brought well within rifle range on all sides. No wonder the slaughter was terrific, and that the attack on the church failed. It is rather matter for surprise that Murieta was taken; but the Republican troops, though most of them raw levies, fought with extraordinary gallantry. Perhaps it may be doubted whether old soldiers who knew what war was would have submitted to be led into such a murderous trap. The conscripts may have thought that it was the correct and usual thing to be thus fired into from all sides; so they took their slaughtering patiently.

"I was one of a small party of Englishmen who paid a visit to the village of Murieta, or what was a month ago a village; it is now but a heap of ruins. It was round this spot that the battle of Somorrostro—here called the battle of Murieta—raged most fiercely. Over 1500 killed and wounded men, on the Republican side alone, lay in a fearfully short space of time upon one narrow tract of ground. Murieta, thus hardly won and dearly bought, is now the most advanced post of the Republican force. It goes, like the thin edge of a wedge, right into the Carlist lines, to the fire of which it is exposed—strange as this may seem to military readers—both in front and in rear. There is literally no cover worthy the name for the handful of troops which garrison it. As we stood among them, we found that while one body of Carlists, full in view, with rifles in their hands, might have been firing into our faces, 150 or 200 yards off, another body, about twice that distance, might have been leisurely taking pot-shots at us behind. Indeed, as the Carlist lines extended the whole way round, we should have been in a complete circle of fire. Add to this, there is no sort of covered way, or even favourable ground, by which, in case of a sudden attack, reinforcements could be safely got to the outposts. They would have to advance over an open field, exposed to a downward converging fire from all sides—precisely the same fire, in fact, which so quickly dropped 1500 of them the other day. A more extraordinary military position I never saw or heard of. I can only account for its ever having been occupied, or its now being thus quietly held, partly by the character of the country, and partly by one side having an overwhelming superiority in artillery.

"Here and there are trees or thick brushwood enough to supply admirable cover, in addition to the advantages of ground. It was across a precipitous, partially-wooded ravine of this kind we looked yesterday at the Carlist sentries on the other side of it, their intrenchments rising gradually one above the other, and most of them communicating by zigzags and covered ways far up the mountain side. The General told me that before troops could get to the top of the mountain and drive the last Carlists off it, so as to be able to push safely on without having an enemy firing down upon their heads, they would perhaps have to carry thirty such intrenchments. Some of them are natural—a ledge of scarped rock doing as good duty as the best barricade; sometimes only a few palisades are required just to stop one dangerous gap. When the ground happens to be too level or open artificial fortifications are made. We could see on the railway made by an English company to bring the ore from their mines an immensely strong breastwork, admirably put together, with materials taken all ready to hand from the railway itself. To carry such a breastwork alone, supposing it fairly protected, would involve a terrible loss of life.

"The more a 'foreigner' looks at the Carlist positions in front of Somorrostro, the harder does he find it to comprehend how troops could ever have been led full at their centre—as was done in the last engagement, when nearly 3000 men were sacrificed in return for a comparatively slight advantage. It is to avoid a repetition of the same fatal mistake that Marshal Concha's turning movement is now being made.

"After a delay of some weeks, which was, perhaps, longer than it need have been, Concha made a move forward in three columns, in the way I have explained—namely, his right by way of Ampuero, on to the Ramales road, his centre by Guriezo, and his left by Otáñez. As yet he has been successful, and that he has done good work is proved by the fact that the Carlists have been driven back from positions which they apparently intended and wished to keep. The fighting commenced on Monday, the civil guards, carabinieri, and some line troops meeting the enemy about half way between Castro and Otáñez, where they attacked him with vigour. The positions to be taken were formidable; but the Carlists appear to have been unable to make much of a resistance for want of men to keep back Concha's right and centre, which continually kept advancing and turning the occupied heights. Still the Carlists fought desperately, and up to yesterday afternoon had only fallen back about three miles, which brings them in a line with the forces at Somorostro. The Spanish troops always fire wildly, and the number of killed and wounded is not in proportion to the shots fired.

"Concha is now moving with his left on the Galdames heights, his right sweeping round, so as to completely overlap the Carlist left; but as yet Elio has not thought it necessary to abandon his position at Somorostro, and as long as he remains there it shows that he has yet hopes of arresting Concha's progress on his left. Everyone speaks confidently here of being in Bilbao by Saturday. Elio, however, is by no means a contemptible foe, as he has already proved; and as a tactician he is equal, if not superior, to any other Spanish General. While Marshal Concha was thus working on the Otañes road, Serrano was cannonading the church and hamlet of San Pedro de Abanto, and gradually extending his right, so as to meet and support Concha's left—a junction which, I believe, has already been effected."

The date of the letter above quoted is Wednesday, the 29th ult., since which news has reached us of the complete success of Serrano and Concha in their combined operations, the retreat of the Carlists to Orduna, and the relief of Bilbao. The townspeople had suffered much distress from want of food. They had no bread for the last five days; horseflesh was 4s. a pound, veal 8s., and one egg was a shilling. The town was bombarded by the Carlists nearly forty days, throwing in 6000 shells. Few lives were lost, but many houses were destroyed. The English residents left on the 20th ult.; but our Consul, Mr. Horace Young, remained throughout the siege.

A despatch of last Tuesday, from the French frontier of Spain, gives the following information. The army of the north, under Concha, occupies Valmaseda, Algorta, Vezaga, Bilbao, Portugalete, and the left bank of the Nervion. The Carlist army, which had been composed of thirty-seven battalions, now contains but thirty-one, three Navarrese battalions having dispersed to their homes, and three Guipuzcoan battalions having been dispatched to strengthen the force guarding the military factories. The Carlist army occupies the right bank of the Nervion and the ground in the vicinity of Bilbao. Five battalions are at Orduna under the command of Velazco. Don Carlos is at Durango, and the Marquis de Valdespina at Landezera. The Carlists declare that the enemy has not taken a single musket from them. There is a vague talk of treason on the part of some Carlist chiefs, and it is asserted that four brigadiers have been arrested by orders of General Elio. It is also stated that Velazco would not retain his command.

A proclamation is about to be issued by Don Carlos to his army. Marshal Serrano and Admiral Topete have left for Madrid, and Marshal Concha remains at the head of the army of the north.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will and codicil, dated Jan. 30, 1871, and Feb. 15, 1873, of Anne, Duchess Dowager of Argyll, who died at No. 40, Rutland-gate, on Feb. 25 last, were proved on the 29th ult. by the Very Rev. James Spencer Northcote, D.D., and David Lewis, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testatrix gives pecuniary legacies to her executors, sister, niece, and servants; to the Rev. John Dobree Dalgaurn, of the Oratory, Brompton, the income of £7000 for life; at his death £3000 is given to certain members of the Convent of St. Dominic, Stone, Staffordshire. Lord Walter Campbell is appointed residuary legatee. There are numerous specific legacies to the Duke of Argyll, the Marquis of Lorne, and others; and she leaves all the contents of her chapel at Rutland-gate, with the vestments, ornaments, candlesticks, pictures, chalices, relics, including her relic of the true cross, set in a tortoiseshell case inlaid with gold, and all the furniture thereof, to the said Rev. J. D. Dalgaurn. The deceased, by her will, directs that she shall be buried with all the rites of the Roman Catholic Church.

The will and codicil, dated March 8, 1871, and Nov. 4 last, of Hans David Christopher Satow, late of Upper Clapton, who died on the 2nd ult., were proved on the 21st ult. by Mrs. Margaret Satow, the widow, David Satow, the son, Joseph Allen, and Arthur John Allen, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. Testator leaves to his widow a pecuniary legacy of £300 and his household furniture absolutely, an annuity of £600, and his freehold house at Clapton for life; to his executors, £100 each for their trouble; to his son Theodor Mason Satow, an annuity of £150; and the residue to all his children except his said son Theodor.

The will, dated Feb. 11 last, of William Todd, late of No. 26, Wellington-road, Marylebone, who died on March 25, was proved on the 14th ult. by William Todd, the son, and John Farbridge, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths £500 each to the Builders' Benevolent Institution and the St. Marylebone Almshouses, and £200 to St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington. The residuary legatees are his said son, and his daughter, Ann Mitchell Cameron.

The will, dated July 1, 1871, of William Henry Robien Bettsworth, late of Dover, who died on Jan. 31 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by Sir Thomas Sutton Western, Bart., and Henry Paulson Bowling, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £7000. The testator devises a cottage and premises at Lower Hamlet, Charlton, to the use of William Bushell, so long as he shall hold the office of parish clerk of Dover; and upon his vacating such office to the use of Charles Tomlin, if he shall succeed to the said office, and so long as he shall hold the same. There are legacies of 19s. to each of his own and his daughter Mrs. Fitzgerald's servants, and to John Anderson; and the residue of his property, real and personal, he leaves upon trust for his daughter Charlotte Georgiana Fitzgerald and her children; in the event of her dying without children testator bequeaths £6000 upon certain conditions as a permanent endowment for, or by way of increase to, the stipend of the parish church of St. James, Dover.

The will, dated July 26, 1865, of Edward Sex, formerly of Thorn-place, Ealing, but late of No. 81, Lancaster-road, Notting-hill, who died on the 6th ult., was proved on the 24th by Marmaduke James Willis and the Rev. Henry Sach, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £35,000. Subject to considerable legacies, testator gives all his property to the said Henry Sach.

The will, with two codicils—dated respectively Jan. 2 and Sept. 12, 1873, and Feb. 2 1874—of John Roberts Spencer Phillips, late of Riffhams Lodge, Danbury, Essex, who died March 14 last, was proved on the 23rd ult. by John Spencer Phillips, the son, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. Testator's daughters, Mrs. Emily Sarah Ballard and Miss Clara Elizabeth Spencer Phillips, set fortunes of £8000 each and annuities of £200 each for life; the residue of the personal estate goes to testator's only son, and all the real estate is settled upon him.

The Rev. F. H. Browne, B.A., has been appointed to the second mastership of Cowbridge.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

The May number of the City of London Chess Magazine is naturally given up this month to the subject of the Vienna chess match, of which it publishes the London game. It is to be regretted that the editors thought fit to reprint the analysis in extenso of this game, which so lately appeared in a sporting contemporary, rather than afford the public some new lights upon the combinations from their own examination. A full account is also furnished of the handicap tournament of the City Club, and some complaints are made as to the accuracy of the handicapping. Surely, the fact that two of the first-class players came into the final pool speaks well for the fairness of the arrangements; although, no doubt, Mr. Sothers was placed in a class below his merits.

An idea that the game of chess is in need of reformation seems to have many supporters. A nobleman, equally distinguished for his high classical attainments and his remarkable skill as a chessplayer, many years ago suggested in our columns a certain displacement of the pieces for the better showing the original capacity of players. Since then Mr. Mongredien offered a prize in which a similar displacement should be compulsory. More recently still, Mr. Lewis has followed this example at the Café de la Régence; and now we are told that a celebrated English player has patented a new chess equipment. The dimensions of the chess-board are to be 10 by 8; and the great novelty in the men is to be a new piece, uniting the powers of a rook and of a pawn, and to be called the "Chancellor." The first notion was to endow this novel warrior with the qualities of a queen and knight; but that idea is now definitively abandoned. Had this tremendous piece been called into existence, it would, probably, have been called the "Octopus;" for what other name could better have expressed its formidable and comprehensive character? As to the utility of any reform in the game we entertain strong doubts, and we trust that the inventor will not be induced to relinquish his practice at the old game, in which he has gained so deserved a reputation. In the chess world there have been few events of late worth chronicling. Not long since the Divan was stirred up by a visit from Mr. Thorold, who gallantly tried a new variation of his own in the Algaier Gambit, and, as we hear, with a degree of success which is thought to be due rather to his skill and valour than to the merit of his opening. It is to be hoped that some of these games have been preserved, as they would probably be interesting to the public.

GLASGOW AND DUBLIN CHESS MATCH.—The match by correspondence between the Glasgow Chess Club and the City of Dublin Chess Club has lately terminated in favour of Glasgow.

MATCH BETWEEN THE CHESS CLUBS OF MANCHESTER AND LIVERPOOL.—A match between these clubs, seven combatants aside, was played at the Manchester Chess Club a few days ago. The players on the Liverpool side were Messrs. Schull, C. Soul, Dufresne, J. Soul, Wellington, Nemo, and Archdall, who were paired against Messrs. Baddeley, Burnet, Grube, Steinkuhler, Tarrant, M. B. Wood, and E. H. Wood. According to the terms of the contest each pair played two games, and, after a spirited tourney of many hours, Liverpool came off victorious, the final score being—

SALE OF WORKS ON CHESS.—Our attention has been called to two catalogues of valuable books on the game of chess which are to be dispersed under the hammer of Messrs. Sotheby and Wilkinson next week. The first collection is that of Mr. Walker, which will be sold on the 14th inst., containing editions of Damiano, Ruy Lopez, Carrera, Salvio, Giannutio, Greco, Cozio, Lolli, Ponziani, and many other masters. The second, consisting of not less than 473 lots, is the property of an American amateur, and is to be disposed of on the 15th inst. It includes, besides a few specimens of the early writers, a remarkably comprehensive series of the modern ones—namely, the whole of the Chess-Players' Chronicle from 1841 to 1862; a set of the now rare Palamède, from its beginning, in 1836, to its conclusion, in 1847; many valuable editions of Philidor; all the chief treatises of Lewis, Walker, Staunton, Bilguer, Der Laza, Jaenisch, Prati, and other standard authors on the game; together with some manuscripts of exceeding interest to the lovers of chess.

WEST YORKSHIRE CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The nineteenth annual meeting of this association will be held, at the Queen's Hotel, Huddersfield, on Saturday, May 16, under the presidency of J. Watkinson, Esq. Play will begin at twelve o'clock. Tournaments will be arranged, as usual, on the day of meeting, and a match will also be contested between the Wakefield and Leeds Chess Clubs. In order to encourage a taste for the literature of the game, the prizes this year will be a choice selection of works on chess.

* We are requested to state that some of the details in our mention of Mr. Zukertort's match with Mr. Shoumov were inaccurate. Mr. S. had to win eight games (not seven), while Mr. Z. was scoring four.

The Extra Supplement.

GRAND BALL AT THE MANSION HOUSE.

The scene represented in our large Engraving for the Extra Supplement of this week is the splendid entertainment, on Wednesday week, given by the Lord Mayor of London and the Lady Mayoress in honour of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. The company, which numbered more than a thousand ladies and gentlemen, was of the highest rank and fashion. Among them, besides the Royal Duke and Duchess, were the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Teck, and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz; the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland and Lady Florence Leveson-Gower; the Duke and Duchess of Bedford, the Duke of Norfolk and Lady Mary Howard, the Duchess of Marlborough, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hereford, and the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter; the Earls of Clarendon, Galloway, Carnarvon, Dunmore, Rosebery, Camperdown, and Hardwicke, with several Countesses; the Lord Chancellor, Sir Stafford Northcote, Mr. Cross, and Mr. Gathorne Hardy, Cabinet Ministers; the Speaker of the House of Commons, the Archbishop of Canterbury, several foreign Ambassadors, many members of the two Houses of Parliament, the Aldermen of London, and some distinguished officers of the Army and Navy. They began to arrive soon after eight o'clock, and were met in the reception-saloon by the Lord Mayor, Alderman Luak, M.P., and Mrs. Luak, the Lady Mayoress. Most of the gentlemen wore Court suits, or military or diplomatic uniforms.

The facade of the Mansion House was brilliantly illuminated with suitable devices. The interior presented an aspect that art and fancy could not excel. The entrance-hall was tastefully laid out with plants, flowers, and ferns. Beds of rare and delicate flowers were artistically arranged on each side of the vestibule. Over the doors were fine wreaths of laurels surrounding gilded panels in carved relief. Trailing round the numerous mirrors were ivy and beautiful creeping plants. Overhead were suspended double festoons of natural leaves and flowers; between the festoons hung large baskets of roses and fuschias. In the beds of plants were gas jets, whose lights were reflected in the surrounding mirrors. In the corridor the decorations were equally effective. Round the four pillars in the centre avenue were wound double festoons of natural leaves and flowers interspersed with baskets of cut flowers.

The reception-room had never appeared to greater effect. There were long vistas of flowers of the richest colours; foliage and gigantic palms artistically arranged, interspersed with classical figures. Around the mirrors were entwined creeping plants, bearing the appearance of having taken root in the carpeted floor of the saloon. These floral decorations were relieved by a display of silk trophies on the columns; of shields with the armorial bearings of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Russian Imperial arms, the arms of the Prince of Wales and other members of the Royal family. Round the walls were large silk banners and flags of England and Russia, edged with deep rich gold fringe and tassels. The aroma arising from the beautiful plants, flowers, and scented waters was pleasant in the reception-room. The scene was enlivened by the occasional introduction of the lime-light thrown upon the sprays of the crystal fountain, at the entrance to the Egyptian Hall.

The ball-room (the Egyptian Hall) was ornamented with much pomp. Under the east window was erected the Royal dais, covered with rich crimson cloth of a deep imperial colour, at the back of which were placed immensely large mirrors. Over the dais was a richly-carved gold canopy, draped with the most costly purple satin, fringed with deep gold lace and gold tassels. There was also a large trophy, consisting of the Royal arms of England, surmounted by a silken banner and supported on each side by five immense silk flags of Russia and England. Opposite the dais was the orchestra, in which were stationed the Coldstream Guards' band, under the direction of Mr. Fred Godfrey. Similar decorations were seen in the Long Parlour and the different upper rooms. Everything appeared so complete that it was difficult to suggest an improvement. The decorations were designed and prepared by Mr. J. L. Harris, for Messrs. Defries and Sons.

The ceremony of reception was conducted as a matter of course; the guests, after the formal introduction, passing through into the Egyptian Hall or taking up a position on either side of the saloon, there to watch and to greet the succeeding arrivals. At half-past ten o'clock a sudden movement was made. The reception committee formed up and led the way to the vestibule, followed by the Swordbearer, the Macebearer, and the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress. There they awaited the arrival of the Royal party. At twenty minutes to eleven the music of the National Anthem announced the approach of their Royal Highnesses. A few minutes afterwards the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, followed by the Prince and Princess of Wales, entered the vestibule, and were received by the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress. The committee led the way to the ball-room, where dancing commenced, and was continued with great spirit until twelve o'clock. Our Illustration shows the first quadrille—the Lord Mayor has the Duchess of Edinburgh for his partner, while the Duke of Edinburgh had the Lady Mayoress, the Prince of Wales danced with the French Ambassador, and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg with the Princess of Wales. The Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Teck, the Duchess of Sutherland, and Lady Emily Kingscote also took part in the quadrille. Supper was then served. At the conclusion dancing was resumed, and kept up till an advanced hour. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh left the Mansion House at half-past one.

Mr. Lang, of Bristol, has presented to the Corporation a rare collection of old china, valued at £3000.

Mr. G. F. Muntz presided at a council meeting of the Central Chamber of Agriculture on Tuesday, at which a resolution was carried, upon the motion of Lord Hampton, expressive of satisfaction at the financial proposals of the Government on the question of local taxation.

The picture by Richter, a German artist, of "The Gipsy," which appeared in an Engraving in our Paper last week, was copied from a photograph published by the Berlin Photographic Company, whose London agent, Mr. Gerson, is at 5, Rathbone-place, Oxford-street; or at 71, London-wall.

The first public park ever owned by Sheffield was opened on Monday. The park, which is about twelve acres in extent, was purchased from the late Miss Harrison, of Sheffield, for £18,700. There stands in it a large mansion, which it is proposed to convert into a museum and picture-gallery. The Town Council, who negotiated for the purchase of the park, intend to open others in different parts of the town. The Mayor (Mr. J. Hallam) and the members of the Corporation visited the park on Monday in procession, headed by the police band, and on arriving there the Mayor declared the park, which is to be called "Weston Park," open to the free access of the public.

There is another feature of English society which will probably attract the attention of our Imperial guest. He will see on every hand abounding illustrations of the magical effects resulting from our national industry. In his swift journey from Dover, the exquisitely-finished culture of the land over which he passes will have probably caught his attention. In the river which flows through the heart of London he may look upon a commercial fleet such as can nowhere else be met with. In our manufacturing towns—should he deem it worth his while to visit any of them, or even within metropolitan precincts, should he choose not to go further—he may witness, perhaps, the most perfect specimens that can be found of organised human labour and of its myriad results. It is not to be expected that he will tread in the footsteps of Peter the Great, nor is it to be supposed that in the Empire over which he presides there are not similar wonders to be seen. But here, in the smallness of our territory and in our insular position, everything is compact, and may pass readily under view. It is, perhaps, the chief characteristic of these islands, and best worth seeing. He who has visited England and has failed to witness the main processes of her industry can hardly be said to have become acquainted with the country at all.

There is no need that we should further dilate upon the possibilities ranging within the narrow compass of this Imperial visit. Some people have ominously remarked that the Crimean War followed rather closely upon the visit of the Emperor Nicholas. In reply it may be suggested that history seldom or never repeats itself. The object of the Emperor Alexander in becoming the guest of England is readily to be conjectured without ascribing it to any political motive. Few intelligent people in this country suspect that its purpose lies far beneath the surface. At present there are no inextricable diplomatic difficulties between England and Russia which the presence of the Emperor would be required to disentangle. The past of his reign should be some guarantee to us of the future. We do not conceal from ourselves that there are some delicate questions which it would be easy to push into dangerous prominence; but the English people, we think, will all the more heartily welcome the Czar's visit on account of their confident conviction that the amenities of family converse in the palace will, to some extent, contribute indirectly to the amicable solution in the council-chamber of any international differences that may now exist or may hereafter occur.

THE COURT.

The Queen granted an interview on Thursday week, at Windsor Castle, to Sir Francis Grant, president, and Mr. F. A. Eaton, secretary, of the Royal Academy of Arts, to present the annual report from the Academy and to submit the name of the new Academician, John Pettie, and those of the officers of the Royal Academy. Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and the Right Hon. Sir Henry Eliott, G.C.B., Ambassador at Constantinople, and Lady Eliott dined with her Majesty.

The next day the Queen held a private investiture of the Order of the Bath in the Audience-Room, when the following Knights Commanders received the honour of knighthood and were invested by her Majesty with the insignia of the military division of the second class of the order:—Captain John Edmund Commerell, R.N.; Colonel Sir Archibald Alison, Bart.; Colonel John Cheetham M'Leod, and Deputy Surgeon-General Anthony Dickson Home. The Queen afterwards held a private investiture of the Order of St. Michael and St. George, when Commander John Hawley Glover, R.N., received the honour of knighthood, and was invested with the ribbon and badge of a Knight Grand Cross of the order. Colonel Francis Worgan Festing was also knighted, and invested with the insignia of a Knight Commander of the order. Princess Beatrice was present. Lady Churchill and Lady Abercromby dined with her Majesty.

On Saturday last the Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, visited the Empress Eugénie at Camden House, Chiselmurst. Her Majesty also visited the tomb of the Emperor Napoleon. The Queen travelled to and from Chiselmurst by a special train upon the South-Western and South-Eastern Railways. Prince and Princess Christian, Lady Susan Melville, the Lord Chancellor, and Mr. Robert B. D. Morier, C.B., dined with her Majesty.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday in the private chapel of the castle. The Rev. Francis Holland, minister of Quebec Chapel, officiated.

The Queen held a Council on Tuesday, at which were present the Right Hon. B. Disraeli, the Duke of Richmond, the Earl of Malmesbury, and the Lord Chamberlain. The Premier, the Duke of Richmond, and the Lord Chamberlain had audiences of her Majesty. The Hon. Gerard Noel, M.P., was sworn a member of the Privy Council. Mr. Joseph W. Bazalgette was knighted by the Queen. The Earl of Roden kissed hands on his appointment as Lord in Waiting to her Majesty. Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne and the Duchess of Wellington arrived at the castle. Lieutenant-General Biddulph dined with the Queen.

The Princess of Wales arrived at the castle on Wednesday. The Emperor of Russia, accompanied by the Grand Duke Alexis, arrived at twenty-five minutes past ten p.m., and was received by the Queen at the grand entrance of the castle.

Her Majesty gave a state banquet on Thursday, in St. George's Hall, Windsor Castle, in honour of her Imperial guest. The Earl of Roden has succeeded Viscount Torrington as Lord in Waiting to the Queen.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales presided, on Saturday last, at Marlborough House over a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1851. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Christian were present. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales went to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent-garden. Their Royal Highnesses attended Divine service on Sunday. The Prince and Princess went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Monday.

The Prince visited the studio of Mr. L. Desanges in Stratford-place on Tuesday. His Royal Highness, with the Hereditary Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, dined with Earl Granville at Carlton House-terrace. The Prince and Princess and the Grand Duke were afterwards present at a ball given by the Duke and Duchess of Westminster at Grosvenor House.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh went to Her Majesty's Opera, Drury-lane, on Saturday evening. The Duke held a meeting of the committee of the National Training School for Music on Monday at Buckingham Palace. Prince Christian was present. The Duke and Duchess were present in the evening at a ball given by Lady Clarence Paget in the west theatre of the Royal Albert Hall. The members of the Royal Albert Yacht Club, of which the Duke is the commodore, have presented the Duchess with a bracelet. The Duke has appointed Captain John Clerk, late 4th Dragoon Guards, Equerry.

Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne had a dinner party, on Saturday last, at Argyll Lodge.

Prince Leopold has been initiated as a Freemason at Oxford by the Master of the Apollo University Lodge, Mr. F. P. Morrell, M.A., of St. John's College.

The Duchess of Cambridge purposes shortly to return to England from Strelitz. Her health continues to improve.

The Duc de Nemours has returned to Paris.

The Count de Paris has arrived at Claridge's Hotel.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Tait held a reception on Saturday afternoon last, at Lambeth Palace, at which between 300 and 400 guests assembled.

The Duchess de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia gave a dance at the French Embassy, at Albert-gate, yesterday (Friday) week, to meet the Prince and Princess of Wales. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian, the Duc de Nemours, Count d'Eu, the Duke of Teck, the members of the diplomatic corps, and about 500 of the élite of society, were present.

Entertainments have been given by the Brazilian Minister and the Baroness de Penedo, the Portuguese Minister and the Duchess of Saldanha, the Duchess of Westminster, the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland, the Duchess of Marlborough, the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Marchioness of Ripon, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford, Earl Granville, the Countess of Caledon, the Earl and Countess of Stair, the Countess of Newburgh, Earl and Countess Sydney, Lord Carlingford, and Countess Frances Waldegrave, Count and Countess Gerowski de Werzele, Viscount and Viscountess Halifax, Viscount and Viscountess Falmouth, Lady Molesworth, Lady Dashwood, Lady William Graham, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton, the Bishop of Bath and Wells and Lady Arthur Herve, Lady Clarence Paget, Lord and Lady Howard of Glossop, Lady Octavia Shaw Stewart, Lord and Lady Headley, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Sir Augustus and Miss Clifford, and the Right Hon. the Speaker.

THE CZAR'S ARRIVAL IN ENGLAND.

On Wednesday morning Gravesend was in a flutter of excitement; and the river was gay with pleasure-craft and a squadron of ironclads, assembled to greet his Imperial Majesty the Czar of Russia, who was expected to land at the pretty riverside town which received his daughter so warmly when her Imperial Highness came to England as the bride of the Duke of Edinburgh. But the Derjava, with the Czar on board, ran aground whilst attempting to leave Flushing late the previous night. The Duke of Edinburgh was at hand in the Trinity yacht Galatea; but the efforts made by the Galatea and two Dutch steamers to tug the Derjava off the sand-bank were fruitless. There she lay all night. When she floated off next morning, Dover, instead of Gravesend, was chosen for the landing-place. To Dover, accordingly, the Prince of Wales proceeded with the Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge, in a special train from Charing-cross terminus, on Wednesday afternoon. Their Royal and Imperial Highnesses left the Lord Warden Hotel in the train for the landing-stage of the Admiralty Pier as the Imperial yachts with the Galatea were at last seen nearing Dover.

"It was pleasant (the Times' reporter says) to see, close to the window of the saloon-carriage, the happy face of the Duchess of Edinburgh, always turned towards the vessel which was bringing to her those she loved best. Her father she had not seen for three months, and though the Duke of Edinburgh had scarcely been absent for one round of the sun, that was still a long parting; for it was the first since the day when we had watched her as she stood by his side before the twin altars of the Winter Palace. At length the time came to stand ready at the water's edge, and on the arm of the Prince of Wales, and followed by the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Arthur, and the very gay and numerous English and Russian suites, the Princess passed round to the landing-place and went down the crimson-carpeted stairs. When the yacht is still a quarter of a mile off it is easy to make out who it is that is standing on the starboard paddlebox. It needs no telescope to discover that he in the grey coat, with sleeves hanging loose, who looks steadily through his glasses at the landing-place, so well marked by its red drapery and by the throng of uniforms picked out in front by just one lady's dress, can be none other than the Emperor. The Russian naval uniform near him must be worn by the Grand Duke Alexis, and that is the Duke of Edinburgh upon the bridge by Captain Golosotchoff. As the yacht moved closer along the breakwater the Czar threw off his coat and came alone to the forward part of the paddlebox. The artist on the pier pines his pencil, for this is the moment; but he will never make a picture so pleasant and touching as the reality. The evening sun shone softly, and the Derjava lazily rose and fell as she surged through the water close by the pier-side. The Emperor looked tall and handsome in his Garter ribbon and General's uniform as he stood alone on the paddle-box—for even the Grand Duke Alexis and the Duke of Edinburgh had drawn back respectfully—kissing his hand repeatedly to his daughter, now very close to him, and inclining his head with gestures tenderly affectionate, but still preserving through all something of the grave and stately manner which never leaves him. Then came that tedious time when the vessel has touched the shore but yet one cannot land. The Emperor leant over the rail and spoke to the Grand Duchess. His eyes were full of tears, and his tender affection, not in the least concealed, and shown in a manner truly noble and dignified with all its eager earnestness, was touching to see. Nor did he forget the people who were cheering him so lustily a few feet off along the edge of the pier, for he repeatedly looked up to the line of their faces, and bowed to them again and again. Despite all the sailors could do the yacht crushed to pieces against the pier some of the rich gold moulding of her paddle-box; but at last all was arranged, and the Royal personages passed on board at a quarter to seven. The Emperor embraced his daughter fondly, and greeted the Princess. The Duke of Edinburgh, who wore his Black Sea Commodore's uniform and the St. Andrew ribbon, came forward to meet his wife, and, after a short interchange of greetings, the Imperial and Royal party retired to the Emperor's saloon. Telegrams announcing the safe arrival of the Czar were dispatched to the Queen and to the Empress of Russia, and the Emperor came presently on deck again, when the Prince of Wales presented to his Majesty Lord Torrington and the other members of the appointed suite."

The Czar, having received and acknowledged an address from the Mayor of Dover, then entered the special train with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Duke Alexis, and the English Princesses. Windsor station, beautifully decorated for the occasion, was reached shortly after ten o'clock, when the Czar was welcomed to the Royal borough by Prince Christian, Count Gleichen, the Marquis of Lorne, and the Mayor of Windsor. The Czar and his party, while the band played the Russian and English National Anthems, entered the open carriages sent from the castle by her Majesty. At various points torches were suddenly lighted as the procession passed, producing a novel and beautiful effect. The carriages were driven at a walk up the main street and into the Long Walk, under the George IV.'s gateway. The Queen, the Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, Princess Louise, and Princess Beatrice received the Czar and Grand Duke at the Queen's entrance. A guard of honour of the 1st battalion Coldstream Guards was in attendance.

Owing to the late arrival of the Emperor at the castle the Royal dinner party was considerably delayed. Her Majesty entertained her illustrious guest in the Oak Room. The band of the 1st Life Guards was stationed in the Pavilion Quadrangle, and it was about midnight before it began to play, and still later before the Imperial and Royal guests retired.

On Thursday morning the Emperor, with the Grand Duke Alexis, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur, drove out and visited Frogmore. They afterwards visited the Albert Memorial Chapel and St. George's Chapel, where Sir G. J. Elvey, the organist, played several sacred pieces of music. The weather was fine, and in the afternoon the Imperial and Royal party drove through the park to Virginia Water.

THE THAMES EMBANKMENT AT CHELSEA.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, on Saturday afternoon, opened the new portion of the Thames Embankment and esplanade, from the gardens of Chelsea Hospital to Battersea Bridge. We have repeatedly described and illustrated this useful work of London improvement. It was begun in August, 1871, by order of the Metropolitan Board of Works. The contractor, Mr. T. Webster, has executed his task, at a cost of £134,000, from the designs of Sir J. W. Bazalgette, C.E., engineer to the board, and under the supervision of Mr. John Grant, assistant engineer. With a length of three-quarters of a mile, the new riverside road has a width of 70 ft., and is planted with small trees on both sides—not to mention the fine old elms of Cheyne-walk. It communicates with the new Albert Bridge over the river, at the bottom of Oakley-street. Beneath the road, as in the Victoria Thames Embankment, from Westminster to Blackfriars, runs the great low-level sewer, deeply embedded in concrete and earth. The river front is a granite wall, with a parapet. This completes the Thames Embankment of the Middlesex shore, four miles and a half, from Battersea to Blackfriars—all except a quarter of a mile between Millbank and the Houses of Parliament, which belongs to the Crown, and should at once be finished. The Emperor of Russia has grand quays on the Neva at St. Petersburg; but his Majesty will approve of our Thames quays in London.

The opening ceremony was not attended with much pomp. At the east end of the new Embankment there was a spacious pavilion. Tiers of seats for a thousand persons, rising on one side, accommodated those invited by the Metropolitan Board. Opposite were similar benches, for members of the two Houses, the City Corporation and other public bodies. In the middle was a narrow platform, with chairs of state for the Royal visitors. The Scots Fusilier Guards furnished a guard of honour. The Embankment was lined by three battalions of the Guards, the Grenadiers, the Coldstreams, and the Scots Fusiliers. Outside the pavilion were the 1st Middlesex (Engineer) Volunteers, the 2nd Middlesex, and the band of the Duke of York's Military School.

The Royal Duke and his Royal and Imperial Duchess came about half past five. They were accompanied, in the same carriage, by the Earl of Bradford, Master of the Horse. Four preceding carriages brought the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain; Earl Beauchamp, Lord Steward; the Countess of Caledon, Lady in Waiting; General Lord Strathairn, Lord Torrington, Lady Mary Butler, Lord Alfred Paget, and others in attendance. There was an escort of Horse Guards. The Duke of Edinburgh wore his naval uniform, with the ribbon and star of the Garter, and that of the Russian Order of St. Catherine. Their route was from Buckingham Palace, through Eaton-square and Sloane-square, along King's-road, which was decorated with flags on masts, and Cheyne-walk, likewise made gay, to the west or further end of the new Embankment, still keeping the line of streets inside of it. At the Battersea Bridge end their Royal Highnesses were met by the chairman, Colonel Hogg, M.P., the deputy chairman, and other members of the Metropolitan Board, with the engineers and contractor. They, in open carriages, led the way for the Royal visitors along the Embankment, returning westward to the pavilion at its east end. The Right Hon. Mr. Cross, Secretary of State for the Home Department, was there in levee dress. The National Anthem was played, after firing a salute of artillery, when their Royal Highnesses alighted. Colonel Hogg read an address, to which a reply, prepared by Mr. Cross, was read by the Duke of Edinburgh, declaring the new Chelsea Embankment to be opened. It is proposed to call it the Alfred Embankment. A knighthood has been conferred upon Colonel Hogg, now Sir James Hogg, and likewise upon the chief engineer, henceforth Sir J. W. Bazalgette. He was the engineer, both of the Metropolitan Main Drainage system and of all the Thames Embankments.

Lord Castlemaine has been chosen a Representative Peer for Ireland, in the room of Baron Blayney, deceased.

Mr. Algernon Bertram Mitford has been appointed permanent secretary of the Board of Works and Public Buildings, vacant by the retirement of Mr. George Russell.

In the sale of Sir Edwin Landseer's remaining works and sketches during the past week, several were purchased by Messrs. Agnew on account of the proprietors of the Illustrated London News. Engravings of them will appear in this Journal.

Mr. Arthur W. Peel has resigned the duties of "whip" to the Opposition in the House of Commons, owing to ill-health, and will be succeeded by the Right Hon. W. Adam, who, at the request of the leading members of the Liberal party, has consented to give his services in that capacity.

Mr. Justice Grove delivered judgment in the Poole election inquiry on Tuesday. He considered that, although no blame was attributable personally to Mr. Waring, agency had been clearly proved in the matter of treating. His Lordship therefore declared that Mr. Waring had not been duly elected, and ordered each side to pay its own costs.—The trial of the South Durham election petition has been postponed from the 22nd inst. to the 27th, and the venue has been removed from Durham to Darlington.—Application for leave to withdraw the petition against the return of the sitting members for Kerry has been granted by the Dublin Court of Common Pleas, the petitioners having submitted an affidavit to the effect that, in their belief, the acts of the returning officer had arisen simply from an error of judgment, and were not wilful.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN: CARLIST SKETCHES FROM NAVARRE.

THE LATE PROFESSOR PHILLIPS.

HURRICANE AT THE ISLE OF MAURITIUS.

The Extra Supplement.

THE CZAR OF RUSSIA.

In honour of the illustrious guest who is welcomed this week by our Queen and by the nation, we make his Portrait the subject of our special Engraving. The Emperor or Czar Alexander Nicholasievitch, Alexander II. of Russia, is fifty-six years of age, having been born April 29, 1818. He is son of the Emperor Nicholas, who died March 2, 1855; but his mother was a daughter of King Frederick William III. of Prussia. The present Czar, in 1841, married Princess Marie of Hesse, daughter of Louis II., Grand Duke of Hesse. They have one daughter—namely, her Royal and Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess of Edinburgh, born Oct. 17, 1853; and five sons—namely, the Czarévitch Alexander, born in 1843; the Grand Duke Vladimir, born 1847; the Grand Duke Alexis, born 1850; the Grand Duke Sergius, 1857; and the Grand Duke Paul, 1860. The Czar has two sisters: one is the Queen of Wurtemberg; the other, widow of the Duke of Leuchtenberg, has married Count Stroganow. He has three brothers—the Grand Duke Constantine, an Admiral; the Grand Duke Nicholas, a General of Engineers; and the Grand Duke Michael, a General of Artillery. We cannot here dwell upon the events of the Emperor's reign. It is enough to remember his great act of beneficence, the emancipation of twenty million serfs. In Europe, too, he has always been a friend of peace.

The Portrait is from a photograph by M. Bergamasco, of St. Petersburg.

A PICTURE OF THE ASHANTEE WAR.

It may fairly be claimed for the Illustrated London News that it has done much to provide, by means of art, for the accurate and effective representation of historical events in our own day. The complete execution of this public service within the scope of an illustrated weekly newspaper, in the case of the late Ashantee War, has been generally acknowledged. Its Special Artist performed his task, during several months, with great fidelity and activity in furnishing the numerous sketches which were engraved for the earliest possible appearance in this Journal. But the Proprietors have felt that, with the opportunity of such materials as they possessed for the artistic delineation of the subject, a more conspicuous and permanent work should be produced. A picture of large size has therefore been painted by Mr. Desanges, whose reputation as an artist is associated with his treatment of other well-known subjects in British military history. The design in this instance was to present a scene of actual conflict, in which the leading officers of our small army on the Gold Coast should be seen engaged, as they were on the last days of January and the first days of February, in such bush-fighting struggles as won their way to Coomassie. The 42nd Highlanders, who formed the front line at Amoaful, appear here placed in direct conflict with the hidden foe lurking in the dense jungle of the tropical forest. A roof of foliage overhangs the entire ground. Sir Garnet Wolseley, accompanied by Colonel Greaves, his Chief of the Staff, stands in the middle, receiving a report or giving an order. The General has sat to Mr. Desanges for his portrait expressly for this work, as several of the other officers introduced in it have also done. Colonel Sir John M'Leod, Colonel Scott, and the late Major Baird, of the 42nd, appear in the picture; the last-mentioned officer, who was wounded, is being carried off the field. Among the others are Lord Gifford resting a few minutes, after his return from a scouting excursion; and Captain the Hon. H. Wood. Many figures of the native fighting-men, carriers, and woodcutters employed on our side, enhance the picturesque variety of grouping. But the British officers and soldiers are clad in their simple dress of grey tweed, with the sun-helmet which they all wore in this campaign. The Prince of Wales, attended by Colonel Teesdale, called at the studio of Mr. Desanges to see the picture last Tuesday.

It is intended to open a public exhibition in a week or two, of which due announcement will be made. This picture will be accompanied by a numerous collection of original sketches, drawn in different parts of the world, during ten or twelve years past, or from an earlier date, by the Artists of the Illustrated London News. They comprise a wide range of topics which have in turn engrossed public attention, and some of which, by their great social or political importance, will demand remembrance in future. Scenes and incidents of the most varied interest, wild landscapes, views of towns or buildings, and examples of the life of many foreign nations, are included in the exhibition.

It will further comprise a number of curious articles, brought home from the Gold Coast by the Special Artist of this Journal and his friends. Furniture, dress, weapons, and ornaments of the Ashantee nation, some from the palace of King Coffee Calcallee, are in the collection. There are swords of state, with cumbruous hilts elaborately carved, and broad blades of singular patterns; maces or wands of official dignity; robes of striped cotton cloth; knives, daggers, cups, and spoons; bracelets and other ornaments of silver or copper; pipes for smoking tobacco, a household vessel of wood studded with brass nails, several well-made stools, fetters for the ankles of a slave, iron pincers for torture; old flint guns, with belts and pouches for ammunition; various trinkets of native metal-work, and fetish devices carried on the person for good 'luck. These miscellaneous things are perhaps worth looking at while the Ashantee War is fresh in the mind.

THE LATE PROFESSOR PHILLIPS, F.R.S.

The death of this eminent man of science, as lately mentioned, was occasioned by a fall on the staircase at All Souls' College, Oxford; but he was seventy-three years of age. He became a geologist under the guidance of his uncle, Mr. William Smith, one of the first founders of English geology. From 1815 to 1824 John Phillips was employed with William Smith in mapping the strata of England and Wales, and in minutely noting their structure through twenty shires. He appeared as a lecturer in London while holding the appointment of keeper of the museum of the Yorkshire Philosophical Society. In 1831, at York, and in 1832, at Oxford, he took an active part in the meetings of the British Association. This he continued to do in subsequent years, as one of the official secretaries, assisting in the editorship of twenty-five volumes, at least, of its proceedings. He occupied the chair of geology at King's College, London, and in the University of Dublin. Among his best known works we may mention his "Guide to Geology," his "Palaeozoic Fossils of Cornwall, Devon, and West Somersetshire," his "Geology of the Neighbourhood of Oxford," his "Memoir of William Smith," his "Life on the Earth," and the "Treatise on Geology," which occupies two volumes of the well-known cabinet cyclopædia of Dr. Lardner. He was also the contributor of very many geological and other scientific articles to at least three most comprehensive cyclopædias, and he published very useful geological maps of Yorkshire and of the British Isles. In 1858-9 he held the presidential chair of the Geological Society. When illness forbade Dean Buckland to continue his geological lectures at Oxford, the late Mr. Strickland was appointed deputy-reader, or professor of that science, in that University. On his death, twenty years ago, Professor Phillips succeeded to that office; and on the demise of Dr. Buckland he succeeded to the vacant chair. He was learned in physics, astronomy, zoology, and most of the natural sciences.

The Portrait of Professor Phillips is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

HURRICANE AT MAURITIUS.

The island colony of Mauritius has been visited by a severe hurricane which, commencing on March 26, only terminated on the 30th. This was at an unusually late period; and in the very advanced state of the sugar-cane it is feared that it will prove most disastrous to the growing crop. Much damage was sustained by the shipping in the harbour of Port Louis, where many of the principal warehouses and stores were unroofed. On the 28th the French barque Picard was totally wrecked on the north-east coast. She was from Singapore, with timber and fifty-four Chinese passengers, of whom three, with two of the crew, were drowned. The Chrysolite, from Madagascar, with bullocks, was, on the same day, wrecked on the south-east coast; the cargo and eleven of the crew were lost. We are indebted to an eye-witness for a sketch of the harbour of Port Louis during the storm. In the foreground is a schooner totally wrecked at her moorings. To the right is the French Messageries Maritimes mail-steamer Duplex, with full steam up to ease her moorings. Being skillfully handled, this steamer escaped with trifling damage, although, as represented in the sketch, she was at one time in danger of being set adrift, the schooner Sarcelle having drifted across her bow chain moorings. Next the schooner is the ship Shannon, belonging to Messrs. Blyth, Greene, and Co., of London. She had but two days previously arrived from that port with a valuable cargo. Happily, this vessel rode out the storm well, and sustained no damage. Next the Shannon is the Glasgow ship Hartfield, which at one time took the ground, but received only slight injury. Next in the view is seen the barque B. B. Greene, belonging to the same owners as the Shannon. This vessel is seen aground, but she was afterwards floated off, with but little damage. In the background are the mountains which surround the town and harbour of Port Louis. To the right is the Signal mountain, which is 996 ft. high, and to the left the mountain known as the Pouce, 2496 ft. high. To the extreme right is Fort William, at the entrance of the harbour.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN.

A set of Illustrations, from sketches by our Artist in the camp at Somorrostro, appeared in our last publication, showing the entrenched position of the Carlists near Bilbao, up to the time of their conquest by Marshal Serrano and Marshal Concha. We also gave an illustration of one of the batteries constructed by the army of the National Spanish Government to attack the Carlist position at San Pedro de Abanto. The redoubt of San Candido, at the neighbouring village of Las Carreras, is represented in two more sketches, furnished by the same correspondent.

We are enabled, in the mean time, by the aid of Mr. W. H. B. Warner, who has lately been at the Carlist head-quarters in Navarre, to make a page of engraved sketches from that part of the country. Elizondo, a little town of 1300 inhabitants, is half way between Bayonne and Pampeluna, by the middle road, through the fertile valley of Baztan, amidst fine woods of beech, oak, and chestnut, with clear trout-streams. There are two other roads to the south from Bayonne; one by the sea-coast, through San Juan de Luz and Irun; the other more easterly, over the Pyrenees to Roncesvalles, where Charlemagne and our Prince Edward Plantagenet, at distant periods of romantic history, led their armies into Spain. Mr. Warner, being at Elizondo on the 13th ult., made two sketches of that place. One is a view of the town, upon the banks of its small river; the other shows a battalion of Carlist troops about to enter the church.

It is but a few miles out of the way to the famous Pass of Roncesvalles, in a majestic region of mountains and forests, ascending on the French side from St. Pied du Port. Every student of the old legends of chivalry will associate with this place the name of Roland, sometimes called Orlando, that Achilles of the middle ages in Western Europe. But, leaving the road through the Pyrenees, if the traveller goes by the coast he soon reaches Irun; and this is not far from the reputed field of a great battle with the Moors, as Milton says,

Where Charlemagne with all his peerage fell,
At Fontarabie.

The battle, indeed, was fought in 778, but the great Frankish Roman Emperor was not killed there. It is also doubtful whether his nephew Roland, the doughty paladin who blew such a big blast with the horn, was really slain at Roncesvalles. Mr. Warner's pencil, however, sets before us the picturesque situation of Fuenterrabia (as the Spaniards now spell it), a town of 3000 persons, on the river Bidasoa, three miles below Irun. This river, crossed by a railway bridge from the French village of Hendaye, is the well-known boundary of Spain. When Mr. Warner passed there, the bridge was barricaded, and so were the streets of the neighbouring Spanish towns and villages, as the Carlists had recently been driven away from them. The railway had been cut by the Carlists, and the mode of travelling from Bayonne was in the diligence, with mules.

The Republican or National Government troops, which occupied Irun, appear in one sketch, with local volunteers, forming their ranks in the square of the Hôtel de Ville, to march out and fight the Carlists. The regular troops are Carabiniers; their uniform is a blue overcoat and blue trousers with red stripes. The volunteers wear the round red Basque cap, very loose red trousers, and long brown gaiters. The windows of the building are closed by shutters, with loopholes for musketry, to prepare for its defence. Another sketch represents the gate at the entrance to Irun, with soldiers on guard; the custom-house is on the right hand. This town, which has 6000 inhabitants, is the first railway station in Spain. The neighbourhood should be interesting to an Englishman, not for Charlemagne, but for the sake of Wellington's performance here in 1813, when he turned the French, under Soult, fairly out of Spain. Those events were cited by us on a former occasion. Mr. Ford, in Murray's most entertaining "Handbook," notes every point of local history. A recent description of "Biarritz and the Basque Countries," by Count Henry Russell, is also to be commended. Mr. Stanford, at Charing-cross, is the publisher of this book.

Mr. Henry Fowler has been appointed receiver-general for the Bermudas or Somers Islands.

The death is announced of M. Arup, aged eighty-one, Primate of the Church of Norway and Bishop of Christiania.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, May 14.

The Duc de Broglie is evidently a firm believer in the truth of the old proverb that, if speech is silver, silence is golden, the summer Session of the National Assembly, which has just opened at Versailles, having been inaugurated without the customary Presidential message, to which one was always wont to look forward during M. Thiers's sojourn at the helm of the State. The reason of this is that the situation of the present Government has become so precarious that a single adjective wrongly placed might alone suffice to unite against it both Right and Left, and lead to fatal consequences. In such a dilemma to say nothing was naturally the prudent course to adopt. It is only by prolonging the present imbroglio that the Prime Minister and his colleagues can hope for an extension of their lease of power.

The chief incident of the opening sitting was the reading of a letter by which M. Piccon, the Separatist deputy for Nice, resigns his seat. It was an equivocally-worded document, and was received with silent contempt. M. Costa de Beauregard, another deputy for Savoy, however, ascended the tribune after it had been read, and protested in energetic language against the unpatriotic conduct of his ex-colleague. The Constitutional project of the Government, which, it is rumoured, will be laid on the table to-day, comprises, it is said, some twenty articles, concerning the passing of only one of which the Cabinet is reported to be at all anxious. This article regulates the transmission of powers in the event of the Marshal MacMahon's decease previous to Nov. 19, 1880, when the Septennat expires, and specifies that in such an event the President of the Upper Chamber is to assume the executive authority and to convoke both Chambers without delay. The latter, in these circumstances, are to sit together as a constitutional congress, appoint a new chief of the State, and determine the nature and extent of his powers. The other articles of the project enumerate the special electors of different categories who are to be intrusted with the choice of the members of the Upper Chamber and the functions and attributes of this body, which will only differ from other Upper Chambers in this peculiarity, that it will be invested with the right of dissolving Parliament at the request of, or after consultation with, the Executive Power. The project will be, in all probability, referred to the same Commission that recently prepared the new electoral law. It is, of course, extremely doubtful whether it will be voted, and it is certainly not of a nature to conciliate the caballeros of the Extreme Right. Apropos of the latter, it has transpired that the Marquis de Lur-Saluces and M. de la Boullerie interviewed the Comte de Chambord on their behalf during the recess, but that the Prince declined to entertain any overtures that did not take for basis the declaration of principles he made last autumn.

A terrible fire occurred, last Monday night, in the vicinity of the Faubourg St. Antoine. Ten large houses, inhabited almost exclusively by workmen and their families, were burnt to the ground in the course of a few hours, in spite of all the efforts of the firemen. Temporary lodgings, however, were furnished for the victims by the police; and on Tuesday morning the President of the Republic and Madame de MacMahon visited the scene of the calamity, and at once ordered the fitting up of several soup-kitchens. It is estimated that one hundred families have been deprived of shelter by the accident.

Scarcely a week passes in Paris without being signalled by the arrest of some celebrity of the financial world. Not long ago M. Collet-Meygret, ex-senator and a police functionary of the Second Empire, was imprisoned on various charges of fraud; and a few days since M. Troncin Dumersan, the organiser of several French industrial exhibitions, and at one time a secretary of M. Thiers, was arrested for forgery. We now learn that the director of a well-known Paris gas company has met with a similar fate, on the charge of swindling the shareholders out of no less than £400,000; while the son-in-law of a deputy has been condemned to twenty years' penal servitude for defrauding a provincial comptoir-d'escompte of which he was manager.

In resuming my remarks on the Paris salon, I may begin by alluding to the comparative absence of those vast canvases adapted solely to public galleries, which, under the Second Empire, used wellnigh to line the walls of the so-called "Salon d'Honneur." Of the few which are exhibited this year, by far the most important is the rendering, by a Polish artist, of an incident in the palmy days of Polish history, when a King of Poland, of Hungarian origin, could exact the abject submission of the semi-civilised Czar of Muscovy. The subject of the picture is the reception of the envoys sent by Ivan the Terrible to Stephen Bathari, encamped with his army before Pakow. The Polish King, in picturesque national costume and impassive as a statue, is seated in his tent, surrounded by his Generals and Ministers, his drawn sword lying across his knees, and a huge bear's skin spread beneath his feet, seemingly indifferent to the offering of bread and salt which the scared Muscovite Envoys, down on their knees in the snow, in all their barbaric finery, humbly tender him in token of the submission of the terrible Czar, their master. The Papal Ambassador, in consideration of Ivan having promised that he and all his people will embrace the Roman Catholic faith, pleads with the Polish King on their behalf. The subject is treated not so much in accordance with rigid archaic rules as with a Rubens-like luxuriance of grouping and accessories, with, however, far more individual character among the various actors in the scene than the facile Flemish painter would have considered it necessary to introduce. The artist, M. Matejko of Cracow, has, unquestionably, produced a striking work, every figure in which appears to have been carefully studied, but to which the serious exception can be taken that the theatrical element is too dominant. His picture, in fact, might well pass for the set scene in some historical drama north of the Vistula or the Neva.

The French salon, for years past, has been indebted for some of its more remarkable works to the contributions of foreigners either studying at Paris or else anxious for the approval of the higher French critical authorities upon their productions; and although since the war half a score of German artists of repute have ceased sending pictures for exhibition, there are still no lack of Continental painters whose works help to vary the monotony of the national pencil. This year two remarkable pictures are exhibited by a Hungarian artist named Munkacsy, the one entitled "Les Rodeurs de Nuit," the other "Le Mont de Piété." In the former subject four night birds of very different and well indicated types are being conducted early in the morning by a couple of soldiers to the police post. The scene is doubtless laid in Pesth, as the foremost prisoner wears the well-known long, white-braided coat common among the Hungarian peasantry. A group of gossiping market-women appear to be recognising one or more of the culprits, at whom some children on their way to early school, and a gawky girl carrying a baby, stare in mute amazement. A more decided recognition, however, awaits one of the delinquents, to all appearances a decent-looking working man, who cravenly strikes from the horrified gaze of his humble fiancée, accidentally passing by, market-basket on arm, as the party advances down the narrow, dingy street. The story is sufficiently well told, and all the actors in it appear to have been individually studied. The picture, which is painted in a loose, dashing style, is marred, however, by its extreme depth of effect, more especially by the uniform blackness of the shadows. In the companion subject, which apparently represents a Parisian monde de pitié, the various figures have evidently been studied with the same conscientious care; still, a little exaggeration is shown in grouping together so many distinctly typical characters as this interior of a Parisian pawn-broking establishment introduces us to.

SPAIN.

After much discussion and difficulty a new Cabinet has been formed at Madrid. It is composed as follows:—General Zabala, President of the Council and Minister of War; Señor Sagasta, Minister of the Interior; Señor Ulloa, Minister of Foreign Affairs; Señor Comacho, Minister of Finance; Señor Alonso Martinez, Minister of Justice; Señor Alonso Colmenero, Minister of Public Works; Señor Romero Ortiz, Minister of Colonies; and Señor Arias, Minister of Marine.

Bilbao, as soon as it was relieved by the Republican forces, was completely reoccupied. The Carlists are in force on the north side of the town. Don Carlos has issued a proclamation ascribing the defeat at Somorrostro to treachery. The Carlist blockade of San Sebastian is maintained, and several battalions have been sent to Tolosa. A strong division of Republican troops has disembarked at San Sebastian. We hear from Madrid that in Catalonia the remnants of several Carlist bands have been dispersed by the Republican troops, both sides having suffered severely; while, according to a despatch received by the military representative in London of Don Carlos, the Carlist troops have gained a great victory on the Caseras road over the Republicans. The latter are said to have lost 300 prisoners and about 350 in killed and wounded.

HOLLAND.

A kind of political "silver wedding" has been celebrated in Holland; King William III. has reigned twenty-five years, and in honour of the occasion the Hague has been brilliant with Royal banquets and popular fêtes. On Monday the Royal family passed through the streets, which were gaily decorated and thronged with spectators, by whom they were enthusiastically received. His Majesty afterwards appeared on the balcony of the palace and was loudly cheered. Special services were held at the new church in Amsterdam, on Tuesday, in the presence of the King and Queen, to celebrate his Majesty's jubilee. A cantata was sung by a chorus of four hundred voices. Afterwards the King received and replied to addresses from both Chambers and from the Mayor. The King, the members of the Royal family, and the Grand Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Weimar were present on Wednesday night at a gala performance at the theatre. The Ministers and Diplomatic Body were also present, and much enthusiasm was manifested. The King has requested that a national subscription, which was to be offered to him as a gift from the people, should be distributed among the invalids and veterans of the army. In a proclamation which he has issued to his subjects he thanks them for the attachment they have so long displayed towards himself and his dynasty.

The Second Chamber of the States-General has voted, by a majority of 64 to 6, the bill of M. van Houten prohibiting the employment in factories of children under twelve.

ITALY.

Notwithstanding exceedingly bad weather, the opening of the International Flower Show at Florence, on Monday, passed off in the most satisfactory manner. The ceremony was performed by King Victor Emmanuel. His Majesty was accompanied by several of the Ministers and by the members of the Corps Diplomatique. Nearly 300 botanists from all parts of the world were present, besides a large number of foreign visitors. The show took place in the new market, a splendid building. Professor Ancona read a discourse in which he traced the history of horticulture in Florence. The King expressed his gratification with the exhibition, and spoke with several of the principal botanists present.

Wednesday being the Pope's birthday, his Holiness received the congratulations of the cardinals, prelates, and numerous Italian and foreign personages.

The Chamber of Deputies has approved, without debate, the statistical tax proposed by the Government upon imported or exported merchandise.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William has begun his annual regimen at Wiesbaden. He left Berlin late yesterday week, passing through Frankfurt on the following morning. Here he was heartily cheered. Wiesbaden was loyally decorated, and the people loudly testified their pleasure at his return. His Majesty drives out every day, and in the evening visits the theatre. On Wednesday there was a public drive in his Majesty's honour.

In the Lower House of the Prussian Parliament, yesterday week, the bill supplementing the law upon the training and appointment of the Catholic clergy was read the second time, with the addition of clauses accepted by the Minister of Public Worship vesting the right of appointment in church patrons or the general body of the laity; and on Saturday it passed the third reading of the bill relative to the administration of vacant bishoprics by 257 votes against 95. The House rejected a motion proposed by Herr Windthorst to refer the bill to a committee. The bill supplementing the law on the training and appointment of Catholic priests was also read the third time.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

The bills regulating the position of the Roman Catholic Church in Austria and the contributions to be made towards an ecclesiastical fund for covering the expense of Catholic worship have received the Imperial sanction.

After having rejected a proposal to constitute cadres of landwehr cavalry regiments, the Lower House of the Austrian Reichsrath voted the National Defence Bill on Thursday week, and the session was thereupon prorogued.

Hungary is about to have its turn of ecclesiastical legislation. The Minister of Public Worship and a Committee of the Diet have declared themselves favourable to the principle of obligatory civil marriage.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, M. Ghyczy, Minister of Finance, made his financial statement, according to which a sum of 42,000,000 fl. is required in the Budget for 1874 to meet the uncovered expenditure of 1873. He asked for authority to issue the second half of the loan of 153,000,000 fl., and stated that another loan of equal amount would possibly be required. In order to regulate the financial situation up to 1876, he proposed successive sales of public property, but the retention of the State forests. He also proposed the sale of various Government industrial undertakings, and, if necessary, of the State railways. The Loan Bill was referred to the Financial Committee.

GREECE.

The Chamber has been dissolved, and new elections are to take place on July 1.

AMERICA.

In Tuesday's sitting of the Senate the Geneva Award Bill was adopted, and the clause excluding insurance companies from benefiting under the award was restored.

A compromise has been proposed to the rival Governors of Arkansas by the Attorney-General. Mr. Brooks accepted this proposal, but Mr. Baxter, the nominee of the Republicans, rejected it. The only other resource was to convene the State Legislature, which the Attorney-General did for the 25th inst. Another skirmish occurred on Tuesday between the Democratic and Republican factions, in which several persons were killed and wounded. The Government troops succeeded, however, in stopping the fighting.

While we in England have been shivering with cold, intense heat has been felt in New York, the thermometer registering on one day 94 deg. in the shade.

New crevasses have appeared in the banks of the Mississippi, caused by the great floods.

Every prospect of a successful issue is said to be afforded by the negotiations for a reciprocity treaty proceeding between the United States and the Canadian Government.

CANADA.

In the Dominion House of Commons the Premier has given notice of a resolution embodying the New Canadian Pacific Railway scheme. He proposes to reserve the right of constructing and working the line as a Government undertaking or by private contract. For any section contracted for, the Government will grant a subsidy of 10,000 dols. and 20,000 acres of land per mile, and a guarantee of 4 per cent interest on the agreed price.

INDIA.

The Viceroy's weekly telegram, dated May 9, reports:—"No material change. Further fall of rain has facilitated sowings. General upward tendency of prices continues. Transport of grain complete everywhere, except in Eastern Tihoot and on the Brahmapootra. Everything progressing more favourably than was anticipated. Total known famine deaths, including those already reported, twenty-two."

The Times correspondent at Calcutta telegraphs:—"Reports up to the 9th inst. show that distress is spreading in South Tihoot and Singhbhum. Portions of Maunbhoon previously considered safe require relief urgently. The landless classes there have consumed their last stocks, and even the seed grain. Smallpox and cholera are very frequent. The early rice is promising in Dinagore and Purneah, but in Rungpore it is perishing. In Rajshaye and Moorshedabad the land is panting for rain. The heat is intense."

A despatch to the Daily News, dated Durbungah, Tuesday, says that a feeling of hopefulness and confidence prevails.

A telegram from Calcutta, dated Wednesday, received through Reuters's agency, states:—"According to the latest reports from the famine districts 134,200 persons are employed on the relief works, 200,000 are receiving charitable relief, and 450,200 are supported by advance or sales of grain. Piecework is being gradually enforced for able-bodied individuals. The condition of the people generally is better than in February in consequence of the active measures of relief. Severe distress, however, occasionally breaks out, requiring constant vigilance on the part of the authorities, upon whom the natives generally depend to remedy all deficiencies. The rainfall has been generally beneficial in North Behar, although insufficient to allay native anxieties respecting the next crop. Three hundred thousand tons of grain have been carried to the north from the banks of the Ganges; 50,000 now remain to be conveyed. Village inspection and relief are completely organised in the worst districts, and are being extended where required."

An extraordinary session of the Roumanian Chamber at Bucharest has been opened by the President of the Ministry with a Message from Prince Charles.

Famine continues to make fearful ravages in the district of Anatolia, in Asia Minor, and the Turkish Government is making all possible effort to relieve the distress.

The marriage of Duke Eugene of Wurtemberg with the Grand Duchess Vera was splendidly celebrated at Stuttgart, yesterday week, in presence of the Court, the Czar, and a large circle of distinguished guests.

Sir Andrew Clarke, Governor of the Straits Settlements, on returning to Singapore from an expedition up the river Linga, reports that the boats of three of her Majesty's ships attacked a number of piratical stockades and destroyed them.

By the arrival of the Volta from the West Coast of Africa we learn that the last of the Houssa men arrived at Lagos on April 20 from the Ashantee expedition. Lieutenant John Jumbo and the remainder of the Bonny contingent were received at Bonny with all the honours.

Advices from Chili by telegram, via New York, state that Captain Hyde, of the steamer Tacna, which recently capsized, having been imprisoned by the Chilean authorities, Mr. Rumbold, the British Minister, has demanded his release and an indemnity of £25,000. The Minister has furthermore intimated that, if these terms are not complied with, he shall ask for his passports.

Startling intelligence has been received in New York, and telegraphed thence to London, to the effect that Mr. Magee, British Vice-Consul at San José, Guatemala, had received 200 lashes, by order of Gonzales, commandant of that city, and was only saved from further torture, which was to have been followed by capital execution, by the timely arrival of Government troops. The commandant, in attempting to escape to an American steamer, was severely wounded, and would, it was thought, be executed.

In the account we published last week of the Roman Coliseum near Tunis we inadvertently represented Mr. F. Ritchie, the gentleman who sent us the views, as a photographic artist. Mr. Ritchie was a private gentleman travelling for his health, and his skill as an amateur photographer was only one of the many accomplishments that endeared him to his numerous friends. It was with the deepest regret we heard of his untimely death only a few months after he wrote to us.

The composition of the new Parliament, a third part of which consists of fresh personnel, with the recent changes of Ministerial and other office-holders, demanded almost the re-compiling of some useful books of reference. "Debrett's House of Commons and the Judicial Bench" for 1874, edited by Mr. R. H. Mair, was prepared within six weeks to meet this requirement. Its completeness and correctness may be relied upon, and it contains much authentic biographical information, with particulars of genealogy and heraldry not elsewhere to be found in one small volume. The illustrations represent above a thousand armorial bearings of different families. "Dodd's Parliamentary Companion," with records of secured accuracy concerning all the members of the House of Commons, their constituencies, and their elections, is known to be a work of the highest authority and greatest utility in this department.

THE CHURCH.

The Convocation of York will meet for business on Friday next, the 22nd inst., at ten o'clock.

The new Church of St. Gabriel, Newington-butts, was consecrated last Saturday afternoon.

The Archdeacon of London held the annual visitation of his clergy at St. Sepulchre's, Snow-hill, on Tuesday. There was a large attendance.

The Rev. W. H. Carpendale, late Vicar of Naseby, has been presented with a handsome marble timepiece, a silver salver, biscuit-case, and toast-rack, by the parishioners, in token of their sincere regard and esteem, and in recognition of valued services rendered while Vicar.

Messrs. John Foster and Sons, of Bradford, have recently erected in the parish of Egton, Yorkshire (where they have purchased an estate), handsome schools and house, at a cost of £1500. They have also given £800 and a site for a new church. A church is in course of erection at Lightcliffe, in the West Riding, by Major Foster, Cliffe Hill, a member of the same family. It will cost £5000.

The number of emigrants has been so great lately in ships from the Thames that the stock of books at St. Andrew's Waterside Church Mission has been severely taxed, and gifts of Bibles, Prayer-books, magazines, and illustrated periodicals are much wanted. They are carried free by goods-train from Bricklayers' Arms station, London, to the above mission at Gravesend, where the mission clergy visit the ships. Last year the mission received and distributed upwards of £1000 worth of books among sailors and emigrants, and provided books for service in many ships. Within the last six weeks nearly one hundred children have been baptized at Gravesend on board emigrant-ships.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The hebdomadal council at Oxford has decided that the Encomia for 1875 shall take place on Wednesday, June 9. On Tuesday the degree of D.D. honoris causa was conferred upon the Rev. William West Jones, B.D., Fellow of St. John's College, Bishop-Designate of Capetown. In the same convocation letters from the Chancellor, nominating Alexander Staveley Hill, Q.C., M.P., D.C.L., of St. John's College, to the office of deputy high steward of the University, was communicated to the House. Dr. Hill, being present, after making the usual declaration, was admitted to office by the Vice-Chancellor.

At a meeting of the Sedgwick memorial committee, held at Cambridge, on Tuesday—Professor Humphry in the chair—it was reported by the treasurers that more than £10,000 had been promised, of which £9000 had been paid, for the purpose of erecting a geological museum bearing the name of the late Professor, with a personal memorial of the Professor. The Winchester reading prizes for 1874 have been awarded as follows:—1, C. S. Kenny, Downing; 2, F. B. Sowter, Corpus. Dr. J. J. S. Perowne, Fellow of Trinity, has been appointed Lady Margaret's preacher for the ensuing year. The late Mr. Jonas Cressingham, M.A., of Trinity Hall, who died last month, by his will has bequeathed £500 Consols to the Master and Fellows of Trinity Hall, the interest to be applied annually as a prize for an essay.

At a Convocation of the University of London, on Tuesday, a resolution in favour of permitting women to take degrees was carried, after an animated debate, by 81 to 65.—Presentation Day passed off on Wednesday with éclat, Earl Granville presiding as Chancellor, and Mr. Lowe, Sir John Lubbock, and Dr. Carpenter taking part in the proceedings.

The annual election of scholars was held at Westminster on Tuesday, and resulted in the election to Christ Church student-ships of H. S. Otter, Q.S.; W. A. L. P. Evans, Q.S.; and E. G. B. Phillimore. To Trinity College, Cambridge, of E. H. Holthouse and H. L. Randall. The Triplet Exhibitions were obtained by A. W. Wms. Wynn and E. H. Holthouse. The annual dinner in hall was attended by a very large party of Old Westminsters.

Professor Owen, on Tuesday, distributed the prizes and certificates of honour awarded to the successful students at King's College, London.

A gift of £2400 has been made to the Royal School for Daughters of Officers of the Army, for the purpose of providing scholarships which are to have the name of "the Squire Scholarships," in memory of the late Lieutenant-Colonel Squire, of the Royal Engineers.

Mr. P. W. J. Warren, M.A., of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, has been elected Head Master of the Grammar School, Berwick-on-Tweed.

"STILL IN SIGHT."

In catalogues of picture exhibitions it often happens that the works the least worth while talking about have the longest description and quotations appended to their titles. So perhaps it may be said that, generally, the merit of a picture is in inverse ratio to the amount of remark that may be, or at least need be, made about it. The original of our illustration is a case in point; the picture is a good one, and the pencil and graver have done their task too well to require aid from the pen. When we add that it is by E. Vervier, the Dutch painter, and that the scene is probably laid on the Scheveningen coast—that favourite haunt of so many of M. Vervier's compatriots, and of the neighbouring Belgian painters; that the picture was exhibited, two years ago, at the Brussels salon, and last year at the London International Exhibition—what more is there necessary to say? The reader will know that the departure of a little fleet of fishing-boats is a very common event on that coast; that almost any day you may see such small groups as here watching while the sails are "still in sight"—watching the frail boats that carry far out of view, over that sometimes so treacherous North Sea, husband, and son, and father—carrying them away, perchance, never to return! There is nothing, however, in this picture to suggest apprehension—the perils of the deep are not even hinted; yet always these pictures of humble fisher-life seem to possess a degree of pathos, however latent.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Everyone knows what a horror the House of Commons, as a body and in the abstract, has of corrupt practices at elections, but that nevertheless somehow after every election there is a good deal of "that same" to be inquired into. It was in the most exalted virtuous mood that the House one evening lately discussed the propriety of punishing peccant constituencies by suspending writs for certain boroughs which had been reported by election Judges as indulging in eccentricities with regard to voting. A legal member—to wit, Mr. C. E. Lewis—brought on a motion against Stroud, hitherto considered sans reproche, which, though asking for the suspension of the writ for a short time, evidently had an ulterior object—namely, that of the issue of a Commission of Inquiry. It cannot be said that the proposal was received with favour; but it produced a delicious complication of opinion amongst the lawyer members. Arguing by the card, Sir Henry James showed that, having detected, he sought to block, Mr. Lewis's intentions by a technical interpretation of a statute. It was with immense glee and chuckling that Mr. Staveley Hill, having for once discovered a point, launched it at the ex-Attorney-General; while Mr. Forsyth, who intervenes in every discussion, happily with brevity, was caught in a legal mesh by Sir Vernon Harcourt, and tumbled considerably. In the upshot, good opportunity was afforded to Mr. Disraeli, in his half solemn, half mocking way, to twit the "gentlemen of the long robe," as barrister members are Parliamentarily designated, with their perhaps not uncommon divergence of opinion.

First appearances in debate this Session are always more or less noticeable, and something may be here said of one or two. A discussion on the dwellings of the working classes in London was an appropriate occasion for Sir Sidney Waterlow to make his debut. It is well known that no man has a better right, both from an experienced and a benevolent point of view, to speak on this subject than he. But those who did not happen to hear him speechify when he was Lord Mayor were not aware that as a speaker he is an elocutionist, not in the declamatory sense of that word, but because of the clearness, neatness, and balance of his sentences, the easy flow of his utterance, and the earnestness, combined with calmness, of his demeanour. The new member for Buckingham, Mr. Egerton Hubbard, has made his first essay, and, though he was quiet and unpretentious, in a certain sense he may have been said to have been in the clouds—that is, his subject was meteorology—and therefore to the greatest number of his audience he was nebulous. The neophyte Irish members are coming out in fair numbers. The latest first appearance has been Mr. Richard Smyth, of Londonderry, who is a sympathiser with Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and would deal with intemperance after the manner of that quasi-philanthropist. He wants to begin with shutting up all drinking-houses in Ireland on Sundays. His speech was very good, and amusing, owing to the peculiar way in which he dealt with his subject and his unintentionally droll way of putting his points. It was difficult to understand at times whether he was a hater of liquor or not; and of a surety he spoke of the national drink of Ireland with tenderness and even affection—in the abstract, of course. Parenthetically, it may be said here that the magnificent Major Purcell O'Gorman has exhibited himself as a humourist in a novel and artistic way, for he may be said to have executed a practical joke. It was in this wise. He had on the paper a question which was worded slightly after the manner of his speaking style. When he was called, most of the members put themselves into the easiest attitudes for bursting with laughter; some were on the grin, and one or two, more enthusiastic than the rest, actually laughed out before Mr. O'Gorman opened his lips. He, however, in a low voice, merely referred the Minister whom he was to interrogate to the question he had on the paper, without reading it in terms—by the way, a bad custom which is on the increase, as it renders necessary the reading and the giving the answer together by the official whose duty it is to reply. There was manifest disappointment—so overt that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach, who was to respond, chimed in with the humour of the House, and requested Mr. O'Gorman to read out his question. He, doubtless chuckling at the mortification of the gaping crowd that was awaiting the tickling which was expected, gabbled over the interpellation in the most common-place manner—thus, to use a slangy but expressive word, "selling" the audience.

It is believed that we have had the very last debate on the state of the Navy, and that was vivacious and nearly hot. In some respects there was a sameness in its character, for the disputants were the same; and there was a touch of the toujours perdrix in listening to Sir John Hay (though he was rather bated and gentle) and Admiral Elliot, and even Mr. E. J. Reed, while as to Mr. Samuda's speaking, nepenthe is nothing to its somnolent effect; and though Mr. Ward Hunt was still burly and assertive in pessimist opinion as to the condition of the fleet, he was perhaps a trifle subdued in his manner. But a new disputations element was introduced by Sir Vernon Harcourt, who, not having the fear of being called a "sea lawyer," which is a peculiar nautical expression that is not exactly applicable to him, ran the risk of being designated a "lawyer at sea," which might have fitted him if he had not received so good a brief, and got it up with such care and assiduity. As it was, he infused into his speech so much of his biting humour, which almost seems to be modelled on that of Mephistopheles, and was so ingenious in doing that which was set him to do—namely, to vindicate the naval administration of the late Government—that he lifted the discussion out of the region of wearisome repetition.

Possibly because there is a by no means mysterious affinity between beer and corrupt electoral practices, the House mustered strongly for the second reading of the Intoxicating Liquors Bill of the Government, and it was notable that, with a natural desire to witness the vivisection of his own Licensing Act which was imminent, Lord Aberdeen looked down on the proceedings from the calm region of the Peers' Gallery. It was in a Boanerges vein that Mr. Melly argued his amendment, which went to the retaining of the status quo in liquor legislation, and very noisy he was. If it had been predestined that he was to have any imitators, happily such an inflection was checked by the early advent of Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, who will go down to a grateful posterity as one who brought profound statesmanship successfully to bear upon beer-houses, with an intimation that on the crucial question involved the Government would throw their bill on the table, to be hacked and hewed according to the fancy of the House. The discussion, if not exactly paralysed, lost most of its reality. To be sure, some speeches that had been prepared were duly let off. Thus Mr. Forsyth, with a bearing proud in proportion to the distinction which he had achieved, announced, as a plenipotentiary from the publicans of Marylebone, that they held to the "Bruce-system" as regarded hours of closing their temples dedicated to Bacchus. As may be supposed, this declaration produced a profound impression, and for a time Mr. Forsyth was the hero of a sensation. Then Sir Vernon Harcourt in his Parliamentary character of a "man most various," indulged in that terrible jocoseness of his which suggests ideas on a large scale of the cruel sport of a cat with the victim within its claws; and Mr. Osborne Morgan, who seems to be an especial bête noire of the Conservatives, had to deliver a speech carefully compounded of declamation, tropes, and would-be comic illustrations, amidst the most pitiless pelting of jeers, groans, and irritating ejaculations that ever member had to encounter. Besides, he had to bear the solid quizzing of Mr. Locke, amidst the rapturous cacophonies of the boisterous Ministerialists.

It has been observable that Mr. Disraeli, possibly by design, is careful to avoid a Parliamentary error of his predecessor in his high office, that of intervening and making passionate speeches on every subject, like the elephant despoising not the picking of pins when it has no gigantic trees to tear down. The Prime Minister, until this week, had only made one speech proper during this Session; but he thought the Household Suffrage (counties) Bill worthy of his intervention, and was delivered of an address which was effective in itself, and was accepted besides for its rarity.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week Lord Redesdale introduced a resolution aimed against the practice of applying to Parliament for power to make short lines of railway for the development of private property. Some conversation took place on the subject of the boundaries of Afghanistan and of Ritualism in the Church of England. The Game Birds (Ireland) Bill was passed.

The Duke of Richmond, on Monday, announced that the Whitsuntide recess will extend from the 22nd inst. to June 2. The second reading of the Public Worship Regulation Bill was moved by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It was supported by the Archbishop of York, Lord Shaftesbury, the Bishop of Peterborough, the Duke of Marlborough, and several other Peers. A full and ample discussion ensued, and eventually the bill was read the second time.

Lord Carnarvon, on Tuesday, made the promised statement of the Government's policy in relation to the Gold Coast, which was, in substance, that England should retain her possessions there and cultivate a policy of alliance with Ashantees. The Boundaries of Archdeaconries and Rural Deaneries Bill, the Colonial Clergy Bill, the Betting Bill, and the Consolidated Fund (£13,000,000) Bill were passed through Committee; and the Public Worship Regulation Bill was committed pro forma for the insertion of the amendments indicated by the Primate in the debate of the previous day.

Thursday being Ascension Day, their Lordships did not meet.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A new writ was issued, yesterday week, for the election of two new members for Stroud, notwithstanding an effort made to suspend it. The condition of the dwellings of working people in London was the subject of an important discussion, a remedial bill being proposed by the Government; and the prohibition of the sale of liquors on Sunday in Ireland was brought forward by means of an abstract motion, which, in the end, was rejected by 210 votes against 110.

It was stated by Mr. Disraeli, on Monday, that he could not add a grant to the pension of £200 a year already assigned to the children of Dr. Livingstone, but he would consider the claims of some other relatives. There were a great many petitions on the Licensing Bill, the majority of them being against any change of the system under the present Act. When the second reading was called Mr. Melly moved an amendment, which would have negatived the measure; but, after considerable discussion, Mr. Melly withdrew his amendment, and the bill was read the second time.

The business on Tuesday was of limited interest. It was announced by Mr. Cross that the Committee on the Licensing Bill would not be taken until the Thursday after the Whitsuntide recess. The subjects discussed were the exemptions of the law officers of the Crown from the Constitutional rule which insists on members of Parliament vacating their seats on taking office; the relative salaries of the officers of the Lords and Commons; the case of an Irish Ribbonman imprisoned under a summary warrant; and Mr. Whalley's committal for contempt of court, which last subject was cut short by a count-out.

The House was occupied at its afternoon sitting on Wednesday with a debate on the Household Franchise in Counties Bill, introduced by Mr. Trevelyan. The second reading was negatived by 287 to 173 votes. The Working Men's Dwelling Bill was read the second time, and the Innkeepers' Liability Bill was talked out.

On Thursday the Customs and Inland Revenue Bill was read the second time. The Registration of Births and Deaths Bill was read the second time, upon an undertaking given by Mr. Solator-Booth that he would assent to certain alterations when the bill was in Committee, which were intended to meet the objections made by Dr. Lyon Playfair. The Juries Bill was then considered in Committee, and occupied the attention of the members for nearly the remainder of the sitting.

The Select Committee on the Metropolitan Building Act's met on Wednesday, and selected Sir Seymour Fitzgerald as chairman. The Committee are to meet on Tuesday next to proceed with the measure.

The next examination of candidates for admission to the Royal Military Academy will begin, at the London University, on July 7, the medical inspection taking place on the previous day at the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich.

Henceforward, by approval of her Majesty, the 99th Foot will be styled the Duke of Edinburgh's Regiment, and will bear on its second, or regimental, colour the coronet and cypher of his Royal Highness.

Princess Dora d'Istria has been unanimously elected an honorary member of the Italian Heraldic-Genealogical Academy in consequence of her publication of her work, "The Albanians in Roumania," the history of the Ghika Princes.

With Sir Henry James, Q.C., M.P., in the chair, the fifty-ninth anniversary dinner of the Artists' General Benevolent Institution was held last Saturday evening at Willis's Rooms. Speeches were delivered by the chairman, by Mr. Horsley, K.A., Mr. Forsyth, Q.C., M.P., Mr. Anthony Trollope, Mr. Twells, M.P., and Sir Henry Thompson; and subscriptions to the amount of £1940 were announced.

It seems that the value of the old china presented by Mr. Robert Lang to the Bristol Corporation has been over-estimated, probably from the supposition that his offer embraced the whole of his collection, instead of being limited to pieces manufactured at Bristol and Plymouth. Mr. Lang, who, we learn from the local papers, is very sensitive on the matter of this over-estimation, modestly fixes the worth of his gift at £600.

The struggle between masters and men in the colliery districts has continued, during the week, with varying fortunes, causing great fluctuations in the price of coals.—The lock-out of the agricultural labourers continues, and appears to extend rather than to diminish in area. It is stated that nearly 5000 labourers left England alone during the month of April. Many of these have gone from Oxfordshire and the adjoining counties

MAY MEETINGS.

Chief among the meetings of societies for religious and benevolent purposes recently held are the following:—

Lord Aberdeen presided, on Thursday week, at the annual meeting of the London City Mission. The report showed that 427 missionaries had been employed during the year—an increase of ten on the year preceding. The number was wrongly given as 147 last week. Both the legacies and the subscriptions received during the year were in excess of previous incomes from such sources. The meeting was addressed by the Rev. Wm. Curling, and resolutions in furtherance of the objects of the mission were put and carried.

The anniversary meeting of the Sunday School Union was held the same day, in Exeter Hall—Mr. S. Morley, M.P., presiding. The report stated that the total of metropolitan and provincial auxiliary schools was 4075, representing 96,743 teachers and 847,185 scholars. This extension had been going on year by year, and the number of teachers and scholars had more than doubled since the census of 1851. Among the speakers were the Rev. Paxton Hood, the Rev. Mark Pearce, Mr. M'Arthur, M.P., and Pastor Tenvi, of Sweden.

The annual meeting of the Church Pastoral Aid Society was held the same afternoon, at St. James's Hall—the Earl of Shaftesbury occupying the chair. The report and financial statement, which were read by Mr. Speck, the hon. secretary, showed the total receipts of the past year as £58,955, and the expenditure as £49,656. The total increase in the receipts as compared with last year were £10,555. During the past year seventeen grants had become vacant, and 105 new grants had been made. The existing grants are 577 to clergymen, and 221 to lay assistants. To sustain these an income of £64,644 is required. The receipts included £4000 from the four sons of the late Mr. Wright, of Derby, in memory of their father, who had also been a most liberal supporter of this society. The Bishop of St. Asaph, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, the noble chairman, and others, addressed the meeting.

The general annual Wesleyan missionary meeting was held in Exeter Hall—Mr. Henry Mitchell, of Bradford, being in the chair. The report stated that the receipts for the year were £167,995 (the largest annual amount ever raised by the society), and the payments £166,458. The report spoke of the operations of the society and referred to losses sustained through the death of friends.—The annual meeting on behalf of the Wesleyan home missions was held in the City-road Chapel, the chair being taken by Mr. W. S. Allen, M.P. The financial report read by the treasurer, the Rev. J. W. Greeves, stated that in 1856, when the fund was re-organised, the income amounted to £11,000, while it now amounts to £30,000. There is, however, a debt of £9000.

Earl Russell took the chair, on Monday, at the annual meeting of the British and Foreign School Society, and in his address argued strongly in favour of religious teaching in schools. Mr. Forster, who also spoke, held that denominational teaching had but little effect in making children theologians and controversialists, but that the primary principles which were instilled into their minds were love to God and duty to one's neighbour. Dean Stanley paid a tribute to the services of Lord Russell in connection with education; and the meeting was subsequently addressed by Earl Fortescue, the Earl of Chichester, Lord Aberdeen, Sir T. Fowell Buxton, and others. The report stated that the work of the society had been considerable during the past year, but that the income did not keep pace with the expenditure.

The annual meeting of the Colonial and Continental Church Society was held on Monday, at St. James's Hall, under the presidency of the Marquis of Cholmondeley. The Rev. Mr. White read the report detailing the work of the society during the year on the Continent and in the colonies, which had been of a more successful and satisfactory character than usual. The total income for the year from all sources had been £35,238, showing an increase of £4222 over the preceding year. The chairman, the Bishop of Goulburn, the Bishop Suffragan of Guildford, and others, addressed the meeting.

The anniversary of the distribution of scholars' prizes to the Ragged School Union took place at Exeter Hall on Monday night—Sir R. W. Carden in the chair—when a choir was formed of 600 young people now in service receiving prizes, and addresses were delivered by the chairman, Bishop Ryan, the Rev. George Pearse (who addressed the children), and the Rev. William Cadman, M.A. The boys and girls taking prizes were from sixty-four schools in London and its suburbs. The Earl of Shaftesbury, who arrived at a late period in the evening, was received with great cheering, and closed the proceedings with a characteristic address.

The anniversary festival of the Royal Free Hospital was held, on Monday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The secretary announced subscriptions amounting to about £2675, including a fifth donation of £1000 from "D.G."

The Society for the Suppression of Mendicancy held its anniversary meeting on Monday. According to the report, which was adopted, the number of metropolitan paupers decreased during the past year from 109,851 to 105,795. The number of applicants relieved by the society's tickets was 6683, being 445 more than were relieved the year before. By the aid of the society 586 vagrants have been apprehended, of whom 374 were committed to prison, the others being discharged with a caution. Twenty-two well-known impostors also had been sentenced to various terms of imprisonment.

The anniversary meeting of the Railway Benevolent Institution was held on Tuesday, at Freemasons' Tavern—the Earl of Shrewsbury in the chair. The subscriptions, including 50 gr. from the chairman, amounted to £2100.

On the following day the Earl of Shrewsbury presided at the anniversary festival of the Royal Masonic Institution for Girls, when £8050 was subscribed, being the largest sum ever collected on behalf of this institution.

At the biennial festival in aid of the funds of the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, Golden-square, held on Wednesday, at Willis's Rooms, £1550 was subscribed.

The annual gathering of the Young Men's Christian Association took place on Tuesday. The meeting of the General Domestic Servants' Benevolent Institution was held at the Hanover-square Rooms—Lord Ebury presiding, and the Duke of Westminster being amongst the speakers. The Bishop of Oxford took the chair at the meeting of the Church of England Sunday School Institute; and the Bishop of Ripon at the yearly gathering of the Irish Church Missions to the Roman Catholics. Mr. Morley, M.P., presided at the meeting of the Home Missionary Society.

The Duke of Norfolk has given £1000 towards the purchase of an organ for St. Mary's Roman Catholic church at Sheffield.

Arguments for a reduction of newspaper postage, to meet the case of the smaller journals, have been urged upon the Postmaster-General by a large number of provincial publishers.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Mr. John Farley Leith, Q.C., M.P., and Mr. Alfred Wills, Q.C., have been appointed Benchers of the Middle Temple.

Mr. Jonas, who has been Governor of Newgate fifty years, has sent in his resignation.

The boating season was opened on the river Lea last Saturday with a procession of boats composed of the clubs represented on the River Lea Clubs Committee.

A donation of 100 gs. has been voted by the Company of Clothworkers to the Palestine Exploration Fund, in aid of their operations at Jerusalem, and of the survey of the Holy Land.

On the premises of Messrs. Dyer and Robson, of East Greenwich, an explosion of composition stars, or pellets of a bright-burning mixture used in the manufacture of rockets, took place, killing one girl and terribly scorching another.

The first of the series of floral exhibitions, which add so much to the attractions of the Crystal Palace during the summer months, took place last Saturday, and drew together thousands of people.

Compensation to the amount of £100 was on Monday granted by a common jury, in the Court of Queen's Bench, in the case of a journeyman carpenter who had been bitten by a dog belonging to an innkeeper at Dulwich.

A meeting of the friends and admirers of the works of the late Mr. Owen Jones was held at 16, Carlton House-terrace, on Monday, at which it was resolved that the deceased gentleman's great services to decorative art should be recognised by a suitable memorial. A liberal subscription was entered into.

It was resolved, at a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners of 1851, held at Marlborough House last Saturday, under the presidency of the Prince of Wales, that the series of International Exhibitions shall be discontinued after the closing of the present Exhibition, in October. The Commissioners at the same time entered on a consideration as to the best means of utilising the buildings as public museums and galleries of science and art.

In the metropolis 2447 births and 1337 deaths were registered last week, the former having been 38 more and the latter 170 less than the average numbers. One person died from small-pox, 44 from measles, 16 from scarlet fever, 3 from diphtheria, 36 from whooping-cough, 27 from different forms of fever, and 21 from diarrhoea. The mean temperature at the Royal Observatory, Greenwich, was only 44 deg., and was 7 deg. below the average for the corresponding period in fifty years.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 97,928, of whom 34,368 were in workhouses and 63,570 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 8814, 12,023, and 31,995 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 633, of whom 416 were men, 185 women, and 32 children under sixteen.

The municipal banquet at the Mansion House is to be repeated this year. There will be a large selection from the Mayors of England and Wales, the whole of the Scotch Provosts, and the Mayors of Ireland. To meet these gentlemen a number of Peers and Members of Parliament from the three countries will be invited, in addition to the Court of Aldermen and the chairmen of committees. The banquet will take place on Wednesday, June 3.

The spring meeting of the National Rifle Association took place last Saturday—the Duke of Cambridge in the chair. The details of the prize meeting at Wimbledon, which is to open on July 6, were discussed at some length. The additions to the prize-list represent nearly £1000, and it is the best which the association has ever been enabled to offer. The Council, having judged it necessary to deal with the question of telescopes, wished it to be clearly understood that what is commonly called "coaching" will be strictly forbidden.

The Albert gold medal of the Society of Arts, instituted to reward distinguished merit in promotion of arts, manufactures, and commerce, has been awarded for the present year to O. Siemens, D.C.L., F.R.S., "for his researches in connection with the laws of heat, and the practical applications of them to furnaces used in the arts; and for his improvements in the manufacture of iron; and generally for the services rendered by him in connection with economisation of fuel in its various applications to manufactures and the arts."

The fund being raised at the Mansion House by the Lord Mayor and an influential executive committee for the relief of the sufferers by the disastrous famine in Bengal and Behar has nearly reached the sum of £100,000. Of this £80,000 has been transmitted to Calcutta. A gratifying communication was received by the Lord Mayor on Tuesday, inclosing a sum of £1041 13s. 4d. subscribed by the colonists in British Guiana. A fifteenth donation of £100 from the subscribers of what Lord Lawrence called "the inexhaustible Quiver" has been forwarded to the fund, and Mr. Arthur Byass has contributed £500.

By permission of the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland a meeting, very influentially attended, was held, on Tuesday afternoon, under the presidency of the Duke of Teck, at Stafford House, to consider the question of the East African slave trade. Resolutions were passed condemning the slave trade as "not only ruinous to Africa, but as entirely opposed to the interests of civilised countries, preventing as it does the introduction and spread of Christianity and civilisation," declaring that it was incumbent on the nation to continue the policy pursued by the Government in dealing with the West African slave trade, which gave rise to the mission of Sir Bartle Frere, and expressing a hope that it would be prosecuted to a successful issue. Sir Bartle Frere, Sir John Glover, Dr. Moffat, and Mr. H. M. Stanley were among the speakers.

At a meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution, on Thursday week, at its house, John-street, Adelphi, rewards to the amount of £224 were granted to life-boat crews of the institution for services rendered during the past month, and other rewards were voted to the crews of shore-boats for saving life from wrecks on our coasts. Payments to the amount of £2860 were likewise ordered to be made on different life-boat establishments. Various contributions to the society were announced, amongst which was £25 collected by some friends at Foo-chow-foo, China. The English residents at St. Petersburg had asked and received the co-operation of the institution in the building of the two life-boats which they had presented to the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh on the occasion of their marriage, which boats are to be placed by their Royal Highnesses at the disposal of the Russian Life-Boat Society. It is well known that the Duke of Edinburgh takes considerable interest in the welfare of the life-boat cause. A new life-boat had been sent to Skegness, on the coast of Lincolnshire; and life-boat establishments were ordered to be formed at Cresswell (Northumberland) and Seascale (Cumberland). Reports were read from the inspector and assistant inspectors of life-boats on their recent visits to the coast.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The result of the race for the Guineas still leaves the Derby a very open question. Atlantic did not beat Reverberation easily enough to make it a certainty that their positions will not be reversed at Epsom; and, with the exception of Ecossais, there was nothing much behind them. The last-named has since become very lame in one of his hind legs, and, as he is only half fit, the necessary stoppage in his work must prove fatal to any little chance he may have possessed. Of the remainder, Spectator is not engaged in the great event, and we are scarcely likely to hear much more of such very "rough outsiders" as Whitehall, Boscobel, Vincent, Trent, Lacy, and Dukedom, albeit Boscobel is said to be susceptible of great improvement, all of which he will thoroughly need, as he was beaten some twenty lengths from the winner. Then Mr. Merry's quartet does not give much promise of another Doncaster coup; indeed, we believe we are right in saying that that gentleman has not a good three-year-old in his stable; and we are getting a little tired of the "only half-trained" excuse for George Frederick, which we fully expect to hear again after the Derby. Feu d'Amour, who on his two-year-old form would possess a wonderful chance, is suffering from cracked heels; while it is fairly argued that the undefeated Novateur has "beaten nothing." Couronne de Fer, on the strength of some good two-mile gallops, has returned to something like his old price in the betting; but Mr. Padwick and Matthew Dawson are scarcely the men to sell a Derby winner out of the stable. Then, despite Tipster's defeat of Atlantic at York, his two-year-old form will not bear a thorough investigation; and as a second trial is said to prove Aquilo to be slightly superior to the Two Thousand winner, the prophets will have a more difficult task than usual this year.

The racing on the Thursday and Friday at Newmarket was not so good as on the earlier days; still there were some very interesting events. Minister and Peeping Tom met at level weights in a sweepstakes over the R.M., and the easy defeat of the latter fully confirmed the City and Suburban form. The First Spring Two-Year Old Stakes brought out a field of nineteen, and introduced us to about the best youngster that has been seen in public during the present season. This was Chaplet, a filly by Beadsman—Madame Eglantine, and therefore own sister to such celebrities as The Palmer, Morna, and Rosicrucian. She was bought for Lord Hartington, at Sir Joseph Hawley's sale, for 1700 gs.; and at the same time Madame Eglantine, with an own sister to Chaplet at her foot, was taken by the Stud Company for 1000 gs.—a remarkably cheap purchase, as, if she has done well, the filly alone will fetch more than that sum at the next sale. In the race in question Ladylove was made favourite; but Chaplet beat her in a canter by four lengths, and would doubtless prove a worthy antagonist to the speedy Cashmere. The accident to Ecossais left George Frederick to win the Newmarket Stakes; but, as he had only the wretched Beggarman to beat, the performance makes his Blue Ribbon prospects neither better nor worse than before. Lady Roseberry ran very badly over the last half of the R.M.; and we fancy that she is a little deficient in speed, and requires a longer distance to show to advantage. The One Thousand Guineas was not a particularly interesting race, for only nine came to the post, and it was generally regarded as a mere match between La Courouse and Apology, the latter of whom has done so well since last season that she was firmly established as favourite before the fall of the flag. The talent proved perfectly correct in their selections, for La Courouse, after making the whole of the running, was caught by Apology, and suffered a clever half-length defeat. As Mr. Launde's filly stays so well, and, like her half-sister Agility, appears of a very improving sort, she is sure to run well in the Oaks; but Miss Toto has always been much superior to La Courouse, and therefore M. Lefevre has a capital chance of avenging his One Thousand defeat. Mr. Merry's stable appears quite out of form, and Lady Bothwell, a good two-year-old performer, was beaten off last. Two very unusual circumstances occurred during the week. A match was made over the yearling course, which is only about a quarter of a mile in length; and, in another match, Fairy Form carried only 5 st. 3 lb., which is 4 lb. less than the lowest weight recognised in racing.

For some seasons past the Chester Cup has been gradually losing its position as one of the principal spring handicaps, and last year there was scarcely any betting upon it until within a few days of its decision. We are glad to see that a reaction seems to have taken place, and for weeks past a long list of quotations has regularly appeared. The racing on the first day was uncommonly good; but, though the weather was all that could be wished, the attendance of spectators was smaller than usual. Oxonian found the mile and a quarter in the Grosvenor Stakes a little too far for him, and sustained a clever defeat from Encore; and the victory of the Miss Hawthorn colt in the Belgrave Cup put the friends of Organist in high feather, as he gave the "nameless one" 16 lb. and an easy beating a few weeks ago. The two-year-old racing was also very interesting. The Mostyn Stakes was won by Telescope, who just caught The Fakenham Ghost in the last few strides. The former is by Speculum—Remembrance, and is therefore an own brother to that very speedy filly Memoria; while The Fakenham Ghost is an admirable specimen of Mr. Somerville's clever nomenclature, being by Suffolk—Fiction. Bonny Blue Eye, who won the Vale Royal Stakes, is another very highly-connected lady, as she is by Lord Clifden—Bonny Blink, and therefore own sister to Hawthornden, who won the St. Leger in 1870. The same filly commenced proceedings on Wednesday by winning another race; and, having noted that Zanzibar's Derby chance was completely extinguished by his miserable exhibition in the Sixth Beaufort Biennial, we may pass on to the Chester Cup. Despite his knack of breaking blood-vessels, The Preacher (7 st. 9 lb.) started first favourite; but the open character of the race may be imagined from the fact that ten horses were backed at 14 to 1 and under. Before they passed the Stand the second time the favourite dropped away, having burst another blood-vessel, "his custom always of an afternoon," and soon afterwards Cingalina (7 st. 8 lb.) also fell back, having been a good deal out about in getting round some of the turns. Five furlongs from home Imporer (6 st. 8 lb.) was beaten; and Mont Valerien led into the straight. In a few strides further, however, Organist (6 st. 6 lb.) dashed past him and, quickly disposing of Leolinus (5 st. 9 lb.), won easily by two lengths. Bertram (8 st. 2 lb.) finished the same distance behind Leolinus. The Colonel (7 st. 12 lb.) found the distance much too far for him, and Suleiman (7 st. 11 lb.) and Imporer (6 st. 8 lb.) also ran very badly. We had almost omitted to mention that, in the Dee Stand Welter Cup, Aragon and Bras de Fer fell heavily, but Bruckshaw and J. Osborne, who rode them, happily escaped any serious injuries.

For some little time past it has been apparent that Cook has not been playing billiards at all in his usual grand style, and this was fully confirmed by the hollow defeat he received from T. Taylor on Friday week. The match, which took place at the Guildhall Tavern, was 1000 up, and the champion attempted to concede the very long start of 300 points. Taylor at once got away with contributions of 45, 59, and 45, and reached 534 to 64; and from this point the game proceeded very evenly, the younger player winding up with two grand all-round breaks of 75 and 48, and winning by exactly half the game, after two hours' play. There is no question that Taylor had far too much start; but, at the same time, we never saw him play so well. He never hesitated to go for a difficult shot if there was a good game left on; yet, from first to last, he showed the greatest generalship and caution, and gave many judicious misses, even when it appeared impossible that he could lose. The red ball was a very bad one, seldom running truly, and this appeared to demoralise Cook; but a rest from his incessant travelling about the country to play exhibition matches will doubtless restore him to his very best form.

THE MISSION TO YARKUND.

The remote and secluded country of Eastern Turkestan, consisting of the provinces of Yarkund and Kashgar, has lately been put in diplomatic communication with the British Indian Government. The mission of Mr. T. Douglas Forsyth, C.B., to the present ruler of those Mohammedan States, Yakoob Khan, who has lately obtained the higher title of Ameer instead of Atalik Ghazeh, is of some political and commercial importance. The provinces now visited by a British Envoy were, until some ten or twelve years ago, part of the vast Chinese empire, from which, indeed, they are separated by vast deserts. They are situated in the very centre of Asia, and surrounded on three sides—north, west, and south—by unbroken ranges of mountains, some of the highest in the world. These are the Thian Shan, or Celestial Mountains, which separate Eastern Turkestan from Siberia; the Bolor Dag and Pamir table-land, to the west, shutting it up from the plains of the Oxus and Jaxartes (Amoo and Syr Daria); and the ranges of the Karakorum and Kuen-Lin, outer ramparts of the Himalayas, dividing Yarkund from Thibet and the valley of the Upper Indus, beyond Cashmere. The rivers of Yarkund and Kashgar flow eastward in the direction of China, but are lost in lakes of the desert. In ancient times—that is to say, from the fifth to the fifteenth century of the Christian era—there was much commerce with this part of the world. The population, reckoned to be several millions, have attained a fair degree of Oriental civilisation. It is hoped that British manufactures and Indian products may be introduced to compete with those sent by Russian traders from Khokand. Mr. Forsyth, Mr. Shaw, and Dr. G. Henderson, three or four years ago, made their way into Eastern Turkestan, then but little known, and friendly messages were exchanged between Yakoob Khan and our Indian Government. The special Embassy now in that country, sent by Lord Northbrook last autumn, reached Yarkund on Nov. 8, and went on to Kashgar on the 20th. We were furnished by one of its members—Captain E. H. Chapman, R.A.—with some good sketches of the mountain country over which they travelled, from Leh, in Ladak or Middle Thibet, up the Shyok valley, the stupendous glaciers of that region, and the Karakorum Pass, at a height of 18,000 feet. Several other of his sketches, from Cashmere, from Leh, from the Alpine road beyond, and from the city of Yarkund and Yanghi Shahr, are presented in this week's paper. The current May number of Macmillan's Magazine contains a description by Captain Chapman of the city bazaar at Yarkund, which our readers will like to peruse.

Kashmere or Cashmere, the Indian province which adjoins the Punjab to the north, has often been described, with its capital, Srinuggur, on the Jhelum river. The situation of that town, once populous and wealthy, is exceedingly picturesque. Our view of it is from a photograph. It stands amidst several waters—the winding river, the ancient canals, and a lake two or three miles broad, with steep hills or cliffs around it, and with the mountains in the distance. The old houses on the river banks, though ruinous, have a quaintly engaging aspect. Their sloping roofs of bark are covered with earth, in which tufts of grass, weeds, and wild flowers grow abundantly. The projecting balconies and latticed windows show beautiful wood-carving. The province, ruled by a Maharajah feudatory to the British Indian empire, is said to be very badly governed. But the Maharajah did his best to help this expedition.

Ladak, the country east of Cashmere, is the upper valley of the great river Indus, but is a portion of Thibet, inhabited by Mongolians, who profess the Buddhist religion of the Lamas. The climate is intensely dry and cold, from the immense elevation of the country, which is a mere niche amongst the lofty mountains. Captain Chapman sends photographs of the palace, of the Lamas' monastery at Hemis, and of the bazaar in the town of Leh. We gave, some two or three months since, an illustration of a Buddhist festival masquerade in the monastery of Hemis, not far from Leh.

The route from Leh to Yarkund, which Mr. Forsyth and his companions travelled in October, was described in our former notices of this subject. It is tremendously difficult and toilsome. We cannot believe that it will ever be made convenient for ordinary traffic. One of the views here given shows the party at breakfast in the Sasser Pass, 17,000 ft. above the sea level. Their way for eighteen miles lay through glaciers to which those of Switzerland are nothing. In some places there was danger from the deep crevasses hidden beneath soft fresh snow. But the travellers got over this pass without any disaster, using yaks or Thibet oxen instead of horses or mules. They were glad of a hot breakfast in that bleak place, after so much fatigue.

Besides the tent in which they lodged at each day's encampment, they had the akoe of their Kirghiz followers, in which the gentlemen would sit to smoke a quiet pipe, after dinner or supper. This akoe, mentioned on a previous occasion, is something between a tent and a hut. It is round, with a low domed roof, having a hole at top for the chimney. The wall is of willow wands, so interlaced that they can be opened as wicker-work or folded together for carriage. The roof is of long rods, which are laid upon the top of the wall, meeting a hoop in the middle above. The whole is covered with thick white felt. It is portable, easily set up, and a comfortable shelter. Two yaks conveyed it on the road; it was erected in ten minutes, and a dozen persons could find room in it, reclining on carpets and cushions. A hole dug in the ground, beneath the central opening in the roof, was the fireplace to warm the dwelling.

Yarkund, the commercial capital of the Eastern Turkestan country, is situated in lat. N. 38 deg. 25 min., long. E. 77 deg. 12 min., and on ground 3800 ft. above the sea. It is probable that this ancient city has not been much changed since the time of Marco Polo, five centuries and a half ago. It is built entirely of mud, and is surrounded by a mud wall from 25 ft. to 30 ft. high, in which are five gateways. Fifty small bastions provide flanking defence along an extent of three miles and a half in circuit. The population has been variously estimated at from 35,000 upwards; it probably averages some 40,000. Here it is that the merchant from India, bringing bales of British manufactured goods, would encounter the competition of Russian trade. Chintzes and cotton cloths from Manchester and Moscow are exposed in the same stalls; silk traders from the Punjab fraternise with Nogai dealers from Tashkend. The market is held once a week, on Thursdays, when nearly all

(Registered); compass, five octaves; price FIVE GUINEAS.
Manufactured expressly for CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoted of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This and has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM, with TWO ROWS OF KEYS, four feet and eight feet tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 5 octaves, F to F. The combined keyboards have a compass of 64 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S NEW ORGAN MODEL.
A. Two Rows of Keys. Knee Pedal to swell for upper row; 5 feet 4 inches; four feet, and sixteen feet tone (sub-bass), adapted for Church or Drawing-Room. The appearance is elegant and the tone round and full. Price—Oak, 25s.; Rosewood or Walnut, 30s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PORTABLE AMERICAN ORGAN, with automatic swell, compass four octaves, solid dark oak case, 12 ft. 6 in. high, 18 in. wide, 18 in. deep. Suitable for travelling or the extreme changes of an Indian climate. Price 12s. 6d.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street, wholesale and retail agent for the United Kingdom and the Colonies.

CHAPPELL and Co. have on View

CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL-ROOM
PIANOFORTE, in Canadian Walnut or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and excellence of workmanship. It has the merit of standing well in tone, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT
PIANO, with Folding Keyboard, Check Action, Triebel Table, in solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case. THIRTY GUINEAS; or, in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a sea voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metal plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CRAMER'S THREE YEARS' SYSTEM of HIRE, by which the Pianoforte, American Organ, Harmonium, Organ, or Harp becomes the property of the hiree, though partially adopted by others, is carried out on a thoroughly large and liberal scale only by themselves.

CRAMER and Co. cannot too frequently repeat that their Three Year System of Hiring Pianofortes is not confined to those of their own manufacture, although they are as good as any, and better than most, but include instruments by all the eminent manufacturers, BROADWOOD, COLLARD, BEARD, and KIRKMAN, of whose Pianofortes Cramer and Co. have always in stock a very extensive and complete selection, ready to be sent out at any time.

BROADWOOD'S PIANOFORTES.
CRAMER supply every size of these instruments on their Three Year System of hire.—Pianoforte Gallery (largest in Europe), 207 and 208, Regent-street.

NEW GRAND and COTTAGE PIANO-
FORTES, by Broadwood, Collard, Erard, Kirkman, and Cramer. The best instruments of every description for hire at the usual rates.—Pianoforte Gallery, 207 and 208, Regent-street, W.

CRAMER'S HARMONIUMS.—Some years since Cramer and Co. found it necessary, on account of the French difficulties, as well as the advances made in price by the manufacturers, to make their instruments at their own factory. The best hands having been engaged and their operations greatly extended, Cramer and Co. now call special attention to their Harmoniums, which, among many other advantages, offer a more extensive selection, as well as a greater variety of tone, and a larger number of speaking stops, at a price much below that of all other eminent makers. Specifications and estimates of special instruments, with any required combination of stops, furnished on application.

SKETCHES AT THE MULE AND DONKEY SHOW AT THE CRYSTAL PALACE.

THE MULE AND DONKEY SHOW.

The Crystal Palace entertains and exhibits a variety of distinguished visitors. If that foolish city officer, Dogberry of Messina, with his colleague Verges, had been among them on Wednesday week, his merits would there have been duly recognised. "Oh! that he had been here to write me down an ass!" would not then have been a vain aspiration. The writing down of asses and eke of mules—or let us borrow a nice word from the costermongers, to speak of the two classes as mules and "mokes"—was the official business of that day. "Moke," by-the-way, is derived from the Arabic, as well as "box" from "bakshish;" and we see no objection to its permitted use. A benevolent and evangelical peer of the realm has just declared that he is as proud to call himself an honorary costermonger as to be a Knight of the Garter. And why should he not? when it is a compliment to enrol the noblest Englishman in the Company of Fishmongers. "Do you know me, my lord?" "Excellent well; thou art a fishmonger." "I, my lord!" "No? then I would thou wert as honest a man." So let us speak of the "coaster;" and, whatever we say of him, we may surely say as much of his ass, his moke, or his donkey, whichever you please to call it. There is a good time coming for these patient, modest, unassuming beasts of service. History and poetry shall yet be heard to exalt their fame. "He brays, the laureate of the long-eared kind," shall not in future be the blameless bard's reproach. The solid virtues of this animal, his sobriety, meekness, integrity, and Scottish shrewdness, nurtured on a thistle diet, will no longer be mistaken for dullness. Few of our dumb companions have a more genuine sense of humour, or truer perception of human character. Could they but tell us what they think of us, it were profitable for some of us to hear. "Thou, too, art an ass," one might say; or classically, Et tu, Brute! "I, you brute!" the indignant biped would reply. Then comes the moke's rejoinder, "I would thou wert as honest a beast." If, indeed, the ass knoweth his rider or driver, the opinion he may secretly have of that individual is a mystery, like the private judgment of Montaigne's cat upon her master.

This fascinating theme, like that of our late discourse upon the excellent goose, hath seduced an idle pen into the devious paths of moral philosophy, whence it is time to escape. The Mokes and Mules—we rank the pure asinine breed as higher, for the other is but a mongrel—mustered at the Crystal Palace of Sydenham, in all their best looks. They are much obliged to Mr. F. W. Wilson, superintendent of the natural history department, for inviting them to this belle assemblée, or for making its arrangements. Prizes of £10 and below were offered in eight classes—namely, mules of fourteen hands' stature; smaller mules; male donkeys, or jack-asses; females, or jenny-asses; English males; English females; English neutrals, or geldings; and donkeys of any other variety, not including those of mankind. Mr. S. Lang and Mr. W. Lort were the judges. Our reporter is not the promised poet laureate of that deserving species; but he feels it due to his fellow-creatures to notice two or three of them upon this occasion. One belongs to his friend in Regent's Park, the friend of the public, of man and beast, Mr. A. Bartlett, superintendent of the Zoological Gardens. It was a beautiful little mule, with a coat of black velvet, the offspring of an Exmoor pony and a Spanish Donkey, which are two very good breeds. Another popular gentleman, Mr. G. W. Moore, of the firm Moore and Burgess, St. James's Hall (late Christy Minstrels), sent a very pretty mule to be shown; but this pet of "Bones" had broken knees, and was thereby denied a prize.

The Great Ass Interest seemed to be looking up, especially in the persons of a pair of the gigantic Poitou breed; one of them, No. 23, standing 14 hands 1 in. high, with stout limbs and mighty joints. One was reminded of Edward the Black Prince, and of the Plantagenet wars in that French province 500 years ago. This stalwart ânerie, to coin such a word, is quite worthy of that chivalry in the field of fight between two neighbour nations. Thence passing on to Spain, the land of Sancho's Dapple as well as of the Knight's Rosinante, it appeared, in spite of the Carlists and the Intransigents, there were some fine donkeys to be spared from that romantic country. They had crossed the Bay of Biscay, like any other panish magnates or grandees, to receive, with characteristic national gravity, the best compliments of the English people. Still, for all that and all that, we believe in the Cockney coster's moke, of which many were exhibited by their happy owners. The Archbishop of Canterbury, who won a third prize in class 7, may not, perhaps, be reckoned, with Lord Shaftesbury, as an honorary member of that guild. But there could be little hesitation in admitting the name of Mr. Thomas Moakson; or the practical experience of animals used to draw a cart-load of greenstuff, "a ton weight of it, easy, from King's-cross to Golden-lane in forty-five minutes." The certificates of what they could do, and what they had done, were far beyond Dogberry's glorification of himself. That a moke can trot eight miles in the hour, and even twelve miles an hour, is a fact which ought, by some means, to be made known to the horsey mind. Thirty miles a day, the average steady work for some of our asinine clients, was pronounced by Ancient Pistol to be the utmost performance of those "pack-horses, and hollow pampered jades of Asia," rejected by him with such fierce contempt. But we care not what he has to say. "Know we not galloway nags?" The mules, as well as the asses, were recorded to have done marvellous feats on the road. One mule, belonging to Mr. James Cole, had trotted from North Devon to London in forty-two hours; another, in forty-eight hours, had made a journey of 220 miles, conveying four passengers with luggage. Mr. C. L. Sutherland, as breeder and owner of the finest mules, contributed much to this exhibition.

The sketches we have engraved need a few words of explanation. At the top of the page, in the middle, is the head of Mr. Bartlett's mule, pretty black Jess, "a dear little beast," says our artist in his notes. To the left, at the top, is a prize English jackass, with his hair unclipped. To the right are a pair of Spanish donkeys, male and female; the former sent by Mr. C. L. Sutherland, the latter by Mr. E. Wilson. Below is represented an amusing scene, when the costermongers incited their beasts to kick, which rather enlivened the crowd of spectators. Lower down we see the judges, taking account of the merits of the English gelding class. The gentleman to the left is a triumphant prize-winner. A coloured ribbon is about to be given, to decorate the animal esteemed worthy of this token. At the bottom of the page is the great French ass of Poitou, shaggy as a bear, strong and stubborn, with two boys in vain striving to move him. Mr. Henry Ballard, with his prize jenny (her name is Flying Scud, No. 54), appears on the other side.

Sir David Lionel Salomons, Bart., has been gazetted as Deputy Lieutenant of the county of Kent.

An international horse show has been held this week at the Pomona Gardens, Manchester. The sum of £1200 was offered in prizes, and there were thirty-four classes.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

(THIRD NOTICE.)

Amidst the great dearth in this exhibition of works of high aim, whether religious or classical, the "Prometheus Bound" (687), by Mr. W. B. Richmond, the son of the Academician, acquires an importance beyond the interest it would always command in virtue of its bold conception and execution, and its no less daring dimensions. The picture must measure about 20 ft. high, and one naturally asks "What will he do with it?" seeing how rare is the present demand for monumental work on this scale, and that its subject limits its use to the mural decoration of some secular building only. The composition represents the nude Titan chained to a precipitous peak of rock in mid ocean, at early dawn, the thin crescent moon being near the horizon. Sea-gulls circle about the rock, but there is no vulture or eagle at its horrible meal. The grizzled head of Prometheus is bent forward in intense thought, prying into the far-off future. The idea of mere physical endurance is dismissed; nor is the intention that of representing a being of superhuman craft, who outwitted Zeus; the artist's conception is evidently a far nobler one—i.e., that of the primal benefactor of mankind, the inventor and discoverer living before his time and condemned to a solitary life of martyrdom. The colouring of the dark-hued figure and the background is arbitrary, but not more so than the ideal nature of the subject justifies. Such a grandiose figure can scarcely fail to recall the creations of Michael Angelo, yet we recognise no plagiarism. The picture altogether is a credit to our school, and singularly honourable to the young painter, especially when we consider how small is the encouragement for such work.

Neither Mr. Briton Rivière nor Mr. Heywood Hardy can be regarded as particularly fortunate in the classical themes they have lighted upon. Both being animal-painters, the human figures they have introduced are, as might be expected, invested with secondary importance and interest, thereby increasing the inherent improbability of the Greek fables selected. Mr. Briton Rivière's "Apollo" (260), is but an insignificant "sun-god," as he lolls rather awkwardly against a pine-trunk, charming with his lyre Admetus's flocks of goats, and drawing lions and lynxes from the dark glen to his feet, and even the timid deer from their haunts in the pine wood. The best touches in the picture are the catlike fawning and half-doing gestures of the feline creatures, the scintillation of their eyes in the darkness, and the listening attitude of the hares as they sit erect in their form, with pricked ears. A more solid mode of painting is adopted in the figure of Apollo than is usual with this artist, but not in other parts of the picture. Mr. Rivière is more at home in his able study of a lioness sleeping at the mouth of a cave, entitled "Genius Loci" (520). Mr. Heywood Hardy's picture (710) representing Ulysses in feigned madness ploughing the seashore with a horse and bull yoked together, is a little opaque and dry technically. Here again the painting of the dun-coloured horse—studied apparently, and very properly, from the Elgin frieze—is more admirable than that of the human figure, the sudden and violent effort of Ulysses to avoid trampling on his infant son being somewhat ungainly. Classical in its characteristics also, though exclusively decorative in aim and treatment, is Mr. A. Moore's figure of a maiden in Greek costume walking along fretted sands by the seashore, entitled "Shells" (936). The contours have antique grace, and the warm and cool greys compose a most agreeable harmony. Hanging as a pendant to this, in the Lecture-Room, is another decorative figure, by Mr. Armstrong, "A Girl Watching a Tortoise" (1054), which, though less complete in modelling, and less well balanced in the disposition of light and dark colours, has passages of much elegance.

Of historical painting proper—that is to say, the representation of actual events—there is as great a dearth as of poetic art. Almost the only example we have not mentioned is "The Morning before Flodden" (509), by Mr. John Faed, a careful work, which, however, would gain with more of the ease and play of hand and colour of the artist's brother, the R.A. But there are several pictures the scenes, costumes, and accessories of which belong to the past. Mr. C. Green, in a large composition (1022), shows a number of civic dignitaries at the entrance of a city, advancing to welcome and proffer their allegiance to the Emperor Maximilian in an "Address," and by presentation of the keys of the city gates and other ceremonial pageantry. There is much meritorious painting here; but the picture lacks light and shade, and the absence of the Emperor is like the play of Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark; nor is this deficiency fully compensated by the humorous or otherwise interesting character of the spectators, as in Mr. Marks's picture of last year, with a similar motive, called "Waiting for the Procession." There is very genuine, unforced pathos, as well as a beautiful twilight effect, in Mr. P. R. Morris's originally conceived incident entitled "The End of the Journey" (1020). An aged veteran, in his old, threadbare Georgian regimentals, has returned from one of the rounds he makes as a pedlar, and sits, tired and worn, on the case containing his wares, by the brink of a stream. His granddaughter stands near him, with the old military drum she beats to summon customers. To them approaches the ferry-boat (with the village Charon, it may be, for the old man) that is to convey them to the opposite bank, where in the quiet gloaming nestle a few cottages and a narrow churchyard. Sentiment less masculine but true and tender, combined with an exquisitely delicate sense of beauty, will be found in No. 584, by Mr. A. Hughes—"black stoled and hooded" nuns in a boat conveying a fair girl, in the white robes of her novicehood, across a stream to a convent seclusion almost hidden amongst thick foliage—bearing her away from a sorrowing mother, a sister, and a noble-looking young man standing on the foreground bank. "Pilgrims Setting Out for Canterbury—time of Chaucer" (982), by Mr. Boughton, presents a double attraction in its extensive spring landscape, with the trees and meads in fullest bloom and flower, and in the quaintly yet unaffectedly ancient aspect of the figures that are dotted about. In a road in the middle distance leading to a mediæval town the main stream of pilgrims are seen trudging along; but two have left the beaten track to pray at a shrine in the foreground, and two others are assisted by fair village maidens to fill their water-bottles at a well. It is pleasant to witness such sympathy with old English life and literature from an American artist; we could, however, have wished to see pilgrims more expressive of the widely diverse characters drawn by old Dan Chaucer. "Paris, 1793" (523), by Mr. Pott—a tumbril passing along with its wretched victims for the guillotine amidst the savage populace—is revolting in its force of realisation. Something of the grime and ugliness of this picture has got into the artist's ignoble version of "The Dismissal of Cardinal Wolsey" (1380). Mr. Storey is delightful in "Grandmother's Christmas Visitors" (521)—a charming young lady smilingly alighting in the snow at a country house porch from a family coach of the last century, inside which are younger brothers and sisters full of misanthropic anticipations. "Little Swansdown" (443), so named from the boat with which she is swathed, seems to be a larger edition of the same charming young personage. "The Blue Girls of Canterbury" (66)—a file of charity children passing the gate of the cathedral precincts, under the charge of a kindly-looking old governess—is also as nice in feeling as it is satisfactory in execution.

Mr. Wynfield's picture of a Protestant family discovered by emissaries of the Holy Inquisition holding a midnight religious service (546) is meritorious in expression and effect, but the painting is rather too smooth in texture and even in tone. A similar remark applies to "Instruction in Deportment—the Curtsey" (444). Mr. H. Wallis sends once more his long-robed Venetian merchants seated on a marble bench against a richly-stained marble dado. This time a Levantine sailor is on his knees offering for sale a small bronze of a dancing bacchante, covered with the green patina of antiquity, "From Naxos." The colouring is gorgeous and fine in quality, but the purple robes of the merchants are too positive. With mention of Mr. J. D. Watson's two very droll pictures, in a low, harmonious key of colouring—the return of a tipsy young sot to a sour-looking old mother, who prepares to receive him with the warming-pan, called "Only been with a few friends" (15), and an ancient couple trying to find what is the matter with an erratic "Old Clock" (28); Mr. J. Lidderdale's "Proscribed, 1793" (81), a priest in confinement sadly eyeing his watch; Mr. Hillingford's clever but rather showy "Mesmer" (573), at the height of his Parisian popularity; Mr. W. M. Egley's "Corporal Trim reading the sermon" (625), Mr. Holyoake's "Sanctuary" (386), Mr. W. E. Lockhart's "Don Quixote at the Puppet Show" (1431), Mr. Stannus's "Battle of the Boyne" (1348), Mr. Perugin's pleasant figure of a young woman, in charming negligé of figured chintz sacque, sipping her matutinal "Cup of Tea" (13) and Mr. S. Lucas's Cavalier truculently demanding, "Your objection, Sir" (541), we must pass to some figure-pictures from contemporary materials not hitherto noticed.

Foremost among these is Mr. Marcus Stone's picture of the comely wife of a sturdy rustic labourer, who, having brought the man's dinner, holds her babe towards him for a kiss, whilst a little toddler at her side awaits its turn for a caress. In the adjacent grounds of a neighbouring mansion a lady in black walks sad and lonely, turning a wistful gaze at the humble happy group, suggestive of the contrast implied in the title, "My Lady is a Widow and Childless" (106). The artist gains enormously by more direct contact with nature than in his previous historical illustrations. The style is larger and manlier, the effect is pure and atmospheric, and, saving a little seeking for colour and light and shade in the woman's cotton gown (which assumes, in consequence, a rather satin-like aspect), there is no artificiality of treatment whatever. Strange to say, a foreign artist—M. Tissot—sets our painters an example, in choosing English subjects so characteristic that they seem to be neglected only because they are so near at hand. It is even more strange to find a foreigner painting in a still brighter key than the highest "exhibition pitch" of our native artists, to the entire neglect of that sobriety of tone and "keeping" which usually distinguishes Continental from British pictures. But, though a very keen observer, M. Tissot, like most other of our French critics, fails in sympathy and falls into vulgar exaggeration. The peculiar types prevalent in his works—the lanky faces, crane necks, and falling shoulders—are not recognisable by us as English; they are, besides, always curiously cold and antipathetic. Then again M. Tissot conceives his effect primarily in black and white; and however gay the superadded tinting, it can hardly be regarded as "colour" in the higher artistic sense. Added to all this, M. Tissot seems to have no perception of relative pictorial values, and will paint a ship's rigging with as much mechanical precision and zest as a young lady's countenance. These remarks apply, we think, in their fullest extent, both to the artist's picture of a ball on board a man-of-war lying off Cowes (690), which, however clever in its perspective and elaboration of a thousand intricate details, is garish and almost repellent; and in the still less agreeable scene (116) under the portico of the National Gallery, with its Arctic frigidity, its good-looking but singularly uninteresting couple, and its puny Bluecoat boys, with their brimstone-colour stocken sticks of legs.

The very antipodes of this kind of painting may be found in two works by the Dutch master Israëls, where, although one cannot be wholly unconscious of the recherche for Rembrandtesque chiaroscuro, technicalities are almost entirely subordinated to the pathetic feeling with which the pictures seem to be literally instinct. One, called "Expectation" (621), shows a young Scheveningen fisherwoman, seated, making the smallest of underclothing, beside a cradle at present unoccupied. Another represents a poor mother, of the same fisher class, looking with reddened eyes forebodingly out of a cottage window at dusk. Three children are at the table, the eldest just old enough to share her mother's anxiety. Completer as representation—necessarily so, seeing that the scene is laid in the open air—is Mr. Bourée's "Ruined! The Day After the Tempest" (719). Nothing in the exhibition is truer to nature or more touching than the piteous, speechless, heart-broken expressions of that old mother and that young wife, with a babe at her bosom, as they sit among the desolate sand-heaps, watching the breaking up of the wrecked boat of their lost bread-winner. By P. Sadé, another Dutch painter, there is a pathetic little picture, with a beautiful silvery effect of dawn, called "The Portion of the Poor" (319). There are also examples of Mesdag and J. Maris, of the same school, together with a cattle-piece, by De Haas (1019), distinguished by his fine colour and brilliant yet solid manipulation. The Scandinavian master, A. Tidemand, contributes a large picture, with numerous figures, representing some of the picturesque usages at a "Norwegian Wedding" (641). We need hardly say that the work is as faithful to national characteristics as it is sound, able, and honest, technically considered. Three pictures by Mr. E. Frère scarcely realise the charm of early works; the best considerably is "Woodcutter's Dinner" (214). By the German-American painter A. Wüst there is a moonlight-piece, "An American Forest Scene" (1397), which is noteworthy for its artistic effect and refined execution. But the most important example of foreign landscape art is the noble view by the Belgian painter, Van Luppen, of the "Ravine of Failmaigne" (706), an almost savage gorge in the Ardennes, the asperities of which are, however, softened by the interposition of a semi-transparent veil of argentine morning haze. The broad gradations and tender transitions of this favourite effect of the artist are rendered with his customary felicity; yet the workmanship has a solidity of impasto which (especially if the picture were, as it certainly should be, a little nearer the eye) would afford a lesson to that large class of our landscape-painters who adopt a thin and flimsy, though showy and sparkling, method of handling.

The landscapes not hitherto reviewed, the portraits, and the sculpture must be reserved for future notice.

The sale of the pictures, sketches, drawings, &c., left by Sir Edwin Landseer at his decease began, on Friday week, at Messrs. Christie and Manson's, and will not be concluded before we go to press. The sale has attracted great interest, and the prices realised have been high.

SOCIETY OF FRENCH ARTISTS.

The pictures which M. Durand-Ruel, the well-known Parisian dealer, has brought together in the present exhibition at the gallery in New Bond-street, illustrate in larger proportion even than heretofore that newest phase of French art which apparently acknowledges the leadership of Courbet and Manet in landscape and figures respectively. Not content with the reaction of some masters of romanticism as Delacroix, T. Rousseau, Troyon, Diaz, and J. Dupré, against the old classical traditions, the painters of this new school scorn all teaching, and ignore even the most innocent of the conventions which the experience of ages has shown are necessary in translations of nature on to canvas, whether poetic or realistic. The prophets of this new school are in art as revolutionary and anarchical as are the Communists in politics. Their primary aim is simply to match the hues and tones of nature in a rough, broad way, condemning beauty and sentiment, disregarding detail and technical charm, unguided by pictorial science in composition, drawing, harmonious colouring, or keeping in tone and effect. To our mind such theories are subversive of all true art; and it would be an evil day for British painting if they ever obtained currency among us. Their application in practice is but a superior kind of tapestry-working. Occasionally, when a fine effect in nature is accidentally chosen, it may be (by the best men) dashed off with truth and power. But always it is hit or miss, and the misses quite ruin the score. The results are certainly novel, but we cannot admit that they are more valuable on that account. The productions of a large proportion of the school resemble nothing so much as the sketches, more or less abortive, of tyros, and they would be regarded as little more in any school but this newest school of the French. These remarks apply in a greater or less degree to the examples of the following artists; we shall therefore not particularise—viz., Messrs. Manet, Courbet, Monet, Pissaro, Sisley, Duer, l'Hermitte, Lambert, and G. Bellenger. Two or three pictures by Marie Cazin might be included in the same category; but we must except No. 118 in virtue of its truthful and beautiful effect of a gleam of sunlight in "Harvest Time." Even M. Daubigny, a much finer painter than either of those named, is open to the charge of artificiality in the obviously forced contrasts of "St. Paul's from the Surrey Side" (41), and of self-conscious bravura and materialistic paintiness in passages of the moonlight views Nos. 72 and 92.

This new school appears to claim affinity with painters of widely different characteristics, such as Corot, Michel, Rousseau, Dupré, and Fantin; but it can only do so with manifest inconsistency. M. Corot's peculiarities are well known, and it must be admitted by his warmest admirers that he is one of the most conventional of painters. His tender and lovely effects of light in the sky are invariably foiled by masses of foliage that are mannered to the last degree in their generalisation. Of his several works here we prefer the smaller ones, such as "The Goatherd—Evening" (43), to the large and ambitious semi-classical composition, entitled "St. Sebastian" (28), the scale of which strikes us as far beyond the scope of his limited range of colour and effect. Michel is a painter long neglected, who has lately risen into favour at Paris, like some of our early Norwich masters, with whom his breadth of manner may be compared. There is an interesting memoir of him in the catalogue, but the examples of him here hardly justify his sudden reputation; they seem to us violent in their oppositions of light and shade, and wanting in true chiaroscuro. M. Fantin's flowers are as admirable as ever; and the execution is most artistically calculated to render as much detail as is consistent with purity of hue and crispness of touch. A group of larkspurs, yellow hollyhocks, and gladioli (2) and No. 121 are especially delightful. There are also generally small but good works by T. Rousseau, J. Breton, J. Dupré, G. Pelouse, and C. Jacques. But two of the most remarkable pictures in the collection are "A Negress Charming a Heron" (50) and a figure of an old gipsy (112) by Roybet. Here we have gorgeous and magnificent colouring, with other pictorial qualities in due relative strength. Rarely, indeed, have we seen the splendid costumes, metal vessels, furniture, and other accessories of an Oriental interior so superbly painted.

M. LOPPE'S ALPINE PICTURES.

At the gallery, No. 9, Conduit-street, an exhibition is now open, the principal attraction of which is a series of pictures by M. Gabriel Loppé, the celebrated Genevese painter, whose representations of the sublime but pictorially-considered, very intractable scenery and phenomena of the higher Alps, are the most satisfactory we have ever seen. M. Loppé unites in a very rare degree the knowledge of an experienced Alpine climber with the artistic ability necessary to turn that knowledge to the best account on canvas. M. Loppé's works are deservedly held in high esteem by our Alpine Club, of which he is an honorary member, yet they hardly need the recommendation of those competent judges, so unmistakable is the internal evidence of truthfulness they present. Nor is there wanting the still higher quality of imaginative sympathy with the more transient atmospheric effects, whether awful or beautiful, of those solitary altitudes. A striking instance of this is afforded in a sunset view from the summit of "L'Aiguille du Gouté," as seen in an ascent of Mont Blanc on the St. Gervais side. The sun has sunk below a broad belt of stratified vapour that lies like a sea of blood along the horizon; the mountains are enveloped, cold and dead, in the great earth shadow; but from the vast gulf that divides our foothold from the farthest peaks rise a ghostly mass of clouds, their troubled upper surfaces presenting a strange weird resemblance to a host of shrouded spectral figures in mournful procession, with here and there the white-robed arms raised in despair. Other pictures, several of which are of very large dimensions, are equally noteworthy in one way or the other, particularly the views of the Matterhorn from the Valley of Zermatt; the Mer de Glace, and Aiguille des Charmoz; the Glacier du Géant; another and larger picture of the stupendous masses of ice of the same glacier, indicative of the dangers of passing the seracs, with their cloven chasms of unfathomed blue; and last, but not least remarkable, a view from the summit of Mont Blanc at sunrise. The collection also includes works by several of the leading artists of the day; but, as these have for the most part been previously exhibited, it is not imperative to review them in detail, nor would our space permit us to do so.

A new picture, very elaborate in composition, entitled "The Dream of Pilate's Wife," has been added to the exhibition of M. Gustave Doré's works at the gallery in New Bond-street. To the left is a vacant bed-chamber, flooded with a fiery glare as from a conflagration, though we only see a taper burning; a lengthy flight of stairs descends therefrom, half-way down which stand, their backs reflecting the glow from the chamber above, Pilate's wife, and an angel directing her attention to her supposititious dream—i.e., a multitude of figures below, all of which are represented under an effect of blue light, as of exaggerated moonlight, save the figure of Christ, with crown of thorns and bleeding brow, which is focussed in a pencil of red light descending from the distant bed-chamber, like a ray of lime-light on the stage. Around him are the executioners with the cross, Roman soldiers, Jewish priests, and a crowd of spectators, which seems to resolve into Christian converts and martyrs, and finally to melt in the distance into surmounting ranks of the heavenly hierarchy, encircling a luminous cross that irradiates a kind of phosphorescent light on all sides. The real, the fanciful, and the symbolical are mixed together with the wildest licence in this daring conception, and the whole is realised with the artist's extraordinary skill in the indication of great crowds and in the management of sensational effects.

Mr. Algernon Graves has compiled an historical catalogue of all the engraved works of Sir Edwin Landseer, now exhibited at Messrs. Henry Graves and Co.'s galleries, in Pall-mall. They are arranged in chronological order, placing together the productions of each year, from the earliest attempts at etching in 1809, when the artist was a child seven years of age, to his pictures of 1870 and 1872, engraved by Mr. Thomas Landseer. The catalogue has thus a certain degree of biographical interest. It has been prepared with the utmost accuracy, and will be worth preserving as a memorial of Landseer. Mr. A. Graves is making a separate catalogue of Landseer's works that were not engraved.

The Lords of the Treasury have appointed the Marquis of Bath and Lord Ronald Charles Sutherland Leveson-Gower trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, in the room of the Bishop of Winchester, deceased, and of Earl Cowper.

Sir Digby Wyatt has felt compelled by the state of his health to resign the post of Architect to the India Office.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

On Thursday week "Il Guarany," the work of Senor Gónez—a Brazilian composer—was given for the first time this season. The opera was produced here at the close of the season of 1872, and received three performances, in each of which the heroine was represented by Mlle. Sessi. On the former occasion we noticed the opera so fully that brief mention may now suffice, especially as its musical merits are not of a very high order; indeed, it is rather as a spectacle that "Il Guarany" produces its effects. Scarcely anything has ever been witnessed—even at the Royal Italian Opera House—more splendid than the scene of the Indian encampment, with its groups of warriors, gorgeous costumes, and elaborate ballet action.

In the performance of Thursday week the part of the heroine was assigned to Mlle. Marimon, who sang with great brilliancy, especially in the polacca aria, "Gentile cuore" (encore), the love-duet in the first act, Emilia's ballata, "c'era una volta," and the duet, "Donna tu forse," with Gonzales, in the second act. The character of Pery—heretofore filled by Signor Nicolini—was transferred to Signor Bolis, whose magnificent tenor voice gave great effect to the music of the character. Signor Cotogni, as Gonzales, sang with the same success as formerly, having been much applauded throughout, and encored in the canzone of the second act. M. Maurel was the Cacique—before represented by M. Faure—and the other characters were filled by Signori Capponi, Manfred, Rossi, and Raguer.

The two closing operas last week were "Les Huguenots" on Friday (a repetition), and "Rigoletto" on Saturday (for the first time this season), with Mlle. Albani as Gilda, and the return of Signor Graziani as Rigoletto—both these performances having presented the same high merits as formerly.

This week began with a repetition of "Il Guarany" on Monday, and on Tuesday Madame Adelina Patti made her first appearance this season as Rosina in "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," one of her most charming performances, and met with the same enthusiastic reception that has always greeted her return. As on former occasions, the aria introduced into the lesson-scene was the bolero from "Les Vêpres Siciliennes," and the inevitable encore was replied to by singing "Home, sweet Home." Signori Bettini, Cotogni, and Ciampi were respectively Almaviva, Figaro, and Bartolo; Signor Baggiolo having been, for the first time, the Basilio.

Madame Patti was to appear again on Thursday, in "Dinorah"; "Giuglielmo Tell" having been announced for yesterday (Friday), and "Hamlet," with the return of M. Faure, for this (Saturday) evening.

The performances of Tuesday and Thursday were directed by Signor Vianesi; that of Monday by Signor Bevignani.

The second Floral Hall concert of the season takes place this (Saturday) afternoon, and the programme includes performances by Madame Adelina Patti and other eminent artists of the Royal Italian Opera Company.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The performances of Thursday week and of Saturday last were both repetitions, "Les Huguenots" and "Norma," having been the operas, each cast as recently given.

On Monday "Semiramide" was repeated, and on Tuesday an Italian version of Auber's "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was brought out, with the debut of Mlle. Louise Singelli in the principal character.

"Les Diamans de la Couronne" was originally produced in at Paris in 1841, eleven years after "Fra Diavolo," and thirteen after "La Muette de Portici" ("Masaniello"). It was first given in Italian at the Royal Italian opera house during last season, when Madame Adelina Patti filled the character of Catarina, as noticed by us at the time. The work—one of the masterpieces of Auber in the style of the opera comique—is too well known, musically and dramatically, to require fresh comment. Mlle. Singelli, as Catarina, made a highly favourable impression, especially in the air with variations, in the second act, in which her bravura singing—particularly in scale passages and shakes—was very brilliant. We shall doubtless have early occasion again to speak of this meritorious artist. Mlle. Risarelli was efficient as Diana, the bolero for the two ladies having been one of the most effective pieces of the evening. Signor Naudin, as Don Enrico, sang well, as did Signor Rinaldini as Don Sebastiano; Signor Agnesi, as Rebollo, having scarcely appeared to as great advantage as in some other impersonations. Signor Borella gave a buffo interpretation of the character of Il Conte di Campo Major, in strong contrast to the French version thereof.

The pretty overture and the beautiful orchestral accompaniments were finely played by the band, the chorus-singing was particularly good, and the general performance was worthy of the work, the establishment, and the conductor (Sir M. Costa).

"Le Nozze di Figaro" was to be given on Thursday, and Auber's opera—under its Italian title of "Catarina; ossia, I Diamanti della Corona"—was announced for repetition to-night (Saturday).

On Wednesday evening the second season of the Wagner Society closed with the sixth concert of the series. The programme comprised Berlioz's overture to "Benvenuto Cellini," and an extract from his oratorio, "L'Enfance du Christ," and selections from Wagner's operas, "Die Meistersinger von Nürnberg," "Lohengrin," "Der Fliegende Holländer," and "Tristan und Isolde."

Mr. Charles Hallé's second pianoforte recital took place yesterday (Friday) afternoon, when the programme comprised selections from Haydn, Schubert, Bach, Chopin, and Rubinstein.

The proceedings on the occasion of the Ozar's visit to the Crystal Palace to-day (Saturday) and to the Royal Albert Hall on Monday will include musical performances, of which we must speak next week.

THEATRES.

Many are the new phases in which, in the present day, theatrical adventure exhibits itself. Not only have morning performances become fashionable, but sometimes a company changes its theatre for a night or two and pays a flying visit to a neighbouring establishment. For the ancient rivalry co-operation has been substituted, with, it would appear, a profitable result to the friendly managements. Such an exchange has lately taken place in respect to the Strand and the Gaiety. The company of the former has twice crossed the road and arrived safely at the latter, with Mr. H. B. Farnie's folie musicale, entitled, "Eldorado." There they have found a new and more numerous audience, quite as ready to laugh at the absurdities of conduct and speech as the old. The experiment last Saturday was perfectly successful; that for to-day is the burlesque of "Nemesis," which in all probability will succeed even better.

A new piece has been produced at the Court—one of the most elegant kind, by Mr. Alfred Thompson, and in all respects most elegantly placed on the stage by its able author, a master in such exploits, well known to theatrical fame. The subject is taken from Fenelon's charming prose poem, "Telemaque," and is named "Calypso." Here we have the amorous dotage of the island goddess and her jealousy of the nymph Eucharis, and the moral perils from which the son of Ulysses is delivered by Minerva disguised as Mentor. It is a dream of youth beautifully realised; yet its complexion is too sober for a mixed audience. We doubt, therefore, of its attracting for a long period; but its merits are so great that it deserves the liberal patronage of the public.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed have established their entertainment at St. George's Hall, Langham-place, where they have revived the piece composed by Messrs. Gilbert and Clay, called "Agnes Ago," which received our commendation when originally produced. They have added the new musical sketch by Mr. Corney Grain, entitled "A Day in Town." The entertainment concludes with "Charity begins at Home," the last representations of which amusing piece are now announced. We are thus led to expect some novelty at no distant period.

We are informed that in the new comedy of "Mont Blanc," which is to be produced at the Haymarket Theatre on Whitsun Monday, Mr. T. S. Jerrold, a son of the late Douglas Jerrold, will make his first appearance on the London stage in the character of Captain Achille Fortinbras—the part having been specially written for him.

THE YACHTING SEASON.

The first match of the Royal London Yacht Club was sailed on Thursday week. It was an "ocean match"—that is to say, in the open sea round the Forelands of Kent. The course was from Dover to Southend. Eight vessels started—namely, the schooner Cetonia, of 203 tons, owned by Mr. Turner; the yawl Florinda, 137 tons, Mr. Jessop; the cutter Kriemhilda, 106, Count Batthyany; Mr. Sharp's yawl Gertrude, 79; Commodore Broadwood's cutter Arethusa; Mr. Lambert's yawl Surf; and the Norman and Myosotis, cutters, belonging to Major Ewing and Mr. Macmaster. There was a time allowance for size, a quarter of a minute to the ton. All the yachts were in cruising trim. They were started by Mr. Earle, vice-commodore, on board a steam-boat, at eight o'clock. The wind then was good, but soon became light and shifting. After passing the light-ship at the South Sand Head, the changes of the wind gave much to do in altering the smaller sails, and the yachts lay becalmed about an hour. It was nearly one o'clock before they got round the East Goodwin light-ship. The Florinda here was first; the others were all in cluster behind. The Kriemhilda, the Florinda, and the Arethusa repeatedly luffed across each other's path. But from the East Goodwin to the North Sand light-ship nothing of importance took place, the yachts constantly changing places. At a quarter past two o'clock the Norman led round, with Myosotis second, and the others all too close together to time them. Drifting and sailing in turns, the yachts slowly worked their way onwards, first one and then another taking the lead, until about five, when a nice sailing breeze sprang up, and, lasting for about a couple of hours, gave them a good lift against the strong ebb tide. After a long, tedious drag up the river the race finished about midnight, the order of arrival being—Arethusa first, Kriemhilda second, Norman, Myosotis, Surf, Cetonia, &c. The Arethusa therefore wins the cutters' prize, £80; the Surf the yawls', £50; and the Cetonia the schooners', £30. The sailing was tedious, but it was a pleasant day at sea.

A dinner was given at Portsmouth, on Tuesday, to the officers engaged in the Ashantee campaign—Mr. G. E. Kent, the Mayor of the borough, presiding. The officers present were Sir Garnet Wolseley, Sir John Glover, Sir F. Festing, Sir J. M'Leod, and Sir J. Commerell.

Sir George Campbell, late Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, arrived on Monday from Calcutta, and on Tuesday had an interview with the Marquis of Salisbury at the India Office. Sir George will take his seat in the Council of the Secretary of State for India, having been appointed during his absence in India to succeed Sir Louis Mallet, C.B., appointed Under-Secretary of State in the room of the late Mr. Herman Merivale.

The Duke of Devonshire, who has only recently completed the formation of an extensive recreation and cricket ground at Eastbourne, has expressed his intention of executing further works for the benefit of the town, at an estimated cost of £15,000. The want of a large assembly-room has long been felt, and his Grace intends erecting a spacious pavilion, 350 ft. in length. While providing a large hall for meetings, space will also be afforded for a public library. Adjoining will be winter gardens and a skating-rink.

A miniature portrait-painter of skill and experience may perhaps give evidence as "an expert" in the trial of cases, like that of the pretender to the Tichborne estate and title, where a question of disputed personal identity is at issue. Mr. Frederick Piercy, in a brief essay published by Mr. A. Rich, Exeter-street, Strand, and at the author's studio, in Pall-mall East, discusses the main principles of characteristic facial conformation, with a view to indicating "a crucial test of identity." The position of the eyes, and the shape of the ears, are more especially considered. The treatise is illustrated by several lithographs. It may be as well to state that the author rejects Orton's claim to be Sir Roger Tichborne.

CAPTAIN SIR J. E. COMMERELL, K.C.B., V.C.

THE LATE MR. J. L. LUCAS

CAPTAIN PERCY PITT LUXMOORE, C.B.

Sir John Edmund Commerell, K.C.B., Captain R.N., was long since decorated with the V.C. for his acts of valour. He has lately been raised from the Companionship to the Knighthood of the Bath, in token of her Majesty's increased esteem for him since his services last year on the West Coast of Africa. The action in which Sir John Commerell gained such high honours took place several months before Sir Garnet Wolseley was sent out to assume the military command. Commodore

Commerell was there, with H.M.S. Rattlesnake, accompanied by H.M.S. Argus and Decoy. It was on Aug. 11 that he arranged and commanded, as senior naval officer on that station, an expedition of armed boats from several ships of the squadron to go up the river Prah, for the purpose of surveying and reconnoitring, as it was reported that the Ashantee army, then encamped at Mampon, some twenty miles inland, had occupied a post on an island of that river. The native town of Chamah, at the mouth of the Prah, was first visited by our Commodore, and he had an amicable conference with the local chieftains, who professed neutrality and promised never to take part with our enemies, though they would not become our active allies. But a few hours after this peaceful assurance, when the boats were quietly going up the river close to the Chamah bank, they were suddenly fired into by a large number of concealed foes in the dense thicket a few yards distant on the left hand. The leading boat, in which were Commodore Commerell; Commander Percy Luxmoore, of the Argus; and Captain Helden, of the 1st West India Regiment, Civil Commandant at a coast station, was especially aimed at by these murderous assassins. All the three gentlemen just named were at once wounded in three or four places by the first volley. The wounds received by the gallant Commodore were most severe; and, after rising in the boat and waving his hat, while cheering the sailors and calling on them to return the enemy's fire, he presently sank into the bottom of the boat exhausted by loss of blood. But he was still able to give directions to Commander Luxmoore, who now assumed the command, and, by dint of great exertions, the attack was repulsed and the boats were safely conducted back to the roadstead outside the mouth of the river. The town of Chamah was punished by the Rattlesnake with a severe bombardment, not only for this act of treachery in the ambush up the river, but also for the unprovoked murder of some of a boat's crew and a few Cape Coast native police who landed that afternoon for ordinary duty. The Commodore was obliged to go to Capetown for the cure of his wounds, and came home to England some time before Christmas, without being able to take part in the later operations of the war. The portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

NEW HYDROSTATIC VAN FOR STREET-WATERING.

MR. JOHN LUCAS.

This well-known portrait-painter, whose death we have already announced, was born in London, July 4, 1807. He commenced his artistic career under Mr. S. W. Reynolds, the mezzotint engraver; but at the close of his apprenticeship he became a portrait-painter. During his professional life he painted many portraits of the Royal family, of members of the aristocracy, and of some of the most distinguished men of the age. The late Duke of Wellington sat to him for pictures for the county of Hants, for the University of Oxford, for the King of Hanover, for Prince Metternich, for the Prussian army, for the Austrian army, for the Oxford and Cambridge Universities Club, and for many others. Mr. Lucas also painted the portrait group representing the consultation of Robert Stephenson, Brunel, Bidder, Locke, and other eminent engineers on the day previous to the floating of the last tube of the bridge over the Menai Strait. About sixty of his pictures have been engraved.

CAPTAIN PERCY LUXMOORE, C.B.

The services of this gallant officer of the Royal Navy in the late war on the Gold Coast have been rewarded by his promotion from the rank of Commander to that of Captain, and by his investiture with the Companionship of the Bath. Captain Percy Pitt Luxmoore, who is a son of J. Luxmoore, Esq., of Plymouth, entered the Navy, in 1849, as a cadet on board H.M.S. Queen, the flagship of Sir W. Parker, G.C.B., in the Mediterranean. He subsequently served on the Home, the North American, and the West Indian stations. He was a midshipman in H.M.S. Boscawen, in the Baltic, during the first year of the Russian War. He became a Lieutenant in January, 1856, on board H.M.S. Argus, which ship was employed in protecting the Newfoundland and Labrador fisheries. He next served as Lieutenant on board H.M.S. Roebuck in India and China, and was at Calcutta during part of the Indian Mutiny. While in China, in 1859, he was transferred to the Chesapeake, the flagship of Sir James Hope, G.C.B. Lieutenant Luxmoore was engaged in the taking of the Taku forts, in 1860, and in the previous conflict with the Tartars. He returned home in bad health in 1861, and studied at the Royal Naval College, until, in 1862, he was appointed to the ironclad frigate Black Prince; but in January, 1864, he was transferred to the Duncan, the flagship again of Sir James Hope, G.C.B., on the North American and West Indian station. During his service there, the Jamaica rebellion and the Fenian disturbances took place. Having again returned to England in ill-health in 1867, Lieutenant Luxmoore was promoted to the rank of Commandant, September, 1867. He was Inspecting Commander of the Salcombe Coastguard Division, South Devon, from March, 1870, until March, 1873. At the last-mentioned date he was appointed to the command of H.M.S. Argus, in which he proceeded to the West Coast of Africa. The Argus remained on the Gold Coast throughout the Ashantee War. Commander Luxmoore, as our readers know, was present at the destruction of Elmina, on June 13; and on Aug. 14, as was mentioned above, he was with Commodore Sir J. H. Commerell, K.C.B., V.C., in a boat-party, exploring the Prah near Chamah, where the natives behaved so treacherously. Commander Luxmoore received six severe wounds on that occasion; but he still kept the command when his superior officer was disabled by several dangerous wounds. Commander Luxmoore was hit in the left hip, shoulder, back, and left side, the enemy having fired from an ambush just after the boats had passed them going up the river. "I cannot," says Sir J. Commerell, "speak too highly of the conduct of this officer," referring to his second in command; "for it was not until some time afterwards it was discovered he was wounded so severely that he nearly fainted; yet he continued to remain at his post until the last moment, when the heavy fire from our boats had driven the enemy out of the bush." Two months after this (Oct. 14) Commander Luxmoore was engaged under Captain E. R. Fremantle, C.B., co-operating with the land forces, under Sir Garnet Wolseley, at the destruction of Ampence and Akimfo, having the Argus and Decoy under his command. With the same gun-boats some weeks later, he attacked and destroyed the town of Bostry, and performed other services on the coast. He then landed as second in command of the Naval Brigade on Dec. 27. He led the sailors under his command, joining the march of the troops, up the country and into the Ashantee kingdom. At the battle of Amoaful he was in command of the left wing of the Naval Brigade, and received two contusions. He further commanded the seamen and marines at the attack and destruction of Bequah on the following day, Feb. 1; but a day or two later, when at Mansu, fifteen or sixteen miles from Coomassie, fever attacked him so severely that he had to return to the coast. Captain Luxmoore then took command of H.M.S. Druid, in the vacancy caused by the death of that excellent and greatly lamented officer, Captain Blake. In this ship he returned to England, and has been presented to her Majesty the Queen, who greeted him with her special approbation. In his native county of Devon, the honours won by Captain Luxmoore are matter of hearty congratulation among his fellow-townsmen and neighbours.

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Jabez Hughes, of Ryde.

BAYLEY'S HYDROSTATIC VAN.

The watering of the streets of London is a work of greater importance than may generally be supposed. It employs, with a staff of surveyors and inspectors, about 1500 men, and an equal number of horses and carts. In order to lay the dust effectually, about 30,000 tons of water must be spread upon the streets every dry day. The average number of dry or "watering" days in the year is from 120 to 130. The total cost of laying the dust, including the cost of the water, is about £190,000 per annum, so that every fine day costs London between £1000 and £2000. That this is a wise and necessary outlay appears from the innumerable letters of complaint to any vestry whose contractor is neglecting his work. Indignant householders tell of the injury done to their carpets, furniture, and curtains; while drapers, butchers, and other tradesmen, speak of their heavy loss from the destruction of their goods by the dust. It has, too, recently been proved that the inhaling of dust, and especially the road dust of towns, mixed as it is with decaying refuse of animal and vegetable matter, is most injurious to health. The foul smells of which the inhabitants of Belgravia are now complaining are proved to arise not from the sewers, as at first supposed, but from the decomposed filth on the surface of the roads. When, indeed, the streets are not properly watered this impure matter is blown into our faces in the form of a fine, pungent powder. This, as Professor Tyndall has pointed out, may be, and doubtless is, the cause of great injury to the public health. We hope that the Government will insist on the vestries attending more vigorously to the suppression of the plague of dust.

Our illustration represents the new hydrostatic van designed and patented by Mr. E. H. Bayley, of the Steam Wheelworks, Newington-causeway. It was introduced last year, and it has now become quite a familiar object in the streets in every part of London. It is evidently a great success. The printed official reports of the parishes where it has been used show that not only have the streets been better watered, but the cost of watering has been largely reduced, as little more than half the usual number of horses and men need be engaged. Although containing nearly twice as much water as a common water-cart, one horse can work it easily, being relieved from the weight of the shafts, and from the constant jolting and jerking produced by the swaying to and fro of the water. The distributing apparatus is constructed on scientific principles; the result being that the water is spread more widely, so that the van will generally do as much work in one journey as an ordinary water-cart in two. The parish authorities have not been slow to perceive the practical gain from this fact, that one third of the horses and men now required can be dispensed with. The saving to the metropolis by the substitution of Bayley's vans for the present unsightly water-carts will amount to about £30,000 per annum. A further advantage is that, as the van itself is not so wide as a common water-cart and a smaller number are required, the street traffic is materially relieved. The vans are ornamental in appearance, as shown in our illustration. They are superior in every respect to the old-fashioned carts they are destined to supersede.

THE PRINCE IMPERIAL AT CHISELHURST.

Some of the Prince Imperial's neighbours at Chiselhurst lately subscribed for a birthday gift, which was prepared by Mr. Streeter, of 18, New Bond-street. It is a beehive in the form of an inkstand, inlaid with amethysts and surmounted by the monogram "L. N." in rubies and diamonds, the lid forming the Imperial eagle, handsomely chased, and around the base are the different colours in enamel. On the base is engraved "Presented to the Prince Imperial by the Ladies of Chiselhurst, March 18, 1874."

THE LATE LORD MAYO.

Two years have passed since the hand of a murderous ruffian, at the convict station in the Andaman Isles, deprived the British Indian empire of one of its best chief rulers. The native princes, nobles, and people of that vast dominion cherish his memory with a constant regard. His widow, the other day, while in London before departing for the Continent, received from one of those Indian Princes a testimonial of the esteem felt for her lamented husband.

Kuppoorthala or Kuppoorthala, between Loodiana and Umritsar, in the Punjab, is one of the best-governed States under native rule. The present Rajah-i-Rajgan of Kuppoorthala is son of the Rajah who behaved so gallantly and loyally to the Queen and the British Government during the mutiny of 1857. That Prince rendered great services, putting himself at the head of his army and marching with his troops and guns some hundreds of miles to confront the enemy. He was present at the siege of Lucknow, having placed himself and his troops under the orders of Brigadier-General Sir Hope Grant. The General presented him with a gun taken from the enemy (which the Rajah has quartered in his arms) for his gallant conduct in several hard-fought battles. This gallant Rajah was one of the first to receive from her Majesty her order of Indian knighthood—that of the Star of India. A Portrait and memoir of him were published in our Journal. He died at Aden, in 1870, in endeavouring to reach England for the purpose of doing homage to the Queen. No chief in India has ever proved himself more loyal, and it is gratifying to find his son following in his father's footsteps. The last mail from India brought news of grand festivities which were held in Kuppoorthala, at the unveiling by the Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab of the statue of the Queen and that of the late Prince Consort, for the former of which her Majesty gave a sitting.

Kuppoorthala was visited, on his return from Simla in 1871, by the late Lord Mayo, who spent a few days with the present Rajah. One of the latest acts of the Earl's life was to order a handsome service of plate to be prepared, which he would have sent to his Highness as a mark of his regard. But this did not reach the Rajah till after the Viceroy's tragic death. We know that Lord Mayo's noble bearing, his high, honourable, and generous character made a deep impression on the minds of the chief men in India. He will long live in their hearts.

The Rajah of Kuppoorthala's gift to Lady Mayo was presented at the residence of her brother-in-law, Lord Leonfield. Colonel Nassau Lees represented the Rajah, bearing his Highness's khureeta, or official letter, written on a sheet of vellum, with deep mourning borders. This was inclosed in an envelope of rich gold and silk brocade, with an outer covering of double folds of thick black crape. Lady Mayo was attended by Major Burne, C.S.I., late private secretary to Lord Mayo, and surrounded by a numerous circle of her friends and relatives.

The memorial gift will be an heirloom in Lady Mayo's family. It was manufactured by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell to the orders of his Highness, and consists of the magnificent pearl and diamond necklace represented in our Engraving. The centre pendant is surmounted by an Earl's coronet in pearls and diamonds, with the letter M in diamonds. The two smaller pendants are attached to the necklace by the lotus flower in diamonds. Within the festoons are diamond stars of five points. These, with the lotus, are the principal ornaments of the Order of the Star of India, of which the late Earl held the Grand Cross. Depending from the centre ornament, and supporting a large and lustrous pearl drop, is the monogram in diamonds, K.S., which are the initials of Kharak Singh, the name of his Highness the Rajah. Our illustration is one of the actual size.

This necklace lay in the casket, also designed and made by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell, which is constructed of fine-grained black ebony with silver mounts, to suit the mourning character of the memorial. It is octagonal in shape, supported by an angelic figure at each corner. On the front panel appear the arms and supporters of the late Earl, encircled by the collar of the Orders of St. Patrick and the Star of India, with their respective badges. The casket is surmounted by the arms and supporters of the Rajah, artistically carved in silver. The front panel of the lid bears the following inscription:—

"Presented to Blanche Julia, Countess of Mayo, by his Highness Kharak Singh, Rajah-i-Rajgan of Kuppoorthala, in affectionate and grateful remembrance of the late Richard Southwell Bourke, sixth Earl of Mayo, K.P., G.C.S.I., Viceroy and Governor-General of India. Feb. 8, 1872."

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

SOLID PARTICLES IN THE ATMOSPHERE.

Mr. Walter Noel Hartley, F.R.S., devoted his fourth and concluding lecture, on Thursday week, to the examination of the solid particles found in the atmosphere, which vary with every locality, consisting of three kinds of matter—mineral, carbonaceous or organic, and living. Mineral particles, such as common salt crystals, abound near the sea; while in air near towns are found minute fragments of starch, woody fibre, sulphate of soda, multitudes of organisms (such as spores of microscopic fungi) noxious gases, and offensive organic matters. The presence of the last is easily detected by passing the air through Condry's liquid (very dilute acidulated per-manganate of potash), by means of which the air of different places may be accurately compared. The dust in the air, Mr. Hartley said, has led to much discussion and may be said to have laid the foundation of the mistaken belief in the spontaneous generation of living things advocated, in the sixteenth century, by Van Helmont, who gave a receipt for making mice out of sawdust; and by Paracelsus, who described the production of a scorpion from a leaf placed between two bricks; while to-day Dr. C. Bastian believes he has obtained microscopic fungi from lifeless carbonaceous and nitrogenous matter. The error of thinking that flesh and cheese are converted into maggots was detected by Redi in 1638; and his experiments are practically represented by our own wire-gauze dish-covers. In 1854 Schroder and Daesch proved that organic infusions can be preserved after boiling, provided that the air admitted to them has been filtered through cotton wool; and in 1862 Pasteur published the results of all previous investigations, supplemented by those obtained by himself. This series of brilliant researches Mr. Hartley illustrated at some length by various experiments, proving the existence of multitudes of living organisms in ordinary air, and that easily putrescible liquids are unaffected by air if these organisms are not present. He also exhibited several flasks filled with liquids two years ago. In some the liquid was bright and colourless; while in others, treated in the same way, except that the ordinary air had been admitted, the liquids were a mass of corruption of a dark brown colour. He then exhibited the action of dust on supersaturated solutions. A gallon flask of sulphate of soda rapidly uncorked became a solid mass of crystal instantly, and a flask of such a solution stoppered merely by cotton wool crystallised when the wool was removed. Some of this solution in a cylinder was unaffected when a recently-heated glass rod was placed in it, but it became a solid mass when the rod was passed through the fingers and again introduced. Certain it is, said Mr. Hartley, that solid particles cause this crystallisation; and very probable it is that these particles are minute crystals of soda-salts floating in the air. Finally, he described his own experiments, published in the Proceedings of the Royal Society for 1872, and explained the method of using his apparatus, showing that some of his tubes had kept free from change until the present time.

GALILEO AND THE INQUISITION.

Mr. Sedley Taylor, M.A., at the evening meeting on Friday, May 8, gave a discourse on "An Historical Enigma in the Trial of Galileo before the Inquisition." He began by stating that, in consequence of new evidence having been recently brought to light, the verdict of historians in reference to the condemnation of Galileo must be reversed. The approved opinion had hitherto been that the Inquisition, whatever might be thought of the wisdom of its proceedings, had an undoubted right to act as it did. It must henceforth be held that Galileo was entitled, even on the strictest interpretation of his constitutional obligations, to an absolute acquittal. In support of this view, which had been originated and developed independently by two Continental inquirers, Herr Wohlwill, of Hamburg, and Professor Gherardi, of Florence, Mr. Taylor adduced documents, published within the last eight years in France and Italy, illustrating them by copious references to decrees of the Roman tribunals, private letters of Galileo, and other previously known evidence. Following closely on the steps of his German authority, the speaker maintained that a glaring contradiction, which he designated as the "enigma" of the trial, existed in the final sentence of the Inquisition with respect to the very point on which Galileo was ultimately convicted. The clue thus presented led necessarily to the conclusion that a certain entry in the records of the Holy Office, which constituted the sole evidence on which the Court could assert the fact of Galileo's culpability, was a forgery, committed with the deliberate intention of providing a supposititious justification for the condemnation actually pronounced. Mr. Taylor concluded with an appeal to the Roman authorities to publish, in facsimile, the whole set of Galileo documents in their custody, so as, if possible, finally to dispel the obscurity which still hangs about some of the most critical events of his trial. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

MEASUREMENT OF THE SOLAR SYSTEM.

Mr. Richard A. Proctor, author of "Saturn," "The Sun," and other astronomical works, gave the first of a course of five lectures on the Planetary Systems on Saturday last. He premised that his principal object was to bring the characteristics of the members of the solar system before his audience, so as to prepare the way for the enunciation in his closing lecture of a new theory of life in other worlds, and of certain views as to the past and future of this system to which he had been led during the progress of his researches. As the size of the solar system naturally enters into the discussion of the subject, and as a special interest attaches just now to the study of dimensional astronomy, in consequence of the plans in operation for an attack this year, and in 1882, upon the fundamental problem of astronomical measurement, Mr. Proctor devoted his first lecture to a description of the methods by which men have gradually learned the proportions of the solar system and the scale on which its various parts are constructed, in doing which he was aided by large diagrams. Beginning with the determination of the moon's distance by the ancients, and touching briefly on their attempts to measure the distance of the sun, he proceeded to show how the proportions of the solar system (but not its size) had become known long before the time of Newton. The determination of the size of the solar system from the observations of Venus in transit over the sun was next considered; and this was followed by an account of other methods, such as the observation of Mars, the study of that particular perturbation of the moon's motions depending on the sun's distance, and the measurement of the velocity of light. As these methods have shown beyond dispute that the solar distance (about 95,000,000 miles) estimated from the observations of the transit of Venus in 1769, is largely in excess of the truth, great interest attaches to the observations to be made during the transit of Venus this year and in 1882. Having described the plans adopted by the astronomers of various nations for the observations of the transit this year, Mr. Proctor remarked that it was unnecessary for him to enter on the consideration of the contest which had been waged as to the best modes of utilising the opportunities presented. Now that mistakes had been corrected and the arrangements had been completed, he said, "all's well that ends well," and expressed his opinion that the measures finally determined on were calculated to lead to the best results attainable under the circumstances. In conclusion, he described the method by which the weight of the solar system may be ascertained.

The physical condition of the planets Mercury, Venus, the Earth, and the Moon will be the subject of the second lecture, to be delivered this day (Saturday).

STRUCTURE AND FUNCTIONS OF THE BRAIN.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., in his fifth lecture on the Nervous System, on Tuesday last, after giving an account of the structure of the brain, described the observations of disease and the experiments by which it has been shown that the corpora striata are motor and the optio thalami sensory ganglia, and that the corpora quadrigemina are ganglia connected with the movement of the extensor muscles of the body, and also with the sense of sight. The functions of the cerebral hemispheres were then entered upon, and the gradual increase in size of the cerebrum with rise in the scale of the vertebrates, and its great preponderance in man, was pointed out. Broca's important observations on aphasia were next considered. In this curious disease a person loses the memory of words. His speech is not paralysed, and he can pronounce words after he has heard them or seen them. Such a person understands what is going on around him and what is said to him; but if a finger or other well-known object be held before him and he be asked to name it, he is unable to recall the word. If, however, the word be supplied to him, either by writing or by speaking, he can perceive when he has the right word, and names the object accordingly. This affection is commonly associated with a disorganised condition on the lower part of the ascending frontal convolution on the left side of the brain in persons who are right-handed—that is, in persons who use the left side of the brain more than they do the right; but in left-handed persons this affection has been found associated with a lesion on the right side of the brain. The probable explanation appears to be that, although the brain is a double organ, nevertheless in a right-handed person it is only the left side which appears to be exercised in remembering words, and its activity, therefore, is necessary for the recall of words. It appears to be the same with the right side of the organ in a left-handed person. The precise locality of the memory of language cannot, however, be said to be exactly ascertained as yet; for aphasia has been observed with a lesion of the back part of the cerebrum. The further consideration of the cerebral centres of motion and sensation was deferred until the next and concluding lecture.

Professor W. Kingdon Clifford will give a discourse on the Education of the People at the next Friday evening meeting.

Sir Albert Woods, Garter Principal King of Arms, has placed the arms and regalia of the Shah of Persia upon his stall in the choir of St. George's Chapel, Windsor, next that of the Sultan of Turkey, Abdul Aziz Khan.

Captain Glover, who so materially contributed to the success of the expedition to Ashantee, is gazetted to the Grand Cross of the Order of St. Michael and St. George. Colonel Festing is a Knight Commander of the same order, and the following companions are at the same time announced:—Colonel Harley, Capt. Fremantle, Deputy-Commissioner Goldworthy, Surgeon-Major Rowe, Capt. Sartorius, Lieut. Barnard, Major Helden, Deputy-Commissionary Blissett, and Vice-Admiral Patey.

On Monday night the Synod of the United Presbyterian Church began its annual sittings in Queen-street Hall, Edinburgh. The Rev. Dr. Joseph Brown, Glasgow, the retiring Moderator, preached the opening sermon. The Rev. Dr. Andrew Thomson, Edinburgh, was unanimously elected Moderator. On Tuesday the Synod agreed, by a majority of 185 to 178, to a motion suspending negotiations for union between the English congregations and the English Presbyterian Church.

The returns of the emigration from Liverpool last month show that there sailed under the provisions of the Emigration Act thirty-six ships to the United States, with 12,354 passengers; six to Canada, with 2097 passengers; and two to Nova Scotia, with 502 passengers. There sailed, not under the Act, three vessels to Australia, with 108 passengers; five to the United States, with 346 passengers; and to various other places, ten ships, with 176 passengers. The grand total is 15,783. This shows a decrease of 17,606 on April, 1873, and a decrease of 27,350 upon the portion of the present year compared with the first four months of 1873.

At the General Synod of the Disestablished Irish Church, on Thursday week, Mr. Sanderson's motion for the abolition of the two-thirds vote in revision matters was brought forward. After considerable discussion, the proposition was negative; the voting being:—Clergy—Ayes, 5; noes, 127. Laity—Ayes, 80; noes, 53. It would have required two thirds of each order to carry this motion. The Synod concluded its session the following day. On the motion of the Rev. Dr. Riechel, a resolution was passed expressing the deep thanks of the Synod to Mr. Henry Roe for his liberality in restoring and endowing Christ Church Cathedral and in erecting a hall for the use of the Synod. It is expected that the Synod will hold its session in the new hall next year.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

*All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed to the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS, &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

C. W. of Sunbury.—No. 2, first sent in October, was thought by the examiners to be somewhat below your standard. The other is now under consideration.

H. A. T.—A correspondent who asks us to put ourselves to trouble that he may be spared it should be courteous enough to send his name and address.

H. SCHLESINGER, Bahia.—Many thanks. But bear in mind that one thoroughly good composition is worth a hundred mediocre specimens. The latter only give trouble for no purpose.

Tro. Brunswick.—Every problem sent for examination must have the name and address of the author attached to it.

G. de P. of Alexandria.—It shall have immediate attention.

Saxton, M.P., Orvis, and Others.—There can be no doubt, we fear, that Problem No. 1876, by Rostrevor, admits of a second solution, beginning with 1. Kt to Q 4th.

V. Gonzalez.—Received, with thanks.

M. I. C.—Our opinion is that White could compel Black to retract his last move and place the Black King out of check.

CANADIAN CHESS ASSOCIATION.

This association is under the patronage of the Governor-General, Professor J. B. Cherriman, Univ. Coll., Toronto, being the president, and H. Aspinwall Howe, Esq., LL.D., Montreal, J. H. Graham, Esq., St. John, N.B., J. T. Wyde, Esq., Halifax, N.S., the vice-presidents. The following programme has been adopted for the third general meeting of Canadian chessplayers, to take place in the city of Montreal on the first Tuesday of July, 1874. Two tournaments will be held, one for games, the other for problems.

GAME TOURNAMENT.—Open to all residents of the Dominion, only one class to be opened. Three prizes to be awarded, one to each of the three players winning the greatest number of games. Preliminaries to be arranged at the meeting by a majority of those entered present. Entrance fee to non-members of the association, 20 cents. First prize, champion cup, value 50 cents; second prize, medal, value 30 cents; third prize, set of chessmen, value 10 cents.

PROBLEM TOURNAMENT.—For the best two-move problem, 10 dollars, second 5 dollars; three-move ditto 10 dollars, second 5 dollars; four-move ditto 10 dollars, second 5 dollars. Two honorary prizes will be added, one (value 20 dollars) for the best set (i.e., two, three, and four move problems), and another (value 10 dollars) for the greatest curiosity of any kind in chess; for both the latter foreign players are invited to compete also. All the problems (except the last-named) to be ordinary mates, original, and never before published; problems in a set (except the winning set) are eligible for the prizes given to single problems. Competitors may send in as many sets or single problems as they please. Each competitor to affix a "motto" to every problem or set sent in, and also to inclose his name and address in a sealed envelope bearing the same motto. All problems competing to be sent as above to J. White, secretary-treasurer of the association, Stanstead, Que., so as to reach him not later than June 15, 1874. Their several merits will be decided by a judge or judges to be appointed at the next congress.

The value of the prizes in the game tournament and of supplementary prizes in the problem tournament will depend upon the amount subscribed in the meantime by clubs and members generally, and it is at the discretion of the committee to increase, if possible, the sums named as prizes for single problems.

Arrangements for the reception of visitors to Montreal attending the meeting are in the hands of the president, secretary, and members of the Montreal Chess Club, who have already procured the promise of a suitable building for the use of the next congress.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

With reference to the proposed reform in chess, the inventor tells us that nothing is further from his intention than to propose to abolish the old form of the game. He believes, however, that his modification may be of service to beginners by removing the mass of acquired theory and experience which separates them from good players, for which the largest odds given does not always suffice. If such turns out to be the case, we can offer no opposition to the proposal; although we must cordially assure the beginners in question that the most copious introduction of new pieces will avail but little in their favour, except in shortening the duration of their sufferings.

THE MEMBERS OF THE OXFORD UNIVERSITY CHESS CLUB are already hard at work in order to avenge, next year, their late reverse. Two tournaments and several matches and consultation games are in progress. In electing Prince Leopold as its president for the current term, the club has obtained not only a distinguished name, but an enthusiastic player also. His Royal Highness has entered for one of the tournaments in progress, and has recently taken part in some of the other contests.

OXFORD AND CAMBRIDGE CHESS CLUBS.—A very general desire has been manifested that University chess should be tested in a match between some of its chief representatives and an equal number of players from the City of London Chess Club. At present no preliminaries have been arranged, but we are sure that eight of the strongest University players—say, Messrs. Ranken, Thorold, Anthony, and Parratt, for Oxford; and Messrs. Waite, Skipworth, E. Walker, and Horne for Cambridge—would give considerable trouble to any eight English players selected from the champions of the City club. It would, of course, be difficult to secure the attendance of all the University men on one given day, although they would certainly do their utmost to promote so exciting a conflict. Such a match, if less attractive to the general public than the annual rencontre between the undergraduate teams, would naturally afford more pleasure to connoisseurs and students of the game, and, in the present dearth of matches and tournaments, would be a godsend to the chess periodicals.

THE SOUTH LONDON CHESS CLUB, in connection with the South London Working Men's Institute, will be glad to play any provincial institute or other chess club a game by correspondence. Address, Mr. Charles G. Barber, hon. sec., 17, Parsonage- Walk, Newington-butts, London, S.E.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

LADY DIGBY.

The Right Hon. Theresa Anna Maria, Baroness Digby, died at Minsterne, Dorsetshire, on the 2nd inst. Her Ladyship was born Jan. 11, 1814, the elder daughter of Henry Stephen, third Earl of Ilchester, by Caroline Leonora, his wife, daughter of Lord George Murray, Bishop of St. David's; and was married, June 27, 1837, to Edward St. Vincent Digby, Esq., who succeeded to the barony of Digby at the decease of his kinsman, Edward, second Earl Digby, in 1856. The issue of the marriage consists of four sons and three daughters. Of the latter the eldest is the wife of Richard Marker, Esq., of Combe House, Devon; and the second, of the present Lord Ashburton.

SIR ARCHDALE WILSON, G.C.B.

Lieutenant-General Sir Archdale Wilson, Bart., of Delhi, G.C.B., Colonel Commandant Royal Artillery, died on the 9th inst. This gallant and distinguished soldier was born in 1803, the fifth son of the Rev. George Wilson, of Kirby Cane, Norfolk, Rector of Diddington, youngest brother of Robert Wilson, Esq., of Diddington, in whose favour the abeyance of the barony of Berners was terminated in 1832. Sir Archdale's military service extended over a period of more than half a century, dating from 1819, when he entered the army of the East India Company. He received medals for the siege of Bhurtpore and the affair of Lahore, and was given the insignia of K.C.B. and made a Baronet for his brilliant services at the storming and capture of Delhi, the crowning achievement of the British Army during the Indian Mutiny. Subsequently Sir Archdale commanded the whole of the artillery at the siege and capture of Lucknow under Clyde. The thanks of Parliament and a pension of £1000 a year followed, and a second patent of baronetcy extending the limitation to the male issue of his brother Rear-Admiral George Knyvet Wilson, R.N. Sir Archdale married, in 1842, Ellen, second daughter of Brigadier-General W. H. L. Frith, Commandant Bengal Artillery, but leaves no issue. The baronetcy descends accordingly to his nephew, now Sir Roland Knyvet Wilson, born Aug. 27, 1840.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL JAMES MAXWELL, C.B.

James Maxwell, Lieutenant-Colonel in the Army, formerly of the 34th and lately of the 1st West India Regiment, actively engaged in the recent campaign in Ashantee, died on the homeward voyage from Cape Coast Castle from the effects of fever contracted during the war. This gallant officer had seen more than thirty-two years' service. He entered the Army in 1841, was with his regiment, the 34th, in the Crimea, and received a severe wound in the trenches before Sebastopol. In 1859 he was, as Major of the 34th, in the campaigns in India, at Cawnpore, Lucknow, Azimghur, and Bootwal; in 1864 he attained the rank of Lieutenant-Colonel; and in 1873, being then Lieut.-Colonel of the 1st West India Regiment, he joined the force under Sir Garnet Wolseley. At Sir Garnet's departure, Colonel Maxwell was appointed Acting-Governor at Cape Coast, but he had to quit his post on account of the illness which terminated his life. He was made O.B. a fortnight before his death. He had also a medal with clasps for the Crimea, the Turkish medal and the fifth class of the Medjidie, and also the Indian medal and clasp.

COLONEL OUSELEY HIGGINS.

George Gore Ouseley Higgins, Esq., of Glen Corrib, in the county of Mayo, J.P. and D.L., Lieut.-Colonel of the Mayo Militia, and M.P. for Mayo from 1850 to 1857, died on the 8th inst. at his residence in Wilton-place. He was born Oct. 15, 1818, the second son of the late Captain FitzGerald Higgins, of Westport, J.P., by Mary, his wife, only child of William Ouseley, Esq., of Rushbrook. He served as High Sheriff of the county of Mayo in 1868, and was returned as knight of that shire in the Liberal interest in 1850. Whether in Parliament, on the turf, or in society, Colonel Higgins was popular with all parties.

VICE-ADMIRAL CURRIE.

Mark John Currie, Vice-Admiral on the reserved list, died at his residence, Collington House, Anerley, on the 1st inst. He was born June 21, 1795, the second son of Mark Currie, Esq., of Upper Gattin, Surrey, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of John Olose, Esq., of Easby, in the county of York, and grandson of William Currie, Esq., banker of London, by Madeleine, his wife, daughter of Isaac Le Fevre, Esq. The Admiral's next younger brother is the present Sir Frederick Currie, Bart. Admiral Currie entered the Royal Navy in 1808, and served on the Home, Mediterranean and East Indian stations. He was placed Rear-Admiral on the reserved list in 1862, and Vice-Admiral in 1867. He married, Jan. 14, 1829, Jane, daughter of Charles Boynton Wood, Esq., of Hayes, Middlesex, and had issue.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated June 2, 1873, of Louisa Augusta, Baroness Langford (wife of George Edward Gustard), who died on Feb. 27 last, at Westfield House, Lansdowne-road, Brighton, was proved on the 5th inst. by the Hon. Hugh Rowley, the son, the sole executor, to whom she gives, devises, and bequeaths all her real and personal property.

The will and two codicils dated June 14, 1852, and June 23, 1870, of Dame Emma Hussey, the widow of Vice-Admiral Sir Richard Hussey Hussey, K.C.B., deceased, formerly of Upwood House, Huntingdonshire, but late of Taplow House, Maidenhead, Berks, who died on March 9 last, were proved on the 14th inst. by Richard Hussey Hussey, the son, the surviving executor, the personalty being sworn under £30,000. The legatees named in the will are testatrix's four children.

The will, dated July 14, 1870, of James Reynolds, late of No. 19, Cambridge-gardens, Bayswater, who died on the 17th ult., at the Imperial Hotel, Malvern, was proved on the 1st inst. by Thomas Collis Reynolds, the son, and Alfred James Lambert, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator gives to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Reynolds, all his household furniture and effects absolutely and one fourth of his property for life, with a power of appointment among her issue; to his sons one half of his property; and to his daughters a policy of insurance for £5000 and one fourth of his property.

The will and three codicils—dated June 28, 1847, Jan. 20, 1858, March 1, 1869, and July 17, 1871—of Albert Way, late of Wonham, Surrey, who died on March 22 last, were proved on the 2nd inst. by Lewis John Way and the Hon. William Owen Stanley, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. With the exception of legacies to his executors and servants, the only persons interested under the will are testator's widow, Mrs. Emmeline Way, and children.

The wills of the following persons have just been proved—viz., Colonel George Edward Thorold, late of No. 29, St. Aubyn's, West Brighton, under £20,000; the Hon. Thomas Pryce Lloyd, under £35,000; Captain Augustus Chetham Strode, R.N., C.B., under £7000; and Sir William Keith Ball, Bart., under £1500.

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 23, 1874.

The defeat and resignation of the Duc de Broglie's Cabinet are regarded by public opinion in France as heralding the near approach of the National Assembly to dissolution. The state of Parliamentary parties, the absence of any common ground upon which they may act together, the constitutional questions which are before them for settlement, and the course pursued by the head of the recent Ministry during his twelvemonth's possession of power, render it all but impracticable to carry on by means of the present Legislature the government of the country. There is no political leader able to command a working majority in Parliament; there is no party, or section of a party, having a clear predominance of votes over the rest in support of any line of policy which may be adopted by its chief; and, finally, there is no such accordance between the Assembly and the constituencies represented by it as might embolden a patriotic statesman in an attempt to reduce Parliamentary chaos to order. To use an expressive but vulgar phrase, government in France at the present moment is "all at sixes and sevens." The only fixed point, the sole nucleus of authority, is the Septennate of Marshal MacMahon. That he will maintain order during the interregnum and prevent the whole machinery of government from being swept away by insurrectionary violence no one doubts. But even he occupies an abnormal position. As the head of the Executive power, he is without authoritative guidance. The Legislative Assembly is too divided to adopt a policy; and as yet the Marshal has no constitutional right to appeal to the nation. Matters cannot remain thus for any great length of time; and the most acute political observers see no solution of the difficulty short of consulting the judgment of the people.

The Duc de Broglie may be, and probably is, a man of irreproachable motives. It may be conceded that from the time of his accession to office to the time when he felt compelled to surrender it he meant well for his country. It can hardly be denied that his intentions are seconded by intellectual abilities considerably above the average. That he has strong prejudices his official career has incontestably proved. That he is naturally despot in his views, or that he gives a preference to unrestricted authority over well-regulated liberty, has not been borne out by conclusive evidence. It seems probable that he would have been satisfied to give to France a Constitution resembling that which he has learned to venerate in this country—a Monarchy surrounded and upheld by free institutions. Unfortunately, whatever may have been the end which he proposed to himself, he took but little note of the character of the means to which he resorted for attaining them. Republicanism was his bête noire. He recoiled from it, under whatever guise, with horror. He could not have accepted it, even when imbued with the most Conservative spirit, and though it should be thrust upon him by the unmistakable will of the nation. In regard to this matter, he is, and has been, a thorough doctrinaire. Government in conformity with certain propositions—government by formulas—government as the exposition of fixed ideas—appeared to be that at which he aimed. He thought it best for France, best for human interests in general. In regard to this he had no flexibility of will. He aspired to bless his country with it, whether she would or no. But in the means which he was ready to employ for carrying out his object he was less scrupulous. He does not seem to understand how to deal with human nature. Good as his will may be, he is too ready to enforce it by bad methods; and if he has sympathies which extend themselves beyond the range of his fixed ideas, they lean to Conservatism rather than to freedom, and are more apt to run into the methods of absolutism than into those of trust in the good instincts of the public.

His brief career of power has exhibited an almost uninterrupted succession of mistakes. He must have been well aware that in upsetting the Administration of M. Thiers he was acting in the teeth of the nation's deliberate predilection. The National Assembly, which he employed as his instrument, wanted that moral authority which might otherwise have consecrated his mission. Possibly his consciousness of this fact drove him into needless extremes for maintaining the supremacy he had won. He started in the wrong direction, and aimed to justify this mistake by hard running. His wholesale displacement of Liberal Prefects; his menacing attitude towards independent municipalities; the overtures of one of his colleagues with a view to debase the provincial press; his officious interference with occasional elections; his scandalous connivance at Legitimist intrigues; his preparatory efforts for the disfranchisement of three millions of voters; his avowed design of making municipal government the mere creature of central authority; and his project of so organising the Septennate as to adapt constitutional machinery to a Monarchical restoration, irritated public opinion, while it failed to conciliate and weld together into unity Parliamentary parties. He had more than once a superb opportunity for statesmanship, and he invariably missed it. His mind never comprehended the breadth of the necessity with which he had to deal. He walked the tight-rope of politics, placing his dependence upon his skilful management of the balancing-pole. Now he swayed hither, now thither, again and again recovering himself by setting one Parliamentary party against another. At length he has failed, and he leaves behind him no achievement upon which France can look with present satisfaction, with the single exception of the establishment of the Septennate.

It was in organising the Constitutional machinery over the movements of which President MacMahon was to preside for the next seven years, but which was intended to remain in case of his death or resignation during that interval, that the Duc de Broglie met his fall. And it is instructive to note that he met it on a point of form rather than of substance. True, the public opinion of France had breathed contempt upon his three constitutional bills, and had looked upon them as the legerdemain by which he intended to filch from the country the broad bases upon which its political institutions rest. But, accepting the National Assembly as the true fount of political authority in France, he took no heed of popular disapprobation. The reed upon which he leaned broke, however, with the pressure he put upon it, and fatally pierced the hand of his power. He insisted upon taking first into consideration his project of electoral law. The Legitimists objected to this arrangement, not because the measure would have been distasteful to them on its own account, but because they had fully persuaded themselves that the measure being once passed, the others would have no chance of coming under consideration, and a dissolution would speedily follow. They proposed, therefore, to give priority to the bill which deals with municipal law, and they were joined in this by the Bonapartists, who look upon universal suffrage as a sacred Napoleonic institution. A majority of sixty-four, in a very full House, decided the point against the Prime Minister, whose resignation of office was immediately tendered to, and accepted by, President MacMahon. There, for the present, we pause in our comment. What is to follow in the wake of the last Ministry it is difficult to conjecture. What the Duc de Broglie could not do, no other Conservative chief can hope to accomplish. It would be hazardous, however, to predict. A supreme governing body which holds its life in its own hands can hardly be expected to hasten the period of its dissolution. The crisis is full of perplexity. For ourselves, we can only watch with anxious curiosity, and see what comes of it.

THE COURT.

The Queen gave a banquet, on Thursday week, in St. George's Hall, Windsor Castle, in honour of the Emperor of Russia. Their Majesties, with the Princes and Princesses, had been in the park, as far as Virginia Water, that afternoon. The Emperor left Windsor on Friday morning. His Majesty came again on Sunday and took luncheon with the Queen. He has conferred the Russian order of St. Katherine upon their Royal Highnesses Princess Christian, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne), and Princess Beatrice. The Emperor, on Sunday, took leave of her Majesty, previous to his departure from England on Thursday last.

Her Majesty, on Saturday, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, presented medals to some of the non-commissioned officers and soldiers who have distinguished themselves in the Ashantee war. Colonel Bateson and Colonel the Hon. W. Wellesley dined with her Majesty.

On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine worship in the private chapel of Windsor Castle.

Princess Christian visited her Majesty on Monday, and remained to luncheon. Lieutenant-General and the Hon. Lady Biddulph and the Dean of Windsor and the Hon. Mrs. Wellesley dined with the Queen.

Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove out on Wednesday, and met the 1st Life Guards, under Colonel Bateson, on their march from Aldershot.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice and by Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, left the castle shortly before eight o'clock on Wednesday evening, en route for the Highlands. Her Majesty travelled from Windsor over the customary route northwards, partaking of breakfast at Perth on Thursday morning, after which the journey was continued to Ballater, whence the Queen drove to Balmoral Castle.

The Prince of Wales will, by command of the Queen, hold a Levée at St. James's Palace, on behalf of her Majesty, on Monday, June 1.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

Their Royal Highnesses, with the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh (Imperial Grand Duchess of Russia), were daily engaged, from the time of the Emperor's arrival, in accompanying his Majesty and the Grand Duke Alexis upon the visits and excursions described in another page. They entertained the Emperor at Marlborough House on Friday, and at Chiswick on Sunday, went with him to the Crystal Palace, to the City, to Aldershot, and to Woolwich; on Thursday they accompanied him to Gravesend, where he embarked. There was a state ball at Buckingham Palace on Tuesday night.

Princess Christian presided, on Tuesday, at a meeting of the council of the School of Art Needlework, held at Alford House. The school has received large orders from the Queen, the Princess of Wales, and the Duchess of Edinburgh.

Prince Leopold has been confined to his room at his residence at Oxford for several days with an attack of sciatica, but is now making satisfactory progress towards recovery. Sir William Jenner has visited his Royal Highness, and Dr. Acland has been in constant attendance.

The Duke of Cambridge gave a banquet on Monday evening, at Gloucester House, to the Emperor of Russia, the Prince of Wales, and other Princes, and some distinguished officers.

Count de Paris has left Claridge's Hotel on his return to Paris.

The Prince Imperial went to the Princess's Theatre on Saturday last. The Prince was received by the Emperor of Russia on Sunday at Buckingham Palace. He had come from Chislehurst to return the visit paid by his Imperial Majesty to the Empress Eugénie.

Prince Hohenlohe has taken Steephill Castle, Ventnor, for the season.

The Duke de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia returned to the French Embassy, on Tuesday, from Paris.

The Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Tait held their second afternoon reception at Lambeth Palace on Saturday last. The Archbishop gave his annual dinner to the Archbishops and Bishops, on Monday, at Lambeth Palace.

The Duchess of Sutherland, yesterday (Friday) week, gave a dance at Stafford House, St. James's. Among the company were the Emperor of Russia and the Grand Duke Alexis, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, Princess Louise, and the Duke of Cambridge.

The Duchess of Westminster gave a ball on Monday night, at Grosvenor House, at which the Prince of Wales and a large and distinguished company assembled.

The Earl of Derby, Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, and the Countess of Derby gave a banquet on Wednesday to the Emperor of Russia at the Foreign Office. The Countess of Derby had a reception.

Entertainments have been given by the French Ambassador, the Duchess of Marlborough, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Marquis and Marchioness of Bristol, the Earl and Countess of Darnley, the Earl and Countess of Ducie, the Earl and Countess of Meath, the Earl and Countess of Stair, Lord Carlisle and Countess Frances Waldegrave, Viscountess Combermere, Viscount and Viscountess Mountgarrett, Viscount and Viscountess Bridport, Count and Countess Gurovski de Wezele, the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lady Northcote, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton, Lord and Lady Cairns, Lord and Lady Lawrence, Lord and Lady Castletown, and the Right Hon. the Speaker.

The City of Bristol has resolved to adopt the Free Libraries Act, and a new library is to be erected, at a cost of £10,000.

According to a Parliamentary return on Monday the number of persons employed in the public offices last year was increased by 2432. The main source of the augmentation was the Post Office.

A return signed by Major-General Sir Garnet Wolseley, Inspector-General of Auxiliary Forces, has been issued, showing the training establishments of the militia regiments in the United Kingdom last year. The total number of effective militia reserve men in 1873 was 29,853.

THE CHURCH.

A friend has offered £1000 for the completion of the nave of St. Augustine's Church, Kilburn, on condition that £5000 more be given by Christmas next.

On Thursday week the Bishop of Worcester consecrated the new Church of St. Paul, at Leamington, which had been completed in exactly a year, at a cost of nearly £8000, of which £1000 was given by Mr. F. Manning, brother of the Archbishop of Westminster, an old resident.

The Archdeacon of Barnstaple, one of the cathedral body at Exeter, held his visitation at Barnstaple on Monday, and in his charge earnestly counselled a reform of unquestionable abuses and scandals in the Church during the breathing-time given to her by the change of parties in political power.

Dr. W. West Jones was, on Sunday, consecrated Bishop of Capetown in Westminster Abbey. The prelates who took part in the ceremony were the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishops of London, Winchester, Oxford, Ely, Edinburgh, and New South Wales, with Bishop Piers Claughton, Archdeacon of London.

In protest and opposition to the encroachments of Ritualism, a deputation waited on the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, on Monday, to present a memorial signed by upwards of 900 lay members of the Church within his Lordship's diocese. Among those who addressed the Bishop were Lord Ducie, Lord Bathurst, Mr. S. Bazley, Colonel Saville, and Mr. Paul.

An interesting ceremony took place, on Thursday morning, in the east of London, the occasion being the acknowledgment of the presentation by her Majesty of a clock with chiming arrangements and a peal of eleven bells to St. Mark's Church, Victoria Park, to mark her satisfaction with her visit last year to the East-End. At eleven o'clock Divine service was held in the church; and at the conclusion of the service luncheon was provided in the school-room, the chair being taken by Lord John Manners. During the day the bells played several airs.

The Rev. Arthur Robins, M.A., Rector of Holy Trinity, and Chaplain to her Majesty's household troops and the brigade of Guards at Windsor, has been presented with a beautiful silver cup by the non-commissioned officers and troopers of the 2nd Life Guards.—The Rev. T. P. Wilson, Vicar of Halingden, on his leaving for Pavenham, near Bedford, has been presented on behalf of the congregation with a purse of 72 gu., and on behalf of the Sunday scholars with a purse containing £30.

The company engaged upon the revision of the authorised version of the Old Testament brought their twenty-third session to an end yesterday week in the Jerusalem Chamber. The revision was continued as far as Judges xx. 2. The Rev. Joseph Rawson Lumby, B.D., Fellow of St. Catherine's College Cambridge, has been elected a member.—The revisers of the authorised version of the New Testament met on Tuesday at the Jerusalem Chamber for their fortieth session, and sat for seven hours. The company completed the second revision of the fifth and sixth chapters of St. Matthew's Gospel.

On Ascension Day the ancient custom of the "well-dressing" took place, as usual, at Tissington, Derbyshire. From time immemorial, at this picturesque village, amidst the limestone hills of Derbyshire, so beautiful at this spring season, it has been customary, on Holy Thursday, to deck the wells with flowers. At the morning service the Psalms for the day and the Epistle and Gospel are omitted. A surpliced procession then moves out of church to the five wells of the village, at each of which a hymn is sung. At the first three a psalm is read, and the Epistle and Gospel at the other two. The sermon was preached by the Rev. W. Bryans, Vicar of Tarvin, Cheshire.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

The examiners for the Marquis of Lothian's prize at Oxford have adjudged it to Mr. Arthur Lionel Smith, exhibitor of Balliol College, and desire to make honourable mention of the essays sent in by H. W. Roscoe, of Corpus Christi College, and Mr. W. Sichel, of Balliol College.

The gold medal given annually by the Earl of Powis, Lord High Steward of Cambridge University, for the best exercise in Latin hexameter verse has been adjudged to H. Wace, St. John's College; and the Porson Prize, for the best translation into Greek verse of a selected passage from the works of any standard English poet, has also been adjudged to H. Wace, who was the successful competitor last year. Sir Samuel Baker delivered the Rede lecture on Tuesday, his subject being "Slavery, and the Suppression of the Slave Trade."

The following is a list of the candidates who have passed the recent general examinations for women in the University of London:—Honours Division: Alice Gardner, private study; Ellen Martha Watson, private study. First Division: Fanny Harrison, Bedford College; Emily Jane Heming, Ladies' College, Cheltenham; Kate Augusta King, private study; Ada Leech, Ladies' College, Cheltenham; Mary Elizabeth Smith, private study; Kate Benedicta Trotter, private study; Marian Elizabeth Verrall, Ladies' College, Cheltenham. Second Division: Sophia Mildred Du Pré and Annie Margaret Gibbs, Ladies' College, Cheltenham.

The University Senate at Dublin has debated on Mr. Monck's motion, whether there should be one governing body or two, rejecting the proposal by 74 to 16. On Wednesday there was a long debate on a motion by Dr. Reichel, respecting the mode of voting in the governing body. He proposed to alter the words "Senate at large" to "those members of the Senate who have not voted as fellows or professors," the object being to prevent members of the Senate voting twice. The proposition was carried by 29 placets against 11 non-placets.

The Scottish Bishops have conferred the Pantonian Professorship of Theology at Trinity College, Glenalmond, on the Rev. John Dowden, M.A.

The examination for the Cheltenham College scholarships was held last week with the following results:—Two senior scholarships of £50: A. H. Collins, classical; H. M. Lawson, mathematical. Two senior scholarships of £20: G. Harrison, classical; E. Agar, mathematical. Six junior scholarships of £40: E. E. H. Brydges, C. N. E. Eliot, R. H. Brereton, classical; F. M. Young, G. P. Rudd, J. M. Walter, mathematical. Two junior scholarships of £20: A. J. H. Luard, classical; H. C. Barnard, mathematical.

A higher grade school for girls was inaugurated at Cambridge on Monday. Archdeacon Emery, Professor Westcott, and other gentlemen were present at the ceremony. A similar school for boys has been in existence for some time, and has proved successful.

A handsome testimonial has been presented to Mr. Frederick Barlow on his retirement from the command of the 1st Cambridge and 17th Essex Rifle Volunteers. Major Barlow has seen fourteen years' service as a volunteer, being one of the first of the original corps.

"FIGHTING IN THE ASHANTEE FOREST."

The picture by Mr. Louis Desanges, which bears this title, is now being exhibited at Willis's Rooms. It has been painted, as we explained last week, for the proprietors of the Illustrated London News. They felt it due to the occasion, with the great public interest shown, in every way, in the recent campaign on the Gold Coast, that the materials for its illustration, furnished by their Special Artist's sketches, should be applied to produce a considerable work of art. Mr. Desanges has, in designing this work, had the advantage of Mr. Melton Prior's assistance, referring to the original sketches taken by Mr. Prior on the spot, and consulting him upon actual matters of detail.

The painting is of large size, 14 ft. by 10 ft., and is characterised by a bold and effective style. The action represented is that of Sir Garnet Wolseley, accompanied by several officers of his staff and others, in regimental command or upon special service, directing the "Black Watch," or 42nd Royal Highlanders, in their conflict with an unseen host of Ashantees, who lurk in the surrounding bush. The soldiers, in the background, are mostly kneeling to take aim with their breech-loading rifles, or to evade the shower of slugs with which they are assailed. One has fallen wounded, and two native hammock-bearers are creeping forward to lift and carry him to the rear. In the foreground, over which the fight is supposed to have raged a few minutes before, lie the dead bodies of two Ashantee warriors, stark and grim, with musket, sword, and powder-pouch scattered among the fern. A fetish apparatus of crossed sticks and a fetish placard affixed on the trunk of a tree bear witness to the futility of their heathen superstitions, in which they had trusted to repel the advancing British troops.

Sir Garnet Wolseley, clad like the rest in the simple grey tunic and white sun-helmet, stands with notebook in hand, giving an order to Colonel Greaves, Chief of the Staff. An aide-de-camp, Captain the Hon. H. L. Wood, is posted close behind, with a favourite dog. Lord Gifford, sitting to rest after a long scouting walk through the forest, takes a cup of water from the hands of his black servant. Colonel Sir John M'Leod, Major Scott, and Major Farquharson, all of the 42nd, are introduced in this picture; also the lamented Major Baird, of the same regiment, borne to the rear wounded. With his pencil and sketchbook, in the diligent pursuit of his vocation, Mr. Melton Prior, Special Artist of the Illustrated London News, is seen hovering on the skirts of the battle. All these are good portraits of the men, who sat to Mr. Desanges on purpose.

A startling incident may be perceived to happen among the trees in the background. One of the Ashantees, who had climbed on a tree, and had been left up there when his comrades were driven off this ground, was just now detected firing from above at one of our officers. A shot has brought him tumbling headforemost down: strange fruit of the wild African forest!

The picture is one for our readers to go and see; they will appreciate its epic truth, as expressing the very spirit, the motives, and sensations that characterised the most exciting actions and experiences of the late campaign. It is not, like the Engravings we publish from week to week, exactly copying the sketches we received, an attempt to present, with minute accuracy, the precise figures assembled at a certain moment, at some particular spot, or to report their individual gestures. The design has rather been that of a more artistic conception, fusing into one whole the several incidents and detached features of a connected series of actions, extending probably through four or five days of marching and fighting, from the battle-field of Amoaful to the captured city of Coomassie.

Nearly a hundred of Mr. Prior's original sketches, which have been engraved for this Journal, are open to inspection with the large painting. The collection also of Ashantee utensils, weapons, ornaments, articles of dress, and other curious objects, enumerated in our last, will be found well worth examining at Willis's Rooms.

The Hon. Eliot Constantine Yorke, M.P., son of the late Earl of Hardwicke, has been appointed one of the Deputy Lieutenants of the county of Cambridge.

A railway accident is reported from Merthyr Tydvil, by which more than forty persons have been injured. The disaster was occasioned by a number of mineral-waggons becoming detached from their engine, and running back on an incline till they came into sharp collision with a passenger-train.

The United Presbyterian Synod, at their meeting, held on Thursday week, in Edinburgh, unanimously agreed to memorialise the Government to disestablish and disendow the Churches of England and Scotland, and to petition against all legislative proposals in reference to patronage in the Church of Scotland, except as a part of a final measure for the disestablishment and disendowment of that Church.

The number of emigrants (natives of Ireland) who left that country during the first four months of the present year was 22,429, of whom 13,332 were males and 9097 were females. The total number of emigrants in the corresponding period of 1873 was 31,992. The total emigration from Ireland since May 1, 1851 (the date at which the collection of the returns commenced) to April 30, 1874, was 2,275,174 persons.

In consequence of the indisposition of Dr. Kenealy, the inquiry ordered by the Benchers of Gray's Inn respecting the conduct of the learned counsel while acting as the leading advocate for the Tichborne claimant has been postponed to July 18.—By the preamble of the Tichborne and Doughty Estates Bill, which has been read the first time in the House of Lords, it appears that the expenses of the litigation occasioned by "the Claimant's" proceedings, and payable by the present Baronet, or, in the event of his death during minority, by the family out of the estates, have amounted already to nearly £92,000. These are exclusive of the expenses of the prosecution for perjury, which have to be borne by the country. A Treasury return indicates the probable cost to the country of the trial. The expenditure up to April 11 was £49,815; and outstanding liabilities on account of witnesses, agency, and printing, are estimated at £5500: making a total of £55,315.

Mr. Morley, M.P., and Mr. Dixon, M.P., on behalf of the National Amalgamated Agricultural Labourers' Union and the Lincoln and Adjacent Counties Labour League, attended a meeting of the central committee of the Lincolnshire Farmers' Association, on Wednesday, at which, after considerable discussion, it was resolved that the labourers' strike and the farmers' lock-out in the county of Lincoln should be withdrawn simultaneously on Saturday (to-day), in order that arrangements may be made for the resumption of work on Monday.—The great Durham colliers' strike is at an end; and at the annual conference of the Miners' Association, held at Newcastle last week (Mr. Macdonald, M.P., in the chair), it was recommended that the men should everywhere agree to a reduction of 10 per cent where the advance had not exceeded 60 per cent. In South Wales the colliery owners have, after protracted discussion, resolved on giving notice of a reduction of 10 per cent, and the colliers have accepted the masters' terms.

THE CZAR'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

The visit of his Imperial Majesty Alexander II., Czar of the Russian empire, and father of her Royal Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh, has been an occasion of general public congratulation in this country. Several of the conspicuous incidents which took place on his arrival and during his stay among us are made subjects of our illustrations in the present issue, beginning with those of the arrival on Wednesday week.

It had been arranged that the landing should take place at Gravesend, where the Duchess of Edinburgh, his beloved daughter, landed two months ago with her newly-married husband. The Czar had on the night before (Tuesday night) gone on board his splendid yacht, the Derjava, in the Dutch port of Flushing. By this vessel, had there been no unforeseen accident, his Imperial Majesty would have reached Gravesend on the Wednesday forenoon. The usual preparations were made at Gravesend to receive a traveller of the highest rank. The Terrace Pier was decorated with scarlet cloth, flags, and artificial flowers. The ships and small vessels in the river, H.M.S. Triumph, the Russian corvette Vitiaz, an Admiralty yacht, and the Faraday telegraph-ship were dressed with all their colours. At the railway station, too, on the platform where the Czar was to enter the train for Windsor, there was a beautiful array of flowers and other ornaments. The Russian Ambassador, Count Brunnow, with the chamberlain, secretaries, and other members of the embassy, was at Gravesend that morning, to meet his Imperial master. His Royal Highness Prince Arthur, with other officers of the 7th Hussars, came from Maidstone, arriving at eleven o'clock. The Mayor and corporation of Gravesend, half an hour before, met in the Townhall to go to the landing pier; but a telegram from the Admiralty was then put into the Mayor's hands, informing him of a disappointment. The Czar was not coming to Gravesend. The Imperial yacht had run upon a mud-bank in the mouth of the Scheldt, near Flushing, and had stuck there all night. It would be needful to save time by making for Dover instead of entering the Thames. When this was understood there was no time lost in making the best of it. A telegram was sent to London by the Mayor, Mr. Lake, to warn their Royal Highnesses the Prince of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh. Prince Arthur, with the Russian Ambassador, went on to

A STREET TEA-SELLER, MOSCOW.

Dover by a special train. Many of the holiday visitors to Gravesend went down to Thames Haven to see the Channel Fleet.

At Dover, meantime, the news of the Czar's unexpected approach was brought from Flushing at ten o'clock, by Captain Sir F. Arrow, in the Trinity Board yacht Galatea. The Galatea had gone over to Flushing the day before, with his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh, to meet the Czar, and to accompany him to our shores.

The Prince of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and the Duke of Cambridge arrived at Dover from London, by a special train, about three o'clock. They were received by the Mayor, Mr. F. Pierce, and Captain Bruce, R.N., the Admiralty Superintendent. A Royal salute was fired from the Castle.

They waited, with Prince Arthur, at the Lord Warden Hotel, till half-past five, when the Russian Imperial yacht came in sight. The Derjava was accompanied by the Livadia, another steam-yacht of the Czar's, and by a Dutch steamer. These vessels were met off Dover by the Galatea, Trinity House yacht.

In the few hours since notice was given at Dover of the Czar's coming there, all that was needful had been done by the municipality, the officials of the Admiralty and port, the military authorities, and those of the South-Eastern Railway. General Sir Alfred Horsford, commander of the military district, who came in haste from Aldershot on purpose, had collected about 1500 troops. These were the 7th Fusiliers, under Colonel Waller; part of the 90th Regiment, under Colonel Palmer; a detachment of Royal Engineers, and one of Royal Artillery, with the Kent Artillery Militia. They lined the Admiralty Pier, forming a guard of honour. The Mayor and Corporation of Dover, with their Recorder, Town Clerk, and other town officers in their robes, assembled at the Lord Warden. Earl Sydney, Lord Lieutenant of Kent, in his official uniform, was there. The Russian Ambassador, Count Brunnow, and the British Ambassador to St. Petersburg, Lord A. Loftus, were ready to meet the Emperor. The Prince of Wales wore a General officer's uniform, with the ribbon and badges of three Russian orders; the Duke of Cambridge had the uniform of a Field Marshal. The Duchess of Edinburgh wore a purple dress, an Indian shawl, and a hat with white flowers and mauve trimmings.

VISIT OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA TO THE CITY.

THE PROCESSION AT CHARING-CROSS.

THE PROCESSION IN FLEET-STREET.

It was nearly half-past six before the Derjava came alongside the pier. She is a large vessel of 3000 tons, drawing 19 ft., but with sides high out of the water. She was built in Russia two years ago, and her engines are of Russian manufacture. Her fitting up is sumptuous, with fine wood carvings and rich antique hangings. It is said that she has cost £450,000. She was brought from Cronstadt to Flushing, the week before last, on purpose to convey the Czar across the Channel. On her port or left-hand side, as she approached the pier, was the Galatea; on her starboard side was the Dutch steamer; the Livadia brought up the rear.

The Czar and one of his younger sons, the Grand Duke Alexis, with the Duke of Edinburgh, were on the paddle-box of the Derjava. His Imperial Majesty wore the green-and-gold uniform of a Russian General, with a high-plumed helmet, the plumes red and white. The Grand Duke Alexis and the Duke of Edinburgh wore their naval uniforms. The Duchess of Edinburgh, followed by the Prince of Wales and Prince Arthur, stepped on board the Imperial yacht. Her father, the Czar, at once clasped her in his arms and kissed her again and again. Her Imperial and Royal Highness was then greeted by his Ministers, Count Adlerberg and Count Schouvaloff, who kissed her hand. Among the other members of his suite were Admiral Popoff, General Soltikoff, General Skolkoff, Prince Metscheraky, and Prince Dolgorouky, wearing the green-and-silver uniforms of general aides-de-camp. Captain the Hon. G. A. Wellesley was in the suite of the Emperor. The Lord Lieutenant of Kent, the General in district command, and others were introduced to the Czar on the quarter-deck of his yacht. Lord Torrington, General Sir Francis Seymour, and Lord Charles Fitzroy were appointed to wait upon him.

Sending the Emperor's luggage ashore, and putting it in the railway train, occupied nearly an hour. His Majesty then disembarked, followed by the Princes, and, with his daughter on his arm, walked to the saloon carriage. A Royal salute was fired by the Castle batteries, the crowd cheered, and the regimental bands played the Russian National Anthem. At the door of the railway carriage stood the Mayor and Corporation officers of Dover. His Worship presented to the Czar an address of welcome. This was accepted by his Majesty without reading it; he bowed to the Mayor and thanked him.

The special train, conveying the Czar and their Imperial and Royal Highnesses, started from Dover at twenty minutes past seven. Sir Edward Watkin, chairman of the South-Eastern Company, Mr. Shaw, general manager, and Mr. Cockburn, traffic manager, were in the train, which was driven by Mr. Alfred Watkin. As it passed Shorncliffe it was saluted by the troops under Lord A. Russell. It reached London Bridge at a quarter past nine, and went on to Waterloo junction. Here the engine was changed, and the officials of the South-Western Company—Messrs. Verrinder and Jacob— took charge of the train. The Duke of Cambridge, who stopped in London, took leave of the Royal party. The train arrived at Windsor at ten minutes past ten.

On the platform of the South-Western Railway station at Windsor were Prince Christian, the Marquis of Lorne, Count Gleichen, and the Earl of Bradford, Master of the Horse, with Lord Alfred Paget and Colonel Gordon. The Mayor of Windsor, Mr. Jones, the Recorder, the Town Clerk, and members of the Corporation, presented an address to the Czar. The Coldstream Guards formed a guard of honour. An escort of the 1st Life Guards was ready to attend the Czar to the Castle. The band of that regiment played the Russian Anthem. The station was adorned with white and yellow drapery on the walls, a crimson carpet, and flowers.

The Emperor, with the Prince of Wales and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, entered the foremost of the Royal carriages in waiting. The Grand Duke Alexis, with Prince Arthur and the other Princes, followed him. They drove up Thames-street, High-street, and Park-street to the Long Walk, and so into the quadrangle of the Castle. Here the Russian National Anthem was again played by the band of the Coldstream Guards. A salute was fired by the guns in the Long Walk. Her Majesty the Queen, with their Royal Highnesses the Princess of Wales, Princess Christian, Princess Louise, and Princess Beatrice, received the Czar and Grand Duke Alexis at the Queen's entrance of the Castle. Their Majesties and the Princes and Princesses ascended the grand staircase between two lines of Yeomen of the Guard. It was nearly midnight before dinner was served in the oak-room. The illustrious guest of her Majesty soon retired to his private rooms, which were in the Northern state apartments. Those of the Grand Duke Alexis were in Edward III.'s Tower.

Early next morning the Czar, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Arthur, drove through the grounds to Frogmore. His Majesty visited the Prince Consort's mausoleum, and saw the Royal gardens, with the steam-gardener in operation. After inspecting the Shaw Farm, formerly the Prince Consort's model farm, the Royal party drove back to the Castle and proceeded to the Deanery. His Majesty was met by Dr. Wellesley, Dean of Windsor, and Mrs. Wellesley. The Dean conducted him to Wolsey's Chapel, which is being restored and redecorated, in a most costly manner, by the Queen as a memorial chapel to the late Prince Consort. The magnificent sculptures and mosaics were inspected with great interest. After this his Majesty was conducted over St. George's Chapel. He also visited the Royal library and the cloisters.

In the afternoon the Queen and the Czar, the Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh, went to Virginia Water. In a second carriage were the Duke of Edinburgh, the Grand Duke Alexis, Princess Louise, and Princess Beatrice. Her Majesty and the Emperor drove down Castle-hill, through High-street, King's-road, and the Great Park, to the Flemish Farm, where they inspected a steam-plough. They went on through the park by way of the rhododendron drive to Virginia Water. Here they visited the ruins, the waterfall, Fort Belvidere, and the Fishing Temple, where tea was provided. The Prince of Wales, Prince Arthur, and the Marquis of Lorne joined the Queen and the Emperor, having ridden through the park on horseback. After a row on the lake in the picturesque old-fashioned state barge, sent with a crew from Gosport, the Royal and Imperial party returned to Windsor by way of Blacknest, through Sandpit-gate, near Cumberland Lodge, past George III.'s statue, and through the Long Walk to the castle, which they reached at half-past six. At eight o'clock a grand state banquet was given in St. George's Hall. Her Majesty and the Emperor and the members of the Royal family were present. A hundred and twenty guests, comprising several of her Majesty's Ministers, the late Ministers, and the principal nobility, were invited.

On Friday morning, at eleven o'clock, the Emperor and Grand Duke, having taken leave of the Queen, left Windsor for London. They were accompanied by the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. A special train on the Great Western Railway, in which were Sir D. Gooch, the chairman, and Messrs. Grierson, Keightley, and Higgins, officials of that line, conveyed the Royal party. The Czar and Princes wore their uniforms. At Paddington the train was received by the deputy chairman and secretary of the Great Western. There was a guard of honour of the Grenadier Guards. His Majesty and their Royal Highnesses went in open carriages to Buckingham Palace. The Czar, the Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and the Grand Duke Alexis were in the first carriage. In the second were the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Arthur, and the Duke of Cambridge. With an escort of Horse Guards (Blue) they drove across Hyde Park and down Constitution-hill, reaching Buckingham Palace a few minutes before noon.

The Czar was received here by Earl Beauchamp, Lord Steward; the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain; and other high officers of the Queen's household. The Earl of Bradford, Master of the Horse, had met him at Paddington. There was a guard of the Scots Fusiliers in the courtyard, and the Yeomen of the Guard, under Lord Skelmersdale, in the hall. An hour after his arrival the Czar received all the foreign Ambassadors in the Bow Drawing-Room. The Cabinet Ministers of the present and late Governments were afterwards received by him, and several other noblemen and gentlemen. At four o'clock the Czar and his son, and the Duke of Edinburgh, in a close carriage and pair, with one mounted police officer in attendance, went out to pay a few private visits. They stayed above half an hour with the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House, and saw the children. They next drove to Gloucester House, Park-lane, but the Duke of Cambridge was not at home. A visit was then paid to the Marquis of Lorne and Princess Louise, at Argyll Lodge, Campden-hill, but they, too, were out. The Duke and Duchess of Teck (Princess Mary) were found at home at Kensington Palace. After this, the Emperor and Princes went to Claridge's Hotel, Bond-street, where the Comte de Paris was staying. The Czar had a ten minutes' conversation with his Royal Highness, the heir to the French House of Orleans. On his way from Kensington to Bond-street, the Czar saw the Prince Consort Memorial in Hyde Park, and the Ring and Rotten-row full of company. In the evening, his Majesty dined with the Prince and Princess of Wales at Marlborough House. He afterwards went with them to a ball given at Stafford House by the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland.

The Emperor on Saturday morning at eleven went to Chiselmurst, with his son, to visit the widowed Empress Eugénie. He got back to London between twelve and one; then went to see the Houses of Parliament and Westminster Abbey. The Lord Chancellor, the Speaker, and the Dean of Westminster, at those places respectively, met his Majesty. He lunched at Buckingham Palace; and started at five o'clock for the Crystal Palace, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and a numerous suite. They went in twelve open carriages by the high road, over Vauxhall Bridge, and through Stockwell and Clapham, with an escort of the 6th Dragoon Guards. His Majesty and their Royal Highnesses wore plain morning dress; the Princesses were in blue, the one dark blue, the other light. They were received at the Crystal Palace by Mr. T. Hughes, chairman of the Crystal Palace Company, Mr. Wilkinson, general manager, and Major Flood Page, secretary.

A reception pavilion, with retiring-chambers, had been erected at the north nave entrance. Its entrance was hung with crimson curtains edged with bullion. Banks of roses were on each side of the doorway. The interior was of white muslin over light blue. Statues, vases, pictures, and a profuse and tasteful display of various flowers, with ferns in the vestibule, and suspended flower-baskets overhead, made these apartments very charming. Their furniture, too, was of the richest material and most elegant design. In the dining-saloon, which adjoins the Queen's corridor, was a superb service of gold plate made for the Emperor Francis II. of Austria, and the tables were set in splendid order.

The Emperor, Princesses, and Princes, arriving at six o'clock, were at once conducted up the nave to the Royal boxes prepared for them, upon the stage of the theatre in the central south transept, opposite the Handel orchestra. The floor beneath, the orchestra benches, and the galleries, were completely filled with company. The Russian Hymn was performed by the combined force of eleven military bands. His Majesty sat between the Princess of Wales, on his right hand, and his daughter, on the other side of him. The Russian and English flags, suspended from the galleries above, bore token of this occasion. There was a grand concert of choice music, which had begun at half-past four. The first part was over before the illustrious visitors came. The remaining part included "Home, sweet home," sung by Mlle. Titians; "Oh, ruddier than the cherry," by Santley; a song by Madame Patey; and several well-known compositions of Handel, Mendelssohn, Rossini, and Meyerbeer, performed by 2500 London members of the Handel Festival Choir, with the powerful instrumental bands. The Emperor was greatly pleased, and had Mr. Manns, the conductor, introduced to him. His Majesty sent a message by telegraph to the Queen, saying how much he liked his welcome in London. He got an answer from her Majesty during the concert. He sent another telegram to the Empress, at St. Petersburg.

After the concert, the Emperor and their Imperial and Royal Highnesses stood a few minutes on the balcony overlooking the gardens, and saw the great fountains play. This is the scene represented in our Extra Supplement Large Engraving. His Majesty and party then dined in the state saloons, where tables were laid for a hundred guests. With the Emperor and Grand Duke, at the high table, were the two Princesses, the English and German Princes, the Earl of Bradford, and several of the Russian nobles. At nine o'clock in the evening they again came out on the balcony, and saw the display of fireworks, which was extremely brilliant. The great fountains were set playing in the light of 600 Roman candles. There was a "cascade of golden fire," and a concluding blaze of 1600 coloured rockets. The Emperor and party got back to London about half-past ten.

Their Sunday was passed in tolerable quiet. In the morning, with his son and daughter, the Emperor attended Divine worship at the Russian Embassy Chapel in Welbeck-street. At one o'clock, joined by the Duke of Edinburgh, they went, by the Great Western Railway, and in plain attire, to Windsor, and there lunched at the Castle, with the Queen and Princess Beatrice. On their return to London, they dined privately at Chiswick with the Prince and Princess of Wales.

The Czar's state visit to the city of London, on Monday, is the subject of two or three illustrations. He went to Guildhall to receive an address and to partake of a luncheon given by the Lord Mayor and Corporation of the City. The Emperor was accompanied by the Grand Duke Alexis, the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein. His Majesty was attended by the officers of the Imperial household, and by Viscount Torrington, General Sir F. Seymour, Lord C. Fitzroy, and Captain the Hon. F. Wellesley—the officers specially appointed by the Queen to be in attendance upon him. The Earl of Bradford was also in attendance. Colonel Du Plat, the Hon. Eliot Yorke, and Captain the Hon. H. C. Glyn, R.N., were in attendance on the Grand Duke Alexis.

The procession from Buckingham Palace consisted of eleven of the Queen's state carriages, with the Royal servants in their state livery. The first eight carriages were filled with the ladies and gentlemen in attendance; the Earl of Bradford and Count Adlerberg, with two ladies, were in the ninth. The Princess of Wales, the Grand Duke Alexis, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Christian were in the tenth carriage. The last carriage was occupied by the Emperor, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. His Majesty wore a Russian General's uniform, with the blue ribbon of the Garter, and a row of small crosses and medals on his breast. The Princes wore their uniforms, as before, with the blue ribbon of the Russian Order of St. Andrew, except Prince Christian, who had that of the Garter. The Princess of Wales had a dark blue silk dress, with velvet bodice, and light blue over it, and with a rose held by a diamond clasp on her right side. The Duchess of Edinburgh wore a fawn-coloured silk dress. They could be seen well in the streets; all the carriages but the first three were open. The escort was formed of the 2nd Life Guards. The Grenadier Guards furnished a guard of honour at the departure from Buckingham Palace, and at Guildhall when the procession arrived. The route was along the Mall, through the Horse Guards, by Charing-cross, along the Strand, through Temple Bar, down Fleet-street, up Ludgate-hill, along the south side of St. Paul's-churchyard, through Cannon-street, up Queen-street, crossing Cheapside, and up King-street, to Guildhall. The streets within the City, from Temple Bar to Guildhall, were lined with soldiers, the Guards and the 4th Infantry. The cross roads were kept by parties of the Horse Guards. We give illustrations of the scene at Charing-cross, in Fleet-street, and at the entrance to Guildhall. Standards with trophies were put up at Temple Bar; lines, with hanging flags, were stretched across Fleet-street. A handsome pavilion, chiefly of a gold colour, with baskets of flowers on Venetian masts, was at the door of Guildhall. The streets were everywhere thronged with applauding spectators.

It was a few minutes past one when the Emperor and their Imperial and Royal Highnesses reached Guildhall. They entered the vestibule, which was adorned with golden, black, and crimson hangings, plants, and flowers. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and City Officers, with several Aldermen and deputies of the Common Council, all in their robes, met their illustrious guests. They led the Emperor and Princes into the great hall, preceded by four trumpeters and the stewards with silver wands. There was a canopied dais with state chairs at one end of the hall, and tiers of red benches, filled with company, on the other three sides.

The Emperor, with the Princes and Princesses, ascended the raised place. His Majesty stood before the centre chair, while the Lord Mayor bowed and the Recorder read the address of welcome. This was handed to Count Adlerberg. The Emperor then unfolded a paper, from which he read in English the following reply:—

"My Lord Mayor and Citizens of London,—I feel most grateful for your hospitable and cordial reception. On my own part, I can assure you that I have a firm reliance on your good feelings towards my beloved daughter, whose domestic happiness I have so much at heart. I trust that, with the blessing of Divine Providence, the affectionate home she finds in your country will strengthen the friendly relations now established between Russia and Great Britain, to the mutual advantage of their prosperity and peace."

After handing this reply to the Lord Mayor, the Emperor had introduced to him Alderman Besley and Mr. E. Hart, the mover of the address and the chief of the managing committee. His Majesty and their Royal Highnesses were then led to the Council-Room, where a sumptuous repast was spread on a horseshoe table. The buffet at the back was loaded with all the finest plate of the City companies, lighted up by wax candles. The Lord Mayor had the Czar on his right hand. The Lady Mayoress sat on the other side of her husband. On her left hand were the Prince of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and the Grand Duke Alexis. To the right of the Emperor were the Princess of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh. The Archbishops of Canterbury and York, with their wives, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cairns, the Russian, Austrian, German, and Turkish Ambassadors, and two or three of her Majesty's Ministers, one being Lord Derby, were among the chief guests.

The health of the Queen having been duly toasted, the Lord Mayor proposed that of the Emperor, to which his Majesty responded, thanking the city of London "for its great kindness to him." He gave the health of the Lord Mayor, who next gave, together, that of the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and all the Royal family. The Prince of Wales replied. The Imperial and Royal party then left Guildhall, and again set forth in the carriages, as before, to return to Buckingham Palace by Queen Victoria-street, the Thames Embankment, Whitehall, and St. James's Park. The general company at Guildhall, numbering 2500, had luncheon in other rooms there.

In the evening, between seven and eight, his Majesty and the Princes, but not the Princesses, dined with the Duke of Cambridge and some distinguished officers of the Army, at Gloucester House, Park Lane. At ten o'clock they went to the Royal Albert Hall, where there was a Grand Concert; they were here joined by the Princesses. A selection of Russian music was performed, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Sullivan. Before going to the City on Monday, the Emperor had received the Archbishops of Canterbury and York, who gave him a Russian Bible.

There was a review of the troops at Aldershot on Tuesday. The Emperor and Princes and two Princesses went down there by railway, starting from Vauxhall station about ten o'clock. We shall give some illustrations of the review in our next. The number of troops was 15,000, with forty-eight guns. His Majesty got back to London at six, and there was a state ball at Buckingham Palace in the evening.

Woolwich Arsenal and a great Artillery Review on Woolwich-common were the exhibitions for his Majesty's pleasure on Wednesday. These also must be reserved for the illustrations now in hand. The Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, Princess Christian, and the Duchess of Teck were at Woolwich, with their husbands, and saw all the military spectacle. In this review there were six batteries of Horse Artillery and ten of Field Artillery, comprising ninety-four guns. The Emperor and Royal party lunched at the Royal Artillery Barracks. After their return to London, they were entertained by the Earl and Countess of Derby with a grand dinner at the Foreign Office. Later in the evening, the Countess had a reception.

The departure of his Majesty from England finally took place on Thursday, embarking at Gravesend, about two in the afternoon, on board the Imperial Russian yacht. The Emperor was accompanied to Gravesend by the Prince and Princess of Wales, Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and Duke of Cambridge. This and other proceedings connected with his memorable visit to our country will again occupy our attention next week.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, May 21.

The Government of Moral Order has succumbed before an adverse vote of the Assembly, and its downfall has been received with a general feeling of satisfaction throughout France. A twelvemonth ago, when the Duc de Broglie assumed office under Marshal MacMahon, we were told that his paternal sway would speedily restore public confidence, stimulate commerce and industry, and crush for ever the hateful hydra of anarchy; instead of which his tortuous policy has been productive of general discontent. Instead of having established that "moral order" which he boastfully announced he intended to confer on France, he retires leaving behind him political anarchy. The brief debate, on Saturday last, which culminated in his resignation and that of his colleagues, was opened by M. Batbie, reporter of the Committee of Thirty, who called upon the Assembly to place the new electoral law on the order of the day—a proposition rejected by the Extreme Right, who, for obvious reasons, demanded that the municipal law should be the first of the new Constitutional measures discussed. The Prime Minister, in accordance with his previously-expressed intention, sided with the Committee of Thirty, and in a brief but singularly straightforward declaration formally imparted to the coming division the character of a vote of confidence. The Assembly, eager for the vote to be taken at once, divided, and, the Extreme Right and the Bonapartists allying themselves with the Left, the Government was defeated by a majority of sixty-four votes.

From that moment all was confusion at Versailles. The Cabinet met at the President's, and handed in their resignations to the Marshal, who accepted them, and sent for M. de Goulard—an Orleanist and Minister of the Interior last year, under M. Thiers—to form a new Ministry. After strenuous efforts a new Cabinet has been formed, the chief men in it being M. de Goulard and the Duc Decazes.

The present crisis has demonstrated more plainly than ever the necessity for dissolving the National Assembly. The three groups of the Left have come to an understanding on the point, and have resolved to direct all their efforts to accomplish so desirable a result. On the other hand, it is rumoured that the leader of the Extreme Right, M. de Belcastel, has had an interview with Marshal MacMahon and communicated to the President his intention of bringing forward a proposition for the re-establishment of the Monarchy. Should the Assembly reject this proposal, the Extreme Right are resolved, it is said, to vote with the Left for the dissolution.

The fall of the De Broglie Ministry has been attended by numerous resignations. The Under Secretaries of State for the Interior and Finances have retired with their patrons into private life. The Duc de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia, French Ambassador at London, has also resigned, and so have M. de Chaudordy, French Envoy at Bern, and M. Target, Consul-General at Amsterdam, the latter a Republican renegade, whose defection on May 24, 1873, contributed not a little to M. Thiers's overthrow. At Monday's sitting of the Assembly, when he mounted the tribune to announce that if he had been present on Saturday he should have voted for the Duc de Broglie, his voice was drowned by repeated shouts of "Back to the Hague!" which speedily compelled him to retire.

A considerable sensation has been caused in the Paris grand monde by the report of a quarrel between the Princesses de Metternich and Count Jean de Montebello, a former functionary of the Second Empire, but who since the famous 4th of September has entirely dissociated himself from the Bonapartist party. The Princess, meeting the Count at a ball, declined to salute him, giving as her reason that she did not salute those who betrayed their benefactors. On the following day the Count sent his seconds to the Prince de Metternich to demand a reparation by arms for the insult. The Prince at once consented to fight the Count, but declined to admit that he was responsible for what Madame de Metternich said at a ball, at which he was not even present. Considering himself entitled to select the weapons, he decided to choose the pistol, but was willing that M. de Montebello should fix the number of shots to be exchanged. M. de Montebello's seconds have refused to accept these conditions, and, as yet, it remains undecided whether the duel will be fought or not.

In addition to his political troubles, Marshal MacMahon is threatened with a domestic affliction. The Duchesse de Castries, the mother of the Duchesse de Magenta, is dangerously ill.

Death continues to thin the ranks of the National Assembly. Two members of the Right Centre have died this week—M. Perrot, deputy of the Oise, and Count de Brigode, deputy of the Nord.

Our Paris Correspondent telegraphs that no Ministry has been formed at Versailles, and that the Duc d'Audiffret-Pasquier is making an attempt to get a Ministry together, with the assistance of the Duc Decazes and M. de Goulard.—The duel between the Count de Montebello and Prince Metternich, forced upon the principals chiefly by the publicity given to the affair, took place to-day (Thursday), at St. Cloud, with swords. The Prince was slightly wounded.

SPAIN.

Marshal Serrano returned on Sunday evening to Madrid. General Pavia has announced his resignation of the Captain-Generalship of that city. In a manifesto which it has issued to the nation the new Government declares that only in case of unjustifiable aggression will it use the means at its disposal for the maintenance of public order.

Conflicting though the reports respecting the fighting in Spain continue to be, it appears certain that Marshal Concha is moving forward in pursuit of the Carlists without encountering serious opposition. There has been a severe skirmish near Bilbao. The Carlist troops fortified the Archanda heights, and at first they forced the Republicans back; but, reinforcements arriving, the Carlists were repulsed with severe loss, including thirty prisoners. Of the Republican troops nearly one hundred were killed and wounded. The mail-coach from Bilbao was stopped on Tuesday, in Somorrostro, by Carlists. Some bands have made their appearance close to Castro Urdiales. There is a strong force of Carlists on the frontier of the province of Burgos. The northern army is advancing to relieve Vittoria. It is reported at Barcelona that Brigadier Despujols has lost 500 men at Cantavieja through a stratagem of the Carlists, who feigned a surrender. A Carlist council of war has been held at Durango and important resolutions adopted. One was to send fresh troops into Navarre, and the other to make further purchases of arms and guns in England.

ITALY.

The Chamber of Deputies has approved all the clause of the bill extending the tobacco monopoly to Sicily, and is engaged in discussing the final estimates of the Ministry of the Interior for 1874.

The King has signed a decree appointing Signor Visone Minister of the Royal household.

Signor Visconti-Venosta and Count Wimpffen have signed a consular convention between Italy and Austria.

A bust of Sir Barker Webb was unveiled last week at the Museum of Natural History, Florence, under the auspices of the botanical congress.

HOLLAND.

Amsterdam having completed its celebration of the King's twenty-fifth accession day, the Court migrated to the Hague, where another series of festivities began. The Royal entry, yesterday week, is stated to have been most stately and picturesque. Their Majesties were escorted by guards of honour, composed of young nobles and burghers. The procession included all the civil and military authorities, the trade guilds, and the civic guard. Every street was decorated, and illuminations were universal throughout the town. A banquet was given to the King on Tuesday evening by the municipality of the Hague at the watering-place of Scheveningen. The King and Queen, the Princes, the Ministers, and the diplomatic body were present. The Burgomaster proposed a toast to the house of Orange, and the King, in reply, drank "The Prosperity of the Capital." His Majesty then proposed "The Health of the Grand Duke and Grand Duchess of Saxe-Weimar."

The Grand Duchy of Luxembourg has presented the King with a silver shield of very elaborate workmanship, and the Society of Dutch Artists has presented his Majesty with a collection of valuable paintings by the most celebrated modern Dutch artists.

On Thursday the King was to proceed to Rotterdam to take part in the festivities held there.

GERMANY.

Prince Bismarck has started for Varzin, but it is expected that he will not stay longer than a fortnight, as his medical advisers wish him to proceed to the baths of Kissingen.

The Upper House of the Prussian Parliament adopted, yesterday week, the new ecclesiastical bills relating to the administration of vacant bishoprics, and supplementing the law upon the training and appointment of the clergy. These measures finally passed by 51 votes against 46 in the form in which they were adopted by the Lower House.

It is reported at Berlin that the public prosecutor has taken up the charges against the founders of the Northern Railway Company, brought before the public by Deputy Laaker.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

In the Austrian Delegation of the Reichsrath the naval estimates were passed after animated discussion. One of the most keenly-disputed items was the vote for the proposed new ironclad, to be named after Admiral Tegethoff. The Austrian Delegation concluded the discussion of the extraordinary estimates on Tuesday. Altogether, a sum of 4,600,000 florins was agreed to, 1,400,000 florins being struck out. The only item which gave rise to much debate was one for continuing the construction of fortifications at Przemyśl. The Delegation, in accordance with the proposals of the committee, decided to strike out this item.

The Lower House of the Hungarian Diet adopted the loan bill, on Tuesday, by a large majority; and on Wednesday the Hungarian Delegation passed the ordinary Military Budget as proposed by the committee. An amendment for cutting it down by two and a half million florins was rejected.

All the rivers and rivulets in Istria have overflowed their banks and inundated large tracts of country. The railway traffic has been partly suspended.

TURKEY.

Aarif Bey has been appointed Minister of Foreign Affairs at Constantinople, in lieu of Rashid Pasha.

About a hundred houses in the Galata suburb of Constantinople, principally inhabited by poor Jews, were destroyed by fire on Monday.

AMERICA.

The Senate, on Thursday week, by 25 votes to 19, passed the Finance Bill fixing the greenback limit of circulation at 382 millions. Summarising the provisions of the bill, the Times' correspondent at Philadelphia says:—"Free banking is established, with a provision that as new bank-notes are issued greenbacks are to be withdrawn to one-fourth of the amount of the additional bank-note issue. This withdrawal is to continue till the outstanding greenbacks are reduced to 300 millions. After July 1, 1878, greenbacks may be exchanged for 4½ per cent fifteen-year bonds redeemable in gold."

Mr. Brooks, the Democrat claimant of the Governorship of Arkansas, has vacated the State House, and Mr. Baxter, his Republican rival, has been reinstated.

Mr. Moses, Governor of South Carolina, has been indicted and arrested on a charge of misappropriation of State funds.

Last Saturday morning a large reservoir, near Haydenville, Massachusetts, one hundred miles north-west of Boston, built for factory supply, broke, overflowed, and swept away portions of Haydenville, Leeds, Skinnerville, and Williamsburg, killing about 150 persons.

INDIA.

According to the weekly telegram from the Viceroy of India respecting the famine, more rain was much required. There was no indication of any general deficiency of food supply. No severe famine was felt, because relief had prevailed over famine, and no change for the worse had taken place in the condition of the people. In the worst parts of Tirhoot there had been a marked improvement in their apparent condition. Everywhere endeavours were being made to substitute piecemeal for daily payments. 2,190,000 persons received assistance from Government in the last week of April. No fresh deaths from starvation had been reported.

The Times' correspondent telegraphs that reports to Saturday represent the recent sowings as withered in several districts. The country is imploring rain. The distress is increasing in Sarun. Sir R. Temple has purchased seed grain for prompt distribution. The Tirhoot reserve of 120 officers has been warned for relief service in Bengal when required.

According to the Daily News telegram, Sir Richard Temple has issued an imperative order that all relief-work wages shall be paid in grain instead of money. Many piecemeal labourers are earning 9d. daily. The grain equivalent is nine pounds—far exceeding the consumable ration, when the family is earning proportionately.

Up to the end of April the consumption of grain from the Government stores in the famine districts of Bengal had come below the estimate by as much as 50,000 tons.

A train arrived at Algiers on Monday from Oran, six hours behind time, the cause of the delay being that the rails were covered with a thick layer of grasshoppers.

One of the Polish exiles, M. Stefan Poles, announces, on the authority of Count Schouvaloff, that they are free to return home, without risk of having all their antecedents raked up against them. From this informal amnesty only two or three exceptions are made against those who have added to insurrection the crime of assassination.

The Bombay Gazette says that a sapphire valued at 10,000 rupees (£1000) has been found in Ceylon, which, it is stated, will be presented to the Duchess of Edinburgh.

News arrives from Tashkend, with the date of the 13th inst., that a conspiracy has been discovered in Khokand, in which Mohammed Amin, the son of the Khan, is implicated. Sixteen of the conspirators have been executed.

The English Government, a Berne telegram says, has officially thanked the Swiss Government for the services rendered during the recent Ashantee campaign by the Basle missionaries on the Gold Coast.

Mr. Magee, the British Consul who was publicly whipped by order of Colonel Gonzales, the Commandant of San José, has received £10,000 from the Guatemalan Government as compensation for the outrage.

A famine is apprehended in Morocco. The spring crops had failed all along the north, and a deficiency in the late rains will endanger the crops of the southern districts. Should this fear be realised, the Emperor will probably prohibit exportation of grain and so paralyse the foreign trade of the country.

Messrs. Forrest and Son, of Limehouse, are building, under the superintendence of the National Life-Boat Institution, nine self-righting life-boats for the Russian Life-Boat Society. The cost of two of these life-boats was subscribed by the English residents at St. Petersburg on the occasion of the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

According to a Melbourne telegram, the terms on which the cession of the Fiji Islands are offered to this country are that the King is to retain the Royal title and receive a pension of £3000 per annum, other chiefs receiving sums varying from £20 to £500. The British Government is, at the same time, to assume the financial liabilities of Fiji, and the ruling chief is to be recognised as the owner of the land.

MAY MEETINGS.

The annual festival in aid of the funds of St. Mary's Hospital, Paddington, was held on Monday evening at Willis's Rooms, the chair being taken by Mr. William Forsyth, M.P. The subscriptions amounted to £930.

The twenty-eighth annual meeting of the Seamen's Christian Friend Society was held at the institution, near Well-street, London Docks. The report gave an encouraging account of the society's condition and work.

The sixty-fifth anniversary festival in aid of the Artist's Benevolent Fund was celebrated, on Monday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern, Great Queen-street, under the presidency of the Lord Mayor. The subscriptions amounted to £600, including a donation of one hundred guineas from her Majesty.

The annual ball in aid of the funds of the Dramatic, Equestrian, and Musical Sick Fund took place, on Monday night, at Willis's Rooms, a large number of friends to this excellent institution assembling.

The annual meeting of the Society for Promoting the Employment of Additional Curates was held on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Archbishop of York. The report stated that the total income of the year had been £71,623, and the expenditure £62,085, and that 632 additional curates had been wholly or in part supported by the society.

At the nineteenth annual meeting of the Band of Hope Union, of which Mr. S. Morley, M.P., is president, held, on Tuesday evening, in Exeter Hall, it was stated that the income for the past year amounted to £2682.

The fifty-eighth public anniversary meeting of the Peace Society was held, on Tuesday evening, in the Weigh-House Chapel—Mr. H. Pease in the chair.

The 220th anniversary festival of the Sons of the Clergy was celebrated on Wednesday. The celebration began with a service under the dome of St. Paul's Cathedral—the Bishop of Peterborough making an effective appeal on behalf of the society. In the evening a banquet was held in the Merchant Taylors' Hall—the Lord Mayor presiding. The Archbishop of Canterbury, in returning thanks for the toast of "The Society," hoped that efforts would be made to enlarge its funds. It was announced that the collection at St. Paul's amounted to £309, and at the dinner to £1630. The donations from stewards were £829; annual subscriptions, £650; legacies, £2245.

The fourth festival dinner in connection with the Victoria Hospital for Sick Children (Gough House, Chelsea) took place, on Wednesday, at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of the Archbishop of York. The subscriptions exceeded £600.

The festival of the friends and supporters of the East London Hospital for Children, Ratcliff-croft, was held, on Wednesday evening, at the London Tavern—Mr. S. Whitbread, M.P., in the chair. Subscriptions amounting to more than £1800 were announced.

The annual meeting of the Princess Louise Home, an institution formed for the protection of young girls, was held, on Wednesday, at Woodhouse. Lord Sherborne presided; and the prizes were distributed by the Hon. Mrs. Wingfield.

In furtherance of the cottage family plan for the boarding out of pauper children, Sir H. Selwin-Ibbetson, M.P., has offered to build at his own cost a house in Princess Mary's village, at Addlestone.

The first congress in connection with the Scottish Episcopal Church began its sittings in Edinburgh, on Tuesday, under the presidency of the Bishop of Edinburgh. Papers were read bearing on the history of the Church, Church finance, diocesan, parochial, and congregational organisation, and the evangelistic work of the Church. Among those who took part in the proceedings were the Archdeacon of Lindisfarne, the Dean of Manchester, and the Dean of Kilmore.

The Congregationalists of Cambridge, on Tuesday, opened a church, which has been erected at a cost of £13,000, by the contributions of Nonconformists throughout England, in order, now religious tests are abolished, that the sons of Congregationalists going to the University may be enabled to attend the form of worship in which they have been brought up. The old chapel is up what is called Downing-street, but Emmanuel Church has been erected in Trumpington-street.

The polling at Dudley, to fill the vacancy caused by the unseating of Mr. Sheridan, took place on Monday, when that gentleman was again a candidate in the Liberal interest. Mr. Sheridan was returned by a majority of 718 over his Conservative opponent, Mr. Hingley, the figures being 5607 against 4889.—The polling at Stroud, to fill the vacancies created by the unseating of Mr. Dickinson and Mr. Stanton, took place yesterday week. Mr. John Edward Dorington was returned in the Conservative interest in the place of Mr. Sebastian S. Dickinson, the numbers being, Dorington (Conservative), 2796; Stanton (Liberal), 2722; Brand (Liberal), 2677; Holloway (Conservative), 2582. Consequently a Liberal and a Conservative have been elected.

ARRIVAL OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA AT WINDSOR.

MASTER EYE AT THE ISAAC CATHEDRAL, ST. PETERSBURG.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

In point of personal appearance there is nothing to distinguish what are called the working-men members from other representatives of the people. There are many gentlemen in the House who, from their ungainliness and carelessness of dress, might conventionally be supposed to be the working-men members; and perhaps some people have expected that those personages should appear in, so to speak, their official costume of fustian and pea-jacket. The fact is that they are both neat in their persons; and one of them, at least, is, to use a common phrase, dressy. Both of them have now given formal tastes of their quality. Mr. Macdonald had spoken very briefly in moving for some returns before the debate on the household franchise in counties; but Mr. Burt had not broken silence. In that discussion the latter member came out with a predeterminate speech, and without question he made a great impression. He is fluent, nervous in his language, and vigorous and practical in his arguments, and it is only when he gets ardent that a north-country accent becomes conspicuous. In fact, there are mighty manufacturer-members who develop a more decided and even a more vulgar accent. In the same debate Mr. Macdonald spoke at length; but it can hardly be said that he was equally successful. He wants the vis viva of Mr. Burt, is rather slow of speech, and exhibits no elocution; but he seemed to be equally in earnest, and to be practical and sensible in his views.

Anyone reviewing the proceedings in the House must be struck by the circumstance that Irish discussions are perpetual and pervading. Generally, even the most pronounced of Nationalists and Home-Rulers are the most polite and deferential to the House, and are profuse of bows and other signs of courtesy. There has, however, been an outbreak or two, and one was notable, which, however, was provoked by an English member. The subject was the vote for the Queen's racing plates. Long ago the Scotch refused to accept this grant of public money, and it has been struck out of the Estimates; and now Mr. Anderson, who, it cannot exactly be said why, is a provoking personage, moved that the grant to Ireland should be cut off. This, being absolutely a taking of £1500 a year of the public money from the sister kingdom, naturally roused the indignation of those gentlemen whose Parliamentary business it is to get as much as possible out of the general funds of the nation for the particular delectation of their country; and there was immense clangour and sneering at Scotland and the Scotch. This had gone on for so long that it was no wonder that impartial lookers-on should have become wearied at a clamour evolved from such a small cause; and so Mr. Bulwer, the new Conservative member for Ipswich, intervened, and, with a tone of cutting contempt, each word dropping slowly from his lips, congratulated the Irish members on their elephantine capacity for vituperation, nothing being too high or too low for the exercise of that faculty. If this was, as of course it was, intended to sting the Irish members deeply, it was completely successful. Mr. Sullivan, who has made himself a general favourite by the humour and good-humour of his speeches, dashed aside all the deference and courtesy above alluded to, of which he had been a prime professor, and appeared much more in the character that may be supposed to belong to a conspicuous chief in the Irish national press than he had hitherto allowed himself to develop. To be sure, it was an expression of his, which may have been inadvertently used, that brought out Mr. Bulwer's bitterly sarcastic observations, and so he had some right to be vehement and to deliver half a dozen excited speechlets. The row was considerable; but it ended, as usual, in everybody saying that they had only spoken in "a Parliamentary sense," which, so far as the phrase is intelligible, must mean a non-natural sense. It may be mentioned that the Home-Rulers are so perfectly organised, and the members of that persuasion so well kept together, that they are able to prevent, if they choose, the Parliamentary catastrophe called a "count," which some people may think is a strong reason in favour of the Home Rule which they seek.

A breach of privilege is always an exciting Parliamentary incident; and so the whole House bent eagerly to listen to Mr. Henry Herbert, an impulsive Irish member, when he, one evening, demanded a hearing for a complaint in that respect. Nothing could have exceeded the disappointment which ensued; for it proved that the breach of privilege consisted in two paragraphs which had appeared in a daily journal which is rather remarkable for omniscience and prescience in matters Parliamentary; and, as usually happens when the imagination is drawn on for facts, is often funnily incorrect. The story when it was told was so blank and barren that no one was in the least moved in the way which breaches of privilege generally move members; and the Speaker, displaying an unusual power of quiet banter, treated the matter so lightly and made it appear so small that he damped it out most effectually.

Mr. Peter Taylor is sure whenever he makes a regular motion to have an audience predetermined to be amused. His humour is, perhaps, somewhat of the character which belonged to that of the professional jesters of the Middle Ages, who were as bitter and sarcastic as they were droll. The metallic tones of his voice, the peculiar intonations to which he has recourse, are in complete keeping with the caustic and often very free nature of his wit. He has not of late been very profuse in his contributions to the mirth of the House, and therefore he was especially welcome now when he brought on his motion for the opening of museums on Sundays. As may be supposed, Puritanism and Sabbatarianism were made as ludicrous as could possibly be, and illustrations of those tendencies were drawn from Scotland with merciless vividness. Now and then there were sneers, hardly covert, at things which most people think ought to be free from profane remark, and these met with that tacit rebuke in the way which is peculiar to the House. Altogether, it may perhaps be said that, though vigorous and varied, this was not the most effective speech that Mr. Taylor ever made. If contrast is a rhetorical advantage, certainly Mr. Allen, who moved an amendment to the motion, amply afforded it, for he was not only sententious, but what may be called "preachy" in his speech, and he was made to know that he was considered dull. But Mr. Alexander M'Arthur, who is the colleague of Mr. Taylor in the representation of Leicester, received rather hard measure, considering that he is a new member. The fact was that the Ministerialists had resolved to have a division before dinner-time; and, as Mr. M'Arthur appeared with all the paraphernalia of papers and a glass of water, which indicated a long—and, as was found out after his first sentences, prosy—speech, he was accompanied by a continuance of roars, which suggested ideas of the impatience expressed by noise which is characteristic of caged animals on the approach of feeding-time. At any rate, notwithstanding—and perhaps because of—the efforts of Mr. Beresford-Hope and Mr. Locke to prolong it, the debate was cut short enough to satisfy the longings for "vivers" which prevailed.

So marked has been the absence of Mr. Gladstone from the House that it may be excused if it is noted that he made his appearance, for a short time, on one evening in this week. Contrary to his custom, he did not glide in from behind the Speaker's chair, but came in at the great door, paused at the bar, and surveyed the House. Then, perceiving Sir William Stirling-Maxwell sitting on the front bench below the gangway on the Ministerial side, he joined him there and remained for a short time in that, for him, unwonted place. Next, he exchanged a few, apparently pleasant, words with the Sergeant-at-Arms, and then took the rather obscure place in the front Opposition bench which he now affects. Several Conservative members came up to him, greeted him, and conversed genially with him.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week the subject of guarantee of dividends of Irish railways on the security of local rates was discussed; the Real Property Limitation Bill, the Land Titles and Transfer Bill, the Real Property Vendors and Purchasers Bill, and the Betting Bill were reported, with amendments; and the Colonial Clergy Bill and the Consolidated Fund (£13,000,000) Bill were read the third time and passed.

The Duke of Richmond, on Monday, brought under the notice of their Lordships the state of Church patronage in Scotland, the abolition or modification of which, he said, had excited the attention of the Scottish people for the last 300 years. He proposed to introduce a bill which provided that the power to elect a minister should be vested in the male communicants of the church, and that the patron should be entitled to compensation not exceeding one year's stipend of the charge of which he had held the patronage. It was intended to abolish all patronage, from that of the Crown downwards. The bill met with tolerably general acceptance, and was read the first time. The East India Annuity Fund Bill was read the second time, and the Betting Bill was passed.

On Tuesday the Judicature (Ireland) Bill was read the second time, as was the Courts (Straits Settlements) Bill, and the East India Annuities Loan Bill was passed through Committee. Lord Stanley of Alderley drew attention to the administration of the Straits Settlements, which was defended by Lord Carnarvon.

The Royal Assent was given on Thursday by Commission to the following bills:—Consolidated Fund (£13,000,000), Cattle Diseases (Ireland), Middlesex Sessions, Harbour Dues (Isle of Man), Dublin Works Loan Commissioners (Loans to School Boards), and the Game Birds (Ireland) Bills. The Lord Chancellor laid on the table a bill for further promoting the revision of the statute law and repealing certain enactments which had ceased to have any force or had become unnecessary. The bill was read the first time. The Oyster and Mussel Fisheries Bill and the East India Annuity Funds Bill were read the third time and passed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Upon the order of the day for going into Committee of Supply, yesterday week, the O'Connor Don brought under notice the system of guaranteeing dividends out of the local rates in Ireland on capital invested in Irish railways, and moved to resolve that this system was unsatisfactory. The motion was seconded by Captain Nolan, and discussed at some length by several Irish members. Sir M. H. Beach admitted, on the part of Government, that a remedy was wanted, that the subject should receive his best and immediate attention, and that, perhaps during the present Session, some conclusion might be arrived at, which, if it did not place the question on a satisfactory basis, might do away with the objection to the existing unsatisfactory condition of things. Having expressed his gratification at this answer, the O'Connor Don withdrew his motion. The question of recognising the Ameer of Kashgar was then discussed. In Committee of Supply on the Civil Service Estimates a large number of votes in class 4 were agreed to. The vote of £1562 for Queen's Plates in Ireland led, as usual, to some discussion. Mr. Anderson moved the rejection of the vote, but on a division was defeated by 146 to 28. Progress was reported at a quarter to one o'clock.

On Monday, some minor matters having been disposed of, Sir Edward Watkin criticised keenly the construction of ships of war introduced by the late Chief Constructor of the Navy, and adopted in the Captain and other ironclads—namely, deep empty spaces in ships' bottoms, and high centres of gravity. He indulged in some professional remarks on Mr. E. J. Reed, who vigorously vindicated his constructive system, and showed that the Captain was the one ship which was not designed by him during his term of office. Mr. Reed, with technical minuteness, described his system. A speech abounding with criticisms on shipbuilding was delivered by Admiral Elliot, in the course of which everyone connected with Admiralty administration was roundly dealt with. When the House got into Committee on the Navy Estimates there was another, though small, discussion on the state of the Navy, during which Admiral Elliot made another long speech on naval things in general. The whole of the votes having been agreed to, the House resumed, and on the report of Supply Mr. Butt moved to reduce the vote for secret-service money in the Civil Service Estimates by £3000, on the ground that the sum had been applied in payment of costs and damages incurred in actions in the Irish courts of law against constabulary officers and other Government officials. On a division the motion was rejected by 215 votes against 31. The Customs and Inland Revenue Bill, the Bishop of Calcutta (Leave of Absence) Bill, and the Board of Trade, Arbitration, &c., Bill were passed through Committee; and Mr. Secretary Cross brought in a bill for the amendment of the Factory Acts.

A motion for opening public museums and libraries on Sundays was rejected on Tuesday by 271 to 68. The second reading of the Poor Relief (Ireland) Bill was then taken, in a thin House, consisting almost exclusively of Irish members. At the close of a long debate, the second reading was negatived.

Mr. Gregory, on Wednesday, moved the second reading of the Lease and Sale of Settled Estates Bill, the object of which is to remove certain statutory restrictions upon the sale of estates, and the House read the measure with the cordial approbation of the Attorney-General, Sir J. Kennaway, Mr. Lopes, Sir E. Watkin, and Dr. Ball. The Spirituous Liquors (Scotland) Bill, introduced by Sir Robert Anstruther, was, after some discussion, read the second time. Next came a debate on Mr. P. J. Smyth's bill to assimilate the law relating to public meetings in Ireland to that of England. The bill was opposed by the Attorney-General for Ireland. Mr. Butt and Sir G. Bowyer spoke in its favour; and Mr. Conolly, who spoke against it, declared his belief that, if the bill were passed, twenty-four hours would not elapse before the leader of the Home Rulers would proclaim his intention to hold a Parliament on College-green. On the House dividing, the bill was thrown out by 216 to 84. Mr. Dodds moved the second reading of his bill to remove from the operation of the Ballot Act the election of auditors and assessors in municipal boroughs. The discussion was continued until the time arrived for suspending disputed business. Sir J. Kennaway brought in a bill relating to ecclesiastical patronage in the Church of England.

On Thursday Mr. Anderson called attention to the case of Lord Sandhurst, the Commander-in-Chief in Ireland, and moved that his having been absent from duty seventeen months out of thirty-four, and his making repeated erroneous returns to the War Office as to his absence from duty, misleading the Accountant-General, and thereby receiving public money to which he was not entitled, involved such a dereliction of duty that calls for some stronger mark of censure than the mere return of the money wrongly received. Mr. G. Hardy explained the facts of the case, the effect of which was to show that Lord Sandhurst had acted in accordance with the practice of his predecessors, believing that he was not bound to apply to the War Office for leave of absence. All he had done was done openly, and the War Office had never imputed to him anything more than difference of opinion as to his position and duties. There was no case, therefore, for visiting a distinguished officer with the censure of the House. After a warm discussion, Mr. Anderson proposed to withdraw his motion, but it was ultimately negatived without a division. The Customs and Inland Revenue Bill, after some discussion, was read the third time and passed.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

With the decision of the Cup the chief interest in the Chester Meeting terminated; still, there was some very fair racing on the Thursday and Friday. The Dee Stakes, for which some good horses have occasionally run, has dwindled down to a mere shadow of its former self, and though, on the first blush of his victory, De Cambis was backed for a few sovereigns for the Derby, yet a little reflection must show that any three-year-old who could gallop at all must be able to beat the moderate Bloomfield, especially when in receipt of 7 lb. It was hardly fair to ask Bonny Blue Eye to run three days in succession on the hard ground, and it was therefore scarcely surprising that she finished absolutely last in the Badminton Stakes, which fell to John Peel, who could only run a bad third to Telescope and The Fakenham Ghost in the Mostyn Stakes. The same colt confirmed his form by carrying a 7-lb. penalty successfully on the following day, when Rénée and Euston were behind him. The Great Cheshire Stakes, to which £500 was added, proved a genuine success, and brought out a field of fourteen, including several high-class animals. Bertram (8 st. 7 lb.) started favourite; but he has always been a much over-rated horse, and could not even get a place. Nothing, indeed, had the least chance with Andred (8 st. 2 lb.), and his fine performance must have been very gratifying to the Derby backers of Atlantic and Aquilo, as it confirms the excellence of their respective trials with him. Spectator (6 st. 12 lb.), Oxford Mixture (7 st. 7 lb.), and Mont Valerien (7 st. 4 lb.), all ran very badly. Backers fared ill in the Stewards' Cup, the last race of the meeting, for Lily Agnes received a clever defeat from the almost unknown Elderslie. Certainly, she was giving him a year and 3 lb.; but, over a short course, she ought to have been able to do this, and has clearly lost much of her great two-year-old form. The result of the Chester Cup proves that it is very fortunate for the owners of Derby favourites that Organist is not engaged at Epsom. His fine performance has been depreciated in some quarters, on the ground that Andred beat some of the Cup horses very easily in the Great Cheshire Stakes; but it must surely have been overlooked that the distance of the first race was nearly double that of the second. Leolinus has found backers for the Derby at 25 to 1, for which he can have no chance unless Organist could win with about 10 st. on his back—which, of course, would be out of the question.

In spite of the hardness of the ground, there were some capital fields on the first day of the Newmarket Second Spring Meeting, and most of the racing was of a very interesting character. Madame Toto, a half-sister to Miss Toto, was made favourite for the Spring Two-Year-Old Stakes; but she is a small, weedy filly, that will never prove the equal of her distinguished relative, and was beaten by a short head by Harewood, a good-looking son of Julius and Quality. The Newmarket Spring Handicap saw M. Lefevre again second, as Trombone (8 st. 12 lb.) succumbed to King George (7 st. 5 lb.). In the next two-year-old race, however, the tricolour was more successful, and it was carried by one of the best youngsters we have seen out this season. This was Hero, by Gladiateur—Tessane, who disposed of Ladylove without an effort, and promises to do great credit to Gladiateur, who up to the present time has not proved a successful sire. In the Newmarket Two-Year-Old Plate the flying Cachmere received her first decisive defeat. The incessant work she has done has naturally begun to tell on her; and she never showed prominently in the race, which was carried off by Telescope, the Chester winner. He is a big, long-striding colt, and completely wore down Strathavon at the finish. Several very speedy animals ran in the Ditch Mile Handicap; but though the course is exactly suited to Andred (9 st. 3 lb.), he could not quite give the weight to King Lud (8 st. 10 lb.), who just outstayed him. The latter has grown into a model cup horse, and ought to have a very successful career this season. The racing on Wednesday was less interesting, and needs little comment. Odds of 4 to 1 were laid on Thorn against Boulet over the last mile and a half of the Caesarewitch course; but, after a tremendous struggle, the latter, who received 24 lb. for the year, won by a head. It is doubtful if Thorn was ever a genuine stayer; and this fact, coupled with Boulet's consistently moderate running in France, prevented anyone from taking a long shot about him for the Derby. In the Rous Stakes, Prince Charlie and Blenheim, who ran such a desperate race in the Two Thousand week, met for the fourth time. The former looked fitter than he has been previously this year, and won without the slightest effort.

A sale of blood stock was held by Messrs. Tattersall, at Newmarket, on Wednesday. The Fakenham Ghost and Oxford Mixture were the best animals put up, and the former was taken by Mr. Blanton, the trainer, for 1200 gs. Oxford Mixture did not change hands.

All-England Eleven v. Fourteen of Oxford University has been the principal cricket-match of the week. The eleven was a decidedly strong one, but suffered defeat by 116 runs, which speaks well for the chance of Oxford in the annual match with Cambridge. Lord Harris 33 and 13, W. W. Pulman (not out) 29, and H. G. Tylecote 32 were the chief scores for the University; while Wild 31 and Lockwood 39 did best for the professionals. A. Hill proved very deadly with the ball, as he took no less than thirteen wickets.

The summer meeting of the London Athletic Club, last Saturday, was one of the best that the club has held. All the races were handicaps, and the chief honours fell to G. F. Congreve, J. H. A. Reay, and W. Slade, the last-named running one mile and a half in 7 min. 2½ sec., which is the fastest time on record for an amateur.

Mr. Grace and the other cricketers who went to Australia, and the late Dr. Livingstone's servants, Chuma and Sisi, arrived at Southampton on Sunday on board the Khedive.

The Inverness Town Council has presented the freedom of the borough to Lieutenant-Colonel Macpherson, C.B., of the 42nd Highlanders, as an acknowledgment of his gallant services in the Ashantee war.

ASHANTEE GOLDEN ORNAMENTS AND TROPHIES.

The prize agents of the British military forces lately serving in the campaign on the Gold Coast sold to Messrs. Garrard, for about £11,000, the articles of gold and other precious material which our troops carried off from Oo-massie, including some gold-dust and nuggets of that ore from the Ashantee diggings. A few of the more conspicuous objects, which were lately exhibited in a private manner at Messrs. Garrard's shop in the Haymarket, are figured in our Engraving. The one in the middle—an ugly but characteristic feature of this Ashantee collection—is a human head of massive gold, weighing 50 oz. or 60 oz., which seems to represent the head of a victim gagged for sacrifice. Gaggling is effected, as travellers have told us, by thrusting a pair of knives through the cheeks, just beyond each end of the lips, with their points resting on the tongue. On each side of this hideous and horrible effigy is a golden model of a state portable canopy or umbrella. The one to the left is ornamented with a variety of devices, such as wild beasts' teeth and claws, and tufts of hairy mane; but it displays also the form of an open book, with a pretty arabesque pattern for the lines on its two pages. There were two golden griffins, which formed the arms or elbow-rests of King Coffee Calcalles's throne; one of these is here represented. Two caps of state, and a few circular plates of repoussé work in gold, worn on the breast as badges of official dignity, appear in the collection. The two swords of state, which used to stand upright before the King's throne, are of very singular shape. Instead of a hilt, each blade is attached to a sort of frame, with four golden balls, which served as feet to support the thing in an upright position. The broad iron blade, formed like a segment of a disk, is curiously decorated with an open-work pattern, which must detract much from its strength. It resembles, in this particular, the swords with carved wooden hilts which may be seen in the collection of Ashantee curiosities on view at Willis's Rooms, and Mr. L. W. Desanges' great picture, "Fighting in the Ashantee Forest."

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The opening meet of the Coaching Club took place in Hyde Park on Wednesday.

At a meeting of the Royal Humane Society, on Tuesday, rewards for saving life in various places were conferred.

The Observer understands that the Treasury has decided on increasing the salaries of the metropolitan magistrates.

The number of visitors to the British Museum last year was 576,019, a great increase on the preceding year.

The Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain held its annual conversations in the South Kensington Museum on Wednesday. It was attended by upwards of 3000 visitors.

The Royal Botanic Society delighted its visitors with another charming fête on Wednesday. It was the first summer one of the season, and it was considered to be the best that has been seen for at least ten years.

The Skinners' Company has offered to the Middle-Class Schools Corporation an exhibition of £50 per annum, to be awarded to one of three specially recommended boys after the July examinations.

The new refreshment-room and dining-hall at the Zoological Society's Gardens are in future to be closed on Sunday afternoons from three to six o'clock, in conformity with the provisions of the Licensing Act of 1872.

A paper by Captain Tyler on Safety and Efficiency in the Working of Railways was read, on Wednesday, at a meeting of the Society of Arts. It stated that two-thirds of the casualties on railways arose from defects at facing points.

Lord Dudley's lease of Her Majesty's Theatre, which expires on Sept. 29, 1891, was sold by public auction on Wednesday for £31,000. The adjoining property between Charles-street and Pall-mall was put up at the same time, and also realised good prices. The total proceeds of the sale amounted to £83,680.

Colonel Sir James Hogg, M.P., Chairman of the Metropolitan Board of Works, entertained his colleagues and a number of other guests at dinner on Saturday evening at Willis's Rooms. Sir William Codrington, Mr. Ward Hunt, M.P., the Earl of Dartmouth, Sir Charles Adlerley, M.P., the Home Secretary, and Mr. Ayrton were amongst the speakers.

The Christian Evidence Society has been again conducting a most interesting series of lectures, at the New Hall of Science, Old-street. The society has also just concluded a course of lectures at the Chelsea Vestry Hall; and several courses have been given in different parts of London throughout the winter. Open-air lectures are being given.

The total amount received at the Mansion House up to Saturday last towards the Bengal Famine Relief Fund was £106,000, of which it will be remembered that £50,000 has been sent to India. Among the contributions received during last week were—Liverpool, a first instalment of £6000; Huddersfield, a first instalment of £1000; and Stafford, a first instalment of £105.

A scene of horror was brought to light in the east of London on Monday morning, a bricklayer named Blair, living in Joseph-street, Burdett-road, having killed his wife and four children, and then taken his own life. A Coroner's jury has decided that Blair murdered his wife and children and committed suicide while in an unsound state of mind.

The seventeenth annual report of the trustees of the National Portrait Gallery, issued on Thursday, states that twelve donations have been received during the year. The purchases made were stated by the trustees in their former report to amount to 257. They are now increased to 270. Further donations of autograph letters, written by persons whose portraits are in the gallery, have been received.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 97,323, of whom 34,279 were in workhouses and 63,044 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 8380, 11,709, and 31,622 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 629, of whom 401 were men, 179 women, and 49 children under sixteen.

At the rooms of the Society of Arts on Wednesday, under Lord Hampton's chairmanship, a meeting of gentlemen, among whom were Mr. Cowper-Temple, M.P., Captain Storey, the Mayor of Ipswich, the Mayor of Birmingham, Mr. Jenkins, M.P., and Mr. Mundella, M.P., passed a series of resolutions having for their effect the placing of all national museums and collections of art under Parliamentary responsibility. The proceedings were heartily unanimous.

The Nonconformist church to which the name of the "City Temple" has been given, and of which the Rev. Joseph Parker, D.D., is the pastor, was opened for Divine worship on Tuesday. It has been erected on the south side of the Holborn Viaduct. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs attended the ceremony in their robes of office. Following the ceremony was a luncheon at the Cannon-street Hotel, presided over by the Lord Mayor, at which the Dean of Westminster was one of the speakers.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has decided upon the following alterations in the names of streets and the numbering of houses within the limits of their jurisdiction:—Nelson-square, Bermondsey, to be called Hamilton-square; New-street, Notting-hill, will be renamed Newcombe-street, and the houses and premises re-numbered; St. Mary Axe and Little St. Mary Axe to be incorporated under the former name, and the houses in the whole line of thoroughfare between Blenheim-street and Arthur-street, Chelsea, known by the names of Russell-street, Vivian-terrace, and Britten-street, to be called Britten-street.

The Floating Swimming-Baths Company's first bath was launched, last Saturday, at the works of the Thames Iron and Shipbuilding Company. It is to be stationed at the landing-pier at Hungerford Bridge. The dimensions are 180 ft. by 31 ft., and the swimming area 135 ft. by 25 ft., which will be filled with a continuous change of filtered water, and regulated in temperature according to the season; the great object sought to be obtained being to afford facilities for the instruction of swimming, and thus conduce towards the saving of life.

The competition for the Middlesex battalions challenge cup took place at Wormwood-scrubbs on Monday, and, after a severe contest, was won by the London Rifle Brigade with the magnificent score of 626 points, the Queen's (Westminster) being second with 622. The competition on Tuesday was for the National Rifle Association's bronze medals for Middlesex, city of London, and Tower Hamlets, which were won respectively by Private Moore (Queen's), Private Gardner (L.R.B.), and Private Flemons (T.H.R.B.). These gentlemen will, therefore, be entitled to shoot for the Prince of Wales's prize of £100 at the forthcoming Wimbledon meeting. The shooting was extraordinarily good.

During the week ending Saturday last 2285 births and 1288 deaths were registered in London, the former having been 25 and the latter 178 below the average. Thirty-eight persons died from measles, 23 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 41 from whooping-cough, 18 from different forms of fever, and 26 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox. The 18 deaths referred to fever were 26 below the average, and included 4 certified as typhus, 10 as enteric or typhoid, and 4 as simple continued fever. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 400 and 423, declined last week to 387, which were 65 below the average. Five deaths were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets.

A full meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute took place on Monday, at its house, 8, Adelphi-terrace, when a paper, by Professor G. S. Morris, of Michigan University, on the "Principles of Adaptation in Mind and in Nature" was read. The Professor's paper was directed against the modern form of materialistic philosophy, and sought to show that its denial of the existence of intelligence in nature was devoid of all scientific basis. In proving this position, the paper referred to the first principles of our mental constitution and the facts of external nature, adding that, as we are constituted, we cannot help inferring from these latter, adaptation, &c., and by consequence an adapter—in other words, an intelligent Creator. A discussion followed. At its conclusion it was announced that the annual meeting will be held on June 15.

SIR RICHARD TEMPLE.

Our readers have heard of the recent appointment of Sir Richard Temple to the high office of Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, and of the great efforts he is personally making, in his continual journeys through the famine districts, to organise and superintend the local administration of relief. This very energetic and efficient officer of the British Indian Government entered the service in 1846. When the Central Provinces, soon after the Mutiny of 1857, were formed into a separate Governmental department, he was appointed Chief Commissioner, resident at Nagpore, having previously been Commissioner for the Lahore district of the Punjab, under Sir Robert Montgomery. At another period he was Political Resident at the Court of the Nizam of the Deccan, at Hyderabad. He was next appointed Foreign Secretary to the General Government of India, at Calcutta, but in 1868 became the Financial Member of the Governor-General's Council there. Sir Richard is a Knight Commander of the Star of India, and secretary to that order. Lady Temple, his second wife, is a daughter of Mr. Charles Lindsay, of the Bengal Civil Service.

THE LATE SIR ARCHDALE WILSON.

This gallant veteran of the Indian army, who was interred last week in Kensal-green Cemetery, will be remembered as the conqueror of Delhi. He was the son of a Norfolk country clergyman, but entered the East India Company's service in 1819, in the Bengal Artillery. He was commanding a brigade at Meerut when the mutiny of 1857 broke out there. After some important actions performed by him, the command of the Delhi field force devolved upon him. With not more than 7000 effective troops, and no adequate siege artillery, he attacked the great fortified city, garrisoned by 30,000 fighting men. On Sept. 14 Delhi was assaulted, and was captured after six days' hard fighting, in which General Nicholson was killed. The successful General was raised to the baronetcy as Sir Archdale Wilson of Delhi, with the grand cross of the Bath and a pension. He received the thanks of both Houses of Parliament. In 1858 Sir Archdale commanded the artillery, under Lord Clyde, at the siege of Lucknow. Lady Wilson, who survives him, is a daughter of the late General Frith, of the Bengal Artillery. There is no son, and the title goes to a nephew, Sir Rowland Wilson. The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Mason and Co., of London and Norwich.

THE SOLICITOR-GENERAL.

The newly-appointed Solicitor-General, in succession to Sir Richard Baggallay, is a son of the late Mr. Samuel Holker, of Bury, Lancashire, by Sarah, daughter of the late Mr. J. Brocklehurst. He was born in the year 1828, and was educated at the Grammar School of his native town. He was called to the Bar at Gray's Inn, in Trinity Term, 1854, and joined the Northern Circuit. He did not enter Parliament until September, 1872, when he was returned for Preston, in the Conservative interest, in the place of the late Sir Thomas Farnor Heaketh. He was re-chosen by a large majority at the late general election, and obtained the honour of a silk gown in 1868.

The Portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Beattie, of Preston.

THE LATE MR. H. P. PARKER.

The death of this artist, who was much esteemed in the north of England, has lately been mentioned. He was founder of the School of Design at Sheffield, in which he was aided by Dr. Harwood of that town, and by the well-known painter, Mr. B. R. Haydon. At Newcastle, where he long resided, the establishment of the Academy of Arts was in great part due to him. Among his own works of considerable merit are "John Wesley's Escape from Fire," now in the Wesleyan Centenary Hall, Bishopsgate-street; "The Wreck of the Forfarshire," with portraits of Grace Darling and her father; "The Covenanters," "Smugglers," and "Poachers," and "Looking In and Looking Out."

The portrait is from a photograph by Mr. Caubert, Fulham-road, Brompton.

THE TELEGRAPH SHIP STEAM-LAUNCH.

The new telegraph cable-ship Faraday, which has just gone to sea, was described a few weeks since. She is provided with a steam-launch, built by Messrs. Yarrow and Hedley, of Poplar. The use of the launch is to tow barges for laying the shore ends of the cable on coasts which large ships are unable to approach. The little vessel is built of teak, in two thicknesses, to withstand a considerable sea. She is 33 ft. in length, 4 ft. 6 in. in depth, with 8 ft. 6 in. beam, and 3 ft. draught. She has a pair of high-pressure engines, with 5½-in. cylinders, 6½ in. stroke, and of twenty-five indicated horse-power. The working-boiler pressure is 75 lb. per inch, at which, with 250 revolutions, she has a speed of nine miles an hour. She has a three-bladed gun-metal screw 2 ft. 9 in. in diameter and 3 ft. 5 in. pitch, and is capable of towing a barge loaded with fifty tons of cable. The engines are arranged for driving other machinery besides the screw propeller, with a view to the special service for which the vessel is designed. At one side is a drum of peculiar construction, connected by wheel gearing with the engine. This is for under-running the cable in shallow water, to detect the exact locality of a fault, and to repair it when detected. A powerful davit projects from her bows, for grappling and hoisting up the cable. The launch is fitted with convenient water-tanks and coal bunkers, and is able to run out at sea 180 miles per day of twenty-four hours on a consumption of 15 cwt. of coals. Her economy in fuel was very marked at the trial on the Thames.

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF THE ROYAL ACADEMY.

FOURTH NOTICE.

We have still to notice several figure-pictures with subjects from contemporary life. Entire success in this direction is as rare as in portrait-painting, and for the same reason, because—being more familiar with the artists' materials—we are more competent and therefore more exacting critics than when he deals with matters beyond our experience. In this section of the exhibition there are some determined literalists who have our warm sympathy, yet who must be reminded that the proper object of art is to give pleasure—"noble pleasure," as Mr. Ruskin puts it. Mr. F. Holl's "Deserted" (487) represents the discovery of an infant in a dreary part of Bankside, on a dismal, bitter, winter's morning, by a policeman, who wraps the little forsaken one under his waterproof cape. The workmanship is good, but a little hard, and the picture suffers dramatically as well as technically by proximity to Mr. Fildes's terrible groups of workhouse casuals. Without seeking for a dramatic motive, and without trying to harrow our feelings, Mr. Eyre Crowe has apparently set himself to record the unpicturesque lives of the working classes of the manufacturing districts in a prosaic but entirely honest manner. In one picture (676) he shows us a score or so of factory girls at their al fresco dinner, amidst the mills and chimneys of Wigan. In another we are taken to the neighbourhood of a coal-pit where grimy girls and children are gleaned fuel from one of the huge refuse heaps known as "spoil banks" (537). Mr. Prinsep also has stepped out of his ordinary path to paint "Newmarket Heath—the Morning of the Race" (27)—a file of gipsies or other vagrants, with their donkey-carts, trudging along a dusty road. The treatment is very manly, but a little positive and crude. We prefer the artist's "Safe Confidant" (27)—a lady whispering her secrets to a Persian cat—which combines much refinement with rich colouring.

"The Crowd Before the Guards' Band, St. James's Park" (684), by Mr. F. Barnard—an artist to whom this Journal has been indebted for very characteristic and spirited illustrations of social life—is one of the most amusing pictures in the exhibition. The execution is a little dry and harsh, and there may be a tendency to caricature; yet those probably will be the last to raise this latter objection who are best acquainted with the scene represented, which is notoriously the favourite resort of the idlers and the oddities of all sections of the London lower orders. The artist's remarkable powers of observation and his happy knack of hitting off salient points of character find ample scope here; and one may look long at the picture and still find some new phase of cockneyism and some new type of the waifs and strays of the pavés and gutters. In No. 531, by Mr. MacLean, representing a scene in "Covent Garden Market, 1873," an error in the opposite direction is committed—i.e., that of seeking to dignify and ennoble the forms of flower-girls, porters, and costermongers; otherwise the picture has conspicuous merit. There is a droll picture by Mr. W. Weekes, "Gleaning Evidence" (726), a sharp London lawyer's clerk interrogating a stolid rural labourer, whose countenance is, we suspect, wickedly made to bear some resemblance to an illustrious statesman and friend to the agriculturist. Genuine feeling, despite the rather too smart painting, will be found in A. Johnstone's "Left Alone" (608), an old farmer returned, after burying his wife, to his lonely home. "Phillis on the New-Mown Hay," (213), by R. W. Macbeth, has a sweet sense of beauty, though an unlucky composition. There is also sentiment without affectation in "Waiting to Cross the River" (1034), by P. Macnab—a group of rustics on the banks of a stream at twilight. Mr. L. Smythe's "Shorthanded" (1347), a woman assisting at the pumps of a vessel threatened with foundering, is a striking subject, but the picture is hung too high for fair examination. We must be content with simple commendation of Mr. F. Morgan's "Homeless" (624), a gipsy woman with her child sitting on a dreary common. "The Vagabond" (340) by H. H. Canty; "The Milkmaid" (358), by T. Graham; "A Lonely Life" (359), a pathetic picture of an old woman with a bundle of sticks feeling for the key-hole of her cottage door in the gloaming, by H. Cameron; "Chequered Shade" (411), by W. R. Robertson; "Following the Arts" (1035), an Italian boy, a seller of plaster casts, followed by a number of Scotch children, by W. M. Taggart; "The Address to the Young" (688), by J. Morgan; and contributions by A. H. Marsh, C. E. Staniland, E. C. Barnes, G. E. Hicks, W. Herrick, H. C. Selous, J. A. Houston, G. Tourrier, C. W. Nicholls, E. N. Kennedy, H. Helmick, S. B. Clarke, Madame E. Courtauld-Arendrup, Mrs. S. Anderson, Misses L. Starr, E. and F. Ward, and E. C. Clacy. The works by painters of childlike (but hitherto reviewed) seem to call for little comment. A "Homely Hop" (634) and "The Bird's Nest" (1386), by J. Clark, is, as usual, nice in feeling, and also, as usual, too prim and soft in execution; Mr. F. D. Hardy's best picture is "Professor and Pupils" (530), an old music master, with his class of girls; Mr. G. Hardy follows in a similar style with "Hush!" (399), and Mr. G. B. O'Neill in "A Little Better" (34), a sister trying to amuse a convalescent brother. One of the best pictures of this class is "My Doll's Picnic" (962), by Miss Epps, which has a beautiful effect of lighting.

We have still to notice some good pictures illustrative of foreign life and manners. Prominent among these should be placed Mr. J. B. Burgess's "English Ladies Visiting a Moor's House" (475). The Moorish grandee is doing the honours with due Oriental politeness; but the best part of the composition is the contrast—as they stand eyeing each other shily and dubiously—between the sturdy fair-haired British boy, in a sort of naval dress, and the little son and daughter of the Moor. Some of his womankind peep from the door of the harem enjoying the general embarrassment. There is much finesse in the expressions, and the picture is neatly and well painted. "Eavesdropping" (437), by Mr. F. Dillon, is another and more elaborate Oriental interior, probably from Cairo, with a couple of gentlemen smoking and conversing on a divan, while the wife of one furtively listens at a side door. Mr. W. Gale goes still farther east, and shows us "Spring Time" (622) in Syria, with two ladies and an attendant walking in a garden radiant with flowers, and listening to the "voice of the turtle." Mr. W. W. Topham contributes several small Italian scenes, graceful in feeling and refined in colour, from Assisi and Florence. Strange to say, there is a great dearth of Spanish subjects in this year's exhibition. Almost the sole Spanish picture is Mr. Haynes Williams's effectively painted figure of a matador in the arena making "El Saludo" (609) to the auditory before engaging in the bull-fight. Another picture by the same artist, which seems to deserve a better place, is "Billeted—Spain, 1874" (1329), a cobbler scrutinising the order for board and lodging presented by a couple of soldiers. Mr. Reavis sends two pictures of Dutch life marked by spirit and ability in the workmanship—"Bringing up Nets at Scheveningen" (545), and "A Ferry Boat in Old Holland" (396). "A Retreat: Episode of the German French War" (1366), by E. Crofts, is, next to Miss Thompson's "Calling the Roll," the best military picture in the exhibition, so far as we recollect. Even far Japan has yielded themes to Mr. A. Thompson in "Embroidery" (999) and "A Japanese Cleopatra" (1001), in which the costumes and accessories are well painted, but not so the faces; to Mr. F. Moscheles, in "On the Banks of the Kanagawa" (1006); and to Mrs. Romer Jopling, in her cleverly-conceived "Five o'Clock Tea" (1047), à la Japonaise. Though they hardly fall within this category, we may notice here three pictures by Messrs. R. Lehmann, A. Legros, and W. V. Herbert. There are few pictures at Burlington House to compare—for true though latent pathetic sentiment and quiet refinement of execution—with Mr. Lehmann's "Ave Maria" (554). A brown-frocked Capuchin sits in his cell, his head relieved against the falling light, seen through the casement; his eyes wander from the book before him as the evensong or bell falls on his ear; a table, a hard truckle bed, and a few books furnish his narrow domicile. This is not all, however: the monk is young, and has a noble head, but his expression is sad and lonely, and this, together with the plucked rose, the little birds alighted on the window-sill, and the outlook on a calm sea, suggest energies imprisoned and wasted, an unnatural severance from God's beautiful world, and a deprivation of the freedom He has given to all His creatures. M. Legros has made choice of what may be considered an ignoble subject, in "Un Chaudronnier" (24), a travelling tinker mending a pan, and surrounded with other copper and brass vessels. The painter has, however, in treating it, brought to bear rare artistic qualities—to wit, largeness of style, very fine harmony of low-toned hues, and chiaroscuro such as is seldom even attempted by modern English painters. It would be hard to assign any locality or date for Mr. W. V. Herbert's "Summer Song" (453), were it not for the word "Musica" beneath a statue with a lyre; and it would be still more difficult to divine the clime where such purple skies are to be seen. Still the composition of terrace-pleasance, statue, chanting maidens, piping bullfinch, and cooing, fluttering doves has original poetic charm.

In the department of animal-painting the styles of the leading English contributors are too well known to need comment. The veteran Sidney Cooper has two of his familiar cattle-pieces—"A Sunny Summer Evening in the Meadows" (209) and "Fording a Brook in the Marshes" (474); and also a subject rather out of the painter's beaten track—a group of a bull, cow, and calf in a low-browed shed, with snow on the thatch, for title to which is the line from the old song, "Be it ever so humble, there's no place like home" (419). Then Mr. Cooper has this year another bull, lifesize, with cows in the distance beyond an intervening stream, entitled "Separated, but not Divorced" (713). The picture seems to invite comparison (particularly by the dock-leaves which are conspicuous objects in both) with Paul Potter's bull, at The Hague; but, though the Hague picture has been greatly overrated, such comparison would not be favourable to the English artist, at least as regards draughtsmanship; the legs—especially the hind legs—and other parts of Mr. Cooper's bull are defective both in drawing and modelling, to say nothing of the thin, smooth, hard manipulation. Mr. Ansell alternates, as heretofore, between the Highlands and Spain; among the scenes from the former being "A Cot Cattle Fair, Isle of Skye" (186) and "Herd Lassie Parting with an Old Friend"—i.e., a cow (520); whilst his principal Spanish work is "Goatherds, Bay of Gibraltar" (367). It would, perhaps, be too much to expect Mr. Ansell to step out of his long-confirmed routine; still, we should like to see some change in his subjects, effects, or execution, and we should especially like to see the textures of his animals less cared for—to see the hairy coats of his cattle and the fleece of his sheep arranged with less mechanical regularity. "A French Lane" (270), with a string of cows and calves advancing and sunlight striking athwart the trees, is a less important work by Mr. H. W. B. Davis than we are accustomed to see at the Academy; nor are the greens in sunlight quite so happy in colour as usual. Nevertheless, for draughtsmanship and delicacy of workmanship this is one of the best works of its class. Still more refined qualities distinguish two small landscapes by Mr. Davis, "The End of the Day" (596) and "In Picardy" (606); the harmony of the hues and the amenity of feeling in these landscapes are deserving of high praise. Mr. S. Carter has a large and vigorously-descriptive picture, called "A Duel on Black Mount" (400), showing a contest between two eagles, one of which has attacked a fawn that has been defended by its hind. The eagles here fight with their talons only, not also with their beaks, as incorrectly represented in Landseer's "Attack on the Swannery." Mr. Eyre Crowe's pack of "Foxhounds in Kennel" (1045), and Mr. S. E. Waller's picture of wolves, called "Soldiers of Fortune" (195), are also entitled to mention. Among foreign works Mr. Poingdestre's picture (1398), of grey and black cattle being driven by mounted herdsmen of the Campagna into the inclosures of a Roman market, is strikingly animated and characteristic; and M. Auguste Bonheur's "Col de Canfranc, Pyrenees" (1345), with a flock of sheep in the foreground, has (though not a very favourable example) much charm in its sunny colouring; but for richness of effect and vigour of handling these artists yield to M. De Haas in his "Morning in the Meadows."

Midway between the figure and landscape department—that is to say, equally excellent in both—may be placed the works of Mr. Hook, who, though he has not taken new ground this year, has equalled, if not surpassed, anything he had hitherto done. Three of his contributions are coast scenes—those rock-bound bays and creeks where he delights to pitch his easel, from Cornwall and Devon to distant Shetland, and watch the Atlantic sweep in, its wildness and strength half-broken and subdued, till it dashes itself into foam against the jagged rocks or dies in ripples along the soft sand. Mr. Hook never rendered the still-great but subsiding force of the sea under such conditions better than in No. 375. The long-measured stride of the swell as it swings into the bay like a racehorse drawing up but carried by his own impetus far beyond the winning-post; the lovely, pale-emerald transparency of the sea as it glances over the shallower bottom, together with the sense of fresh, exhilarating air, and unsullied laughing light, are altogether delightful. The incident of this picture is pathetically suggestive. It is called "Jetsam and Flotsam" (the legal terms for wreckage)—a fisherman and a young woman are examining the contents of a chest that has been washed ashore; the former is looking at a dagger-retype, the latter endeavours to decipher a diary or log-book. In the two other coast-scenes we have sturdy Shetland lasses burning kelp (14), and a boat lying "Under the Lee of a Rock" (26), with men landing fish therefrom, and loading a pony. The figures in these pictures are, we think, too strong in colour, and their shadows too dark for open-air effect; yet the objection can hardly be pressed, so fine is their colouring and so valuable is the contrast they afford relatively to the distance. Mr. Hook's power as a landscape-painter is equally conspicuous in "Cow-Tending" (232). Nothing can be more forcible, rich, and true than the effect of light on the full summer greenery of the fields and woods. In this case the incident to which the title points is an amusing one. The little cowherd has been neglecting his charge to fish in the foreground stream, the cows meanwhile have wandered in all directions, two of them having got into a poor woman's cabbage-garden; and now the little urchin is seen wading from an eyot, the haunt of the water-fowl, with a capful of eggs, thereby capping his delinquencies. Other landscapes pur et simple must be included in the next notice.

Landseer's portrait of Sir Walter Scott, in the late sale of Sir Edwin's remaining works, was bought by Mr. Albert Grant, and has been presented by him to the National Portrait Gallery. The Landseer sale realised, in all, over £70,000.

Messrs. Pilgeram and Lefevre have lately published an engraving by Mr. W. H. Simmonds, after M. Tissot's picture, entitled "News of our Marriage." The incident depicted occurs in the bay-window of an inn down the Thames, overlooking the river—a favourite scene with the painter. Here a military man has brought his young bride (both in costumes of the last century), and, while refreshments are waiting to be served, is reading the public announcement of their marriage. A runaway match it may be—at all events, the incident is suggestive; and M. Tissot is seen to more advantage in sentimental subjects such as this than in his illustrations of contemporary life. We need hardly say that Mr. Simmonds has performed his task admirably, and the plate will doubtless be popular.

We have received from the committee of the Art-Union of Victoria a set of six photographs, from designs by members of the Victorian Academy of Arts, made expressly for subscribers to the art-union. Apart from the novel interest of the Australian scenery depicted, the designs have art-merit, and would form a pleasant memorial for English friends of the colony. The antipodean society seems to be constituted and conducted after the model of our London Art-Union, and we heartily wish it success.

A statue of "Semiramis," by Mr. W. W. Story, of Rome, one of those grandiose seated female figures by which the eminent American sculptor is best known, is now on view at Messrs. Holloway's gallery, Bedford-street, Strand.

"Le Petit Pasteur," one of the chef-d'œuvre of Murillo, has lately been sold at the Hôtel Drouot, Paris, for 120,000fr.

The collection of Mr. Wilson, lately exhibited at Brussels for the benefit of the poor, has been brought to the hammer, and realised 575,737fr.

The death is announced of Baron Triqueti, the French sculptor. The deceased was born at Conflans, in 1802. He commenced his career by studying painting as well as sculpture, but the success he met with in the latter induced him to devote himself entirely to that art. One of the works by which he is best known in France is the bas-reliefs on the doors of the Madeleine, Paris. His series of decorations for the Wolsey (now Albert) Chapel, at Windsor, including the recumbent statue of the Prince Consort, were, we understand, left virtually completed. The principal wall decorations of this chapel consist of those incised designs, filled in with marble veneers of different tints, with which the artist's name is intimately connected. A set of such inlays were to have been executed by the Baron for the dado of the east end of St. Paul's Cathedral.

The death of Mr. Gleyre, the eminent painter of the "Illusions Perdues" of the Luxembourg and other very poetical works, took place under remarkable circumstances. He had gone to the "Loan Exhibition" at Paris, now being held in the saloons of the former Corps Législatif, where some of his own masterpieces, as well as those of many of his contemporaries, are being exhibited, when he suddenly dropped down dead. It was afterwards discovered that he had ruptured an aneurism of the heart, owing, it is supposed, to excitement and the crowded state of the rooms.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

Two of the performances of last week necessarily remain for present notice—that of Thursday, when Madame Adeline Patti made her second appearance this season, and that of Saturday, when M. Faure reappeared. Thursday's opera was "Dinorah," with Madame Patti's inimitable representation of the heroine, the impression produced by which was again such as can only result from gifts and acquisitions of the highest and rarest order. As usual, the "Shadow" song was rapturously applauded and encored. The cast in most other respects was also as before, having included Mlle. Scalchi as the Goatherd, Signor Bettini as Corentino, M. Maurel as Hoel, and Signor Capponi as the Hunter, the small parts of the second Goatherd and the Reaper having been filled, respectively, by Mlle. Cottini and Signor Sabater.

"Hamlet," as given on Saturday, included M. Faure's fine performance as the title hero, which character was represented by him on the original production of M. Ambroise Thomas's opera at Paris in 1868, and for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera-house in 1871. The impersonation displayed all its former excellence, both dramatic and vocal. Like Mlle. Albani's other performances of the present season, her Ophelia proved the advance which this artist has made in vocal power and declamatory style. The great scene of the death of Ophelia, in the third act, with the introduced Swedish melody, was, as heretofore, the principal feature of the evening. Mlle. D'Angeri, as the Queen, gave much force to the principal situations in which that character is concerned in the opera; and the King was again represented by Signor Baggiolo, the Ghost by Signor Capponi, Horatio by Signor Tagliacolo, and Marcellus by Signor Rossi; the character of Laertes having been filled by Signor Sabater. The performance of Friday (yesterday) week was a repetition of "Guglielmo Tell," as recently noticed.

On Monday "Don Giovanni" was given, for the first time this season, the cast having included the Zerlina of Madame Adeline Patti, the exquisite charm of which, vocal and personal, was as powerful as on any previous occasion. Mlle. Marimon was an excellent Elvira; Mlle. d'Angeri, as Donna Anna, sang artistically; the Don Giovanni of M. Faure was the same highly-finished performance as heretofore; and the cast was completed by Signor Nicolini as Don Ottavio, Signor Ciampi as Leporello, Signor Capponi as Il Commendatore, and M. Maurel as Masetto.

On Tuesday night "I Puritani" was repeated (with Mlle. Albani as Elvira); for Thursday "Rigoletto" was announced (also a repetition); yesterday (Friday) evening "Der Freischütz" was to be given; and to-night (Saturday) "The Crown Diamonds" is promised—both for the first time this season.

Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" is to be brought out here, with Mlle. Albani as the heroine; the cast also including Mlle. Marimon and M. Faure.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

"Caterina; ossia, I Diamanti della Corona" (Les Diamans de la Couronne), was repeated on Saturday, with the second appearance of Madame Singelli as the heroine; her artistic singing having been fully as successful as on the first occasion.

On the previous Thursday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was given, for the first time this season, with the fine performance of Mdlle. Titiens as the Countess, Mdlle. Marie Roze having, for the first time, represented the character of Susanna, in which her graceful singing was more advantageously heard than in parts of the romantic or heroic school. The Cherubino of Madame Trebelli-Bettini, the Figaro of Signor Agnesi, the Almaviva of Signor Rota, and the Basilio of Signor Rinaldini presented the same characteristics and merits as in previous performances.

On Monday "Caterina" was given for the third time; on Tuesday "Les Huguenots" was repeated; on Thursday Signor Campanini was to reappear in "Lucrezia Borgia;" and to-night (Saturday) "Caterina" is to be performed for the fourth time.

"Il Talismano" (Balle's posthumous opera) is in active rehearsal, and its production (deferred from last season) appears now to be a certainty, the representatives of the hero and heroine—Signor Campanini and Madame Christine Nilsson—having arrived in London.

As the concerts given at the Crystal Palace on Saturday afternoon, and at the Royal Albert Hall on Monday evening, in honour of the Emperor of Russia, offered no absolute novelty, but slight notice is requisite. On the first occasion the performances began at four o'clock, and comprised orchestral and vocal pieces (solo and choral), the principal singers having been Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Santley. Monday's concert began at eight o'clock, and the programme included two specialties—the polonaise and chorus from Glinka's Russian opera, "Life for the Czar," and a selection of Russian sacred music (unaccompanied), arranged for the choir by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who conducted it and a portion of his own Festival "Te Deum," the other portions of the concert having been directed by Mr. Barnby. The solo-singers were Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Patey, Mr. Cummings, and Signor Foli.

The fifth of the New Philharmonic concerts took place on Saturday afternoon, and the fourth concert of the Philharmonic Society on Monday evening. At the former, Madame Essipoff, from St. Petersburg, made a highly-successful first appearance in Chopin's first pianoforte concerto and some unaccompanied pieces, in all of which her playing was of an exceptionally high order. At Monday's concert of the older society a violin concerto by M. Lalo was played by Señor Sarasate, for the first time in England, the work and the executant having both been well received.

The last of Herr Pauer's historical performances of pianoforte music took place on Monday, when the programme included pieces by Sebastian and Emanuel Bach, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Schumann, and Liszt.

The annual concert of the Tonic Sol-Fa Association was given at the Crystal Palace on Wednesday. The conductors were Mr. Joseph Proudmann and Mr. W. G. M'Naught. The programme consisted principally of pieces illustrating the seasons—spring, summer, autumn, and winter.

M. Alexandre Billet gave the first of two recitals of classical pianoforte music, at St. George's Hall, on Wednesday afternoon.

The first of two summer subscription concerts of Mr. Henry Leslie's choir was to take place at St. James's Hall, on Thursday evening, when the selection consisted chiefly of madrigals and part-songs. On the afternoon of the same day Mr. and Mrs. Richard Blagrove were to give the first of three concertina and pianoforte recitals.

The second of the Crystal Palace summer concerts, to take place this (Saturday) afternoon, will be devoted to the illustration of French music.

THEATRES.

ROYALTY.

On Saturday a new play in four acts, by Mr. F. O. Burnand, was produced at the little theatre in Dean-street, now under the gentle sway of Miss Henrietta Hodson. It is founded on Mrs. Edwards's well-known novel of "Archie Lovell," and is called by the same name. The materials of the action are simple, and portions of the dialogue are telling. We cannot speak in high terms of the structure. The fatal necessity (for it seems to have grown into such) of working each act up into a tableau has misled the author into as fatal a mistake. The distress of the plot lies in the hero and heroine making a secret of what might have been told without danger, there having been in the erroneous act nothing really clandestine. Of this a scoundrel named Captain Waters (Mr. G. H. Peveril) takes advantage, and attempts to levy blackmail upon Archie Lovell (Miss Henrietta Hodson), demanding indeed five hundred pounds for his silence. Immediately after his departure the other parties to the transaction, Major Seton (Mr. George Rignold) and Gerald Durant (Mr. G. F. Neville), meet together suddenly, and have only to speak in order necessarily to explain the matter in a satisfactory manner to themselves and their friends; when, instead of doing so, they strike ridiculous attitudes, and the curtain falls upon an insignificant tableau. The last act, having consequently proceeded on an insufficient basis, is, accordingly, a comparative failure, though it concludes with a pretty enough situation, of which the audience evidently approved. Still there was a general sense of short-coming, the source of which we have endeavoured to indicate. The simplicity and innocence of Archie were beautifully and tenderly interpreted by Miss Hodson. Mr. Rignold has been specially engaged for Major Seton, and supported the character with care and skill; but we see in him no special fitness for the part, but rather the contrary, and nothing in the part worthy of his abilities. Mrs. Blythe, the doctor's wife, was sustained with spirit by Miss Maggie Brennan; and the doctor himself was amusing in the hands of Mr. Fosbrooke. The other parts were rendered with an average amount of talent; but scarcely seemed available to any possible plot, that might have been constructed out of their peculiarities. As the case stands, there is not a shadow of one to claim their allegiance or support.

ADELPHI.

Mr. John Oxenford's farce, entitled "Magic Toys," has been revived for Miss Kate Vaughan, whose dancing is as well appreciated as known, and whose elocution, we are glad to find, in the dialogue of the piece, was perfect. Miss Hudspeth, as Urgundula, was deservedly encoined in the air, "Oh, give me back my pretty toys!" She was also charming in the song, "Good-by, sweetheart, good-by!" The same author's farce, "A Waltz by Ardit," continues attractive; and the melodrama of "The Prayer in the Storm" is exceedingly popular.

GAIETY.

Mr. Charles Mathews has reappeared in his favourite part of Mopus, in "Married for Money," and also as Sir Fretful Plagiary and Puff in "The Critic." In both ventures he has been ably supported and abundantly patronised. Mr. Herman Vezin and Mr. Harcourt represented Sneer and Dangle. "The Critic," however, is, we think, somewhat injured by the numerous "gags" which have been interpolated. Many of the audience left before its conclusion—the result, we fear, of this increasing stage-abuse.

PRINCESS'S.

Mdlle. Favart appeared during the past week in the new comedy entitled "Le Sphinx," recently produced at the Theatre Royal Français with great success, owing to the sensation created by Mdlle. Croizette in the mysterious character of the heroine, and particularly in the death scene, which was full of terror. Mdlle. Favart mitigates this feeling, and renders the representation much less sensational. She was entirely equal to the situation, and eminently tragic, without exaggerating the melodramatic points. The piece suffers from the many long speeches with which the action is retarded. Mdlle. Kelly deserves, however, distinction for the admirable manner in which she supported the part of Bertha de Savigny—a character scarcely second to that of the Sphinx herself. Of the other artistes engaged we prefer to say nothing.

THE MAGAZINES.

There is nothing of especial note in the Cornhill this month. "Far from the Madding Crowd" is continued with considerable ability; the talk of the rustics, however, is too palpably artificial. It gives the rustic mind as it appears after passing through the medium of a mind of culture, and produces an effect of unreality by a too obvious determination to be extremely natural. The article on the French press during the Revolution has more to do with the revolution than the press, the influence of which, considerable as it was, is perhaps somewhat overrated by the writer. It was not wholly or chiefly by their contributions to newspapers that Mirabeau and Robespierre successively directed the course of the revolution. The writer's sympathies are anti-Republican, and his illustrative selections are too exclusively taken from Royalist journals or the least reputable ones of the other party. The author of an agreeable paper on Iceland treats his subject less from the point of view of scenery than from the comparatively unfamiliar one of the social condition and mental characteristics of the people. Iceland would appear to be a country where the narrowness and paucity of intellectual interests is largely compensated by the general attainment of a fair uniform level. Almost every Icelandic is by manner and bearing a gentleman, the poetic and historic traditions of the country are the common property of all, and the poorest is enough of a patriot to have the portrait of the popular leader in his house. On the other hand, the old enterprising spirit has died out from want of objects on which to employ itself. The lines "To a Friend Leaving England in September," signed with the easily recognisable initials "J. A. S.," are a characteristic example of the elaborate but constrained poetry of highly-refined culture.

The writer of an able paper in Fraser on the working of the Irish Land Act makes out a strong case for the further application of its leading principles, and especially for the extension of the Ulster custom to the whole of Ireland. One would fancy, however, that the composition of the essay must date from some months back, so unconscious does the writer appear of the impossibility of carrying any such measure through the present Parliament. The Irish people have themselves conspired to defeat their own wishes, in so far as their incorrigible factionness has contributed to the overthrow of the Gladstone Ministry. Professor Newman greatly exaggerates the dark side of Roman administration; but his essay, like everything he writes, is original and suggestive. Mr. Conway gives an interesting account of a remarkable man, the Rev. Robert Collyer, of Chicago, who, having commenced life as a blacksmith in Yorkshire, has achieved a position of extraordinary influence in the north western States of America. Judging from the specimens given, Mr. Collyer's eloquence is of a homely type, notwithstanding some questionable rhetorical embellishments. He would seem to have a certain affinity to Henry Ward Beecher, but, while inferior in wit and originality, to be exempt from every trace of buffoonery. "The Father of Universal Suffrage" would make that institution blush for its parentage, were it not really too absurd to affiliate it upon that inept marplot, Ledru Rollin. Mr. E. Gosse's criticism of the great dramatist Webster is delicate and appreciative, and he announces a literary discovery of considerable interest—namely, the possibility of completely disengaging Webster's share of "A Cure for a Cuckold," from the inferior work of his coadjutor, Rowley; thus, if the detached passages indeed form as complete and symmetrical a whole as Mr. Gosse considers, virtually adding another to the series of Webster's plays.

Macmillan has more light articles than ordinary. Captain Chapman's "Ride through the Bazaar at Yarkund" graphically depicts the commercial aspects of this newly-discovered city—the destined mart, it is hoped, of English exports to Central Asia. Business appears exceedingly brisk at present, and the wants, not only of Yarkundees, but of their European visitors, seem even now by no means ill supplied. "Ordered South," by R. L. Stevenson, is a pathetic yet not despondent portrayal of the feelings of a consumptive patient virtually under sentence of death. "More about Vermont" displays, in no unkindly spirit, the characteristic faults of the American character in the north-eastern States, which are such as to suggest that the English type, when transplanted to America, is liable to degenerate without a liberal foreign admixture: some of them, at least, are not those most prevalent among the English who stay at home. Mrs. Knox's lines on the funeral of Livingstone are not unworthy of the occasion. Mendelssohn's correspondence with Ferdinand Hiller is concluded.

The chief feature of Blackwood is the continuation of "Alice Lorraine," but the character of Hercules as depicted in Sophocles and Euripides is also the subject of a thoroughly interesting paper, able, scholarly, and tasteful. "Convivium Templare" is another of those dismal resuscitations of the "Noctes Ambrosianae," whose distance from the original in humour corresponds accurately with their distance in point of time. "Setting Sail" refers to the new Administration, which has, it appears, put forth upon the waters with a fair wind. The metaphor is not a very happy one; the voyage of every Administration, however prolonged by dexterity or good fortune, must inevitably terminate in shipwreck at last.

The Fortnightly contains three articles of special interest. Mr. Ashton Dilke's "Siberia," a chapter from his forthcoming book of travel, is a satisfactory earnest of the entertainment this is likely to afford. Mr. Dilke judiciously and courageously explored Siberia in the winter, when its characteristic aspects are most fully displayed, and found that its horrors have been greatly exaggerated. Mrs. Garrett-Anderson, in her reply to Dr. Mandalev on the evil effects attributed to excessive study on the part of females, takes the line of contending that the evidence in support of this conclusion is principally founded on the abuses of the college system in America. Mr. Wallace's defence of Spiritualism will be read with the respect due to the eminence, conviction, and courage of the writer. We fear, notwithstanding, that the principal fact it will be held to establish is his loose notion of the value of testimony. Mr. J. B. Paton extenuates the apparent harshness of the recent German ecclesiastical legislation by pointing out the protection it extends to the inferior clergy. It is to be regretted that this aspect was not more prominently brought forward in the first instance.

The Contemporary again challenges attention by an Homeric version from the pen of Mr. Gladstone, and again we must say that the late Premier's rendering is much less to our taste than the thoughtful observations by which it is prefaced. It is most commendably faithful, but awkward and bald. We do not know why Mr. W. R. Greg should consider himself to be enacting the part of Cassandra. The political and social perils he points out are denied by few; but few either will deny that our national history is the history of a chronic liability to danger in some form, and that such must inevitably be the case with every not altogether fossilised organism. Mr. Fitz-james Stephens's reply to Archbishop Manning is trenchant and conclusive. In demonstrating the possibility of the painless extinction of the Establishment, Mr. J. Hopgood runs full tilt upon the main difficulty—the disposal of the existing edifices. The number of Churchmen willing to maintain their ministers from their own resources is very much larger than that of those who would transfer any property in their churches to other denominations. The lecturers of the Liberation Society do well to insist on a proviso which will find them work for the whole of their lives.

In Scribner's Monthly we have to remark a beautifully illustrated paper on the manners and scenery of Tennessee; and in the Transatlantic an angry assault on Mr. Seward's memory by Mr. Black, one of the old-fashioned Democratic politicians who fondly imagine that the civil war could have been averted by further concessions to the South. Mrs. Linton's "Patricia Kemball" is the chief feature of Temple Bar, as Mr. Franchillon's "Olympia" is of the Gentleman's Magazine, where Mr. Hatton's "Clytie" is concluded. The last chapters have been condensed in the magazine, but will be published in their entirety. Mrs. Buchanan's "Eros Athanatos" is ethereal in intention but substantial in execution, like a fairy nurtured upon beef. "The Official Member" is a clever Parliamentary sketch.

We must be content with a general acknowledgment of Tinsley, Belgravia, Good Words, the Victoria Magazine, the Monthly Packet, and several others.

CURIOUS WILLS.

(Contributed by the Author of "Flemish Interiors.")

Among the archives of Toulouse exists the registry of a singular will, made by a countryman of the immediate environs in 1781. This peasant, who was the owner of a considerable sum of money, besides his house and the land surrounding it, had no children, but had attached himself to a horse he always rode, though it does not seem to have been particularly comely in appearance. His affection for this animal was very constant; for, finding himself seriously ill, and having decided on making his will, he disposed of all his property in favour of the four-footed favourite in these terms:—"I declare that I appoint my russet cob my universal heir, and I desire that he may belong to my nephew George." The will was contested; but, strange to say, it was ultimately confirmed. A very experienced juriconsult, by name Claude Serres, professor of "droit civil" at Montpellier, has cited the case, and gives the reason for the decision arrived at. This celebrated lawyer states "that the will was pronounced valid, and that the succession of the testator was adjudicated to the nephew whom he had designated as proprietor of the horse, because it was ruled that the simplicity of the rustic should secure to him the execution of his last will, and that, having named his nephew as legatee of the horse, he intended he should have it endowed with the bequest he had bestowed upon it.—(See Journal de Paris, Dec. 3, 1782.)

In June, 1828, the London papers recorded the singular will of an English testator, named Garland, containing the following clause:—"I bequeath to my monkey, my dear and amusing Jacko, the sum of £10 sterling per annum, to be employed for his sole and exclusive use and benefit; to my faithful dog Shock, and my well-beloved cat, Tib, a pension of £5 sterling, and I desire that, in case of the death of either of the three, the lapsed pension shall pass to the other two, between whom it is to be equally divided. On the death of all three the sum appropriated to this purpose shall become the property of my daughter Gertrude, to whom I give this preference among my children because of the large family she has, and the difficulty she finds in bringing them up."

The Lord Chancellor has reported to the House of Lords that the right claimed by Lord Rosemore and by Lord Massy to vote at the election of representative Peers for Ireland has been established to his satisfaction.

Mr. Edward Maxwell Kenney, M.A. of Merton College, Oxford, and Mr. John Gerald Fitzmaurice, B.A. of University College, Oxford, have been appointed inspectors of schools. Mr. Thomas Anderson Stewart, M.A. of Aberdeen University, has been appointed an inspector of schools in Scotland.

His Majesty the King of Italy has been pleased to confer on Mr. R. H. Major, of the British Museum (one of the secretaries of the Royal Geographical Society), the insignia and diploma of a Knight Commander of the Royal Order of the Crown of Italy. This is a recognition of the service rendered to Italy by Mr. Major's complete vindication of the authenticity of the narrative of the voyages of the Venetian brothers Zeno to the northern seas in the fourteenth century. For centuries this book, printed in 1558, has been regarded by many as a tissue of fiction. It was certainly, as the learned John Pinkerton described it, "one of the most puzzling in the whole circle of literature." Now that its puzzles have been solved and its authenticity established, we have in this valuable document the latest account known of the last colony of Greenland, to discover which the Kings of Denmark have, in the past 300 years, sent out many unsuccessful expeditions. What is yet more interesting, we here find Venetians sending home to their fellow citizens in Venice information respecting Europeans in North America a hundred years before Columbus crossed the Atlantic. Mr. Major's researches into the obscure early history of other maritime geographical achievements are highly appreciated by all scholars. His life of the Portuguese Prince Henry, called "The Navigator," is a standard work. He has also the merit of having proved, from a set of ancient maps, that the Portuguese were acquainted with Australia about 1530, nearly three quarters of a century before its supposed discovery by the Dutch.

BATTLE OF GALDAMES, APRIL 30: VIEW TAKEN FROM THE HEIGHTS OF MONTELLANO.

The main force of the Carlists is still in the neighbourhood of Bilbao, where severe skirmishes took place at the beginning of this week. Some additional sketches by our Special Artist at the head-quarters of the Spanish National Army (often mentioned as Republican) show the positions held by the combatants in the recent fighting. We have, on former occasions, described the mountainous country north-west of Bilbao, along the Somorrostro ranges, famous for their iron ore, where the Carlists, under General Elio, had intrenched themselves in a formidable manner. From those heights, it will be remembered, the Carlists were expelled, two or three weeks ago, by the combined movements of Marshal Serrano and Marshal Concha. One of our present Illustrations is that of a portion of the Carlist trenches at San Pedro de Abanto, the centre of their lines. It was abandoned, at three o'clock in the morning, on the 1st inst. A female wine-seller, or cantiniera, went down to Murieta and announced their flight. The church and village of Abanto were found in ruins. The parapets of the intrenchments had been knocked to pieces by the cannonade. Serrano that day entered the village, and signed a Government decree before the altar in the church. One of Serrano's batteries, that of San Lorenzo, was the subject of two preceding sketches. There is also here a sketch of its casemate, or bomb-proof covered place for the abode of the artillery officer in command.

The village of Las Arenas, on the opposite bank of the river Nervion at Portugalete, was some time occupied by the Carlists, while they besieged that town. Its best houses, which were marine villas for the citizens of Bilbao in time of peace, are now pierced with shot-holes, or half demolished by the bombardment, as shown in the sketch.

The battle of April 30—an important action in the late campaign—was begun by Serrano occupying the heights of Montellano and Mercadillo, which overlook the Somorrostro valley. In one of our Artist's sketches Marshal Serrano and Admiral Topete, with the staff, are seen where they stood upon the hill of Montellano. The mountain rising in the background is that of Galdames. We also give a panoramic view from Montellano, the references to which may serve to explain the published accounts of the battle. The Carlist position on the Galdames heights was finally stormed by a night attack, with twelve battalions, under General Palacios, who lost thirty men.

SKETCHES IN RUSSIA.

The scenes of ordinary city life in St. Petersburg and Moscow, and that of the popular religious ceremonial of Easter Eve, take some additional interest from the Czar's presence among us this week. They contribute, with other sketches of Russian manners and customs already published, to show the difference of national character between his Imperial Majesty's subjects and our own countrymen. The magnificent Isaac Church at St. Petersburg was lately described. A sketch is given of the customary presentation of Easter offerings by the devout and pious, who are rewarded with a priestly benediction and sprinkling of consecrated water from the hyssop-bough carried by his Reverence for that purpose. The street scene at Moscow may be commended to imitation, under the patronage of our temperance societies, whose cause would be furthered by promoting the cheap and ready provision of a refreshing cup of tea, instead of beer or ardent spirits, at all hours of the day, from bar or stall. The Russian tea of prime quality is brought overland through Siberia from China. It is usually drunk without milk or sugar, but with a slice of lemon, and is said to be very nice when the taste has become accustomed to it. Fruit, especially of the dried sorts—figs, raisins, prunes, almonds and nuts, with mushrooms and glukvi, a small red berry of the country—find great sale in the Russian towns.

We make this an opportunity also for noticing a new book, in two volumes, just published by Messrs. Hurst and Blackett, "Through Russia, from St. Petersburg to the Crimea." The authoress, Mrs. Guthrie, accompanied by her daughter, sojourned about one month in each of the two Russian capital cities, then visited Nijni-Novgorod, the great commercial town of East Russia, and descended the Volga to Astrakhan, whence the two English ladies returned westward, by the Don and the Sea of Azov, to Kertch, Sebastopol, and Eupatoria. In the second volume, containing the descriptions of places around the Caspian and the Black Sea, there is much of fresh interest. But the objects more frequently noticed by English tourists in St. Petersburg and Moscow are discussed by Mrs. Guthrie with an agreeable freshness of seeing and enjoying the sights. Another new book, of which some readers may like to hear, is "Rites and Customs of the Greco-Russian Church," by H. C. Romanoff (Rivingtons). It is a series of brief tales and sketches, edited by Miss Yonge, the authoress of "The Heir of Redclyffe."

SIR GARNET WOLSELEY AT PORTSMOUTH.

The festivities at Portsmouth upon the return of the troops from the Ashantee war ended, on Tuesday week, with a banquet to Sir Garnet Wolseley and a hundred officers of all branches of the service engaged in the expedition. On arriving in the town, Sir Garnet was received at the railway station by General Sir Hastings Doyle, the Mayor of Portsmouth, and others. A crowd had assembled, and the General was loudly cheered. Outside the Assembly Rooms, in the evening, there was a crowd again to see the arrival of the guests. The large room was decorated with flowers, mirrors, and plate; the names of the battles of the campaign were inscribed on the walls. The gallery was filled with ladies. The guests were conducted to the dining-room, the Mayores taking the arm of Sir Garnet Wolseley. Amongst the guests on the right and left of the Mayor were Captain Sir John Commerell, Captain Sir John Glover, Colonel Sir F. W. Festing, Colonel Sir John M'Leod, Admiral Sir Rodney Mundy, General Lord Templetown, General Sir Hastings Doyle, and Captain Fremantle. After dinner, the proper toasts for such an occasion were duly honoured. Sir Garnet Wolseley, Sir John Glover, and Sir Francis Festing made suitable speeches. We give an illustration of the scene at this banquet.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Mr. Brinley Richards's "Czarina, Masurka de Salon" (published by Messrs. Cocks and Co.), is an effective pianoforte piece that will, doubtless, find much favour on its own account as well as from the associations connected with the title. The same publishers have issued two pleasing fantasias, also for piano solo, by Mr. W. S. Rockstro. One of these is founded on two of the principal subjects of Wagner's opera "Tannhauser"—the well-known march and Tannhauser's air, "Die Gotin der Liebe, soll mein lied ertönen"—the other, entitled "Lays of Prince Charlie," introduces the Scottish air, "He's o'er the hills and far away."

"The Harper's Grave" is a setting, by Mr. Brinley Richards, of some lines by the Rev. Llewellyn Thomas (Geraint), of which poem it is superfluous to speak in praise, its merit having gained it the Banting prize at the Ruthin Eisteddfod of 1868. The music of Mr. Richards is highly expressive in its vocal portion, while the pianoforte accompaniment is appropriately made to consist largely of arpeggios—probably it was originally designed for the harp—and the general result is a very characteristic song, which, moreover, presents no mechanical difficulties in its interpretation. Among Messrs. Cocks and Co.'s recent publications of pianoforte music are two pleasing transcriptions of vocal pieces of very opposite styles—Beethoven's air, "In questa tomba" has been prettily dressed up by Mr. G. F. West; and Mr. A. Wright has similarly treated the Scotch air, "Smile again, my bonnie lassie."

Mr. King Hall's "School for the Harmonium," published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co., is an inexpensive yet valuable code of instructions for that popular drawing-room instrument, commencing with full explanations of its peculiar mechanism, the mode of managing the stops, &c., followed by twenty progressive studies, which lead to a series of pieces arranged by some of the most eminent professors of the day.

"Lillie's Picture Music" (Messrs. Boosey and Co.) will be welcome to multitudes of tiny pianists, whose diminutive fingers are here enabled to realise the prominent features of compositions of various schools. The first book consists of "Sacred Melodies," the second of "Popular Melodies;" many of the passages having the leading fingering indicated, and the juvenile interest being maintained and varied by the attractive full-sized engravings interspersed with the music.

Messrs. Metzler and Co. maintain their well-known activity as publishers of vocal and instrumental music, various productions in each class having recently been issued by them. Often as Mr. J. L. Hatton's name appears as a song-composer it is always welcome, and is again so in a very graceful production entitled "In her garden," which can scarcely fail to please both musical and unmusical hearers, and yet does not tax severely the powers of the singer, either as to execution or range of voice. "The Russian Bridal-Song," to words by C. J. Rowe, is an adaptation, by Dr. Rimbaud, of one of the most beautiful and popular melodies of that nationality, which has now acquired a new interest in this country. "Only once more," by Louisa Gray, is another welcome contribution to the stock of ballad music, by one who has added largely and successfully thereto. Expressive simplicity is here the appropriate characteristic. The compass of voice required is only an octave and one note, from D below the lines to E in the fourth space. In two songs, "May and December" and "At his hearth alone," we again meet with the name of Cotford Dick, which is likely to become much more known, judging by these and other specimens of his productions. Both these songs have the combined merit of agreeable melody and simplicity; the first requires a soprano (or tenor) voice capable of touching the high A, the other is within the more limited compass of a mezzo-soprano. Mr. W. T. Wrighton has long since gained wide acceptance as a producer of songs and ballads, several new specimens of which (recently published by Messrs. Metzler and Co.) will bear comparison with his previous pieces of the kind. "Only with thee," "One lock of hair," "My little child," and "Lily" will all be found available by an ordinary mezzo-soprano voice. The popular ballad, "The old, old song," has been effectively transcribed as a pianoforte piece by Mr. Brinley Richards. Prefaced by a short introduction, the melody is given simply, and is afterwards surrounded with arpeggio and other passages, contrasting well with the cantabile of the theme. The name of Oscar Comettant is known both as a musical critic and a composer, and we now have it, in the latter capacity, attached to three publications by Messrs. Metzler and Co.—one a melodious and animated waltz, entitled "Neva;" another a fantasia called "Italia," in which an andantino of the nocturno kind leads to a spirited allegretto in tarantella rhythm; and the third a capital movement, "Alla Polka." "The Royal Russian Galop" is an adaptation to dance purposes (by Mr. J. E. Mallandaine) of the national melody mentioned above.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

SYMMETRY IN NATURE.

Mr. Nevil Story Maskelyne, M.A., F.R.S., Keeper of the Mineral Department in the British Museum and Professor of Mineralogy at Oxford, gave the first of a course of four lectures on Physical Symmetry in Crystals on Thursday week. In his opening remarks he stated that the idea of symmetry involves repetition according to some law, which includes at once regularity of interval, or rhythm, and a principle of distribution. He mentioned certain sorts of symmetry, such as symmetry to a point, to a line or to several lines, to an axis or to several axes, also symmetry in a flat surface and in a solid figure; and the human face, a leaf, a flower, and a tower were referred, to as examples of the simplest kind of symmetry. He then commented on the embodiment of the subtle elements of symmetry in the works of artists, and especially alluded to the use made by the Greeks, Assyrians, and Arabs of the rhythm of repetitive ornament in decorative art, adding that the ear, like the eye, also recognises as an element of beauty not only rhythmic measure, but symmetry of structure in music and poetry. In nature symmetry underlies all growth. A poet has revealed the great truth that the different parts of the corolla of the flower are only metamorphosed leaves, and this change of function is associated with symmetrical repetition of the metamorphosed element. The whole plant obeys one law of symmetry. Except that function is wanting, and that their growth belongs to the lifeless world, the same is true of the inorganic molecular structures termed crystals. A crystal, then, may be defined as a molecular system, obeying a law of symmetry, and a "crystal form," as a group of faces with edges and quoins repeated symmetrically; the crystal generally comprising several forms. The repetition of the same edge or angle, and therefore of the same inclinations of corresponding faces, gives a key to crystal-symmetry—that is, to a science of crystallography—and by means of their angles, crystals, though differing in size and in the proportions of even repeated faces, may be identified by using the goniometer. Interesting examples of the development of crystal: were then given, some being shown by the electric light; and the singular transformation of the red to the yellow iodide of mercury and back again was also exhibited. Finally, Mr. Maskelyne considered and illustrated the physical properties of crystals. He said that homogeneity in crystals does not consist in their presenting qualities identical in all directions, but that one part of the crystal is exactly as every other part is; and he demonstrated by experiments that the degree of cohesion, hardness, and optical character of several crystals differed in different directions. One of these consisted in showing that a crystal of cyanite may be easily scratched by a knife along one of its faces, while the same face was untouched by the knife drawn across it; while it needed a substance as hard as a topaz to cut it in a third direction. In conclusion, he defined symmetry in crystals as consisting in directions similarly endowed being repeated according to a law of symmetry which follows that to which the faces of any one of its forms are obedient.

THE STEAM-SHIP FARADAY AND CABLE-LAYING.

Dr. C. Williams Siemens, F.R.S., at the Friday evening meeting, May 15, began his discourse by reminding his audience that an electric telegraph now consists of the electro-motor, or battery, the conductor (copper wire), and the receiving instruments, of which there are various forms exhibited in the library. Attempts, he said, have been made to suppress the conducting-wire by employing water or air as the conductor, which appear to be feasible, but which are successful only for short distances. An insulating coating for the wire has been proved to be essentially necessary; and for this purpose, after pitch, resin, and indiarubber had failed, gutta-percha was found to be perfectly effectual, and has been generally used since 1847, when Werner Siemens constructed a covering-machine. Protection being still needed for the insulated wire, lead and chain tubing and hemp have been successively employed to obviate the dangers arising from rust, the teredo, whales and sharks, and abrasions from rocks and ships' anchors. In one case the cable was injured through entanglement with the tail of a whale, who, unable to extricate itself, was eaten by sharks. After describing the condition, insulation, and sheathings of the new Atlantic cable, Dr. Siemens explained, by the aid of models, diagrams, and experiments, the essential conditions of paying out and picking up a cable, which are simple in shallow water, but very complicated in deep sea. He stated that the steamship Faraday had been provided with machinery expressly constructed for realising these conditions with the greatest safety—all which was the result of much experimental research, since safe stowage and easy manœuvring power are indispensable requisites. Formerly cables were stowed dry; but it was soon discovered that heat was generated, and that the gutta-percha consequently melted; and now the cable is placed in tanks, and, by suitable arrangements, is paid out from water to water. Between these tanks there is a testing-room, with apparatus for ascertaining the condition of the cable from time to time. To enable the ship to reverse its course, both ends are alike provided with rudders. She may be moved from midships, and, by means of twin screws set at a particular angle, power is given to the vessel to turn completely round in her own length. This was done in open sea in eight minutes two seconds. After describing the compound engines, the dynamometer, and other apparatus, as well as Berthon's hydrostatic log and the life-boats, Dr. Siemens concluded by saying that, with the consent of Mrs. Faraday, the ship had been named after the greatest of electricians, who was a type of singleness of purpose and a kind friend; and, appealing to his hearers, he said he trusted that the vessel would sail the next morning, to lay the "Direct United States Cable," with the fine old English sentiment in their hearts, "God speed the Faraday!" The Earl of Rosse, D.C.L., F.R.S., vice-president, was in the chair. In the library were exhibited in action the automatic telegraph system, Hughes's telegraph type-printing system, two remarkably quick-acting submarine Morse printing instruments, by Dr. Siemens; and Messrs. F. H. Varley and Edward Furness showed a "power-coupling" for avoiding sudden strains in paying out cables and other purposes. Electric writing-balls, by Mr. Sofus Holten and Mr. F. H. Varley, were also exhibited in action.

MERCURY, VENUS, AND THE MOON.

Mr. Richard A. Proctor began his second lecture on the Planetary System, on Saturday last, by considering the measure amount of information which astronomy affords respecting the planets Mercury and Venus. He showed that Mercury, owing to its proximity to the sun, is exposed to a degree of heat which renders the existence of such forms of life as we know improbable if not impossible; and he explained that the difficulty is not removed by supposing the air of the planet to be exceedingly rare. In the case of Venus, the heat is not so excessive; nevertheless, if, as De Vico and others allege, her inclination is nearly twice as great as the earth's, there must result variations of temperature from a heat far exceeding that of the terrestrial tropics to a cold equalling that of our arctic regions; and such variations occurring in the short year of Venus (only 225 days) would render life impossible to the higher forms existing on the earth. Passing to the moon, Mr. Proctor remarked that it should be regarded rather as a companion than as a satellite of the earth, since it obeys the sun's attraction rather than the earth's. It should be considered as a planet largely perturbed by the earth—in fact, as the fifth member of the terrestrial family of planets circling within the zone of asteroids. After exhibiting a series of magnified photographs of the moon in various phases, as well as drawings by means of the lantern and electric lamp, Mr. Proctor proceeded to discuss the probable nature and succession of the processes by which the moon's surface attained its present condition; first touching on a theory which he had merely suggested in his book on the moon (and for which he had been criticised)—viz., that the moon's surface may have been to some degree affected by meteoric downfalls; since, according to Professor Newton's present estimated rate of downfall, one meteor per inch would have fallen on the moon's surface during the past ten million years. Nevertheless, he said, it would be unreasonable to maintain that the general features of the moon's surface arose from any such cause. After considering Mr. Nasmyth's explanations, and, in passing, eulogising the work on the moon recently issued by that gentleman and Mr. Carpenter, Mr. Proctor propounded the theory, partly suggested in his own treatise, according to which the leading features of the moon's surface are explained, by dividing her history into two portions—1, the earlier, when the crust contracted faster than the nucleus; 2, when the nucleus contracted faster than the crust. He then dealt with the question whether changes are still in progress, and arrived at the conclusion that, though this may be the case, no demonstrative evidence of the fact has yet been obtained. Mars and the Ring of Small Planets will form the subject of the lecture of to-day (Saturday).

RECENT STUDIES OF THE BRAIN—INSANITY.

Professor Rutherford, M.D., began his sixth and concluding lecture, on Tuesday last, with an account of the experiments of Fritsch, Hitzig, and Ferrier, who by exciting different parts of the cortex of the brain caused movements to be produced in different parts of the body. These movements, though sometimes very complicated, are of a definite and predictable character. Some parts of the cortex of the brain appear to be also concerned in sensation. No movement is produced by stimulating the quite anterior part of the cerebrum; but if this part of the brain be removed the animal becomes dull, and apparently loses intelligence; this part may therefore be intellectual. The cerebellum is a great motor ganglion for the muscles of the eyeball, and appears also to have something to do with the co-ordination of movements. Dr. Ferrier's experiments were performed on monkeys, dogs, cats, and other animals. No result followed stimulation when the animal was narcotised by chloroform. In this way it seems to be definitely shown that different parts of the hemispherical ganglion of the brain have different functions. This, the fundamental principle of phrenology, Dr. Rutherford considers to be sound; but the geography of the brain promulgated by its advocates, he said, is quite unwarranted, and the pretension to tell mental characteristics from the shape of the skull ridiculous. During mental activity the brain is abundantly supplied with blood, but far less so during sleep; and a full supply of nourishment to the brain is therefore essential to vigorous thought. Various parts of the brain may be influenced by thought, and the brain itself may be so affected as to lead to insanity. It cannot, therefore, be doubted that thought goes on within the brain, and that the brain is concerned with its production. After describing the effects of strychnia, opium, and chloroform upon brain-action, Dr. Rutherford said that insanity must be regarded as a result of brain disease; and he stated that Dr. Batty Luke, of Edinburgh, and himself, in thirty cases of chronic insanity had found alterations in the brain. It would, however, be absurd to expect any change of structure in the brain of a person temporarily insane through a small dose of alcohol. He considers that insanity will increase, in consequence of the greater and greater demand for exertion of the brain; but this tendency, he said, may be combated by the diffusion of a sound knowledge of the conditions for healthy brain action and of the indications of an abnormal state. Melancholia may result from indigestion and defective nourishment of the brain, from over-brainwork, and from other causes; and to remedy this strict attention must be given to the physiological conditions. Every sane individual possesses the power of aiding the evolution of the brain, which is the result of rigid obedience to physiological laws. Mental action is thus enabled, and the individual takes a higher place. It is, therefore, one of the greatest of our duties not only to avoid everything which tends to reverse this progress and degrade brain evolution, but also to cultivate everything that can aid it, so that there may be a continual elevation of the race. The evolution of the brain goes on long after the evolution of other parts of the individual has ceased; and man has this evolution to a large extent in his own hands. By his voluntary actions he can aid it or reverse it; hence a grave responsibility rests upon him. In concluding, Dr. Rutherford commented upon the immense difficulty of the physiology of the nervous system, the small extent of our knowledge respecting the mystery of the connection between body and soul, and the advantages which result from an acceptance of the truths of revelation, however incomprehensible to us in our present state.

Dr. W. H. Stone will, on Tuesday next, the 26th inst., begin a course of two lectures on the theory of Musical Instruments. The first lecture will be devoted to stringed instruments, and musical illustrations will be given by eminent artists from the works of Bach, Corelli, Mendelssohn, and other masters. At the next Friday evening meeting Dean Stanley will give a discourse on the Roman Catacombs, as illustrating the Belief of the Early Christians.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

THE DOWAGER VISCONTRESS OF MASSERENE AND FERRARD.
The Right Hon. Olivia Deane, Dowager Viscountess Masserene and Ferrard, died at Torquay, on the 10th inst., aged sixty-seven. Her Ladyship, who was fourth daughter of Henry Deane Grady, Esq., of Lodge, in the county of Limerick, and Stillorgan Castle, in the county of Dublin, and sister of Louisa Dorcas, Lady Muskerry, and of Amelia, Lady Edward Chichester; married, Aug. 1, 1835, John Skeffington, Viscount Masserene and Ferrard, K.P., and was left a widow, April 28, 1863, with four sons and four daughters. The eldest son is the present Viscount Masserene and Ferrard; and the eldest daughter, Dorcas Louisa, is the wife of Percy Fitzgerald, Esq., of Fane Valley, in the county of Louth, the popular author.

LADY ELIZABETH CORNWALLIS.

Lady Elizabeth Cornwallis, who died on the 11th inst., at her residence, 36, Charles-street, Berkeley-square, in her sixty-eighth year, was the youngest daughter and last surviving child of Charles, second Marquis Cornwallis, by Lady Louisa Gordon, his wife, fourth daughter and coheir of Alexander, fourth Duke of Gordon. Her Ladyship's sisters, coheirresses with her of the last Marquis Cornwallis, who was son of the distinguished General Lord Cornwallis, Viceroy of Ireland, were Jane, late Lady Braybrooke; Lady Louisa Cornwallis, who died in 1872; Jemima, late Countess of St. Germans; and Lady Mary Ross, who died in 1860. The historic title of Cornwallis is no longer extant. Lady Elizabeth's cousin, James, fifth Earl, died May 21, 1852, when his honours became extinct, and his large property devolved on his only surviving child, Julia, now Viscountess Holmesdale.

SIR ROGER THERRY.

Sir Roger Therry, formerly Judge of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, died, in Hanover-square, on the 17th inst. This able lawyer and estimable gentleman, the son of John Therry, Esq., of the county of Cork, by Jane, his wife, daughter of Bryan Keating, Esq., of Laginatown, in the county of Tipperary, was born in 1800, and called to the Bar at Gray's Inn in 1827. In 1829 he received the appointment of Commissioner of the Court of Requests for New South Wales, and proceeded to that colony, where he held for several years, until his final retirement from the Bench, in 1859, a very distinguished position. He was successively Attorney-General, Resident Judge at Port Phillip, and Judge of the Supreme Court. He married, in 1827, Anne, daughter of P. Corley, Esq., of Clones, in the county of Monaghan, and leaves issue. Sir Roger was knighted, in 1869, in consideration of his eminent public services in Australia.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

Letters of administration limited to trust property of the Right Hon. Mary Anne Disraeli, Viscountess Beaconsfield, were granted on the 8th inst., with the consent of her husband, the Right Hon. Benjamin Disraeli, to Mrs. Anne Price Clark and Mrs. Catherine Price Jackson.

Letters of administration of the personal estate and effects of the Right Hon. Edward Thomas Baron Thurlow, late of Ashfield, Suffolk, who died on the 22nd ult., at No. 63, St. James's-street, intestate, a bachelor, were granted on the 12th inst., to Thomas John Hovell, the present Lord Thurlow, the brother of the deceased, and only next of kin, the personalty being sworn under £5000.

The will, dated Nov. 12, 1868, of Sir William Henry Bodkin, formerly Assistant Judge at the Middlesex Sessions and Recorder of Dover, late of West Hill, Highgate, who died on March 26 last, was proved, on the 11th inst., by William Peter Bodkin, the son, and Harry Bodkin Poland, the nephew, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £40,000. The testator bequeaths £50 to the Lamb and Flag Ragged School, Clerkenwell; and he directs his executors to pay for the term of three years the sums for which he was, at the time of his decease, an annual contributor to any charitable institution. After providing for his wife and daughter and giving legacies to Mr. Poland and his servants, he gives the residue to his said son.

The will, dated Dec. 5 last, of Lieutenant-Colonel John Dixon, late of No. 18, Seymour-street, Portman-square, who died on the 5th ult., at No. 42, Albany-street, Regent's Park, was proved on the 7th inst. by Charles Richard Littledale and James Murray, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator has left to his widow, Mrs. Eliza Dixon, his household furniture and effects, a pecuniary legacy of £10,000, and an annuity of £1500; to his executors £500 each; to Mr. James Murray an additional sum of £5000; to William O'Brien an annuity of £100; to Charles Pearce the income of £5000; and there are various other legacies.

The will, with three codicils (dated, respectively, Oct. 12 and 13, 1866; June 2, 1868; and Sept. 12, 1870), of Mrs. Anna Maria Broadbelt Napleton Stallard Penoyre, late of The Moor, Clifford, Herefordshire, who died on Feb. 21 last, was proved on the 7th inst. by Thomas James Brown, the Rev. Charles Nutt, and Benjamin Haigh Allen, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £70,000. Among the legacies may be mentioned £15,000 to her cousin, Thomas James Brown; £3000 to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners as an endowment for Holy Trinity Church, Hardwick, Herefordshire; and £2640 Two-and-a-Half per Cent Bank Annuities, £50 per annum of the interest to be paid to the organist of the same church, and the remainder to purchase sacramental wine, coals, candles, and other necessaries. The rest of testatrix's property, including the Moor estate and all the realty, is settled upon the said Thomas James Brown for life, and after his decease to William Francis Raymond for life, with remainder to Ann Eliza Baker.

In the action of the East and West Junction Company against the Great Western Railway Company on a question of through rates the Commissioners have pronounced in favour of the direct route by Fenny Compton.

The Marquis of Ailesbury presided, last Saturday, at the annual meeting of the subscribers to the Savernake Cottage Hospital, held at the Guildhall, Marlborough. This hospital, which was one of the first institutions of its kind, stands in one of the most healthy parts of Savernake Forest. It was founded a few years ago through the munificence of the Marquis and Marchioness of Ailesbury and other members of the Bruce family. The institution receives patients from a large number of parishes in Wilts and Berks, and its existence is a great boon to the poor throughout a wide agricultural district. The report of the committee, read by the honorary secretary, congratulated the subscribers upon the condition of the funds.

CHESS.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

*All communications relating to this department of the Paper should be addressed "To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

HART MARDEN and Others.—Be good enough to address your letters on Chess according to the directions on the top of this column.
Dr. OSMUND.—They shall be reported on in a few days.
G. G. F.—Your name was not required for publication. Please to send another copy of the problem in question. The former was, no doubt, destroyed.
W. V. G. D., JOHN BLOW, G. H. R.—Dr Gold's Problem, No. 1575, is perfectly correct, and the moves you suggest are no impediment to the mate in three moves. You should examine positions more carefully before writing.

H. SCHLESINGER, Bahia.—The examinee pronounces No. 1 to be correct, but too easy; and No. 2 defective, as it admits of a second so union, beginning with 1. Q to Q 2nd.

JAMES S. of South Shields.—Your problem is pleasing and apparently sound, but it is not sufficiently difficult for publication.

COLONEL AND MISS JANE D'AMAYDE.—Your solution of Problem No. 1575, which reached us too late for insertion in the list of solvers, is the true one.

G. F., Alexandria.—I shall have pleasure in examining your promised problems.

CHESS IN LONDON.

A few days since Mr. BIRD performed the feat of playing twenty games simultaneously against various members of the City Chess Club. His opponents were not very powerful, which is to be regretted for his sake; but he managed, nevertheless, to afford some good sport, finishing off his first game, a little Muzio gambit, which follows, in brilliant style. The result of the contest was that Mr. B. won fifteen games, lost two, while the remainder were left unfinished for want of time. (Muzio Gambit.)

The utility of this move is not apparent. Black should rather have brought their Q's pieces into action.

22. This is worse than useless. Their only chance of averting defeat was by taking the Pawn with the other Rook.

CHESS INTELLIGENCE.

A tournament began more than a year ago at the City of London Chess Club, which comprised among the combatants some of the strongest second-class players of that club, has just been concluded. The first prize was won by Mr. Fenton, the second by Dr. Ballard, and the third by Mr. Vyse. Upon a future occasion of the same kind the officials of the club will do well to adopt some rule for the purpose of hastening proceedings a little, seeing that the interest in contests of this description is apt to evaporate after the first few months.

MATCH BETWEEN THE BIRMINGHAM AND CHELTENHAM CHESS CLUBS.—Ten selected members of each of these clubs met by appointment at the Midland Hotel, Birmingham, a few days since, and played a match, which excited much interest. The result was as follows:

SCIENTIFIC RESULTS OF THE MONTH.

At length we have an acknowledgment of the unsatisfactory condition of our ironclad fleet from no less an authority than the First Lord of the Admiralty; and, although he has been accused of being an alarmist for the purpose of discrediting his political predecessors, his objections continue unanswered. Certainly, an expenditure of ten millions a year is adequate for the production and maintenance of a first-class fleet; and everyone must concur in the justice of Mr. Brassey's remarks that, with our great mercantile marine from which to recruit our men, and with unapproached ship-building power, we have a potentiality of naval strength which no other country, and probably no coalition of States, could hope to equal. But this very circumstance renders the palpable deficiencies of our ironclad fleet all the more inexcusable, and the dissatisfaction of John Bull that with so large an expenditure and with such unrivalled advantages he has not a single good ship to his back all the more just. We all know that the purpose of armour upon ships is to keep out shot, and its efficiency or otherwise depends upon its thickness or resisting power relatively with the penetrating power of the best guns to which it can be opposed. Armour so thin that it can be riddled with shot is worse than no armour at all, simply because you are not only equally exposed to the original shot, but also to the shower of splinters it carries before it. Now, the fact is incontrovertible that there is not a single vessel in our ironclad fleet which can resist penetration by shot from the best existing gun; while in by far the greater number of cases the armour is so thin that it may be pierced by shells and shot from guns of a very moderate size. It is true that other nations are in much the same predicament as ourselves. But it is also true that any nation now producing even one ironclad vessel of a really efficient character would be able to paralyse our whole naval power, as the hostile vessel, being herself impenetrable, having a superior speed, and carrying guns which would pierce our thickest armour, could not herself be captured, and might sink our vessels in detail. This is a danger which we should now foresee and provide against—not by increasing our naval expenditure, but by diverting it into a more useful channel. The armourclads we now produce should not be such as will be obsolete even before they are launched, but should be vessels which will have a margin of safety for at least a few years of active service. If Mr. Ward Hunt wishes to signalise his naval administration by superior efficiency without greater cost, this is the grand object to which he must devote his energies. Heretofore we have had many weak vessels. Instead of this costly feebleness we now want economical strength.

A new process has been patented for obtaining dyes from sawdust. The sawdust is heated with caustic soda, and flowers of sulphur. A sulphide of sodium is thus produced, which, reacting on the organic matter, dehydrogenates it with the evolution of sulphuretted hydrogen. The resulting material is a dye stuff, said to have a strong affinity for organic fibres; and, by varying the proportion of the materials, different tints are produced.

A 30-ton steam-hammer has been started in Woolwich Arsenal during the past month; but the real weight of the hammer, including the piston and connections, is about 40 tons. The stroke is 15 ft. 3 in., but as the piston is pressed down by the steam, the blow of the hammer is as forcible as if the weight fell 80 ft. by gravity alone. The height of the hammer is 45 ft.; weight of metal above ground, 500 tons; weight of metal below ground in foundations, 665 tons; cost, about £50,000. The force with which a hammer is capable of striking varies with the amount of compression which the material forged suffers at each stroke, being greatest where the compression is least. We do not think that steam-hammers are such efficient forging instruments as hydraulic squeezers, as the shock is too sudden to give time for the thorough expulsion of the scoriae. The hammers, too, involving as they do such heavy foundations, are more expensive. This hammer has been erected mainly for welding the coils of the new 80-ton guns. But with the now ascertained success of the Whitworth process for casting wrought-iron guns under pressure, the erection of such a costly plant as this hammer, with its cranes, furnaces, &c., appears to be of doubtful wisdom, even if the efficacy of hydraulic squeezing or forging presses had still been unascertained.

The Vesuvius, the first torpedo-ship of the British Navy, was launched at Pembroke at the end of last month. Her chief dimensions are as follow:—Length, 90 ft.; breadth, 22 ft.; depth of hold, 11 ft. 4 in.; displacement, 241 tons; power, 360 indicated. The deck will be only 3 ft. above water. The torpedo is to be projected from a pneumatic tube 2 ft. 4 in. diameter, situated below water. The torpedo will be propelled at a speed of eight miles an hour by a screw driven by small engines worked by compressed air, and the intention is to attack armour-clad vessels below the armour. The project is judicious, and, so far, has been well carried out, though probably it is not yet in its ultimate form. Future ironclads must take precaution against this mode of attack.

During the past month a very valuable paper, by Dr. Wright, was read before the chemical section of the Society of Arts, "On Pyrites as a Source of Sulphur, Iron, and Copper." Dr. Frankland, who was in the chair, indorsed a remark of Liebig to the effect that the measure of a nation's civilisation and prosperity might be taken in the terms of the sulphuric acid it manufactured. He added that iron pyrites was the key to sulphuric acid, so that ultimately the daily consumption of pyrites may be taken as an index of the national prosperity. The principal ingredients of pyrites are iron and sulphur. Yellow iron pyrites consists of about 47 iron and 53 sulphur. Marcasite, or white iron pyrites, has the same composition, and magnetic iron pyrites, or pyrrhotin, consists of about 60 iron and 40 sulphur. Some of the pyrites, however, also contain copper; and latterly a most important industry has grown up in the utilisation of the cupreous pyrites of Tharsis and Huelva, in Spain, and of Wicklow, in Ireland. The pyrites is first burnt in a kiln to expel the sulphur, which is utilised in the production of vitriol or otherwise. As much salt is then added as represents four times the copper present, and the whole is passed through crushing-machines and is thoroughly mixed. The mixture is next subjected to a dull red heat for six hours in a suitable furnace, when most of the copper will have been converted into compounds soluble in water, while the remainder will be soluble in dilute hydrochloric acid. The material is then placed in tanks of tarred wood or stone, and lixiviated with hot water, usually heated by the injection of steam. The insoluble portion is again lixiviated with dilute acid, and the aqueous and acid solutions are treated separately. Scrap iron is then placed in tanks into which the heated solutions are allowed to run, and the copper is deposited in the shape of a copper mud, which is melted and refined in the usual way. The insoluble iron residuum, called "Blue Billy," is utilised at ironworks, sometimes in the blast-furnace, but more commonly in making a bottom or setting for puddling furnaces. The Tharsis Company established at Glasgow to carry out this process at different seaports has been very successful, and has paid large dividends.

FLORILINE

For the TEETH and BREATH.

Is the best liquid dentifrice in the world; it thoroughly cleanses partially decayed teeth from all parasites or living "animalcules," leaving them perfectly white, imparting a delightful fragrance to the breath. Price 5s. 6d. per bottle. The Fragrant Floriline removes instantly all odours arising from a foul stomach or tobacco smoke.

For children and adults whose teeth show marks of decay its advantages are paramount. The "Floriline" should be thoroughly brushed into all the cavities; no one need fear using it too often or too much at a time. Among the ingredients being soda, honey, spirits of wine, borax, and extracts from sweet herbs and plants, it forms not only the very best dentifrice for cleansing and discovered, but one that is perfectly delicious to the taste and as harmless as sugar. The taste is so pleasing that, instead of taking up the toothbrush with dislike, as is often the case, children will on no account only to use the "Floriline" regularly each morning it only left to their own choice. Children cannot be taught the use of the toothbrush too young; early neglect invariably produces premature decay of the teeth. "Floriline" is prepared only by HENRY G. GALLUP, 488, Oxford-street, London; and sold by all Chemists and Perfumers throughout the world at 5s. 6d. per bottle.

FLORILINE For the TEETH and BREATH.

Would you preserve your pretty teeth
In all their beauty now
And keep them as they are,
And white as Alpine snow?
If so, use "Gallup's Dentifrice."
It is the Toilet Queen!
And ladies all with one consent
Use "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

What gives to beauty its great charm,
And its main feature, too?
Why, nearly all the perfect shape,
And every line in hue,
And what preserves them in that state,
And keeps them pure and clean?
Why, "Gallup's Fragrant Floriline,"
The "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

Discoloration it arrests,
And animalcules too;
It makes the teeth a snowy white,
The gums a rosy hue;
The breath it makes both fresh and sweet,
The mouth so nice and clean;
And hence the wondrous great
Of "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

FLORILINE

For the TEETH and BREATH.

It may or may not be generally known that microscopic examinations have proved that animal or vegetable parasites gather, unobserved by the naked eye, upon the teeth and gums of all least nice persons in every land; any individual may easily satisfy himself in this matter by placing a powerful microscope over a partially decayed tooth, when the living animalcules will be found to resemble a partially-decayed cheese more than anything else we can compare it to. We may also state that the FRAGRANT FLORILINE is the only remedy yet discovered which perfectly frees the teeth and gums from these parasites without the slightest injury to the teeth or the most tender gums.

Read this.—From the "Weekly Times," March 24, 1871:—"There are so many tooth articles which obtain all their celebrity from being constantly and extensively advertised, that it makes it necessary when anything new and good is introduced to the public that special attention should be called to it. The most delightful and effective toilet article for cleansing and beautifying the teeth that we have in long experience ever used is the new Fragrant Floriline. It is quite a pleasure to use it, and its properties of imparting a fragrance to the breath and giving a pearly whiteness to the teeth make it still more valuable. Of all the numerous nostrums for cleaning the teeth which from time to time have been fashionable and popular, nothing to be compared with the Floriline has hitherto been produced, whether considered as a beautifier or a valuable cleanser and preserver of the teeth and gums."

The Fragrant Floriline is put up in elegant toilet cases, and sold by all Perfumers and Dealers in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 5s. 6d. per bottle.

FLORILINE For the TEETH and BREATH.

Its constant use prevents the Teeth
From tarnish or decay;
All animalcules, too, it drives
Permanently away.
It cleanses every tainted place,
However long it's been,
And purifies the human mouth,
Does "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

This pure and mettlesome Dentifrice
Surpasses all the rest;
It is acknowledged on all hands
As infinitely best;
And from the choicest, sweetest Flowers,
In distant lands now come,
They give a most delicious charm
To "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

One trial of this liquid gem
Will prove its wondrous powers;
The mouth will feel as fresh and sweet
As spring's delightful showers.
It beautifies the teeth at once,
Discoloured though they've been;
For nothing answers half so well
As "FRAGRANT FLORILINE."

FLORILINE

For the TEETH and BREATH.

"Floriline"—The most eminent Chemists of the day admit that Floriline will prove the most useful and fragrant breath where nothing else will. While natural tooth preparations injure the enamel of the teeth, this wonderful vegetable liquid preserves and beautifies them. Symptoms of decay and all discolorations of every sort, disappear like magic; and by its delightful use the mouth becomes as fragrant and sweet as a font of flowers; so that, in fact, when it has once been used, either by the young or the old, they will never discontinue it, but, as the "Christian World" truly says, "Those who once begin to use it will certainly never willingly give it up."

Another great authority says:—"The Floriline is a vegetable dentifrice of the purest quality; it is perfectly harmless in its use—beneficial, but not injuring. It imparts to the teeth a pearly and most beautiful whiteness, gives a delightful fragrance and sweetness to the breath, and no discovery having the same purpose in view has hitherto approached it in interest or success."

From the "Young Ladies Journal":—"An agreeable dentifrice is always a luxury. As one of the most agreeable may be reckoned Floriline. It cleanses the teeth and imparts a pleasant odour to the breath. It has been analysed by several eminent chemists of chemistry, and they concur in their testimony to its usefulness. We are frequently asked to recommend a dentifrice to our readers; therefore we cannot do better than advise them to try the Fragrant Floriline."

Put up in elegant toilet cases, and sold by all Perfumers and Dealers in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 5s. 6d. per bottle.

FLORILINE For the TEETH and BREATH.

Preservation of nature's charms,
It never fails to please;
It makes the mouth as fresh and sweet
As summer's balmy breeze;
It makes the teeth as white as pearls,
In all their beauty seen;
And thus it is that all apply
The "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

The breath it makes as sweet as flowers
Just washed in morning's dew;
The gums it cleanses pure and clean,
Their tint it does renew,
It makes the mouth a font of sweets,
In every household seen;
And all admire the magic power
Of "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

Servations of a beautiful kind,
And animalcules too;
All fly before its potent power—
It cleanses through and through.
This Dentifrice of perfect worth
In every household seen;
And why? Because it places all
The "FRAGRANT FLORILINE!"

FLORILINE

For the TEETH and BREATH.

The "Christian World" of March 17, 1871, says, with respect to Floriline:—"Floriline bids fair to become a household word in England, and one of the most efficacious and agreeable preparations for the teeth. Those who once begin to use it will certainly never willingly give it up."

Mr. Smith, the celebrated dentist, 14, York-place, Portman-square, London, writes as follows:—"April 13, 1871.—I have tried your Floriline, and find it not only a great assistance in my practice in cleansing the teeth and sweetening the breath, but it gives entire satisfaction. I recommend it to all my patients, and I believe hundreds that would never visit a dentist would be much benefited by the use of your Floriline."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, MAY 30, 1874.

The Whitson holidays for the current year have passed away. Virtually they may be said to have begun on Saturday about noon, and to have come to an end on Wednesday about midnight. Not that more than a minority—perhaps a comparatively small minority—of the English people were able to appropriate to their relaxation and pleasure the whole of that interval, although unquestionably a large number realised the privilege; and a most enjoyable privilege it must have been, with one exception, which we shall presently note. The weather smiled upon the holiday-makers. For the most part it has been dry, genial, summery, sunshiny, just such as excursionists into the country might have chosen if the choice had been left to them. There was, however, as we have said, an exception. It lasted but a few hours, but in the memories of countless multitudes it left a black mark which will not soon be effaced. Those few hours fell on Whit Monday, the Bank Holiday—the holiday of holidays—a day to which thousands upon thousands of metropolitan folk (not to mention those of the provinces) look forward with yearning anticipation for many weeks beforehand, and with the view of making the best of which they abridge the supply of their customary wants that they may possess the wherewithal to do the honours of the occasion. Whit Monday dawned upon London and its neighbourhood in beautiful promise. The two preceding days had been all that could be desired, and if on Monday morning a lingering haze tempered the brightness of the sun, it only confirmed the general expectation that as the hours wore on the atmosphere would be clear. And to some extent the expectation was fulfilled, so that in the early forenoon the poetically disposed might have quoted to each other the lines of Byron—

Lightly and brightly breaks away
The morning from her kerchief grey,
As the noon will look on a sultry day.

Alas! weather-wise experience was in this instance sadly at fault. The glistening augury turned out to be but a trick of the climate; it was but "a delusion, a mockery, and a snare." It tempted people to forego all precautions against a possible change. They donned their smartest clothes. They wore without anxiety their most lustrous silks and ribbons. They left their umbrellas at home—the only proper place, we once heard a stage-coachman say, in which umbrellas should be left, because there they are safe and harmless. And so, fresh, joyous, and eagerly expectant, myriads upon myriads of the inhabitants of that vast area of brick and mortar which we regard as the Emporium of the World, swarmed from all its outlets, by road, by rail, by river, into "the open," to settle down, as preference might decide, upon one or other of those rural spots dedicated to gaiety, relaxation, and refreshment. A sudden change came o'er the spirit of the scene. The noontide belied the morning. Blackness very speedily overspread the firmament. There was a hush of the elements, ominous of the turbulence that quickly followed it. Vivid lightning, succeeded by stupendous bursts of thunder, and accompanied by a tropical down-pour of rain, scared the pleasure-seekers in the very heart of their holiday, drove them helter-skelter to take refuge where best they could from the storm, spoiled their finery, put an end to their games, damped their jokes, and, in too many instances, sent them homeward dripping to the skin. Here and there still more melancholy results ensued. But about six o'clock the rain held up, and there were not a few who did their very best to compensate themselves during the remaining hours of the day for the bitter disappointment which had robbed them of all possibility of enjoying its best hours.

Notwithstanding this contretemps, which, in the time at which and the neighbourhood in which it occurred, was as unlucky as it could well be, the industry of the people has abundant reason to be grateful to Sir John Lubbock for the boon which he persuaded Parliament to extend to it. Four holidays in the course of the year, recognised and sanctioned by law, and all but universally adopted, in England at least, can hardly be looked upon as an excess of relaxation to the bulk of our labouring classes. In the course of time, however, they will probably be found sufficient largely and beneficially to modify the taste, perhaps even to mollify the manners, of the millions who earn their subsistence by the work of their hands. It is no paradox to say that idleness has its triumphs, as labour has—interpreting the term "idleness," however, as signifying abstinence from work. The time is not far back, and will live in the memory of the present generation, when few seemed to regard amusement as one of the necessities of life. Save for the one day in seven, and for Good Friday and Christmas Day, it did not seem to occur to even thoughtful people that an otherwise unbroken continuity of employment, whether physical or intellectual, was a trespass upon the law of Nature, which could not be habitually ventured upon with impunity. Opinion has undergone a very salutary change with regard to this matter—a change, however, which it were well not to press beyond rational bounds. General observation, corroborated by police reports, recognises already, or at any rate fancies, that since greater facilities for recreation have been provided for the poor there has been an appreciable improvement in the temper and mode of the people in extracting from them a brief enjoyment. No doubt holidays continue to be abused by too large a proportion of the industrial classes, in excess of sensual gratification, but to a majority, it may be hoped—a majority which every year increases—a holiday now means an excursion into the country, a trip with wives and little ones, or perhaps with neighbours, into the green fields, or open heaths, or forest remnants, that surround the metropolis. Custom and habit are beginning to confirm a relish for the higher and more innocent pleasures which fresh air and the charms of natural scenery are sure after awhile to excite. At any rate, the tendency is from lower to higher, from what is grovelling and debasing to what is calculated to elevate and refine the mind. We look back upon the Whitsun holidays of this year (barring the thunderstorm of Monday last) with a sense of gratitude; and we derive from the mode in which they were commonly spent fresh sustenance for hope. May the "Bank Holiday" of autumn next out-shine, in a literal as well as a moral sense, that of Monday last!

We have confined our observations to the social aspects of the topic before us. We see no need for permitting political questions to thrust themselves into our consideration of the subject before us. They have ordinarily the lion's share of public attention and excitement; and it is not often that they ask anybody's leave to push themselves into notice. This year, however, the Whitsuntide season exhibits to our countrymen nothing very tempting in the way of political movement. At home, we have the quietude of repose, which it was said—and said, perhaps, justly—the country bargained for at the last general election. Abroad, nothing has happened during the week calculated to arrest thought or to awaken anxiety. Our patrician legislators and our Parliamentary representatives have been able to enjoy, we trust, an untroubled recess. Nature and art have opened their precious things to the inspection of those who take delight in them. The legislators of the land have no very heavy engagements in prospect, and to them Whitsun week, however welcome, will not, we apprehend, have brought that timely relief from wearisome toil which made it so pleasant in years gone by. Perhaps it will not be considered out of place if we express a wish that Whitsuntide next year may be able to look back upon a larger amount of public work achieved, as the surest enhancement of the recreation it will bring with it.

THE COURT.

The Queen attained her fifty-fifth year on Whit Sunday, when her Majesty received the joyful intelligence of the birth of her twenty-second grandchild, Princess Louise of Hesse-Darmstadt (Princess Alice of England) having given birth to a daughter the same day. Both the Princess and the infant are doing well.

The Queen's birthday was also signalised by the elevation of Prince Arthur to the Peerage, under the titles of Earl of Sussex and Duke of Connaught and Strathearn.

The Crathie choir serenaded her Majesty on Monday morning at Balmoral, and the Queen gave a ball on Wednesday, at the castle, to the tenantry and others on the Royal estates in the Highlands, in celebration of her birthday. The customary honours on this auspicious event were duly observed in the United Kingdom.

The formal celebration is appointed for to-day (Saturday), when the trooping of the colours at the Horse Guards, the grand military displays at the chief military stations, and various parades and inspections of volunteers, the firing of salutes, the Ministerial banquets, and the illuminations in the metropolis usual on the occasion will take place.

The Queen, Princess Beatrice, and Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales attended Divine service, performed at the castle on Whit Sunday by the Rev. A. Campbell, of Crathie. Viscount Torrington dined with her Majesty, he having just returned from Flushing, whither he had accompanied the Emperor of Russia.

The Queen has taken her usual daily out-of-door exercise, and has visited various dependants upon the Royal demesne, although rain has fallen heavily on Deeside.

The death of M. Van de Weyer, last Saturday, has caused her Majesty profound grief. He had been for many years one of the Queen's earnest and most valued friends.

The Queen has appointed Captain Sir John Edmund Commerell, R.N., K.C.B., to be one of the Grooms in Waiting in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of Colonel Lord James C. P. Murray, resigned.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales, as Commodore of the Royal Thames Yacht Club, went to Gravesend on Whit Monday, where he embarked on Lord Alfred Paget's steam-yacht Cecil, and witnessed the cutter-match, which was sailed between Gravesend and the Nore. His Royal Highness, with the Princess, was present, on Wednesday, at a cricket-match played between the Household Brigade and the Sevenoaks Vine Club, at Prince's Ground. Their Royal Highnesses have been also present at a garden party given by Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, at Argyll Lodge, Campden-hill; and at a dance given by Lady Alfred Paget. The Prince and Princess have dined with the Duke and Duchess of Manchester; and have been to the Royal Italian Opera, Covent Garden, and the Princess's Theatre. His Royal Highness has also dined with Lord Carlisle and Countess Frances Waldegrave.

The Prince, as a Master of the Bench, will dine in the hall of the Middle Temple, on "Grand Day," June 11.

The Hon. Mrs. Coke has succeeded the Hon. Mrs. Stonor as Lady in Waiting to the Princess.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh were present at a banquet and concert given by the Duke and Duchess of Westminster on Tuesday at Grosvenor House; and also at the dinner and reception given on Saturday by the Secretary of State for India and the Marchioness of Salisbury. The Duke and Duchess went to Her Majesty's Opera on Monday evening.

Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein attained her twenty-eighth year on Monday last.

Princess Stourdza has arrived at the Alexandra Hotel from Paris.

Prince Troubetskoy has left the Alexandra Hotel for Paris.

Entertainments have been given by the Turkish Ambassador, the German Ambassador, the French Ambassador and Ambassadors, the Duke of Rutland, the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, the Earl and Countess of Lovelace, and Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton.

The marriage of Mlle. Kalouka Musurus, the third daughter of his Excellency Musurus Pasha, the Turkish Ambassador, with Prince Gregoire Bassaraba de Brancovan was solemnised on Thursday morning, at the Turkish Embassy in Bryanston-square, by the Rev. Mr. Popoff, the chaplain of the Russian chapel in Welbeck-street, according to the rites of the Greek Church. There was a large and aristocratic assemblage to witness the ceremony, and the diplomatic circle was represented by many Ambassadors and secretaries of Legations.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Mansion House fund for the relief of the sufferers by the famine in Bengal now amounts to more than £110,000.

Captain W. H. R. Skey, of the 38th Regiment, has been appointed macebearer to the Corporation of London.

The Bank directors, at their weekly meeting on Thursday, reduced the rate of discount from 4 to 3½ per cent.

The umbrella taken at Coomassie was received from Windsor Castle, on Monday, at the South Kensington Museum, and is now exhibited there by command of her Majesty.

Earl Granville has accepted the presidency of the City Liberal Club. The list of members already elected—about 700 in number—includes a great many influential names.

The annual banquet at the Mansion House to her Majesty's Judges has been fixed for June 10, and that to the Archbishops and Bishops for the 17th.

The annual meeting of the Royal Dramatic College was held, on Wednesday, at the Adelphi Theatre—Mr. B. Webster in the chair. The report showed a balance at the bankers of £900.

The festival of the London Orphan Asylum, Watford, which was to have been held on Thursday, under the presidency of the Duke of Edinburgh, has been unavoidably postponed.

There is now on view at Messrs. F. and C. Oaler's, 45, Oxford-street, a remarkable crystal glass fountain which is about to be sent to India for the Maharajah of Puttiala, by whom it has been purchased.

At the ninth annual meeting of the supporters of the Alexandra Orphanage for Infants the year's receipts were reported to amount to nearly £4000. The expenditure had been £3674, leaving a considerable balance to carry forward.

The annual distribution of prizes at St. Mary's Hospital Medical School took place, on Wednesday afternoon, before a crowded audience. The prizes were delivered by Professor Rolleston, M.D., who took occasion to make a few remarks respecting the present mode of teaching the medical profession.

A dinner was given, on Wednesday evening, at Willis's Rooms, to Commander Sir J. Glover, G.C.M.G., by the commissioned officers of the Royal Navy and Marines, in celebration of his recent achievements in the campaign against the King of Ashantee. Vice-Admiral Sir H. Yelverton presided.

At a meeting of the Royal Colonial Institute held on Tuesday evening, under the presidency of the Duke of Manchester, Mr. T. Young read a paper on "New Zealand—Past, Present, and Future," in which the resources and productions of the colony were detailed.

The first meet for the season of the Four-in-Hand Club took place, on Wednesday, at the Magazine, in Hyde Park. There were twenty-three teams in all. The Duke of Beaufort, the president of the club, led off the procession. A large company was present, both in carriages and on foot.

The total number of paupers in receipt of relief in London during the third week of May was 96,775, against 104,532 in the corresponding week of last year. Of these, 62,618 were relieved out of doors and 34,175 in the workhouses. The vagrants relieved in the metropolis on the last day of the week numbered 640—namely, 438 men, 164 women, and 38 children.

The sixty-third anniversary festival in aid of the funds of the Yorkshire Society was celebrated, on Thursday week, at Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of Lord Houghton. The object of the institution is to clothe and educate boys of Yorkshire extraction whose parents have been reduced by misfortune. The subscriptions amounted to about £400.

Captain Maude, R.N., took the chair at the Shipwrecked Mariners' Benevolent Society's thirty-fifth annual meeting, yesterday week, in place of the Duke of Marlborough. Various resolutions were moved by the Earl of Aberdeen, Lord E. Lennox, Admirals Duncombe, Buckle, and Sir William Hall, and others, and were carried unanimously.

Mr. Peek's gift of £500 for the encouragement of religious teaching has occupied another sitting of the London School Board. A series of amendments were divided upon, and successively rejected; others lapsed through the absence of the movers. At the final division the motion for accepting the gift was carried by twenty votes against five.

The annual dinner of the friends and supporters of the Newspaper Press Fund (established to administer assistance to professional journalists, their widows, and orphans, in circumstances of distress and adversity) will take place at Willis's Rooms to-day (Saturday)—the Duke of Somerset, K.G., in the chair. Several distinguished singers have promised to take part in the concert, presided over by Sir Julius Benedict.

On the question of temperance legislation Mr. John Bright spoke his views at the yearly meeting, yesterday week, of the Society of Friends. The right hon. gentleman candidly avowed his difference of opinion from many Friends on this important subject, and declared a belief that if such laws were passed as they desired London would be in a state of revolt. At the same time, he advocated a dissemination of abstinence principles, as a benefit the advantage of which no words could describe.

Under the presidency of the Duke of Westminster a public meeting was held, last week, at the house of the Society of Arts, in the Adelphi, in aid of the Training School for Cookery at South Kensington. The Hon. Leveson-Gower, M.P., Lord Barrington, Earl Granville, Mr. Mundella, M.P., Mr. Thomas Hughes, Q.C., and others having spoken very dependently of English cooking, resolutions were passed with a view to bringing about a national improvement in this important matter.

The metropolitan clergy and other ministers of religion have again come forward to offer their ready co-operation in the Hospital Sunday Fund movement. The day fixed for the collection is June 14. The Lord Mayor receives contributions towards this fund, and all those interested in the movement, but unable to make their donations on the day, are requested to send their subscriptions to the Mansion House, addressed to Mr. Henry N. Custance, the secretary to the fund, who will furnish every information on the subject.

The foundation-stone of the Church of St. Mary, Edinburgh, was laid on Thursday week, with religious ceremonies, by the Duke of Buccleuch, supported by a number of noblemen, prelates, and clergymen. St. Mary's Cathedral, which is to be raised from the funds left by the late Misses Walker, of Coates and Drumsleugh, is to be built from designs by Sir Gilbert Scott, in the Early Pointed style of architecture, at a cost, exclusive of the western towers, chapter-house, organ, bells, and other fittings, of £87,830.

KERGUELEN LAND.

The four years' service of H.M.S. Challenger, with a party of scientific men, employed by her Majesty's Government in exploring the depths of the great southern oceans, their currents, tides, and temperature, their atmospheric conditions, and their vegetation and animal life, is still watched by us with great interest. Kerguelen Land, a lonely group of islands between the Indian and the Antarctic Oceans, equally distant from the southernmost points of Africa and Australia, is the subject of our illustrations. A correspondent on board the Challenger writes as follows:—

"We arrived at Kerguelen (lat. 49 S., long. 70 E.) on Jan. 7, and remained more than three weeks, exploring its shores and inlets, to ascertain the position where the finest weather may be expected, at which to establish an observatory for the astronomers to observe the transit of Venus in December next. As we could have obtained observations on twelve days out of the twenty-five of our stay, the astronomers will have a reasonable chance of fulfilling their mission, and, were it not for the long sea voyage, of spending a very pleasant time. The weather here now, in summer, may be compared with that of an English autumn, and the winds with those of an English winter.

"We found three American schooners and a barque fishing for whales and hunting sea-elephants on the coasts of this and the neighbouring Heard Islands. The only published accounts of Kerguelen are contained in Cook's and Ross's voyages; and the chart is vague, except in the delineation of the east side of the island, which is much cut up by fjords, forming a chain of magnificent harbours. From the information gleaned by the Challenger, it appears that the west coast is very similar. About the centre of the island the bays extend so deeply into the interior from the south and west coasts that it is customary to haul boats across the dividing isthmus. We experienced the finest weather in the neighbourhood of Royal Sound, the deepest bay in the south coast. Its scenery is magnificent and lovely; with a labyrinth of innumerable islets interspersed over upwards of twenty miles of nearly land-locked waters. They are sheltered on the south by the Wyville Thomson range, a fine volcanic peak 3160 ft. high, rising as an enormous cone in the midst of a surrounding circle of sugar-loaf peaks, each dwarfed only by the parent mountain; on the west by Mount Tizard and the towering snow-clad peak of Mount Ross, rising 6200 ft. in one continuous slope from the sea, giving birth to numerous glaciers in its lower valleys; and on the north by the Crozier range, 3250 ft. high. This was well and appropriately named by Cook the Royal Sound. He was always happy in his nomenclature of newly-discovered land, and probably, when he called it 'Royal,' as being situated between the capes he named after the King and the Prince of Wales, he saw the fitness of the name in another sense.

"The island is ninety miles long by sixty broad—about the size of Corsica or Wales—and is situated in about the same corresponding latitude as the latter, the one in the northern, the other in the southern hemisphere. It certainly does not enjoy the same temperature; as, although we were there in the middle of summer, the thermometer seldom registered above 42 deg., which was sufficiently cold to be felt very keenly on the hill sides.

"Great numbers of ducks were shot, but no animals were seen. The sealers have killed everything off but the penguin and sea birds. If rabbits were once introduced they would thrive well on the cabbage plant, which grows wild all over the island. Three goats were landed in hopes of introducing them. Dr. Hooker, who visited the island with Ross in 1839, made such a perfect botanical collection that we have been unable to add much to it.

"The island was first called 'the Island of Desolation,' and is known by that name to the sealers. But so far as we were concerned it was very inappropriate. During our short stay we enjoyed ourselves greatly. There was a great sameness in the general appearance of the land; but the luxuriant green carpet of moss and cabbage plant, extending some 500 ft. up the hill sides, through which numerous cascades descending from the small sheltered patches of snow left from the winter on the rocky hill-tops force their way, forms a unique landscape.

"On our second attempt, having been at first driven back by a westerly gale, we succeeded in rounding Cape George, the southernmost point seen by Cook, and fixing the south cape of the island, which has been named Cape Challenger."

THE VOLUNTEERS.

At a field-day of metropolitan volunteer corps, held in Regent's Park, last Saturday, about 1800 men mustered, under the command of Colonel Bruce. They were put through a prolonged series of movements.

On the invitation of Earl Cowper, who has on several occasions invited the metropolitan volunteers to join the Hertfordshire men, a field-day was, on Monday, held at his Lordship's beautiful seat, Panahanger Park, which, but for the heavy downpour of rain which fell during the proceedings, would have been interesting. The Queen's (Westminster) proceeded, on Monday, to Cliveden by special train from Paddington, and took part in a field-day. Some of the London artillery corps went to Sheerness, and a large number of riflemen were engaged at the rifle-ranges round London in fulfilling the Government requirements of musketry practice.

Increased success has this year attended the great All-England rifle-meeting at Brighton. Crack shots from nearly every county in England and Wales, and many from the sister kingdoms, joined in the competition. The two days' shooting was concluded on Saturday, and the final prizes were announced.

To-day (Saturday) the official brigade field-day of the St. George's, Victorias, and other corps will be held in Hyde Park; and Colonel Lane Fox, commanding the 48th Brigade Depot, will hold a field-day of Surrey volunteers at Wimbledon.

The metropolitan rifle contest for £750, including £535 open to all comers, was brought to a close on Thursday week, at the Scrubs ranges, when the principal results of the contest, which has attracted many of the best shots of the country, were announced. In the first match for all-comers Corporal Mullineux, of the 40th Lancashire, topped the score of a London Rifle Brigade man (Private Munn) by one point, and took the first prize of £20 with 53 points—splendid shooting at 200, 500, and 600 yards, five shots. With one point less, Privates Munn and Lawford, of Harrow, took the second and third prizes of £12 10s. In the same series fifty-seven other prizes were awarded for scores ranging from 51 to 45. In the second all-comers' match, at the same range and for a similar amount (£200), Private Webber, of the Queen's, took the first prize of £20 with a score of 50; Private Lewis, of Brecon, and Private Vincent, of the Artists' Corps, being second and third with 49, and receiving £12 10s. each. The other winning scores ranged from 48 to 41.

THE OCEAN DEPTH EXPLORING VOYAGE.

H.M.S. CHALLENGER AT ANCHOR IN ROYAL SOUND, KERQUELEN LAND.

GRAVE ISLAND, ROYAL SOUND, KERQUELEN LAND.

NATIVE SHOP IN BAZAAR-STREET, CALCUTTA.

THE BAZAAR AT CALCUTTA.

A newly-published volume, "Letters from India and Kashmir," of which we shall presently say more, contains, at page 96, the following passage of lively and familiar description:—

"The native bazaars of Calcutta are narrow, crowded, and tortuous. Your conveyance soon comes to a stand, and is surrounded by a deafening crowd. 'Sahib! salam, Sahib!' His hands are pressed together, and he looks at you with a grimace intended to express abject entreaty. 'Fine dressing-gown, handkerchief, Cashmere cap, Sahib! Please, honour Sahib, come see my shop! Very beautiful! most cheap! Bombay boxes, pine-apple, dress!'

"Sahib," here breaks in another dealer, 'that man dam liar. You no trust him. He got no shop; he poor broker. Come, Sahib, my shop alongside; everything what you like—what you want, Sahib, price you like. China crape, ivory chessmen, backgammon, handkerchiefs!'

"Sahib," solemnly remonstrates an older impostor, "these men all rogues; they great big cheats, Sahib, good Sahib! Oh, Sahib! one moment, Sahib! See my goods, Sahib! Only look; buy some other day; only look, Sahib!"

"But the crowd or stoppage having given way, you manage to get rid of this importunate band, after vainly repeated attempts to assure them that you want none of the articles they thrust upon you.

"If, however, you are tempted into one of these shops, a chair will be brought, covered for you with a white sheet, and then sweetmeats offered. It is a small place, not more than 10 ft. wide by perhaps 30 ft. deep; but in the back rooms an endless stock is concealed. As the dealers usually accept about one third of the 'ask price,' imagine the haggling necessary to arrive at something like the real value. An unusually candid one will answer your query of 'Fifty rupees; is that the lowest price?' with 'No, Sahib; that ask price. Lowest price forty-five rupees.' 'Too dear,' you say. 'Not too dear, Sahib; make offer, Sahib.' 'Give you twenty rupees.' Without stating the explanations that are sure to ensue, or the vows that the article is worth double the money, the encounter will end in his accepting your offer, and begging you to take as many more as possible at the same price.

"All this goes on during the heat of the day; for the shops are closed, in the morning and evening, with heavy padlocks and chains at the bottom joining the door on both sides to the door frame. The native bazaar, in close proximity to the European quarter, extends a great distance; and the narrow streets, of most squalid houses as a rule, barely allow two vehicles to pass."

Now, the subject of our Illustration, "A Shop in the Native Bazaar at Calcutta," does not much resemble this scene of bewildering bustle and profuse display of various merchandise to compete for the custom of the English Sahib. It is simply a view of those humbler stalls, perhaps in the same bazaar, where the few articles of domestic need for the poorer classes of the Bengalee people are offered for sale. But the spirit of retail trade is the same all over the world, be its object the gain of rupees or pounds and shillings; of annas and pice, of dollars, francs, or pence. It is one thing, however, when the rich come to buy what they do not really want; another thing when the poor come to buy what they do.

Having borrowed the foregoing sample of "Letters from India and Kashmir," we have to state that the publishers of this book are Messrs. George Bell and Sons; but the author's name does not appear on the titlepage. He is a keen observer, and reflects with much good sense and good humour upon whatever he sees. Some appropriate reading of history, too, has informed him of the associations of places he has visited with events of the past. His notions of ethnology, indeed, are peculiar, as he is bent on proving that the Indians of Hindostan are a kindred race to the Red Indians of North America. But some authors have declared the latter to be no other than the lost tribes of Israel, and it is a topic free to any range of conjecture. The route pursued in 1870 by the present writer—whose writing, indeed, was done at the time in private letters to his father, now collected and enlarged for the public—was by the Red Sea to Bombay, thence to Ceylon, but crossing Southern India from Calicut over the Neilgherry Hills; again, from Ceylon to Madras, and from Madras to Calcutta, by sea; after this, to Agra and Delhi, whence he repaired to the Himalaya health-station of Simla. The Punjab and Kashmir, or Cashmere as we used to spell it, occupy a hundred pages. This is not the least interesting part of the book; and though many tourists or residents have told us a great deal about Umritsar and Lahore; also, of Srinaggur, amidst its lakes and rivers, with surrounding mountains, and of the ruined temple of Martand, we find here much that rewards contemplation, from fresh points of view. The descriptive notices are furnished with an excellent accompaniment in the numerous engravings, drawn by Mr. H. R. Robertson, mostly from the author's own sketches, and engraved by Mr. W. J. Palmer. There are twenty or thirty page engravings, and above one hundred of smaller size. One of the former class we should think ought to be especially attractive to the lady reader's eye. It is a landscape view from the topmost peak of the Tukht-i-Suliman, where is perched the venerable temple of Shunkur Charah, 2000 years old. In the vast low plain beneath this summit, among the frontier mountains of the Punjab, is seen the winding course of Jhelum, whose symmetrical curves are said to have suggested the graceful ornamental pattern of Cashmere shawls. We could point to several of Mr. Robertson's illustrations to this volume as worthy of their interesting subjects; the printing and paper, too, are of superior quality, and there is more than average merit in the whole publication.

The Corporation of Dublin, on Wednesday, discussed the main drainage of the city, and resolved not to take any further action in it until the city engineer and Sir J. W. Bazalgette shall have furnished revised estimates of the cost.

Though the entries were rather short of last year, the Devon County Agricultural Show had a very successful opening, on Wednesday, at Barnstaple. The attendance throughout the day was large, and the stock shown of superior merit.

A committee of members of the Congregational Church has been appointed to obtain an additional £31,000, by which to raise the loan fund of the English Chapel Building Society to £50,000. Mr. John Crossley, M.P., is the treasurer.

Notwithstanding the stoppage of the lock-out in Leicester-shire, there are said to be more men on the union funds than ever, as the lock-out steadily extends in other directions. The remittance from Leamington for union pay in the eastern counties amounted last week to £900. At a meeting of the West Suffolk Farmers' Association, held at Bury St. Edmunds on Wednesday, the president reported the result of interviews with Mr. Morley, M.P., and Mr. Dixon, M.P., with a view to the settlement of the existing dispute between the farmers and the labourers in that county. The executive committee recommended the adoption of Mr. Morley's proposal, and the chairman strongly urged its acceptance; but the meeting, after a discussion of some length, postponed its decision.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, May 28.

The crisis is at length over, and a new Ministry has at last been formed. The nominal Premier is General de Cissey, M. Thiers's Minister of War, who exercises the functions of Vice-President of the Council and Minister of War in the present Cabinet, but the real leader of the new Government is undoubtedly Duc Decazes, who retains the portfolio for Foreign Affairs, which he held under the Duc de Broglie. Two other members of the former Ministry are included in the present one—M. Magne, now (as before) Minister of Finance, and M. de Fourton, who has exchanged the portfolio of Public Instruction for that of the Interior. M. Caillaux, a civil engineer, becomes Minister of Public Works; M. Grivart, an advocate from Rennes, holds the Ministry of Commerce; M. Tailhand, a provincial magistrate, is appointed Keeper of the Seals; while the Ministry of Marine is given to Admiral de Montaignac, a comparatively unknown naval officer; and that of Public Instruction to the Vicomte de Carmont, a Jesuitist protégé of Bishop Dupanloup and M. de Falloux. Numerous rumours are in circulation in reference to the programme of the new Government; but nothing is yet known for certain, the current opinion being that it will jog on without meddling with constitutional questions.

Public attention has been directed during the last few days upon the election which took place last Sunday in the department of the Nièvre for the seat vacated by General Ducrot a few months ago. The contest, which was extremely animated, resulted in a Bonapartist victory, the votes being divided as follow:—M. Philippe de Bourgoing (Bonapartist), 37,599; M. Gudin (Republican), 32,157; M. de Pazzis (Legitimist), 4527. M. de Bourgoing, the successful candidate, was formerly one of Napoleon III.'s equerries. The Imperialists are naturally very jubilant over their success and the Republicans somewhat downcast, the two previous elections in that department having proved favourable to their cause. The Legitimists allude with great bitterness to the small number of votes obtained by their candidate, and remark that whenever a partisan of the Republic fails to secure the seat it is a Bonapartist, and not a protégé of their own, who proves successful. They find the result the more annoying, as General Ducrot, the former deputy, was a staunch partisan of Henri V.

M. Thiers received a deputation from the Gironde on Sunday afternoon, which furnished him with the occasion for an important speech, advocating the dissolution of the Assembly, which has produced no little sensation in Paris. He began by passing in review the principal incidents of his own administration, and, when alluding to his fall, remarked that he was overthrown because he was unwilling to favour Monarchical intrigues, since when the majority had shown that they were incapable of establishing the régime which they reproached him with not having restored. He affirmed once more his conviction that the Republican form of government was alone suited to France, and warmly advocated a dissolution, remarking that the more the Assembly retarded this "acte de raison" the less moderate and less conservative the elections for the new legislative body would be.

Count d'Alton Shee, peer of France under Louis Philippe, and a warm partisan of Ledru Rollin after the revolution of 1848, died in Paris a few days ago. He was buried on Monday last, without any religious rites, the hearse being followed by a large number of Republican deputies and journalists. M. Gambetta made a short speech over the grave, in which he alluded to the shameful manner in which M. d'Alton Shee had been neglected by his own party, who refused to believe in his sincerity. "The dying are prophets," he exclaimed, in conclusion; "and a few hours before he expired M. d'Alton Shee expressed his firm conviction in the definitive triumph of the Republic."

The new German Ambassador, Prince de Hohenlohe, has been received this week by Marshal MacMahon, with a considerable amount of pomp, at the Elysée Palace. The Ambassador assured the Marshal of the German Emperor's sympathy, and of his solicitude for the maintenance of peace between the two nations, to which the President rejoined by promising to do his utmost to ensure that desired result—an empty piece of parade on both sides which might have been dispensed with.

The duel between Prince Metternich and Count de Montebello took place a few days ago at St. Cloud, the sword being the weapon eventually selected. The combat lasted twenty minutes, and ended on the Count being scratched on the arm.

Marshal MacMahon was present at the Grand National Steeplechase at Auteuil on Monday last, the stakes of which, £1600, were competed for in the midst of a violent thunderstorm. Sixteen horses started, and Miss Hungerford, an English mare, unexpectedly came in first, amidst the plaudits of a large number of our more speculative fellow-countrymen, attracted to Paris by the event.

ITALY.

The bill annulling unstamped and unregistered deeds was, on Sunday, rejected in the Chamber of Deputies by ballot by a majority of 166 to 165. The all-important clauses had been approved by public vote by majorities of 12 and 16. The announcement of the final vote was received with loud and prolonged applause by the Left of the Chamber. But the Ministry remains in office, notwithstanding this adverse vote. In Monday's sitting Signor Minghetti announced that the Ministry had tendered its resignation, which the King, however, refused to accept. He added that he proposed to present other financial projects to replace that on unregistered deeds, which the Chamber had rejected. He requested the Chamber to continue the discussion of the final Estimates for 1874, and the other measures required by the Administration. The House then began the debate on the final estimates of the Ministry of Marine, which were ultimately sanctioned.

In Wednesday's sitting of the Senate Signor Minghetti asked that the financial bills should be voted as speedily as possible, but that the bills which involve fresh expenditure should be postponed, as well as those relating to defence.

Receptions at the Vatican have been suspended in consequence of an attack of fever from which the Pope has been suffering.

SPAIN.

Skirmishes between the Carlists and the Republican troops for the possession of heights around Bilbao are frequent and of almost daily occurrence. It is thought that Estella will be the next battle-field, as the Carlists have formed intrenchments outside the town and collected twenty battalions, with several guns, for their defence. Marshal Concha has assembled three corps, numbering 26,000 men, with fifty mountain and fourteen Placencia guns, around Vittoria. Advice from the north of Spain received in Madrid announces that Don Carlos, escorted by a battalion of Navarrese troops and attended by his military council, had left Durango for Aspetia. Railway communication between Madrid and Saragossa is again obstructed by Carlists. One of their bands attacked a number of trains passing Arcos and destroyed a large quantity of rolling stock. Another band, not alleged to be Carlists, is operating on the Valencia line at Encinil. Its special business is the plundering of goods-vans. A Barcelona telegram states that the Carlists have been defeated in Tarragona with a loss of sixty-one killed, many wounded, and their war material.

GERMANY.

The Emperor William, who during his stay at Ems was the guest of the Emperor of Russia, left at eight o'clock on Tuesday evening for Berlin. At the Potsdam railway station he was met by the two eldest sons of the Prince Imperial. The two Emperors had previously made an excursion to Nassau, and inspected the monument erected to Baron von Stein.

Both Houses of the Prussian Diet held a joint sitting, on Thursday week, at which a Royal message was read, closing the session. Three cheers were given for the King.

Herr von Mallinckrodt, the prominent leader of the Centre faction of the German Reichstag and Prussian Diet, died suddenly at Berlin on Wednesday morning.

The first Synod of Old Catholics held in Germany was opened at Bonn, on Wednesday, by Bishop Reinkens. Twenty-clergymen and fifty-seven delegates were present.

Baron Werther has accepted the post of German Ambassador at Constantinople.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

A complete agreement upon all matters belonging to the category of common affairs having been arrived at by the Austrian and Hungarian Delegations, the closing sitting of the Delegations was held, at Pesth, yesterday week. Count Andrassy conveyed to them the Emperor's thanks for the patriotic zeal with which, in the present depressed state of financial affairs, they had sanctioned the necessary sums for upholding the military strength of the monarchy. President Rechbauer made a speech in which he expressed a hope that the fever paroxysm which led Europe to arm would soon cease, and nations be left once more to the peaceful struggles of civilisation.

The Hungarian Delegation gave a banquet to the Austrian Delegation. Toasts were proposed for the Delegations as ties uniting both portions of the monarchy in close friendship, and enthusiastic cheers were given for Austria and Hungary.

The Upper House of the Hungarian Diet passed the Loan Bill, with only one dissentient vote.

SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

The Swedish Diet was closed yesterday week by the King in person. His Majesty in his speech mentioned with satisfaction the new law on commerce and navigation between Sweden and Norway, as well as the increased grants approved by the Diet for educational purposes. He also alluded to the new plan of army organisation which had been communicated to the Diet, and stated that the preliminary work for abolishing the land tax, which is connected with the Army Organisation Bill, would be hastened as much as possible.

AMERICA.

The Amended Civil Right Bill has passed the Senate, and the bill admitting New Mexico as a State into the Union has passed the House of Representatives.

CANADA.

The Dominion Parliament has been prorogued, the House of Commons having passed the Pacific Railway Bill unamended.

BRAZIL.

The Chambers were opened by the Emperor on the 5th inst. His Majesty, in his Speech from the Throne, expressed a hope that a final treaty of peace between the Argentine Confederation and Paraguay would be amicably concluded. Referring to ecclesiastical affairs, the Emperor said the Bishops of Olinda and Para, having transgressed the constitution and the laws, must be punished; but, with the support of the Chambers, the Government would bring the conflict to a close by the exercise of moderation.

INDIA.

Last week's Viceregal telegram mentions four more deaths from starvation, raising the total number to twenty-six. A calculation is given of the quantities of grain forwarded to the famine districts since Nov. 1 last. Government and trade supplies amount to 674,000 tons. The difficulty about transport seems to have been overcome everywhere except in East Fife. Any further supplies required during the rainy season can now be sent up by water. The Times correspondent at Calcutta telegraphed on Tuesday as follows:—"There was rain here this morning, but there is now a fierce sun. Two hundred and nineteen thousand persons are now employed on relief works in Butee and Goruckpore. Sir J. Strachey has ordered a stoppage before the rains. The necessitous are to be sent to workhouses, and the able-bodied to the ordinary public works." By a telegram of Wednesday's date, received through Renter's agency, we learn that "the Government is now supporting 2,750,000 people in the famine districts, including those receiving charitable relief. Distress is increasing in Burdwan, but is fully met by the authorities. The high-caste people unable to work are receiving charitable relief. There has been a good rainfall. Sixty thousand tons of Government grain have been distributed."

Lord Napier, in the presence of the Viceroy, unveiled, yesterday week, the statue of Sir James Outram, in Calcutta.

By telegraph from the Governor of Newfoundland the Admiralty has received disastrous news of her Majesty's ship Niobe, whose commander reports her wreck. The crew have been saved.

Accounts as to Captain Hyde, the victim of the Chilean outrage, are at variance one with another. According to the news brought by the Britannia Royal mail, Captain Hyde was, at the time of her departure from Valparaiso, released from prison, though the question of indemnity remained unsettled. On the other hand, a Valparaiso telegram of later date says he is still in prison.

The Emperor of Russia, having disembarked at Flushing on Friday, where he was received by the King of the Netherlands and Princes Henry and Alexander, arrived at the Brussels railway station at a quarter past twelve that day, and drove with the King to the Royal palace. His Imperial Majesty, with the Grand Duke Alexis and suite, left for Ems the same afternoon, the King of the Belgians accompanying his Majesty as far as Louvain. Ems was illuminated on Saturday evening, when the Emperor reached the town at a quarter to ten o'clock, and alighted at the Hotel of the Four Seasons. His Imperial Majesty met a hearty reception.

Sir Titus Salt, Bart., has contributed £100 to the funds of the National Early Closing League.

The state apartments at Windsor Castle will be reopened to the public on Monday next, June 1.

At a cost of £6000 the Cambridge Corporation are about to erect a new Corn Exchange, the foundation-stone of which was, on Tuesday, laid by the Mayor of Cambridge. It will form a noble room, 168 ft. long by 55 ft. wide, and 60 ft. high to the ridge. On the south side there will be a transept 48 ft. long by 28 ft. wide. The whole will allow space for 220 merchants' desks without crowding. The architect is Mr. R. R. Rowe, of Cambridge, and the builder Mr. Elworthy, of Wisbech.

A return has been made to the House of Lords by Sir Bernard Burke, C.B., Ulster King of Arms, with reference to the Peers of Ireland. It appears that at the present moment there are 185 Peers of Ireland—2 Dukes, 11 Marquises, 66 Earls, 38 Viscounts, and 68 Barons; and that at the passing of the Act of Union there were 211 Peers of Ireland—1 Duke, 5 Marquises, 77 Earls, 58 Viscounts, and 70 Barons. Since the Union 75 Irish peerages have become extinct, and 61 Peers of Ireland have been created Peers of the United Kingdom. Of the existing 185 Irish Peers, 80 are also Peers of England, Great Britain, or the United Kingdom, and 28 are representative Lords, thus leaving 77 Peers without seats.

By order of the magistrates, Thursday week was observed in Edinburgh and Leith as a holiday, in honour of the anniversary of the Queen's birthday. The General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland and of the Free Church were opened. Her Majesty's Lord High Commissioner to the Church of Scotland, the Earl of Rosslyn, held a levée in the picture-gallery of Holyrood Palace in the morning, which was attended by the magistrates, the council of the city, the foreign consuls, and a large assemblage of noblemen, gentry, and clergy. At noon the Lord High Commissioner went in state procession to attend Divine service in St. Giles's Cathedral, and afterwards proceeded to the Assembly Hall, where his Lordship presented her Majesty's letter of appointment. The retiring Moderator, Dr. Gillan, having delivered his valedictory address, nominated as his successor the Rev. Dr. Trail, Professor of Theology in the University of Aberdeen, which was unanimously agreed to. In the Free Assembly Dr. Duff, the retiring Moderator, proposed as his successor the Rev. Dr. Stewart Leghorn. This was seconded by Lord Dalhousie, and approved of.—The principle of the bill for the abolition of patronage was adopted without a division, on Tuesday, in the Assembly of the Established Church.

The Bishop of St. David's being on the point of resigning his see, all arrangements for ordinations are deferred.

The Bishop of London has removed to Fulham Palace. His Lordship will attend at London House on Monday next, June 1, and on every succeeding Monday, from eleven o'clock till two.

Lord Ebury, who has presented the residents of Rickmansworth with the frehold site, laid the foundation-stone of another new district church at Mill End.

On Sunday, the 10th inst., the English Church of St. Andrew, Patras, near Corinth, Greece, was dedicated for religious worship by the Right Rev. C. W. Sandford, D.D., Bishop of Gibraltar.

The Rev. O. A. and Mrs. Hodgson have been presented with a chaise, pony, and harness, and a silver salver, as a token of regard from a large number of their parishioners, on their leaving the Vicarage, Alton, Hants, after eleven years' earnest work in that place, for the Rectory, East Stoke, Dorset.

A meeting of the Norwich Diocesan Church Association was held last Saturday, at which Dean Goulburn moved a resolution condemning the Public Worship Regulation Bill. After a long debate, however, an amendment approving the measure and adopting a petition to the House of Lords in its favour was carried by a large majority.

The Bishop of Ely reopened the restored church of Madingley, near Cambridge, on Wednesday, and a luncheon afterwards took place in the fine old hall, the former seat of the Cotton family, and the residence of the Prince of Wales during his academical career at Cambridge. Bishop Woodford reopened the parish church of Temptford on the preceding day.

In the Court of Arches, yesterday week, an application was made, in the case of "Martin v. Mackonochie," to Sir Robert Phillimore to accept letters of request from the Bishop of London for the purpose of instituting a suit against the Vicar of St. Alban's, Holborn, upon several charges in connection with his mode of celebration of Divine service. The Dean of Arches accepted the letters of request, and ordered a citation to be served upon Mr. Mackonochie.

Dr. Pusey, in republishing his recent letters on the Clergy Discipline Bill, prefaces them with suggestions for healing the differences which that measure is intended to repress. The first requisite, he says, is to have it defined by law what is the ritual of the Church of England; the second, that, after having fixed the ritual, there should be some means of restraining changes against the wishes of worshippers. Speaking for the High-Church clergy, he says that fatherly and loving treatment by the bishops would win over the great body of them, while individual excesses would drop off.

The interesting little festival for children known as the "flower sermon," which takes place annually at this season in the Church of St. Catherine Cree, came off on Tuesday evening. The place of worship was crowded, the greater part of the congregation being young people, who, almost without an exception, carried flowers in their hands. A sermon, full of good advice to his youthful audience, was preached by the Rev. W. Meynell Whittemore, D.D., Rector of the united parishes of St. Catherine Cree and St. James's, Aldgate. It is the custom in these flower sermons to make the discourse turn upon some well-known plant or flower, and on the present occasion the Rev. Doctor chose for his text the words "Sweet cinnamon." He drew a picture of the virtues of the cinnamon plant, and pointed out the lessons to be drawn from it.

The Incorporated Church Building Society held its annual general court, at 7, Whitehall, on the 22nd inst. The Bishop of Ripon occupied the chair, supported by the Bishops of Carlisle and St. Asaph, the Earl of Powis, the Archdeacons of Middlesex, Westminster, Maidstone, and others. Mr. H. Gerard Hoare was elected as treasurer of the society, and the members going out by rotation were all re-elected. The Rev. George Ainslie, the secretary, read the report. It showed that the total income of the society for the year had been £7839, and the expenditure £7216; that 128 grants had been made towards building ninety-one new churches, rebuilding eighteen, and repairing seventy-nine. The School-Church and Mission-House Fund had received, in the course of the year, £922, which sum includes £500, a portion of the London Merchants' munificent donation of £5000. The repair funds held in trust by the society have increased during the past year by £1230, and the total sum thus held now amounts to £61,897.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

Mr. H. J. S. Smith, M.A., Balliol, F.S.A., Professor. Fellow of Corpus Christi College, and Savilian Professor of Geometry at Oxford, has been nominated by the curators of the University Museum to succeed Professor Phillips as Keeper of the establishment. The appointment must be ratified by the Convocation of the University. The following gentlemen have been elected to exhibitions in New College:—Mr. A. P. Wickham, Marlborough; Mr. W. Smith, Haileybury (in natural science); and Mr. A. Grey, Wellington. The Abbott Scholarship at Oxford has been adjudged to Mr. Hugh Salvin Holme, scholar of Brasenose College.

At Cambridge, Mr. Edward Byles Cowell, M.A., Professor of Sanscrit, has been elected a Fellow of Corpus.—Mr. R. T. Wright, of Christ's, has been appointed one of the moderators for the mathematical tripos, 1875; Messrs. R. Burn, Trinity, and C. W. Moule, Corpus, examiners for the Chancellor's classical medals; and Dr. Rutherford, Professor of Physiology, King's, London, and Professor Hughes, examiners for the natural sciences tripos.—On Saturday Dr. Carpenter, F.R.S., delivered a lecture to a numerous and distinguished audience, in the Comparative Anatomy Lecture Room, on some of the results of the voyage of the Challenger. The lecture which was full of information, and illustrated by specimens of the products obtained, was listened to with deep interest, and was in the main the same as delivered by the learned doctor before the Royal Society.

The Dublin University Senate closed its deliberations on the Queen's letter on Saturday. The remaining clauses were discussed, and adopted substantially as proposed by the board, with few amendments.

The examination for the scholarships at Harrow has ended, with the following results:—First, Hamilton, already Gregory scholar; second, Godley, already Leaf scholar; third, Childers, recommended for the Botfield Scholarship; fourth, Talents, recommended for the first Need Scholarship; fifth, Mason and Tanner, equal, Tanner being recommended for the second Need Scholarship; seventh, Edwards and Daughish, equal; ninth, Headley and Greene, equal, Headley being recommended for the Sayer Scholarship. The examiners were the Rev. E. W. Benson, D.D., Chancellor of Lincoln, and late Master of Wellington College; the Rev. T. L. Papillon, M.A., Fellow and Lecturer of New College, Oxford; and, in mathematics, Mr. James Stuart, M.A., Fellow and Assistant Tutor of Trinity College, Cambridge.

ELECTION ITEMS.

The petition against the return of Messrs. Pease and Major Beaumont, members for South Durham, has been withdrawn.

Mr. Baron Bramwell opened, on Monday, an inquiry into the petition against the return of Mr. Isaac Lowthian Ball and Mr. Charles Mark Palmer, the members for North Durham.

The hearing of the Durham (City) election petition inquiry was concluded yesterday week. Mr. Baron Bramwell, in delivering judgment, although exonerating the Liberal candidates themselves (Messrs. Thompson and Henderson), found that treating and bribery by agents had occurred. The late election was therefore declared null and void. The candidates were declared unseated, and were ordered to pay the costs of the present proceedings.

Mr. O'Donnell (Home Ruler), who was elected for the borough of Galway upon the vacancy created by the succession of Viscount St. Lawrence to the earldom of Howth, was yesterday week unseated by Mr. Justice Lawson, who held that the election was not a free one; that Mr. O'Donnell was guilty by himself and his agents of intimidation; and that the Rev. Peter Dooley and the Rev. Martin Cummins were guilty of exercising undue influence and intimidation. The petitioners are allowed their costs.

At Bolton Mr. Justice Mellor pronounced, on Tuesday, a qualified decision on the charges of bribery laid against Mr. Croes, the Liberal sitting member. The use of railway passes, he thought, did not amount to bribery, and the sending of slips from the polling-place to the Radical committee-room, though illegal, was not of a nature to invalidate the seat. Mr. Croes was, therefore, declared duly elected, but he was ordered to pay the costs of the petition in so far as related to violations of the Ballot Act.

Lord Ormisdale, the presiding Judge in the Wigtown Burghs petition, on Tuesday decided, in accordance with the judgment of the Second Division of the Court of Session, that several votes given for Mr. Mark Stewart, who won the seat from Mr. Young in February last, were invalidated on account of defective marking. Mr. Young is now in a majority of one; but, as since the election he has been elevated to the Bench, the seat is vacant. Mr. Young, it will be remembered, was Lord Advocate of Scotland in the late Administration.

Mr. Disraeli's constituents having subscribed for the expenses of the contest forced upon him by Mr. Talley, recently handed to his agent a sum of nearly £1600. The Premier, in accepting this graceful gift, stated that he could only look upon it as the act of a generous and high-spirited constituency, which it would be presumptuous in him to decline.

The polling at Poole, to fill the vacancy occasioned by the unseating of Mr. Waring, took place on Tuesday, when the Hon. Evelyn Ashley (Liberal) was returned by 631 votes, against 622 for Sir Ivor Bertie Guest, the Conservative candidate.

At a meeting of the Irish Rifle Association, on Tuesday, final arrangements were made for the visit of the Irish team to the United States in September next. It was arranged that the team should consist of eight and two spare men. The match will take place about the last week in September.

THE ROYAL ALBERT HALL ON A STATE OCCASION.

THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA AT WOOLWICH.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

Time was when the public knew very little about ordinary Scotch Parliamentary business, for the simple reason that it appeared before the House of Commons in the briefest and most undemonstrative shape. There were two reasons for this. In the first place, so far as reporting debates was concerned, the London newspapers put Scotland very much on a par with Little Pedlington, and next to ignored all discussions, few as they were, on Scottish affairs. Then there was a laudable custom for Scotch members to meet outside of the House in "caucus" and discuss measures in which they were concerned, until everything was "squared," and bills came before the Legislature not to be debated, but to be passed formally through their several stages. But all that is changed now, from a simple cause. The Scotch newspapers a few years ago organised a system by which the speeches of every Scottish member were fully reported, and thus brought before the interested notice of the northern constituencies. It would have answered this purpose if the Scotch members had written their speeches, and sent them to the local papers for publication, confining themselves to mumbling out a few sentences in the House. But this was not to be. The natural desire to see oneself in print prevailed, and members from the other side of the Tweed, great and little, inflict their oratory in full on the House, certain of being canonised in their local journals. It has thus come to pass that many a legislative flower—it may be a thistle—which would have blushed unseen has appeared in vigorous efflorescence before the delighted Lower Chamber of the Legislature. This statement is made apropos of a set Scotch debate, which has recently taken place, and which brought out one or two of the best specimens of Scottish memberdom. The subject was liquor, and the object to limit in some degree the facilities for obtaining strong drinks in Scotland. The propounder was Sir Robert Anstruther, who is possessed of a strong, straightforward style of speaking, infused with a geniality which renders him pleasant to listen to; and on this occasion a very long speech which he delivered did not become wearisome. Then, too, there was an opportunity for Mr. McLaren to enunciate his decided opinion in that beseeching, pity-the-sorrows-of-a-poor-old-man style which it is his fancy to affect. Then a new member for Glasgow, Dr. Cameron—who is a good example of the sensible, practical member, which most Scottish representatives are—gave a taste of his quality; and Mr. Kinnaird, who is known to have a special horror of drunkenness, even of the genial and vivacious kind, was beaming, as usual. As to Dr. Lyon Playfair, from his first entry into the House he showed that he did not intend to give up to Scotland what was meant for mankind, and he at once assumed the position of a large-viewed and particularly suggestive legislator. Nevertheless, he bends himself on all occasions to the concerns of Scotland, and on this was not wanting. Although the general debate was Scottish, the subject was irresistible to Sir Wilfrid Lawson, and he infused a slight English element into it, but of course a still larger element of prohibitory liquor opinion, and as much of jest and gibe as was expected of him.

There is, besides Dr. Playfair, another Scotch member who does not narrow himself down to Scottish affairs, but addresses himself to the interests of the whole kingdom, with a somewhat ludicrous effect. This is Mr. Anderson, the working-man's choice at Glasgow—a choice which some cynical people say is an illustration of the electoral eccentricities of that class. This gentleman has for some little time devoted himself to nosing out peccadilloes in Army administration and the personal conduct of officers, and he had stumbled upon a dreadful case—namely, that Lord Sandhurst, formerly known in a distinguished sense as General Sir William Mansfield, had absented himself from the duties of his command of the troops in Ireland, but had, nevertheless, drawn all his local allowances, in order to obtain which he had sent in erroneous accounts to the financial authorities. Encouraged by the fact that the War Minister had insisted on Lord Sandhurst refunding the special money which he had received, Mr. Anderson gave notice of a motion which asked the House severely to censure the proceedings of the gallant General. It was floating about on the notice-paper, undated, observing which Mr. Disraeli, in a tone of stern rebuke, demanded that it should be brought on forthwith, and gave a Government night for the purpose. Thus it happened that Mr. Anderson was raised into a position of considerable prominence; and probably his nerves, a little tried by that circumstance, were still more shaken by there being before him, on the evening when he had to make his motion, a tremendous House, and, still worse, an immense gathering in the galleries of military officers of rank, peers, and others. He, therefore, delivered himself in a half-frightened way; and was positively lenient and excusatory to the person whom he was more or less accusing. Scarcely able to speak, owing to catarrh, Mr. Hardy nevertheless was boisterous and voluble under difficulties; but Lord Sandhurst gained very little from his advocacy, for he confessed and avoided the accusation, and his strongest point was that the House ought not to interfere in a matter of military discipline. Not so Mr. Horsman; for he, with all his force—and he has a good deal of force left still—actually belauded Lord Sandhurst for all he had done, and declared him to be the victim of wrong and outrage done by the late War Ministry, as the agents and tools of a pseudo-economical Government, which wanted the paltry sum which was refunded to reduce the Estimates and swell the surplus; and to this end they had been guilty of the "shabbiest and dirtiest" action he could call to mind. The Ministerialists had all along so demeaned themselves as to indicate that they had come to a foregone conclusion; and at a quarter to seven o'clock they took care that not another word should be said, and when Mr. Anderson, apparently "affrighted by the noise himself had raised," offered to withdraw his motion, the offer was contemptuously and vociferously rejected, and it was negatived amidst what must be called "yells of triumph."

It is observable that Sir Michael Hicks-Beach has got into favour, which might be suspected to be dangerous, with the Irish members, and especially with those who are usually the most recalcitrant, and—to use a coarse but expressive phrase—most bumptious. He is certainly conciliatory, and really seems to be deeply impressed with a desire to do his duty towards Ireland, but that is no reason why he should obtain the goodwill of so-called representatives of Ireland. A special example of the influence he seems to have attained was to be found on an occasion when he introduced a measure relating to public health in Ireland. All through his speech he was well cheered, and at its end he was complimented and blessed by foremost Irish members for undertaking to make their country sanitariously clean—an undertaking which may suggest recollections of one of the labours of Hercules.

In the House of Lords, yesterday week, the subjects of a minister of education, the widening of Parliament-street, and railway accidents were discussed. In the Commons the question whether Oxford should be a military centre was dealt with in a debate of much vigour and vivacity, and a motion for inquiry whether the arrangement was a fitting one was lost by 170 votes to 77. Some bills were advanced a stage. Both Houses adjourned to June 1.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The card on the concluding day of the Newmarket Second Spring was composed chiefly of matches, and did not present any great interest. In the Exning Two-Year-Old Plate, Cachmere improved in her previous running at the meeting; still she had no chance with Lady Glenorchy, whom she has beaten easily on two or three other occasions, and it is clear that she is sadly in need of a rest. The running of the week seems to leave Hero and Telescope at the head of the two-year-old form up to the present time, yet it is said that M. Lefevre has two or three superiors to the former in his stable. During the week the stewards of the Jockey Club reopened the case of Princess Theresa, who was disqualified at Chester, and, reversing the previous decision, gave her the race. The case is a very complicated one, and we hear that it will be taken into a court of law.

Bath and Manchester have been the two chief meetings of the present week, but there is really very little to be said about either of them. Bath is rapidly falling into the catalogue of minor meetings, and needs some very energetic measures to restore it to its former position. Mary White, a daughter of Brown Bread and Fenella, won a couple of events on Tuesday; but in the Weston Stakes, for which she started a strong favourite, she could only finish third, Pope Joan, a filly by Ratanplan—Chanoinesse, securing a neck victory. Spectator did not run for the Twenty-Second Biennial Stakes, which left it quite at the mercy of Aventurière, who had only Bloomfield and a stable companion to beat. Manchester, unlike Bath, is rapidly improving, and, as a very considerable sum of money was added to the principal stakes, there were some capital entries. John Peel, who was in such capital form at Chester, succumbed to Thirkleby in the Copeland Stakes. He was, however, attempting to concede 9 lb., and two or three races, with the ground in its present hard state, are almost sure to upset a two-year-old. Chandos, who certainly appeared to be very leniently weighted, was made a strong favourite for the De Trafford Cup; but his form appears to have entirely deserted him, and he had no chance with Tyro. On Wednesday Euston, a high-priced son of The Miner and Fern, won his first race for Captain Macell; and the success of Cambuslang (7 st. 5 lb.) is satisfactory evidence of the excellence of Andred, and, through him, of the good form of Atlantic.

It is almost unnecessary to state that the Derby will be run for next week, and few additions are needed to our remarks of last Saturday. Ecosais, after being backed down to 12 to 1 in spite of his poor performance in the Two Thousand, has been tried over a mile and a half with Miss Toto and Boulet, and beaten so far that he is scarcely likely to go to Epsom, where Fordham will ride Fen d'Amour. Aquilo also occupies a very unsteady position, and the followers of Mr. Merry seem quite unable to decide between the respective merits of Glenalmond and Daniel. Tipster has gone back in the betting; but Couronne de Fer, in spite of his alleged roaring, has actually touched 9 to 1, though it requires great faith to believe that Mr. Padwick and Matthew Dawson have sold a Derby winner for the sum of 2500 gs. Never did the race seem so "open" as on the present occasion, and the whole body of tipsters would do well to follow Mark Twain's excellent advice, "Never prophesy unless you know."

The great annual cricket-match of North v. South was played at Lord's at the beginning of the week, and resulted in a victory for the latter by eight wickets. Owing to the tremendous thunderstorm on Monday, the ground was very dead, and no long scores were made, Mr. W. G. Grace going in twice for thirteen. Southerton and J. C. Shaw were in great force with the ball, taking thirteen and ten wickets respectively. Several of the Notts players being engaged at Lord's, the team which opposed sixteen of Derbyshire was very weak, and suffered defeat by fourteen wickets. For the winners, Mr. R. P. Smith (42) and Mr. S. Richardson (29) were the chief scorers; while Mr. T. Wright (11 and 34) and R. Daft (19 and 23) did best for Nottinghamshire.

FINE ARTS.

An article on the landscapes, &c., in the Royal Academy Exhibition, is unavoidably deferred until next week.

A new picture-gallery, called "The Regent Hall," has been opened at the east end of Piccadilly. The chief attraction of the exhibition is Maclise's "Marriage of Strongbow," one of the painter's largest—and, so far as we remember, his finest—work in oil. It was exhibited at the Royal Academy in 1854, and purchased by the late Lord Northwick for £4000. After the dispersion of the Northwick collection, the picture underwent various vicissitudes till it was knocked down, not long ago, at Phillips's auction-rooms, for £700. The design was to have been executed in Westminster Palace, but, owing to some misunderstanding with the Fine-Arts Commission, the project was not carried out. It was, however, the execution of this noble picture which prepared the way for Maclise undertaking the great Waterloo and Trafalgar wall-paintings in the Royal Gallery, Westminster. The collection numbers nearly 300 works; and among the principal are a reduced replica of Mr. Frith's "Marriage of the Prince of Wales;" "The Scotch Statute Fair," by J. Faed, and examples of other distinguished living artists and of some deceased masters. As, however, nearly the whole have been previously exhibited, we are not called upon to offer criticism.

The painter of the picture "Still in Sight," which we lately engraved, is E. Vermeer, not "Vervier," as printed.

The annual exhibition of the Liverpool Society of Water-Colour Painters was closed on Saturday last. Increased success has, we understand, attended this year's exhibition.

Messrs. Sampson, Low, and Co. are publishing the Gospels, with etchings on steel, after the celebrated designs by M. Bida. We have received the first part of the Gospel of St. Matthew, which is to be completed in about twenty parts.

Mr. F. Bruckman, the photographer, of Munich, and Henrietta-street, London, the publisher of the well-known "Goethe Gallery," by the late W. Kaulbach, has acquired the copyright of all the unpublished works of the German master. This collection will appear in about 200 items, including many subjects of great merit and interest, among others, a series of contemporary celebrities, designs for an elaborate composition of "The Deluge," pen-and-ink sketches illustrative of the works of Shakespeare, Homer, Heine, &c.

Mr. T. Jones Barker's large picture of "The Surrender of Napoleon," painted from sketches made at Sedan, is now on view at Mr. Ackermann's, Regent-street.

The engravings of Turner's great work, "England and Wales," sold, on Wednesday, by Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Woods, realised £4444.

LAW AND POLICE.

The Judges met on Thursday morning, in the private room of the Lord Chief Justice of England, and arranged the summer circuits as follow:—Home—Mr. Baron Bramwell and Mr. Baron Cleasby; Western—The Lord Chief Justice of the Common Pleas and Mr. Justice Brett; Norfolk—The Lord Chief Baron and Mr. Justice Keating; Oxford—Mr. Baron Pigott and Mr. Justice Lush; Northern—Mr. Justice Archibald and Mr. Baron Pollock; Midland—Mr. Justice Denman and Mr. Baron Amphlett; North Wales—The Lord Chief Justice of England; South Wales—Mr. Justice Quain. Mr. Justice Blackburn remains in town.

The Times states that the Scottish Judges have unanimously resolved to report against the removal of their appeals from the House of Lords. The Irish Bar have come to a similar resolution.

Vice-Chancellor Bacon had before him on Saturday last a suit—the Earl of Derby v. the Earl of Sefton—the object of which was the settlement of a scheme for the disposal of the unappropriated surplus of the Lancashire Cotton Famine Relief Fund. The amount is £130,000; and it was proposed that the money should be applied to the establishment or maintenance in the cotton district of convalescent hospitals for working men and working women. His Honour referred the matter to chambers in order that a scheme might be prepared.

Mr. Albert Grant's appeal from the decision of Vice-Chancellor Malins in the case of the Mineral Hill Mining Company was rejected by the Lords Justices. It was a suit by one of the financial agents engaged in the purchase of the property for commission, which Mr. Grant had paid to another agent in disregard of an arbitration award prescribing the mode of payment. Lord Justice James said that Mr. Grant, having chosen to pay £1750 to the wrong person, must pay it over again.

On Monday the Court of Exchequer had before it the case of "Dignum v. R. Vans Agnew, M.P." It was an action in trover for the alleged wrongful conversion of a promissory note for £2000, drawn by the defendant. The trial took place last year, at Guildhall, before the Lord Chief Baron and a special jury, and a verdict for the plaintiff was returned for the amount claimed. Subsequently a rule nisi was obtained to set aside the verdict; but the Court decided that it ought to stand, and that the motion for a rule must be dismissed.

Grave censure was pronounced by Mr. Justice Denman, last Tuesday, on the practice of bringing trivial cases for trial before the superior courts. The particular suit before him was one in which a lengthened inquiry was made into a builder's charges for labour and material, the sum in dispute being £9.

Trinity Term, the last under the legal system which will remain in existence until the Judicature Act comes into operation, in November next, opened yesterday week.

For altering an affidavit in the Record Office, a solicitor of twenty years' standing has been suspended for six months by order of the Master of the Rolls.

At the Middlesex Sessions, on Tuesday, Charles Adeney, aged forty-seven, described as a clerk and well educated, pleaded guilty to having, on Nov. 20 last, stolen £10; on Nov. 24, £40; and on March 9, £50, the property of his masters, Messrs. Low, Son, and Haydon, of 148 and 330, Strand, perfumers. It was a part of the prisoner's duty to pay money into his masters' account at the bank, and when doing so he was furnished with a paying-in slip, on which the amount to be paid in was entered. He had, however, contrived to get a number of these paying-in slips from the bank, and used, after destroying the slip given him, to fill up one of his own with a smaller amount than the one intrusted to him, then pay in that smaller sum, and appropriate the difference between the sum given him and that paid in. In this way he had stolen upwards of £500. It also appeared that he had obtained his situation by false references; as it had since transpired that, in 1862, he had been sentenced to four years' penal servitude, after a previous conviction for felony. Mr. Edlin sentenced the prisoner to seven years' penal servitude. James Clifton, who described himself as a "traveller," but who is known to be an expert and incorrigible pickpocket, with no fewer than thirty convictions against his name, was charged with stealing a purse on the Metropolitan Railway. A verdict of "Not guilty" having been returned, Mr. Montagu Williams advised the prosecution to prefer an indictment before the grand jury for an attempt to pick pockets; and, after some curious legal difficulties, a conviction was obtained against the prisoner for a common assault with intent to commit felony. He was sentenced to the maximum punishment of two years' imprisonment, with hard labour.

A man named Colcombe has had to pay £2 5s. and costs for indulging in wanton mischief while a crowd was waiting to see the Emperor of Russia last week. Being employed in the upper part of premises in Fleet-street, Colcombe amused himself by pelting the people below with paste, and spoiled the cloak of a lady, who, through the assistance of the police, has obtained redress.

William Thorn, a Yeovil butcher, convicted at Guildhall of having sent to market four quarters of a cow unfit for food, was sentenced to pay a fine of £10 and £3 costs; while Jacob Evans, of Halstead, whose offence was of the same kind, but adjudged to be less in degree, was fined £5, with £2 costs.

The charge against a writer in the Figaro of having libelled the conductors of the South London Palace of Amusement was again before the presiding magistrate at Guildhall on Wednesday, when the summons was dismissed.

A milkman named Fountain was fined at Westminster, on Wednesday, 30s., with 12s. 6d. costs, for selling adulterated milk. His defence was that the best milk was not asked for, and that certain of his customers would rather pay a low price for watered milk than buy the genuine article at 1d. a pint more and water it themselves.

For mischievously disfiguring the Thames Embankment, by breaking a part of the iron rails, one Job Rogers, of Church-street, Lambeth, was convicted in the full penalty, by Mr. Ellison, the Lambeth police magistrate. Another mischievous lad, Auguste Mitchell by name, was charged, at Bow-street, with wantonly defacing the Thames Embankment. Mr. Flowers ordered the defendant to pay the full amount of the damage, 50s., or go to prison for a month.

Joseph Livermore, the Finchley boy with a morbid taste for railway accidents, was brought up a second time at Highgate Police Court on a charge of laying a scaffold-pole across the Great Northern line at Crouch-end. His father had to pay 10s. cost, and enter into recognisances to bring him up for judgment when called upon.

At Brighton Petty Sessions, on Wednesday, Lord Macdonald was charged by the Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals with cruelly beating a bay mare on Sunday night last. It appeared from the evidence that Lord Macdonald had hired a pair of horses from a livery-stable keeper at Brighton to drive to the Dyke, on returning from which he flogged one of the animals unmercifully with a thick stick. The Bench inflicted the penalty of £5 and costs.

James Godwin, twenty-seven years of age, who, at the last session of the Central Criminal Court, pleaded guilty to the charge of murdering his wife, Louisa Godwin, by beating her on the head in a most brutal manner, was, on Monday, hanged within the walls of Newgate.

HOLIDAY AT RICHMOND.

The London world has a few places of repose and recreation within an hour's railway ride of its dusty, noisy streets and wearisome bustle of social vanity or commercial greed. One of the fairest and pleasantest scenes of its holiday resort is the little town on the Surrey bank of the Thames which was named by King Henry VII. after his own earldom, the name of which had sorely frightened his wicked predecessor, as Shakespeare represents, on the fatal eve of Bosworth. This town was before known as West Sheen; and the Royal Palace here, a favourite seat of the Plantagenets, where Edward III. died, was called Sheen Chase. A ruined gateway of Henry Tudor's palace may still be found; but how many of a hundred thousand visitors to Richmond care for its antiquarian relics? It is the river, the Park, the Terrace, the Star and Garter, and the gay company on Sundays and holidays in summer, that offer the strongest attractions. These features of a famous metropolitan paradise, such as it is, are shown in our page of small engravings, which every reader will at once understand, and recognise their particular subjects. Literary associations, just as little as the historical, are apt to engage the mind of the holiday Londoner in a place like this; or he might hear something quoted from Thomson and Collins, from Wordsworth and Walter Scott, in praise of the lovely landscape. It would be a great bore, which we gladly spare him, and leave him to amuse himself in his own way. Fine weather out of doors, upon the grass or upon the water; and a glass of wholesome beverage, no matter if champagne or if pale ale, when he sits to feast with his friends in the cheerful tavern—that is enough to make him happy for a few hours. That is what we have heartily wished for our holiday citizens to enjoy this Whitsuntide.

GREAT FLOODS IN TENNESSEE.

The recent disastrous outburst of waters from the Lower Mississippi, around New Orleans, was preceded by floods along the banks of the other large rivers that flow into the Mississippi, and of their tributaries. The Ohio, which joins the Mississippi at Cairo, receives from the State of Tennessee, on its left or southern bank, the Tennessee river and the Cumberland river. It may be remembered that here, on the Cumberland river, took place some of the most important military events in the Civil War, in the Western campaign of 1862. The swelling and overflow of this river, a month ago, presented an extraordinary spectacle. At Clarksville, near the northern boundary of Tennessee, the border of Kentucky, the appearance of the Cumberland was most remarkable. We are indebted to Dr. F. Wright, of that town, and to his neighbour, Mr. McCormac, the skilful photographer, for the four views shown in our Engravings. The following notes, dated April 29, are from Dr. Wright, to explain these illustrations:—

"Readers can form no conception of the enormous excess in the bulk of water now hurried from this point to augment the already overloaded Mississippi. They must study attentively the views we give them, and imagine the immense difference between these and the aspect of the same parts when viewed at low water. For this purpose turn to our Illustration No. 1, representing the bridge of the Louisville, Clarksville, and Memphis railroad from above. A structure of wood and iron is here seen rising from a foundation of stone piers just visible above the water. Seen at low water, this bridge is perched on stone piers 80 ft. high, around whose base brawls the Cumberland, an unnavigable stream, perhaps sixty yards wide. The difference of level as marked on this bridge between the present stage of water and the low stage of last August is 63 ft. Now look at No. 2, representing Front-street, Clarksville— or, rather, the place where Front-street ought to be. This row of buildings, forlorn and shabby as it looks, consists of the warehouses through which the largest tobacco trade in the Western States is transacted. There is no tobacco, however, in them now. It has all been removed to more recently built warehouses, in the upper part of the town, for fear of the flood. At low water these warehouses stand on a broad quay, from which a broader slope, forty or fifty yards in width, reaches down to the river, with which the warehouses communicate by drays. Photograph No. 3 represents the waste of waters as viewed from the railway bridge, looking obliquely across and down the river. The row of fence-rails, piled in clumps, marks the line of what are called the 'river banks,' being placed some ten or twelve yards inland from them. But these 'banks,' at low water, are not banks at all, but the brink of the ravine at the bottom of which runs the river. The photographer has, in this picture, managed to represent the turbid, rushing surface of the stream; but its impetuosity is shown by the eddy formed around the pier on the right of the picture. The tree on the left centre is exactly on the edge of the banks, and is expected to succumb to the torrent which is making wild work with its roots. In photograph No. 4 we see the river looking up stream. The building nearest the eye, in the centre of the view, is the remains of a saw-mill and lumber-yard destroyed by the flood. Just beyond this building a deep gully, dry at low water, opens into the river from the left hand. Front-street may again be traced in this view. Commencing with the planks partly immersed, in the foreground, it passes between the saw-mill and the little building in the left foreground, which is the business office of the saw-mill. It is thence continued by a wooden bridge over the gully above mentioned, now entirely submerged and probably destroyed. The house on the extreme left of the view is the point from which the view of the bridge (No. 1) is taken; all the others are taken from the bridge itself. The thin line of trees crossing the water marks the bank of the river, which here takes an abrupt turn to the right. The water beyond the trees is a lake, covering several hundred acres, formed by the overflow."

THE ROYAL ACADEMY BUILDING.

Five years have passed since the Royal Academy Exhibition of each returning May was removed from Trafalgar-square to the new palace of art and science on the site of Burlington House, Piccadilly. The stately saloons—finely proportioned, handsomely decorated, and for the most part, where the pictures are shown, perfectly lighted—are now familiar to everybody, since everybody in the world, within the last five years, has sometimes been in London; and this is the time to come, and this is one of the sights to see. It is now a twelvemonth since the facade of the new Royal Academy Building, as designed by Mr. Sidney Smirke, the architect, was revealed to view by opening the quadrangle in front of it, which is surrounded on three sides by the buildings for several learned societies. A view of the splendid Piccadilly front was given in our Journal last year, with a description of these buildings, designed by Messrs. Banks and Barry, and a brief historical notice of Burlington House. That elegant mansion, constructed about the end of the seventeenth century by Richard Boyle, second Earl of Burlington, has not been so much demolished as transformed; an upper story has been added, to contain the library of the Royal Academy, its diploma pictures and statues, and the Gibson collection of sculpture; the arcade and porch, too, are new external features. It is still Burlington House, though deprived of its double curving colonnade, a graceful Roman invention, which we regret to miss. The grand front pile in Piccadilly, however, with its noble archway beneath the central tower, massive and superbly ornate, is a sufficient compensation.

The Hon. C. W. St. Clair, Master of Sinclair, Sir John Marjoribanks, Bart., and Richard Trotter, Esq., have been gazetted as Deputy-Lieutenants for the county of Berwick.

Yesterday week the Worcestershire Regiment of Militia was inspected by Colonel White, who expressed his satisfaction with the personal appearance of the men and their conduct throughout the inspection.

The Incorporated Society of Attorneys and Solicitors of Ireland passed a resolution at their meeting in Dublin, on Saturday, expressing their opinion that, while the final court of appeal for Ireland, England, and Scotland should be the same, that court ought still to be the House of Lords.

The Edinburgh correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette telegraphed on Thursday as follows:—"Dr. Rainy has been elected successor to the late Dr. Candlish in the office of Principal of New College, Edinburgh. He has been Professor of Theology in the college since 1862. In the Free Assembly a bequest of £16,840 by the late John White, of London, was announced. The money is to be divided between the Free Church and the Edinburgh Infirmary."

The annual meeting of the Yorkshire Union of Mechanics' Institutes was held at Ripon on Wednesday, under the auspices of the Ripon Mechanics' Institute, of which the Marquis of Ripon is President. About 250 delegates were received in the Townhall by the Mayor and Corporation, and a meeting was afterwards held at the Public Rooms. Another was held in the evening, at which the Marquis of Ripon presided. He spoke of the good which had been done by mechanics' institutes during the last few years towards the spread of education. He recommended good lectures and good teachers, as usefulness depended upon the amount of efficiency in which a thing was done, and not upon the amount of things attempted. He did not believe a little knowledge was a dangerous thing, unless it was taken by the owner to be a great deal. He believed that the work of these institutes was becoming more and more earnest. Lord Lytton hoped that mechanics' institutes would not lose sight of the danger of supplying the luxury of knowledge where more elementary instruction was required. Sir Samuel Baker stated that education might be carried even in this country too far—that was, if they taught Greek and Latin, and not the arts and sciences requisite for the use of their country. He had seen a good deal of other nations, but had met with no men equal to English mechanics. Earl De Grey, M.P., then briefly addressed the meeting.

AMERICAN WATCH COMPANY.
It is generally known that the largest and most successful Watch Factory in the World is located in America. Yet such is the case. The American Watch Company, whose Works are at Waltham, Massachusetts, U.S.A., now manufacture over one hundred thousand Watches annually, and all of most excellent quality. This Company has been in operation about twenty years, and in that time has made and sold about eight hundred thousand Watches. In America Waltham Watches are regarded as standard time-keepers, and are universally used on all the numerous railway lines throughout the country. The American Watch Company was the first to apply machinery to all the details of watch-making, and has brought this system to great perfection. Probably no finer mechanism exists than that in the machines used at Waltham, and every part of the watch is made by systematic exactness. As a result, every movement of the same grade is precisely alike, and all the parts are interchangeable. Waltham Watches, as they are popularly known in America, are neat in appearance, substantial in construction, correct in performance, and not liable to get out of order; they are made both as key-winders and stem-winders, of six different sizes and of various grades. A very interesting pamphlet, illustrated with fine engravings, describing the manufacture of watches at Waltham, will be sent free of post to all who will write for it. Address, American Watch Company, 16, Hatton-garden, London.

BLACK SILKS.—"SANS RIVALE."
"Morning Post" of May 12, 1874, says:—"Of all the Black Silks introduced into this country, whether imported from the Continent or manufactured in Spitalfields, those sold by Messrs. Ford Brothers, of 121, Regent-street, bear the palm, and deservedly so. Their special make, which is appropriately called 'Sans Rivale,' is the manufacture of an eminent Lyons house, for which Messrs. Ford Brothers, the enterprising proprietors of the Japanese Alpaca, are appointed the sole agents. Ladies in ordering these Silks may do so with the greatest confidence, as the great feature in this make is that they do not cut in the wear. Patterns post-free.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found directed of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. With two rows of keys, four-foot and eight-foot tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 5 octaves, F to F. The combined keyboards have a compass of 64 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S NEW ORGAN MODEL. A Two Rows of Keys; Knee Pedal to Swells for upper row; five stops; four-foot, eight-foot, and sixteen-foot tone (sub-bass), adapted for Church or Drawing-Room. The appearance is elegant and the tone round and full. Price—Oak, 30s.; Rosewood or Walnut, 30s. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PORTABLE AMERICAN ORGAN, with automatic swell, compass four octaves, solid dark oak case (as supplied to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales). CRAMERS' HARMONIUMS.—Some years since Cramer and Co. found it necessary, on account of the French difficulties, as well as the advances made in prices by the manufacturers, to make these Instruments at their own factory. This best hands having been engaged and their operations greatly extended, Cramer and Co. now call special attention to their Harmoniums, which, among many other advantages, offer a more effective, as well as a greater variety of tone, and a larger number of speaking stops, at a price much below that of all other eminent makers. Specifications and estimates of special instruments, with any required combination of stops, furnished on application.

CRAMERS' 6-guinea HARMONIUM (4 octaves, in Oak, American Walnut, or Mahogany).

CRAMERS' 7-guinea HARMONIUM, 5 octaves.

STATE BALL AT BUCKINGHAM PALACE IN HONOUR OF THE EMPEROR OF RUSSIA.

THE CZAR'S VISIT TO ENGLAND.

The seven days' stay in England of his Majesty Alexander II., Emperor of Russia, ended with his departure, on Thursday week, from Gravesend for Antwerp and Brussels. Its successive incidents were related in our last with some minuteness, except the proceedings which are made the subjects of several illustrations in the present Number. These are the Review of Guards and other troops at Aldershot, on the Tuesday; the great Artillery Review on Woolwich-common, with the visit to Woolwich Arsenal, on the Wednesday; the Royal State Ball at Buckingham Palace, on the Tuesday night; the Concert at the Royal Albert Hall; and some features of his Majesty's Reception in the City of London.

PRESENTATION OF CITY ADDRESS.

The presentation at Guildhall, on the Monday, of the complimentary address of welcome to the Emperor from the City Corporation was a scene likely to be regarded hereafter as one of historic importance. It is therefore represented on our front page. The manner of performing this ceremonial has been described. The Town Clerk first read the resolution of the Court of Common Council. The City Recorder read the address. Lord Mayor Luak delivered the written copy of it to the Emperor, who accepted it, and handed it for safe keeping to one of the Russian Court officials. The Emperor then read, in English, with a slight foreign accent, his brief and suitable reply. The Lord Mayor introduced to his Majesty two members of the Corporation, Alderman Bealey and Mr. Deputy Hart, who had been engaged in preparing this municipal act of courtesy. The Emperor and all the Princes and Princesses were then invited to the luncheon in the Council Chamber. We have reported these proceedings. The address will be kept in a gold casket, now being manufactured by Mr. J. W. Benson, the design of which was shown to the Emperor. This work of art is of an elaborate character. It is of the Cinquecento style, of an oblong shape, and supported at each end by the Russian Imperial eagles, resting on balls of malachite. On the obverse side in the centre panel will be displayed in coloured enamel, on gold, the ceremony of presentation, the figures portrayed being actual likenesses of his Imperial Majesty and the Royal party, as well as those of the Lord Mayor and other officers of the Corporation. The smaller panels at each end will be filled in with scrolls in enamel of the Royal arms of England and Russia, and views of the Guildhall and St. Paul's. The centre panel on the reverse side will bear the recording inscription, and the smaller ones the arms of his Imperial Majesty and the Lord Mayor. The casket will be surmounted by a figure emblematical of Trade and Commerce, resting on the arms of the city of London; while the two fluted entwined pillars at each angle of the casket will represent the Thames and emblematically the Trade of the City, the whole being supported by four Russian Imperial eagles, enamelled and mounted with gold. The designer of this work for Mr. Benson is Mr. T. Walter Wilson, who was one of the most successful pupils of the School of Art at South Kensington.

Having dined, after his return from Guildhall, with the Duke of Cambridge and the Princes at Gloucester House, Park-lane, the Emperor went that evening to the Royal Albert Hall. His Majesty arrived at ten o'clock, after the first part of the concert. He sat in the Royal box, with the Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince of Wales, and the Duke of Edinburgh upon his left hand; the Princess of Wales, the Grand Duke Alexis, and Prince Christian upon his right. The performance included a selection of Russian sacred music, by the choir without accompaniment, under the direction of Mr. Arthur Sullivan. The "Hallelujah Chorus" of Handel and Mr. Sullivan's Festival Te Deum were not less effectively rendered. As the Royal Albert Hall itself is one of the sights of our metropolis for a visitor among us, we present an interior view of the building upon a grand occasion.

ALDERSHOT REVIEW OF TROOPS.

The military spectacle at Aldershot next day was managed exceedingly well. The number of troops was 14,920, including 2794 cavalry, with forty-eight guns. His Imperial Majesty, with the Grand Duke Alexis and the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, went from the Queen's private station at Nine Elms, on the South-Western line. They were met at this station by the Prince and Princess of Wales and Prince Christian. Starting at twenty minutes past ten, they got to Aldershot in about an hour, several directors of the railway company being in the train. The Duke of Cambridge, with his staff as Commander-in-Chief, had gone down an hour earlier.

The troops were drawn up for inspection in the Long Valley, under the orders of Lieutenant-General Sir James Hope Grant, G.C.B. There were the Cavalry Division, under Major-General Sir T. Macmahon; the Artillery, under Colonel Turner, both Horse and Field Artillery; the 1st Infantry Division, under Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar; and the 2nd Infantry Division, under Sir Alfred Horsford.

The Emperor and the Princes mounted their horses at Aldershot and rode upon the Common. His Majesty wore his dark green and gold Russian General's uniform, with the ribbon of the Garter, and a casque with white and red plumes; he sat on an iron-grey charger. The Grand Duke Alexis wore a similar uniform. The Prince of Wales had that of the Rifle Brigade, very nearly black, with the light blue ribbon of the Russian Order of St. Andrew; he rode a black horse. The Duke of Edinburgh wore the light blue uniform of a Russian Jäger regiment, of which the Duchess is honorary Colonel. The Duke of Cambridge, of course, had the scarlet uniform of Field Marshal, with the Russian Order. Prince Arthur, in the uniform of a Captain of the 7th Hussars, acted as his aide-de-camp. Prince Christian was in scarlet, with the Garter; the Duke of Teck had an Artillery uniform. The Princesses of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh were on the ground in a carriage and four. The first-named Princess had a dress white and purple; the Duchess was wrapped in a dust-coat. They were attended by Lady Frances Baillie and Mrs. Stonor.

The arrangement for the day was that the troops should be inspected in the Long Valley, and that the line, when the Staff had taken up its position, should sweep round on its right front and march past on the Steeplechase Course, returning afterwards to the valley for a sham fight. The saluting-point was marked by a small staff flying a Union Jack. At each corner of the Staff inclosure a tall pole was planted, our Royal standard being hoisted on one, and the Russian Imperial standard, a black eagle on a yellow ground, on the other. There were inclosures roped off for carriages and spectators.

The Emperor and Princes first rode along the lines, which began, on the right front, with Horse Artillery. Next these were the Household Cavalry, then dragoons and hussars, then came a corps of Engineers, then the Brigade of Guards, then Fusilier and Highland Brigades, then two more Brigades of Line battalions, then a sombre Brigade of Rifles, after which the line ended, near the flagstaff on Burn's-hill, with a contingent of Army Service men and their waggons. A field battery was posted a little further on, in readiness to fire the Royal salute; and the rest of the Field Artillery and the Engineer train were drawn up in rear of the line of troops. The bands were in the rear of their regiments.

The march past was done to perfection. The Cavalry bands, having been massed opposite the saluting-point, began their music as the Horse Artillery came up at a walk. But first came the Head-Quarter Staff. Prince Arthur passed in the line of aides-de-camp; and then the Duke of Cambridge, taking his place at the Emperor's side. General Sir Hope Grant, Colonel Sir Archibald Alison, Colonel Creslock, and the other members of the Aldershot staff rode up to the right of the bands. Then came Sir Thomas M'Mahon, at the head of his Cavalry Division. There were two batteries of Horse Artillery, under Colonel Tupper; the 1st Life Guards, under Colonel Bateson; the Queen's Bays, under Colonel Steward; and the Scots Greys, led by Colonel Nugent. The Light Brigade of Cavalry was commanded by Colonel Jenkins, and numbered three regiments—the Carabiniers, Lieutenant-Colonel Napier; the 19th and 20th Hussars, under Lieutenant-Colonels Craigie and Cotton. The Artillery of the First Division numbered eighteen guns, under Lieutenant-Colonel Curtis, and were followed by a detachment of Engineers. These were succeeded by the second battalions Grenadier and Coldstream Guards and the first and second of the Scots Fusiliers. The Brigade of Guards was under Colonel Bruce. The Guards went by very well indeed, and the Czar watched them intently. Next came the Fusilier Brigade, commanded by Major-General Herbert, and including the second battalion of the 21st, the two battalions of the 23rd, and the 104th. The Highland Brigade, under General Parke, consisted of the 42nd, 78th, 79th, and 93rd, marching to the sound of unnumbered pipes. The first real cheer was given to the favourite 42nd. The Infantry marched in columns of double companies, and it was a very happy idea to brigade together four regiments each of Fusiliers, Highlanders, and Rifles. The Second Division was commanded by Sir Alfred Horsford, who went by at the head of it with his staff. The leading Brigade was Major-General Erskine's, the first battalions of the 1st, 4th, and 19th Regiments, and the second battalion of the 24th. General Smith's brigade of the second battalions of the 14th and 16th and the 38th and 77th Regiments was followed by the Brigade of Rifles, under Lord Alexander Russell. After the first battalion of the 60th came the first, second, and third battalions of the Rifle Brigade, the Prince of Wales having placed himself at their head. The detachment of Army Service men and waggons which followed looked neat and smart, and the Russians seemed to take great interest in them. The march past over, the Infantry were again brought up, and went by in brigades, an imposing formation, but one which soon used up the twenty-four battalions. The Cavalry and Artillery then trotted past, and the parade was ended.

The sham fight was rather spoiled by the dust. The troops formed for attack at the north end of the valley, flanked by artillery and cavalry, and facing south from the line of the canal up the Long Valley on Burn's Hill and Plain. The heavy cavalry brigade having charged up the Long Valley, the light cavalry crossed Long Hill into the same ground and also made a charge. The First Division of Infantry attacked up the Long Valley, the Fusilier brigade leading in attack formation, the Guards and Highlanders following. The Second Division detached the Rifle Brigade to cover the right flank of the First Division; the Rifles moved through the woods, and aided the advance of the First Division by a flank attack. The fifth brigade of the same division was also detached to cover the left flank of the First Division; the fourth brigade covering the Guards and Highlanders as a reserve. The fire of the artillery covered all these movements. When the Fusilier brigade had been brought to a standstill the Guards and Highlanders advanced and charged, and then retired by battalions. At the conclusion of the sham fight the Royal party left the ground, and returned to London by special train at half-past four o'clock.

BALL AT THE PALACE.

The state ball given at Buckingham Palace, on the Tuesday evening, by command of the Queen, was a brilliant assembly. The Emperor of Russia and the Grand Duke Alexis were attended by all the officers of her Majesty's household. The Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, Prince Arthur, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duke of Teck, and Prince Louis of Battenberg were present at the ball. The Yeomen of the Guard were on duty in the Palace, and a guard of honour of the first battalion Grenadier Guards was in attendance. The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Imperial visitors and the members of the Royal family, conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, entered the saloon at a quarter before eleven o'clock, when dancing commenced. Ooote and Tinney's band was in attendance, conducted by Mr. Ooote. The Queen's piper, Mr. Ross, played the music for the Scotch reel, which was danced before the Emperor of Russia. The flowers and plants used in the decoration of the saloons of Buckingham Palace were of a very choice description. They comprised some of the finest pelargoniums ever produced, principally dark varieties, and yellow flowers intermixed with lilacs of the valley, black and yellow being the Imperial colours. They were supplied by Mr. J. Wills, of the Royal Exotic Nursery at South Kensington.

WOOLWICH ARSENAL.

On Wednesday, between ten and eleven, the Emperor and the Princes went to Woolwich by the South-Eastern Railway. The Emperor was accompanied by the Grand Duke Alexis, and was attended by Count Schouvaloff, Admiral Popoff, Prince Dolgorouky, and other Russians, with Lord Torrington, Lord Charles Fitzroy, and others deputed by the Queen. The Prince of Wales wore, out of compliment to Woolwich, the dark blue and silver uniform of the Norfolk Artillery Militia, and the Duke of Cambridge appeared as Colonel of the Royal Regiment of Artillery. The Duke of Edinburgh wore again the uniform of the Russian Jäger Regiment, on the rolls of which his Royal Highness's name was inscribed a few days before his marriage. Prince Christian and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar went down by the special train. At Plumstead the train was backed on to the Government Arsenal Railway, and drew up at a platform built for the occasion opposite the Gun Factory. Here the Emperor and the Princes were received by Sir David Wood, Commandant at Woolwich, and Sir John Aclay, Director-General of Artillery, Colonels Campbell, Milward, and Field, superintendents respectively of the gun factory, laboratory, and carriage departments. Colonel Goodenough, Sir David's Assistant Adjutant-General, Major Hall, Assistant Quarter-master-General, and many more officers, were present, and followed his Majesty and the Princes through the workshops.

The Arsenal Staff conducted the Imperial and Royal party, joined by Mr. Gatherne Hardy and Lord Eustace Cecil, across to the ceiling mill. The chief of each department acted as guide in his own factory. In one of the rooms were several finished guns and specimens of ammunition; in another the Emperor was shown how the huge pieces, having been fashioned in the rough, were converted into smoothly-polished shot or shell. The coiling of a wrought-iron bar for the front portion of the breech coil for a 38-ton gun was shown. The Pattern-

Room is stored with exact duplicates of most of the guns in the British service, from the little mountain piece, throwing a seven-pounder shot, to the 9-inch gun, that weighs 12½ tons. The Emperor's attention was called by the Duke of Cambridge to the sectional models of the Woolwich Infant and the monster of 80 tons that is to be made.

The party made their longest halt in the factory where the Nasmyth hammer, the largest in the world—fitted with top steam—is worked. Adding to the 40 tons dead falling weight of the hammer the 51 tons added by a full pressure of steam above, a blow equivalent to a weight of 91 tons can be given by it with as much control as a child may exercise over a toy-mallet. The Imperial party occupied a specially erected platform to witness the welding of the trunnion coil of a 38-ton gun. The Czarwitsch last year witnessed a similar process with the trunnion coil of a 35-ton gun. The massive door of the furnace was raised, and in a fire terrible from the fierceness of its glow stood the white-hot coil—a cylinder weighing 23½ tons. This trunnion coil consisted of two thicknesses of bar-iron, coiled one upon the other. The work of the steam-hammer was to weld them into a homogeneous cylindrical mass. The powerful crane was set in motion, and the smiths sprang to the beautifully adjusted machinery. The fiery mass was seized by giant tongs, swung glowing and hissing out of the fire, and placed under the hammer. Blasts of hot air rushed across towards the spectators, but the size of the building rendered eye protectors unnecessary. The coil was welded effectually—the very floor, though its foundations are on a rock, vibrating with the tremendous blows. The force wielded by a dozen men at the lever of the crane was astounding; yet the hammer was subject to a steam power even more formidable. The visitors passed hurriedly through the heavy turnery and sighting room, where they might see thick slabs of metal peeled off the partly built guns, as by a knife. Without bestowing more than a passing glance at the great guns on the lathes, they went into the yard outside to witness the shrinking on of the breech coil of a 35-ton gun. This was conducted in the open air. Near the spot a number of heavy guns had been collected. These monsters were littered all about on the ground; they were of eighteen, twenty-five, and thirty-five tons. One huge fellow weighed thirty-eight tons. In the harness stores the visitors threaded their way through immense quantities of saddlery and other equipments. They passed on to the manufactory of Palliser shot, and thence to the carriage department. Here the parts of a wheel were fitted together in a minute in a hydraulic press. Many other operations were shown, but they are such as every visitor to the Arsenal is familiar with. The attention with which the Emperor listened to the explanations of the superintendents of the different departments was noticed.

WOOLWICH ARTILLERY REVIEW.

Leaving the Arsenal in carriages, his Majesty and the Princes arrived at the Artillery Barracks shortly before one o'clock. The cadets of the Academy were drawn up in a neat and smart-looking double rank on the gravel space in front of the mess-room. The Prince Imperial was there, carrying a carbine, and both the Emperor, who inspected the cadet company, and the Grand Duke Alexis, shook hands with him as they passed along the line. He afterwards joined the Emperor's party. There was some waiting before lunch, for the Princess of Wales had not yet arrived from town. But after a quarter of an hour the scarlet jackets of the outriders were seen among the trees beyond the Repository; two carriages and four came and drew up before the mess-room. In the first carriage were the Princess of Wales, the Duchess of Edinburgh, and Princess Christian. The other carriage brought the Duke and Duchess of Teck. The Emperor, Princes, Princesses, and invited guests, to the number of about eighty in all, went to lunch in the Artillery mess-room. The Duke of Cambridge, as host, sat at the head of the table. Mr. Smyth's band played before the windows during lunch, which lasted an hour and a half.

By three o'clock all was ready for the afternoon review. The Common had been cleared, and a large force of troops kept back the crowds which pressed everywhere. The batteries were drawn up in a long line facing the Academy, six of Horse and ten of Field Artillery, ninety-four guns in all. The first line was composed of six batteries of Royal Horse Artillery—namely, the A, B, D, and G batteries of the B brigade, under the command of Colonel the Hon. E. T. Gage, C.B.; and the A and B of the depot brigade, commanded by Lieutenant-Colonel S. H. Denne. Behind these stretched the second line, made up of nine batteries of field artillery—the A, B, and E of the fourth brigade, commanded by Colonel Radcliffe; the H, I, and K of the fourteenth brigade, commanded by Colonel Hawkins, C.B.; and the A, B, and C of the depot brigade, commanded by Colonel Ritters. At the extreme left of this second line was posted a single battery (four guns) of 40-pounders, under the command of Major Carey. To each of these largest guns twelve horses were attached; all the other guns were drawn by six horses. The guns of the Royal Horse Artillery were, as usual, 9-pounders, and most of those in the field batteries were 16-pounders; but part of the fourteenth brigade were furnished with 9-pounders. It is in contemplation for the future to supply the batteries in the field brigades with 9-pounder and 16-pounder guns alternately.

His Majesty and the Princes mounted their horses and rode upon the review-ground. The four Princesses were in a carriage, followed by their ladies in two other carriages. The Imperial party proceeded along the line of Royal Horse Artillery from right to left, then, turning, went back along the front of the Royal Artillery, and galloped across to the saluting-point. Quick as were their movements, they were scarcely in place before the Royal Horse Artillery were in position to complete the march-past. This was admirably precise and regular. The sixteen batteries, having first walked past the saluting-point, were afterwards brought on (with the exception of the 40-pounders) by divisions of two batteries at a trot; after which the six light batteries galloped past in fine style. Meantime the Field Batteries had formed line a quarter of a mile off, ready to advance and come into action as soon as the horse artillery had passed. The bugle sounded and on they came, sixty pieces in a row, stretching all across the Common. Another bugle-call, and in an instant they halted and unlimbered, the guns were wheeled round, the horses and limbers retired to the rear, and the guns opened fire in a minute. The long line flashed and smoked and thundered; then the horses were trotted quickly forward, and front was changed to the left by divisions of three batteries, the guns of the left division opening fire. The field batteries now retired, and the Horse Artillery advanced in line at a gallop, bearing straight down on the Staff and the crowds of spectators. "Action front" was the word, and the effect was most startling. The Horse Artillery having executed some further manœuvres, all the batteries formed line, and came forward at a trot. The Emperor, the Princes, and the Staff advanced, the halt was called, swords drawn, and the Royal salute given, the bands playing the Russian Hymn and "God save the Queen." The Emperor rode forward towards Sir David Wood, with whom his Majesty shook hands, and thanked him, saying it was "splendid and magnificent." The illustrious party then returned to London.

The dinner given by the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs that evening to the Emperor, and the subsequent reception held by Lady Derby, was a brilliant close to the round of entertainments in honour of the Imperial guest.

DEPARTURE FROM GRAVESEND.

The Emperor's departure, on Thursday week, was an occasion for the manifestation of sincere public feeling. His last act before leaving London, was to attend Divine worship, with his son and daughter, at the Russian Chapel in Welbeck-street. Immediately after his Majesty's return to Buckingham Palace, at noon, he and his son drove to the railway at Charing-cross, with the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, Prince Christian, the Duke of Cambridge, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, who accompanied our Imperial guests to their embarkation at Gravesend. The Emperor wore the uniform of a Russian Admiral; the Grand Duke Alexis and the Duke of Edinburgh wore also in the Russian naval uniform; the Prince of Wales wore the Trinity House uniform, and the other Princes that of an English General. The Princess of Wales was in a black dress relieved by maize yellow; the Duchess of Edinburgh wore a magenta-coloured dress, over which was a brown shawl.

At the Gravesend station was drawn up a guard of honour from the 82nd Regiment; and here, too, were in waiting the Mayor of Gravesend (Mr. W. Lake) and the Town Clerk. No time was wasted. Escorted by a troop of the 7th Hussars, under Captain Prince Arthur, and preceded by the Mayor in his private carriage, the Royal carriages, eight in number, passed quickly along the streets through hearty greetings from pavement, house-top, and window, down to the pier. Here, again, were soldiers—a guard from the 10th Regiment; and here, of course, the crowd was thickest and the greeting warmest.

His Majesty had just received a telegram from the Empress of Russia, which the Mayor handed to him. Having read and handed the message first to his daughter, and then to his son, his Majesty, addressing the Mayor, said in excellent English, "I am glad to see you, Mr. Mayor, and also to see Gravesend looking so beautiful." His Worship bowed his acknowledgment of the gracious salutation; and then, after a brief pause, the Emperor gave his arm to the Princess of Wales, and walked down the pier to the landing-stage, followed by the Prince of Wales, who escorted the Duchess of Edinburgh, and by the Duke of Edinburgh and the Grand Duke Alexis. The suite brought up the rear. The pier was decorated with flags, as when the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh made their entry; there were the hanging baskets of flowers, and the pretty children wearing straw hats trimmed with blue ribbon, and bearing the name "Marie." A large number of ladies had gathered on the pier. These respectfully saluted the Royal party as they passed along the carpeted way. The landing-stage was prettily draped with Russian and English flags.

The Imperial yacht Derjava and Livadia and the Russian corvette Vitiaz lay in the middle of the Thames. The river was crowded with yachts, schooners, steamers, and boats, amongst which was the ironclad Triumph. One of the boats of the Vitiaz was in waiting at the foot of the landing-stage, and into this descended the Emperor, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Prince and Princess of Wales, and Prince Arthur. The Russian oarsmen rowed with such vigour that in about five minutes the Emperor and those accompanying him were on board the corvette, astern of which was the Livadia, the Derjava just behind her. The scene on the river was extremely fine. The sun shone, the east wind rippled the water, so that its little waves glistened like silver. The seamen of the Vitiaz and her Majesty's ship Triumph manned their yards; the Russian and English flags were flying on all sides. The music of the Russian National Anthem, played by the Marines' band on board the Triumph, could be just heard by those ashore. The guns of the ships thundered a salute as the Emperor crossed over to the Vitiaz. Here his Imperial Majesty stayed some time before going aboard the Livadia, and subsequently the Derjava. The English Princess, the Princess of Wales, and the Duchess of Edinburgh returned to shore at ten minutes past three, the Russian yacht and the English man-of-war saluting, the Marines' band on board the Triumph playing "God Bless the Prince of Wales," and the seamen and spectators cheering meanwhile. The Emperor was then rowed aboard the Derjava, whose golden double eagle, placed as figure-head, shone in the May sunshine. Steam was quickly got up, and at half-past three the Derjava slipped her moorings and steamed slowly down the river, followed by the Livadia and the Triumph. His Imperial Majesty stood on the paddle-box as the yacht moved away. He waved his flat cap repeatedly to the people on shore, who replied by waving their handkerchiefs and hats, and by cheering lustily. A short distance below, at Thames Haven, the ironclads were waiting, with steam up, to escort the Derjava. It was about a quarter past six in the evening when the guns of the Channel squadron thundered England's farewell to the Emperor of Russia. The squadron parted with the Royal yacht about eight miles below the Nore, and came to an anchor for the night near the lighthouse. The Emperor and the Grand Duke, his son, crossed safely to Flushing that night, landing at five o'clock next morning. They were received by the King of the Netherlands and Princes Henry and Alexander. After a short stay, his Majesty went on to Brussels, where he was entertained by the King and Queen of the Belgians; he thence proceeded to Ems.

KING CHARLES AT CHELSEA.

The Royal hospital for aged and disabled soldiers at Chelsea, which we have repeatedly described and illustrated, was founded in 1682, by King Charles II. The merit, indeed, of this patriotic and benevolent act belongs to Sir Stephen Fox, the ancestor of Lord Holland's family, who was then Paymaster or Treasurer of the Army. Two other contemporary persons, of very different characters, John Evelyn and Nell Gwyn, joined their praiseworthy efforts to procure the establishment of this great national charity—or, rather, of this just and due provision for the country's worn-out defenders. The ground at Chelsea was the site of a projected Protestant theological college in the time of James I., but was not built upon, and Charles II. first gave it to the Royal Society, which sold it for £1300 to Sir Stephen Fox, for the soldiers' hospital. It was on Feb. 16, 1662, that King Charles laid the first stone of the present building. The architect was Sir Christopher Wren, and the cost £150,000. Its extensive front, of red brick and stone, in blocks of harmonious proportions, the gardens before and behind, and the avenues of limes and chestnuts, are familiar objects in London. So are the old pensioners, lounging about that part of town, in their long scarlet coats with blue facings, or sometimes blue overcoats, and three-cornered cocked hats, the uniform of those who fought under the Duke of Marlborough, a hundred years before the Duke of Wellington's battles. These poor old fellows are taught to revere the memory of Nell Gwyn's Royal master as the noblest of British monarchs and heroes. See where his Majesty stands, in the armour of a Roman warrior, sculptured by Grinling Gibbons, erected in the central quadrangle which overlooks the Thames! On the 29th of May, which is Oak-apple Day—as it is the birthday of this beloved Prince, who once escaped the search of Cromwell's troopers in the leafy branches of an oak—the military veterans of Chelsea do homage to their founder's statue. Its inclosure railing is adorned with the boughs of Old England's emblematic tree. The men are paraded before the Colonel or other commanding officer. They give three cheers for King Charles I. and there is no harm in the fond old custom. But we should like to know if they did so in the time of the Young Pretender? And, if they did, was not the loyalty of some men from Highland regiments likely to be put to a shrewd test by that equivocal name of a King?

NEW BOOKS.

The special correspondent of the Standard in the Ashantee War, Mr. G. A. Henty, publishes a volume bearing the title of The March to Coomassie (Tinsley Brothers). It is a very fair account of the proceedings of Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition. Mr. Henty has seen a good deal of war in different parts of the world. He is more especially conversant with the details of the Control, or commissariat and transport services. These he rightly considers of the most vital importance to a campaign of British troops; while they are confessedly the weaker parts of our military system. The officers, indeed, of the Control Department on the Gold Coast performed their work extremely well. Colonel Colley, whom Sir Garnet Wolseley appointed to its direction, obtains the highest praise. But the department was not so strong as it ought to have been, and the transport had nearly broken down. Mr. Henty, who witnessed the Abyssinian campaign, and was actually employed in the commissariat service of our army in the Crimea, is a competent judge of these matters. He disapproves of the present Civil Service organisation of the Control Department. In his discreet and moderate criticism of purely military affairs on the Gold Coast, this author deserves more consideration than Mr. H. M. Stanley, whose tone is not so pleasant. Mr. Henty presents a clear and distinct conception of the plan of Sir Garnet Wolseley's strategy from the beginning. The earlier operations, by which the Ashantee army was compelled to quit its threatening position near Elmina and Cape Coast Castle, and to retire beyond the Prah, are clearly placed in view. Of the defence of Abakrampa, too, which was not the least interesting action of this war, a spirited narrative is here supplied. In that instance alone does it seem that there was something like tardy slackness of movement on the part of the chief command. Certain measures for the relief of the beleaguered garrison were not so prompt and alert as they might have been. Sir Garnet Wolseley, indeed, was taken ill about that time, and may not have been wholly himself upon the occasion. The later events of the campaign, the march to the Prah and onward through Assin, the battle of Amoaful, and the destruction of Coomassie, are described in a style that is vigorous and animated, but quite unaffected. If all the special correspondents had this merit like Mr. Henty, our daily newspapers would be more agreeable reading.

A tour in the land of old Nile, the Sphinx, and the Pyramids is still an occasion for the making of many books, though we have so often heard of those things before. The Fayoum, or Artists in Egypt (H. S. King and Co.), is from the French of M. Paul Lenoir, one of a party who visited that once venerable corner of the East, with Sinai and Petra, to procure subjects for their skill with the pencil. The Fayoum is a province of Middle Egypt, to the west of the Nile above Memphis, where the lake Birket Keroum, or Meris, with the canal of Joseph, and a complicated system of dykes and trenches, have produced much agricultural wealth. The chief town, Medinet-el-Fayoum, which is now connected by railway with Cairo, seems to be a lively place. Many of the inhabitants are of the ancient Christian race, the Copts. But this district, though it pleased M. Lenoir and lends its name to his book, really occupies very little space in the small volume. Cairo, with its picturesque crowd of quaint old buildings and Oriental costumes, the stupendous antiquities of Ghizeh, the diverting experiences of a ride through the Desert and life in a tent, are spoken of in a tone of frank enjoyment. After seeing the pilgrim procession of the Holy Carpet, and submitting to the laborious but voluptuous ordeal of a Turkish bath, M. Lenoir and his comrades travelled over the Isthmus of Suez to look at the "Biblical" mountains of Sinai and the rock-hewn city of Petra. We find this book very agreeable light reading.

The case of Mr. David Ker, special correspondent of the Daily Telegraph in Central Asia, at the time of the Russian Expedition to Khiva last year, has perhaps not been forgotten. It was discovered that one of his letters to that paper contained a graphic portrait of a Tartar chief, supposed to have been met by him on the banks of the Volga, and that this description was in substance identical with one he had before written in All the Year Round, with reference there to a Tartar chief he had met near Sebastopol. The fact was neither more nor less than that he had made use twice, in his contributions to different journals, of a typical figure, representing the character of an Asiatic race and class, to be found in many places around the Black Sea and the Caspian. It was not quite fair to his employers, the editors and proprietors of those journals, to serve either of them with literary matter, professing to be original, which had been used elsewhere. But "the very head and front" of Mr. Ker's offending had this extent and no more. Too much was made of the affair, which ought not to have been supposed to cast doubt upon the reality of his travels in Western and Central Asia. Mr. Ker did actually make his way, in the summer months of 1873, from Orenburg, on the Ural, to Fort Kasalinsk, on the Syr Daria, the ancient Jaxartes; and thence, after several weeks' detention, up the Syr Daria to Turkestan, and to the large commercial city of Tashkend, whence he advanced to Samarcand, near Bokhara. These towns, situated far beyond Khiva, are within the present limits of the Russian Empire. But the Russian military authorities did not allow Mr. Ker to get to Khiva. He returned in the autumn, by the same route that he had travelled in May. Yet, although he had failed in his undertaking to report the campaign of General Kaufmann, he had seen much that is of permanent interest, which he relates in a volume now before us (published by Messrs. H. S. King and Co.). Its title, On the Road to Khiva, seems hardly appropriate. But, taken as a survey of the lately annexed Turkish provinces of the Omar's empire, not including what may have been gained more recently on the Amou Daria or Oxus, we find Mr. Ker's book full of information. Its statements may be compared with the views in Mr. Vambery's historical and political essays, or with the Russian treatise on "Khiva and Central Asia," translated by Captain Spalding, which we noticed last week. Mr. Ker's narrative of his personal adventures and exploits is interesting, though too egotistical; but his self-esteem has been wounded by the harsh treatment that his reputation endured last year, when he was far away from London, and could not defend himself. We hope he will soon have an opportunity of wiping out that disagreeable recollection by performing fresh services as a travelling observer and describer of some remote parts of the world.

The only reason for coupling together Master Spirits, by R. Buchanan (Henry S. King and Co.), and Peeps into the Human Hive, by Andrew Wynter, M.D., M.R.C.P. (Chapman and Hall), is not that similar subjects are handled by both authors, but that the two works belong to the same category, inasmuch as each contains—the former in one volume and the latter in two volumes—a republication of fugitive essays originally contributed to various periodicals, and now presented to the public in a different form and on their own merits, without the assistance or the hindrance (for periodicals have their determined foes as well as their staunch friends) of their primary associations. Mr. Buchanan is by this time—not without the help of that anonymous criticism which he considers so objectionable—securely established in no mean position among our poets; and there may be many who, unable or unwilling to hunt up his scattered pieces of prose, may be glad to read what he has to say, in the critical and the philosophical vein, about other more or less successful competitors, dead and living, in the arena of literature. His lofty and lordly tone, when he contemptuously puffs aside poor Tomkins and other anonymous critics or criticsasters, is likely to raise a smile upon the lips of those who seem to remember that he commenced his career in the preface, if memory may be trusted, of "Undertones" with something strongly resembling an appeal ad misericordiam. But it was well said by the Greek tragedian that Koros breeds Hybris. The question of anonymous criticism is, no doubt, a difficult one, and not to be discussed in a small space, but just a few remarks may be made upon it: as we say "measures not men," so we would say "criticisms not critics;" as there must be a beginning of everything, an unknown and, figuratively, nameless critic would be, to all intents and purposes, worse than an anonymous, who may be, for all the world knows, "somebody in particular," and, if what he says is sound, cannot be sneered down because he is "somebody nobody knows;" as Mr. Buchanan himself allows that "in many cases the anonymous is a mere cloak, and everybody knows whom it conceals," he, so far as "many cases" are concerned, answers his own objections; lastly, to be anonymous is almost the only way, though it is not at all a sure one, of escaping the pertinacity of these uncondemnable authors who would fain make criticism a personal matter and their rubbish a subject of endless correspondence. It may be added that few papers have room enough to admit of a criticism properly worked out, and that the anonymous writer of a mere notice probably has no idea of doing more than throwing out a few hints from which the public may be led to conclude whether it would or would not be worth while to taste and try for themselves. And, alight as these notices necessarily are, nobody, perhaps, knows better than Mr. Buchanan himself how authors do hunger and thirst after them, and only object to them, for being anonymous or what not, when they are not exactly—and extremely—laudatory. So much for Mr. Buchanan and the anonymous. His own criticisms, when he ventures to be the critic as well as the student of his "master-spirits," are anything but anonymous, and, according to his own theory, have just so much weight as is attached to his name. An American senator, when delivering a funeral oration over another senator whom he had just had the misfortune to kill in a duel arising from a difference about legislation, is reported to have said, "He was middlin' on 'esses; he warn't no account at legislatin'." And if it should be held that Mr. Buchanan is "middlin' in poetics, and no account at criticism" he will, at any rate, have the satisfaction of feeling that he did his best by openly subscribing his distinguished name to prevent so singular a conclusion. As for Dr. Wynter, who dubs himself "a snapper-up of unconsidered trifles," he is well known to be a very popular writer of articles relating to matters of popular interest; and one would feel quite safe in asserting that his two volumes do not contain a single essay which will not have some sort of attraction for one class or another of the community. One would not, however, feel quite so safe in affirming that he is an infallible authority; not that he has been caught tripping, but that his range is so vast and his subjects are so miscellaneous as to render an occasional slip almost inevitable. He seems to have something to say about everything that goes on in this busy world. Nihil non tetigit, one might be inclined to exclaim; but there is a sense in which one would not even mutter to oneself—omne quod tetigit ornavit.

A touch of Darwinism makes two works kin; and their titles are, respectively, Man and Apes, by St. George Mivart, F.R.S., V.P.Z.S. (Robert Hardwicke), and Darwinism and Design; or, Creation by Evolution, by George St. Clair, F.G.S., M.A.L., &c. (Hodder and Stoughton). The former professes to be "an exposition of structural resemblances and differences bearing upon questions of affinity and design," and is profusely illustrated; the latter purposes "to illustrate the wisdom and beneficence of the Almighty in the evolution of living things," and, being of a nature unadapted for illustrations, is unillustrated. The former confronts the reader with facts and consequent inferences drawn from the study of physical, chiefly anatomical, science; the latter plies him with all sorts of arguments based both upon fact and upon speculation. Properly to discuss such works would require a volume of many pages and a special course of mental discipline; it must suffice here to recommend them to the notice of all whom they may seem to concern.

A popular writer becomes the friend of the public; and between friends there is always a cordial understanding which invests no matter what written or spoken communication with an interest and an importance independent of intrinsic qualities, so that a large coterie of readers may probably derive a satisfaction heightened by friendly sentiments from Holiday Letters, by M. Betham-Edwards (Strahan and Co.). And the letters, though they contain no information that is likely to be of service to the world in general, and indeed, are not remarkable for anything in particular, have certainly the charm of an easy, a sprightly, an ingenuous, a thoroughly feminine style. Alexandria, Smyrna, Athens, Weimar, and other places not thoroughly investigated by Mungo Park and his more recent and adventurous successors, were visited by the writer of the letters, who has recorded such facts as a host of amiable ladies will consider extremely interesting. Who says Weimar, says Goethe. Goethe, as is well known, wrote a few poems; and a mortal writing about Weimar could hardly be expected to abstain from padding the letter or letters with quotations from those poems. It is scarcely necessary to say that the author of "Holiday Letters" is a mortal; but the padding is that of a very considerate mortal.

The new baths and lecture-hall for Kennington were opened, last Saturday, by the London Swimming Club, under Mr. Elliott's management, when a series of feats of swimming was given by members of the club. The bath is named the Crown Baths, and is in the rear of the Oval.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

"Der Freischütz" was given, for the first time this season, yesterday (Friday) week, with a cast almost identical with that of the two performances of last season. Mdle. D'Angeri as Agata sang with enhanced success, particularly in the great scene, known in the English version as "Softly sighs," and in the cavatina of the last act. Mdle. Bianchi as Annetta sang so well in the duet with Agata, and was so much applauded in her solo pieces, the polacca-aria and the romanza, that she will probably be much more heard of, this having been only her second appearance. M. Faure was the same picturesque Caspar as formerly, and his singing in the "revenge" scene and the drinking song (the latter encored) was as fine as ever. Signor Rottini also gained special applause by his very effective delivery of Max's scene in the first act. The small part of the principal bridesmaid was assigned to Mdle. Cottino, and other characters were as before—Ottocar, Signor Rossi; Kuno, Signor Raguer; Kiliano, Signor Tagliafoco; the Hermit, Signor Capponi. The overture and the "Huntmen's chorus" were encored. Signor Bevigiani conducted, as on Thursday and Friday—the performances of Monday, Tuesday, and Saturday having been directed by Signor Vianesi.

On the last-named evening "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was given, for the first time this year, in the Italian version, as produced here in 1873, and also with Madame Adelina Patti as the representative of the principal character (Caterina), the singing of this great artist having again been of superlative excellence throughout the performance. In the execution of the aria with variations in the second act Madame Patti's brilliancy of voice, refinement of style, and finished mechanism drew forth enthusiastic applause; a display of almost equal excellence having been her florid vocalisation in the aria introduced in the last finale. Madame Sinico was again the Diana, and the belero-duet for her and Caterina was encored, as before. Other characters were also mostly as formerly—Rebolledo, Signor Ciampi; Campo-Mayor, Signor Tagliafoco, &c.; the part of Sebastiano having properly been assigned to a tenor (Signor Sabater), instead of being transferred to a baritone, as before.

On Monday "Guglielmo Tell" was repeated, with M. Faure's resumption of the title-character—the cast in other respects having been the same as that recently noticed.

On Tuesday "Ernani" was given, for the first time this season, with the fine performance of Madame Adelina Patti as Elvira.

For Thursday "Lucia di Lammermoor" was announced; for Friday, "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," and for this (Saturday) evening, "Faust," with the début of Mdle. Clemence Calasch as Siebel.

The third Floral Hall Concert of the season takes place this (Saturday) afternoon.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

As mentioned last week, Signor Campanini reappeared on the Thursday of that week, as Gennaro in "Lucrezia Borgia," the character in which he made his début in this country, in May, 1872. His reception on his reappearance was of the most enthusiastic kind, encores having been awarded to his solo in the first scene, "Di Pescatore Ignobile," and in the trio in the second act "Qual se ti sfugge," a prominent feature in which was Signor Campanini's delivery of the passage beginning "Meo benigni," in which his resonant high chest notes and good cantabile style were well displayed. The cast of the opera was in other respects also mostly as before, including the fine performances of Mdle. Titiens as Lucrezia and Madame Treball-Battini as Maddio Orsini. Signor Rota was again the Duke, and other characters were filled as before.

Mdle. Singelli maintains the favourable impression already produced by her refined and brilliant singing in the principal character of Auber's "Caterina" ("Les Diamans de la Couronne"), the fourth performance of which took place on Saturday.

On Monday "Le Nozze di Figaro" was repeated; and on Tuesday "Lucrezia Borgia" was given again, with the same cast as on Thursday week.

For last Thursday, "Marta" was announced; and to-night (Saturday) Madame Christine Nilsson is to make her first appearance this season as Margherita in "Faust," the production of Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," being expected next week, with this great singer as the heroine.

The magnificent playing of the Russian pianist, Madame Esipoff, at the sixth of the New Philharmonic concerts (last week) elicited the most enthusiastic applause from an audience that comprised many professors and connoisseurs. Unbounded executive power, facile command of the greatest mechanical difficulties, a thorough control over every gradation of tone from grandeur to delicacy, rhythmic phrasing that denotes high intellectual perception—such are the merits of this admirable artist, as displayed in Rubinstein's fourth concerto and Liszt's "Hungarian Fantasia." Two recitals of pianoforte music have been announced by Madame Esipoff, at the first of which, on Wednesday afternoon, the programme comprised Beethoven's "Waldstein" sonata, and miscellaneous pieces by Bach, Field, Schubert, Mendelssohn, Chopin, Liszt, &c.

That excellent pianist Mdle. Marie Krebs gave the first of two recitals of classical and modern pianoforte music at St. James's Hall, on Thursday afternoon, when her programme comprised an interesting selection of pieces in various styles.

The Welsh Choral Union, under the direction of Mr. John Thomas, commenced its fourth season on Monday evening, at the Hanover-square Rooms.

Whit Monday (the bank holiday) was celebrated at the Royal Albert Hall by a concert of popular songs and ballads, sung by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Miss Anna Williams, Madame Patay, Miss Antoinette Sterling, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Mr. Maybrick. Mr. F. H. Cowen conducted.

Mr. E. H. Thorne, known as a skilful pianist, gave his pianoforte recital at the Hanover-square Rooms on Tuesday.

The annual concert of Mr. F. H. Cowen, who has frequently distinguished himself as a composer and a pianist, was to take place at Dudley House yesterday afternoon; when, also, M. Alphonse Duvernoy was to give his first pianoforte recital at the Hanover-square Rooms.

The fifth concert of the Philharmonic Society, on Monday evening, will bring back the eminent pianist, Herr Alfred Jaell, who is to play Beethoven's first concerto and the concert-stück of Robert Schumann.

Mr. Sims Reeves's benefit concert, which was announced for Monday next, is unavoidably postponed.

On Friday evening Miss Philp, well known as the composer of many successful songs and ballads, will give her annual concert at St. James's Hall; the programme of which includes the names of several eminent performers.

The concert announced by Mr. E. Silas for Saturday evening next, at St. George's Hall, will include his clever pianoforte-playing in pieces by himself and others.

This week's Saturday afternoon concert at the Crystal Palace—the third of the summer series—will be devoted to a performance of Signor Randegger's dramatic cantata, "Fridolin," which was produced at last year's Birmingham Festival.

THEATRES.

A new comedy, by Messrs. Henry and Athol Mayhew, was produced at the Haymarket on Monday, entitled "Mont Blanc." The work is of the picturesque order, and not a little ambitious in its treatment. Part of its plot is derived from "Le Voyage de M. Perrichon." The scene is on or near Mont Blanc, and the action that of tourists engaged in its ascent. Among them is one Mr. Chirpey, a London oil and Italian warehouseman, who seeks to place a bill of his "persuasive pickles," with the corresponding engraving, on the summit of the famous mountain. This character is represented by Mr. Buckstone, who invests it with all the humour of which it is capable. There is a multitude of other characters. Young Lord Silverspoon gives little opportunity to Mr. Buckstone junior. Somewhat better parts fall to the lot of Mr. Kendal and Mr. Howe, in the persons of Harold Marjoribanks and the Hon. Percy Cantilivre, two rival lovers, the former of whom is the more honourable, and consequently successful. Two foreign characters are introduced—Mr. T. S. Jerrold, as Le Capitaine Achille Fortinbras, and Mr. Everill, as Herr Professor Windbeutel; but they only serve to encumber the action. The ladies perhaps fare best. Mrs. Chippendale, as Mrs. Chirpey, and Miss Amy Roselle, as her daughter Florence, made the most of their rôles, and were decidedly successful. The main defect of the play is the poverty of its dialogue. The new scenes, by Messrs. O'Connor and Morris, were well painted and set; nevertheless, the performance failed to excite enthusiasm.

A new burlesque, of decided character, was produced at the Vaudeville on Saturday, under the title of "Here's Another Guy Mannering; or, The Original Hair Restorer." The title indicates the quality of the piece. The original situations are, of course, skilfully travestied, and the dialogue is replete with exuberant puns. There is much of the grotesque in the make-up of the characters; Mr. Thomas Thorne, as Mr. Henry Irving, is a wonderful specimen of the funny and the faithful in the part of Gilbert Glossin; scarcely second to which is that of Dirk Hatterick, by Mr. David James. The combat between them that subsequently takes place is frightfully exciting. Miss Kate Bishop personated the wandering heir, Henry Bertram; and Miss C. Richards the famous Meg Merrilies. At the conclusion no doubt remained but that a considerable success had been achieved.

There was a great house at the Globe, on Saturday, to witness the final performance of Mr. J. L. Toole in the new comedy of "Wig and Gown" and the old farce of "Ici On Parle Français." Mr. Toole made on the occasion a characteristic farewell speech.

Mr. Tom Taylor's new drama of "Clancarty" was performed, on Saturday morning, by the Olympic company, at the Gaiety, and commanded a large audience.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's Entertainment has now taken possession of St. George's Hall, and finds a sympathising audience. A new piece has been lately added to their repertoire. "Charity Begins at Home" now yields to a pleasing, sketchy affair, called "He's Coming; via Slumborough, Snootleton, and Snoreham." This is also written by Mr. F. C. Burnand. The chief scene is the Snootleton railway station; and here all manner of queer things are done, queer personages introduced, queer songs sung, and queer uses made of the telegraph. We cannot detail the characteristics of the thirteen characters that take part in the action, and which are excellently impersonated by Mr. and Mrs. Reed, Mr. Corney Grain, and Mr. Law. They were all exceedingly comic and clever, and are well calculated to delight a fashionable audience.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

SYMMETRY OF CRYSTALS.

Professor Maskelyne, M.A., keeper of the mineral department, British Museum, began his second lecture, on Thursday week, by saying that hitherto he had considered a crystal as a group of forms, but that now it would be considered as an assemblage of zones. He defined a zone on a crystal as a set of faces, like those of a prism, the edges between which are parallel to each other, and so to an imaginary line, drawn through a point taken for the centre of the crystal. This was elucidated by reference to beautiful models of crystals formed of wires differently coloured. He then alluded to the word "axis," as signifying any particular direction to which qualitative or quantitative properties may be referred, such as optic, thermic, or magnetic axes. Crystallographic axes are a sort of ideal scaffolding built up within the crystal, and fixed in place as in direction for quantitative comparisons; and symmetry axes are those round which the morphological features of the crystal are repeated at rhythmic intervals. The simplest way of considering the symmetry that the faces of a zone or crystal may present is to conceive the crystal as constructed in equipoise; a line parallel to the edges formed by the faces of the zone being supposed to pass through the centre or zone-axis, a plane through the centre perpendicular to this zone-axis being the zone-plane. The fundamental law of crystallography was then explained and illustrated, and also compared with that lying at the root of all chemical combinations. The faces forming a zone were stated to be obedient to a geometrical law connecting their mutual angular inclinations with their symbols; and the line of argument was indicated by which this law can be shown to impose restrictions on the sorts of symmetry possible in a crystal zone. Mr. Maskelyne then defined the nature of the symmetry that may be presented by the distribution of the faces in a zone, or by the sides of a crystal face, or by a complete crystal; and he referred to specimens and diagrams of the types of symmetry comprised under the six crystallographic systems—namely, 1, symmetry to a centre only, the anorthic system; 2, symmetry to one plane, the oblique system; 3, symmetry to three perpendicular planes, the orthorhombic system; 4, symmetry to five planes, the tetragonal system; 5, symmetry to seven planes, the hexagonal system; 6, symmetry to nine planes, the cubic or tesseral system. The types of symmetry possible in a crystal were shown to be thus limited, in consequence of planes of symmetry in a crystal, as in a zone, being able to meet each other only at right angles or at angles of 45, 60, or 30 deg. Mr. Maskelyne then proceeded to show, by a priori reasons, the sort of action which a crystal must present in modifying, for instance, a ray of light or radiant heat entering it perpendicularly to a zone-plane, of which the symmetry is tetragonal, trigonal, hexagonal, or orthorhombic. This he illustrated by experiments, showing the different effects produced by a crystal on a polarised ray of light. In the course of the lecture he explained the reason why crystals presented no case of pentagonal symmetry, a kind so frequent among flowers.

EDUCATION OF THE PEOPLE.

Professor W. Kingdon Clifford began his discourse at the evening meeting on Friday, the 23rd inst., by alluding to the due exercise of our activities in relation to the duties of self-preservation, parenthood, citizenship, and the advancement of civilisation; and specified the kind of knowledge to be acquired by way of preparation, which included physiology, physics, biology, and sociology, whereby we are better enabled to guide our actions. Education, he said, is commonly considered to be the acquirement of knowledge, but it is really learning to do something. This he illustrated by describing the way we learn to speak, read, and write our own or a foreign language—a process which at first costs us much pains and trouble, but afterwards is done automatically. Language is a means to enable us to express our thoughts, and primary education is therefore merely learning to use certain tools readily. This was further illustrated by referring to the way a child learns to use scissors and a boy to get on a horse: they are both directed by the knowledge of facts. Speaking of the highest education—literature, science, and history—the Professor said that cramming with facts is useless, unless these facts can be used freely as tools of thought, without considering whence the knowledge came. Proceeding to the subject of his discourse, he said that education ought to be the development of the individual and the consequent development of the race. In regard to the question, Who are the people? he adverted to the abstracts of the last Census of the population of England and Wales; and, taking 142 adult men, classified them into various kinds of workers:—On land, 27; on minerals, 22; in construction, 21; on materials and dress, 17; general labourers, 10; carriers, 10; indefinite, 5; mercantile, 4; servants, 3; grooms, 2; workers and dealers in food and drinks, 8; general dealer, 1; soldiers, 2; keepers of lodgings, 2; to which he added one magistrate, clergyman, doctor, lawyer, policeman, teacher, student, and sailor. After commenting on the subdivisions of these classes, on various circumstances connected with their occupations, and on the education they require, the Professor from the class engaged in construction selected, as the best typical case, the making the hand-railing of a staircase. By means of specimens and diagrams, he showed that this was a most difficult thing to do, and involved a profound geometrical problem, which would baffle many mathematicians, as the rail includes a double curvature. This problem was solved by Peter Nicholson, a workman, who invented the cylindrical method of cutting out rails, which had been further improved by another workman, John Weston. This indicates the kind of education needed by the people—that which will conduce to the free and perfect use of many tools, in opposition to the one-sidedness so apt to ensue from the division of labour, resulting from the increased employment of machinery. Adult workmen should be taught to use practically scientific ideas. They should be set thinking; and the first thing is to acquire the machinery of accurate thought. For this purpose Professor Clifford warmly advocated the teaching of geometrical and mechanical drawing as essential to the working classes, being to them fully as important as reading and writing. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., the treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

THE MOON, MARS, AND THE ASTEROIDS.

Mr. Richard A. Proctor, in his third lecture on the Planetary System, on Saturday last, resumed the consideration of the moon, and more particularly discussed the question whether she once possessed seas and an atmosphere. After examining various theories, including that advanced by Hansen, that perhaps there is water on the side of the moon which is invisible to us, Mr. Proctor said that he was disposed to accept the opinion of Frankland, that water formerly existed on the moon's surface, and that it had been absorbed into her interior, as the once incandescent nucleus cooled and contracted; there can consequently be no evaporation-producing clouds; and if there be an atmosphere, it must be of great tenuity. Mr. Proctor then entered upon the consideration of the planet Mars, illustrated by reference to large coloured pictures copied from telescopic observations, and a chart of the hemispheres (compiled by himself from Mr. Dawes's pictures), which exhibited the geographical features duly named; snow and ice appear to exist as in our own polar regions. After describing the present condition and probable past history of this planet, and pointing out analogies with our globe, he arrived at the conclusion that Mars has long since passed the stage when life such as we are familiar with could exist upon its surface in consequence of the extreme cold. He also explained the method by which various astronomers have endeavoured to find accurately the time that Mars takes to revolve on his axis—that is, its day—and he stated that he himself had calculated it to be 24 hours 37 min. 22.735 sec. Mr. Proctor then described the way in which Mr. Huggins had demonstrated the existence of water on the surface of the planet by the spectrum analysis of the vapour in its atmosphere. Finally, he commented on the asteroids, a zone of 136 small planets travelling between Mars and Jupiter, and expressed his opinion as adverse to the theory that they are fragments of a large planet which had exploded. The disturbing influence of Jupiter, he said, may possibly prevent their uniting to form one large planet.

The lecture this day (Saturday) will be devoted to Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune, illustrated by many photographs on glass, illuminated by means of the electric light.

STRINGED MUSICAL INSTRUMENTS.

Dr. W. H. Stone gave the first of a course of two lectures on the Theory of Musical Instruments on Tuesday last. In his introductory remarks he strongly advocated the increased cultivation of our minor senses, touch and hearing; referring, among other examples, to the power acquired by skilful musicians, whose very soul and character seem to stream forth from the tips of their fingers. In these lectures, he said, he desired to occupy the intermediate ground between treatises on acoustics and those on music, and that he wished to raise music from an art to a science by the application of scientific principles. After briefly referring to regular vibrations of the air producing musical tones, and to irregular vibrations creating mere noise; and stating that sound, like light, can be reflected and refracted, and that every musical sound is characterised by its loudness, pitch, and quality, he proceeded to consider more especially the vibration of strings. Proceeding, then, to stringed instruments, he alluded to the lute and the theorbo, or bass lute; and then noticed the crowd and the rebe, ancestors of the instruments in which the string is not struck, but rasped by a bow. The violin, the successor of the viol family, was first mentioned in 1596; but a rebeck had been made about 1546 by Andrea Amati. The viol had six strings and frets, and the only form of it now in use is the double bass, the violin not being a viol. The viol d'amore and viol di Gamba are now disused; but the latter, which was exhibited and played on, Dr. Stone thought might be well revived, and would supply a gap in the present series. He then described the peculiarities and wonderful powers of the stringed instruments now in use—the violin, the viola or tenor (called "alto" abroad), the violoncello, and the double-bass; and, in reference to the last of them, he described a method by which he had succeeded in lowering the scale to C C C, thus supplying a deficiency in the modern orchestra. This he effected by adding to the weight of the string through coiling it with heavy pianoforte wire; and he showed that a fine solemn deep note is thereby produced. In the illustrations of the lecture an orchestra was gradually built up, beginning with a solo and ending with a quintet. Mr. Carrodus played Bach's "Chaconne" (a work seldom attempted from its extreme difficulty) with marvellous breadth and accuracy of intonation. He also led the melodious Trio No. 3 of Corelli, two movements of Spohr's G minor quartet for strings, Mendelssohn's Theme in D with variations, and the last movement of Schubert's quintet, commonly called "The Forellen," or "Trout" quintet, from the little popular air of that name upon which it is founded. Mr. Enthoven played to perfection a nocturne of Kalliwoda, well fitted to show the weird and mournful character of the viola. Mr. Boatwright's fine tone on the violoncello in Mendelssohn's variations was conspicuous, and he joined Mr. Godden in a duet of Corelli for violoncello and double-bass. Mr. Bird's performance on the piano, both in the accompaniments and in the difficult concertante parts of the Mendelssohn duet and the Schubert quintet, was refined and sympathetic. The lecture on Tuesday next will be devoted to Wind Instruments.

At the next and concluding Friday evening meeting Professor Burdon Sanderson will give a discourse on the singular plant named Venus's Fly-Trap (Dionaea muscipula).

With reference to Mr. Sedley Taylor's lecture on the Trial of Galileo (of which a notice appeared in our Number for May 16, page 474), concluding with an appeal to the Roman authorities to publish the whole set of Galileo documents in facsimile, Mr. W. J. Fitzpatrick informs us that during the revolution of 1848 the records of the Inquisition were carried away from Rome, and are now preserved in the MS. Room of Trinity College, Dublin. Recent examination showed that the parts which should have related to the case of Galileo had been cut out.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR J. G. REEVE DE LA POLE, BART.

Sir John George Reeve-De la Pole, eighth Baronet, of Shute, Devon, J.P. and D.L., died in Jermyn-street, on the 19th inst. He was born Jan. 21, 1808, the son of Sir William Templer De la Pole, seventh Baronet, D.C.L., by Sophia Anne, his first wife, only daughter of George Templer, Esq., of Shapwick House, in the county of Somerset, and was grandson of Sir John William Pole, sixth Baronet of Shute, who assumed, by Royal license, in 1790, the prefix "De la." The ancestor of Pole of Shute is stated by Prince, in "The Worthies of Devon," to have possessed Pole, near Tiverton, temp. William the Conqueror. The Baronet whose death we record succeeded to the title April 1, 1847. He had taken, in 1838, the additional surname of Reeve. He was twice married: first, March 26, 1829, to Margaretta, second daughter of Henry Barton, Esq., of Saucethorpe Hall, in the county of Lincoln; and secondly, Feb. 2, 1843, to Josephine Catherine Denise Carré, of Anse, Rhône, France; but had issue only by the former (who died June, 1842), one child, Margaretta Lushes-Jane Maria, married, first, 1849, to Lieutenant-Colonel John Temple West, Grenadier Guards; and secondly, 1860, to H. V. Pennefather, Esq., late Captain in the 41st Foot. The baronetcy devolves on Sir John's half-brother, now Sir William Edmund Pole, ninth Baronet, barrister-at-law, who is married to Margaret Victorica, daughter of Admiral the Hon. Sir John Talbot, G.C.B., and has issue.

SIR H. S. MEYSEY-THOMPSON, BART.

Sir Harry Stephen Meysey-Thompson, Bart., of Kirby Hall and Thorpe Green, in the county of York, died at Kirby Hall on the 17th inst., a few weeks only after his creation as a Baronet. He was born, Aug. 11, 1809, the eldest son of Richard John Thompson, Esq., of Kirby Hall, by Elizabeth, his wife, daughter of John Turton, Esq., of Sgual Hall, in the county of Stafford, and Mary Meysey, his wife. The family of Thompson, from which he descended, is of long standing in Yorkshire, and of the same origin as the Thompsons of Humbleton, Eascrik, and Sheriff Hutton. The deceased Baronet went, as a Fellow Commoner, to Trinity College, Cambridge, and graduated in honours in 1832. Subsequently he became a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for Yorkshire; served as High Sheriff in 1856; was one of the chief founders of the Yorkshire Agricultural Society; was elected, in 1867, President of the Royal Agricultural Society; acted for many years as chairman of the North-Eastern Railway Company; and sat in Parliament for Whitby, in the Liberal interest, from 1859 to 1866. He married, Aug. 26, 1843, Elizabeth Anne, daughter of Sir John Croft, Bart., Baron de Serra da Estrella, and leaves six sons and five daughters. Of the latter the eldest, Elizabeth Lucy, was married, in 1868, to Walter Stafford Northcote, Esq., eldest son of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. Of the sons, the eldest, Sir Henry Meysey Meysey-Thompson, present Baronet, of Kirby Hall (educated at Eton, and Trinity College, Cambridge), was born Aug. 30, 1845; and the fourth, the Rev. Charles Maude Meysey-Thompson, was married, the 28th of last month, to Emily Mary, second daughter of Sir James Walker, Bart., of Sand Hutton. Sir Harry took a very prominent part in railway affairs; and the estimation in which he was held by the railway world is shown by the fact of his having been chairman of the United Railways Companies Association from its first institution down to last year.

The portrait of Sir Walter Scott, painted by Sir Edwin Landseer and presented by Mr. Albert Grant, M.P., is exhibited in the National Portrait Gallery.

Mr. Karl Blind is giving a course of three lectures on Hans Sachs, at the Cavendish Rooms, Mortimer-street, for the purpose of contributing to the cost of the Hans Sachs memorial, which will be unveiled on June 24, at Nuremberg.

Mr. Tom Hood will preside at the annual meeting of the Newvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution, on Tuesday, June 9, at the offices of the institution, 9, Lawrence Pountney-hill, Cannon-street.

Their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh will open, on the 23rd of June, the new infant nursery for the children of seamen and others, adjoining the schools opened by the Prince and Princess of Wales in 1870. The schools and nursery are in connection with St. Paul's, Dock-street, the church for seamen of the port of London, of which the Rev. Dan Greatorex is Vicar.

MATCH BETWEEN THE LONDON AND VIENNA CHESS CLUBS.

The match, played through the medium of the telegraph, between the City of London Chess Club and the Chess Club of Vienna has lately terminated. It was begun in June, 1873, the conditions being that two games should be played simultaneously, that the club winning both games or winning one game and making a drawn battle of the second should be conqueror, and receive £100 from the other side. It was further agreed that if each side won one game, or if both games were drawn, a second match should or should not be played, as the belligerents might then determine. Upon the receipt of London's forty-ninth move in the first or "London game," the Viennese players wrote to their opponents as follows:—

[Translation.]

TO THE COMMITTEE OF THE CITY OF LONDON CHESS CLUB.
Gentlemen,—In consequence of your telegram of the 10th, we resign the London game and offer you a draw in the Vienna game. If you agree to these conditions the match between us has come to a termination in your favour, and in that case we shall remit to you the amount of £100 without delay.

WEINBERNER, Hon. Sec.
Vienna, March, 1874.

The London players, in reply, accepted this resignation, but "without prejudice" to their opinion as to the probable result of the second or Vienna game.

The following is the game begun by London; its companion, begun by Vienna, shall be given next week.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated Dec. 23, 1869, of the Right Hon. Lady Georgiana Louisa Bathurst, late of No. 4, Wilton-crescent, who died on March 27 last, was proved on the 13th inst. by Allen Alexander Bathurst and Henry Frederick Ponsonby, the nephews, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £30,000. The testatrix bequeaths legacies to her brother, Earl Bathurst, and to her nephews and nieces, and the residue to her sister, Lady Emily Charlotte Ponsonby.

The will and codicil, both dated Sept. 12 last, of Sir Henry Oglander, Bart., late of Nunwell, in the Isle of Wight, who died on the 8th ult., were proved on the 13th inst. by Augustus Frederick Leeds and George Fydeall Rowley, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator gives an annuity of £50 to his gamekeeper, Charles Bullock, and charges the same upon his estates in the Isle of Wight; and, subject thereto, he devises all his real, copyhold, and leasehold estates to the use of his wife, Dame Louisa Oglander, for life, with remainder as to his estates in the Isle of Wight to John Glynn, and the rest of his real estate to Captain Robert O'Brien Fitzroy. His personal estate, subject to the payment of his debts, funeral, and testamentary expenses, testator bequeaths to George Fydeall Rowley.

The will, dated March 11, 1873, of Stephen Walters, formerly of No. 36, Basinghall-street, and of No. 3, Finsbury-circus, but late of The Oaklands, Reigate, Surrey, who died on the 26th ult., was proved on the 12th inst. by Mrs. Mary Ann Walters, the widow; Laundry Walters, the son; and Miss Annie Walters, the daughter, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator bequeaths, among other legacies, £100 each to the British and Foreign Bible Society and the Church Missionary Society; and £50 each to the Cottage Hospital, Reigate, and Redhill, and the Orphan Working School, Haverstock-hill. The life interest in the residue is divided, in certain proportions, between his wife and two children, and subsequently the capital is to go, as to four ninths, to the children of his daughter, and five ninths to the children of his son, as they may appoint.

The will, dated Nov. 7, 1873, of William Blowers Bliss, late of Halifax, Nova Scotia, retired Judge of the Supreme Court, who died on March 16 last, was proved on the 6th inst. by the Rev. William Blowers Bliss, the Rev. John Worthington Bliss, and Lewis Hill Bliss, the sons, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £60,000. The testator bequeaths 4000 dollars to the Right Rev. Hibbert Binney, D.D., Bishop of Nova Scotia, to aid in building a cathedral in Halifax; 2000 dollars to the Church endowment fund of the province of Halifax; to his wife a legacy of 40,000 dollars absolutely, and his residence, with the furniture and the income of the residue of his property for life. There are legacies to the children and others, and at the death of testator's widow the said residue is to be divided between his six children.

The will, dated Nov. 29, 1870, of Charles Williams, late of No. 223, Oxford-street, and of No. 154, Adelaide-road, Hampstead, who died on the 4th ult., was proved on the 12th inst. by Henry Richard Williams, the brother, Hannah Williams, the widow, George Baxter Smith and Charles Rogers, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £45,000. The testator bequeaths £100 each to the Goldsmiths' Benevolent Institution and the Silver Trade Pension Society; to his wife, the furniture, effects, and £3000, and the income of the residue for life, and at her death to his sister, Rosetta Williams, for life.

The wills of the following persons have recently been proved, viz.:—Thomas Barker, late of Rosella House, North Shields, under £120,000; John Frost, late of Teddington, under £30,000; Miss Pentecost Milner, late of No. 22, Hyde Park-place, under £35,000; Mrs. Sarah Marshall, late of Broadwater, near Godalming, under £38,000; and Vice-Admiral the Hon. Edward Thornton Wodehouse, under £40,000.

A meeting of the British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society was held, on Thursday week, at the Cannon-street Hotel. Sir Bartle Frere, who presided, and Sir T. Fowell Buxton delivered earnest addresses upon the subject of the prevalence of slavery in Africa, the Fiji Islands, and elsewhere, and resolutions relating to the suppression of the slave trade and the future action of the society were adopted.

The holiday-making which, more than ever, has become the principal characteristic of Whit Monday in London, was sadly interfered with by a thunderstorm, accompanied by heavy rain. In the afternoon the return trains were crowded with half-drowned excursionists, only too glad to get home. The festivities at Richmond in honour of the Old Fellows' Annual Movable Committee were marred by the unfavourable weather, but it was fine in the evening for the fireworks. The visitors to the Crystal Palace numbered about 47,000; to the International Exhibition and the Horticultural Gardens, 10,117; to the Zoological Society's Gardens, 19,872. The museums in Museum and South Kensington and the National Gallery were crowded as usual, and 17,302 persons visited the aquarium at Brighton.

VALUABLE DISCOVERY for the HAIR.
If your hair is turning grey or white, or falling off, use THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER. It will positively restore every case, grey or white hair to its original colour, without leaving the disagreeable smell of most "Restorers." It makes the hair charmingly beautiful, as well as promoting the growth of the hair on bald spots where the glands are not diseased. Certificates from Dr. Vermaun on every bottle, with full particulars.
This preparation has never been known to fail in restoring the hair to its natural colour and gloss in from eight to twelve days. It promotes growth, and prevents the hair falling out, encrusting dandruff, and leaving the scalp in a clean, healthy condition. It imparts peculiar vitality to the roots of the hair, restoring it to its youthful freshness and vigour. Daily application of this preparation for a week or two will surely restore faded, grey, or white hair to its natural colour and richness.
It is not a dye, nor does it contain any colouring matter or offensive substance whatever. Hence it does not soil the hands, the scalp, or even white linen, but procures the colour within the substance of the hair.
It may be had of any respectable Chemist, Perfumer, or Dealer in Toilet Articles in the Kingdom, at 6d. per bottle. In case the dealer has not "The Mexican Hair Renewer" in stock and will not procure it for you, it will be sent direct by rail, carriage paid, on receipt of 6d. per bottle, to any part of England.—Prepared by HENRY C. GALLUP, 422, Oxford-street, London.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER
has gained for itself the highest reputation, and a decided preference over all other "hair-dressings," as evinced from certificates and testimonials from the most famous sources. Being compounded with the greatest care—combining, as it does, all the most desirable qualities of the best hair preparations of the day, without the objectionable ones—it may be relied on as the very best known to chemistry for restoring the natural colour to the hair, and causing new hair to grow on bald spots, unless the hair glands are decayed; for if the glands are decayed and gone no stimulant can restore them; but if, as is often the case, the glands are only torpid, THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER will renew their vitality, and new growth of hair will follow. Read the following Testimonial from Dr. Vermaun, Ph.D.:

"Dear Sir,—I have made a thorough chemical analysis of your preparation called 'The Mexican Hair Renewer,' and find it to be superior to any hair preparation I have ever known. It is an ingenious compound, as harmless as it is beneficial."
(Signed) "FRED. VERMAUN."
THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER may be procured of any first-class Perfumer, Chemist, or Dealer in Toilet Articles throughout the Kingdom, at 6d. per bottle.

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And pleases each one's fancy?
What adds a charm of perfect grace,
And Nature's gift enhances?
What gives a bright and beautiful gloss,
And what may each reviewer?
"That quite surpasses all I have reviewed!"
Of THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!
What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And makes it free from dandruff too,
And healthy in its growing?
What does such wonders? Ask the press,
And what says each reviewer?
"That none can equal or approach!"
Of THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!
What gives luxuriance to each tress,
Like some bright halo beaming?
What makes the hair a perfect mass
Of splendid ringlets teeming?
What gives protection in stress?
Why, what says each reviewer?
"The choicest preparation is
The MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!"
What gives luxuriance to each tress,
And makes it so delightful?
Because, to speak the honest truth,
It is only just and right!
What say the people and the press,
And what says each reviewer?
"That most superb for ladies' use Is the MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER!"

THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER.

The constitution of the person and the condition of the scalp have much to do with the length of time it requires for new hair to grow; also thin or thick hair will depend much upon the vital force remaining in the hair glands. New hair can first come to start around the margin of the bald spot, near the permanent hair, and extending upwards until the spots are covered more or less thickly with fine short hair. Excessive brushing should be guarded against as soon as the small hairs make their appearance; but the scalp may be sponged with water, and the hair combed occasionally. The hair may be pressed and moved on the bone by the finger ends, which quickens the circulation and softens the spots which have remained long bald. On applying this hair-dressing it enlivens the scalp, and, in cases where the hair begins to fall, a few applications will arrest it, and the new growth presents the luxuriance and colour of youth.
"The Mexican Hair Renewer" may be procured of any first-class Perfumer, Chemist, or Dealer in Toilet Articles throughout the Kingdom, at 6d. per bottle. In case the dealer has not the preparation in stock, and recommends something else, be careful of it; it will not be deceived. In case he will not procure it for you, it will be sent free of freight upon receipt of 6d. to any part of England.

LADIES and GENTLEMEN Prematurely
Grey, who have depaired of a restoration of the beauty of this wonderful natural ornament, will be surprised at the beneficial effect procured by a few applications of THE MEXICAN HAIR RENEWER. The vital force of the organs on which the hair depends will be re-established, and the growth present the luxuriance and colour of youth. When the hair begins to come out on combing it is a few applications will arrest it.
"The Mexican Hair Renewer" should always be used on the first appearance of dandruff, for it keeps the head clean and cool. "The Mexican Hair Renewer" is colourless, pleasantly perfumed, and restores the hair soft, pliant, and luxuriant. It gives the hair that peculiar richness and colour so essential to the toilet.
"The Mexican Hair Renewer" is put up with directions in German, French, and Spanish.

(Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium)

LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL.

The only real test, medical experience during the last twenty-five years in all parts of the world, has conclusively proved to be

DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL

THE PUREST,

THE MOST PALATABLE,

THE MOST EASILY DIGESTED,

THE MOST RAPIDLY EFFICACIOUS

of all kinds.

As the Remedy for

CONSUMPTION and DISEASES OF THE CHEST,

DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL

stands pre-eminent.

As the Restorative in

DEBILITY OF ADULTS and CHILDREN,

DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL

is unequalled.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS.

SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., LL.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.
"The experience of many years has abundantly proved the truth of every word said in favour of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod Liver Oil by many of our first Physicians and Chemists, thus stamping him as a high authority and an able Chemist whose investigations have remained unquestioned."

"I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S Oil a remedy of great power in the treatment of many affections of the throat and larynx, especially in consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat.
"As you have called my attention to the fact that for many years in prescribing Cod-Liver Oil I have specially indicated that sold at your establishment, I cannot refuse to state my reasons for having done so."

"These are as follow:—
"1st. That I have found your Light-Brown Oil much more uniform in character than any other Cod-Liver Oil. 2ndly. That I have found it more uniform in its action than any other Cod-Liver Oil. 3rdly. That I have found it more easily digested than any other Cod-Liver Oil."

DR. WHITMORE,
Medical Officer of Health, St. Marylebone.
"If I were asked for an explanation of the marked success which for so many years has attended the administration of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil, I should say that it is owing to its extraordinary medicinal, dietetic, and regiminal properties, which are found to exist in no other medicine that I am acquainted with, in such uniform combination."

DR. HARDWICKE,
Medical Officer of Health, Paddington.
"In the class of tubercular diseases, including Consumption, so prevalent in our great centres of population, the use of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil is attended with manifold advantages; and I know of no therapeutic agent which, in connection with judicious sanitary measures, is better calculated to stay the ravages of these great consuming plagues of the British Islands."

THE ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS.

LONDON, SATURDAY, JUNE 6, 1874.

"Sir," said Mr. Disraeli, on Tuesday afternoon, addressing the Speaker of the House of Commons, "I observe that there is nothing on the paper of the House for tomorrow. I therefore beg to move that the House, at its rising, do adjourn until Thursday next." Such was the form in which the present leader of the House proposed to drop out of the range of Parliamentary business the

Derby Day. It was characteristic of the mover. The thing having to be done in conformity with a long series of precedents, but being regarded by many as open to various objections, Mr. Disraeli assigned for a motive what, however true in fact, was worthless as a reason. No doubt the notice-paper of the House of Commons for Wednesday last was a blank; but it was so simply because every member of the House was well aware that it has long been the practice of the Legislature to adjourn over that day for the sake of giving to its members the opportunity of being present at the Epsom Downs to witness the great horse-race of the year without exposing himself to the charge of neglecting public business for the sake of private pleasure. Mr. Disraeli, we think, gained nothing by throwing a veil of silence over the true reason for the adjournment. Nobody in the House misunderstood him; nobody out of the House would fail to penetrate, we might almost say, "the open secret" of the motion. Everybody knew that the race for the Derby Stakes at Epsom was the real explanation of the Wednesday's holiday; and it would have been preferable, we think, if not in the terms of the motion, at any rate in the speech by which it was introduced, frankly to avow the ground upon which the House of Commons usually adjourns over the Derby Day.

We decline giving any opinion either for or against what Lord Palmerston, with classical picturesqueness of phrase, once designated our Isthmian games. Any discussion in these columns of the main question in dispute would be felt by our readers, as well as by ourselves, to be inappropriate. It may, we think, be taken for granted that horse-racing, like many other forms in which certain qualities, partly the gift of nature, partly the result of intelligent cultivation, is not in itself necessarily connected with questions of morality. Some persons, undoubtedly, condemn it on puritanical grounds, and might therefore consistently, and perhaps do, condemn the competition of ships in a regatta. For all such differences of opinion charity should make an ample allowance. Without venturing to pronounce between the dissentient parties, it may be permitted us, nevertheless, to remark that there has grown up round almost every public competitive trial a habit—the force of which is extremely insidious—and the effect of which upon society in the metropolis and in most of our large towns is powerfully demoralising. Gambling appears to be one of the inevitable concomitants of social luxury; and, unfortunately, it spreads from class to class with a certainty that appears to be irresistible, and, like a canker, eats away the healthiest elements of English character. This contagious mania—for we can describe it in no milder terms—has made and is making frightful progress amongst us, and by its wide spread over the surface of society is rapidly perverting right principles of action, and largely effacing the best features of our common manhood. What used to be an individual misfortune has now become a kind of epidemic. The taint extends itself in every direction, and, unless it can be stayed by the counteractive of high and energetic moral character and example, threatens to deteriorate the very staple of national virtue.

We cannot shut our eyes to the fact that the Derby Day at Epsom has for many years past attracted to itself an abnormal amount of the evil we have just attempted to describe. We state it simply as a fact—we do not attempt to account for it. It constitutes an artificial concentration of those causes and elements which excite and gratify the gambling propensity. There are myriads of our fellow-countrymen who are not in the least disposed to look with an unfavourable eye upon the practice of horse-racing, who, nevertheless, contemplate with something akin to alarm the rapid growth of demoralising influences which commonly attend upon the celebration of "our Isthmian games." Betting has become so popular a vice, has forced its way into so many of what used to be regarded as the sanctuaries of society, and has led by its alluring excitement to so many crimes, that even Parliament has recognised the necessity of interfering with the liberty of the subject for the sake of putting some effectual restrictions upon it. To some extent, its efforts in this direction have been successful. To a considerable extent, as might have been reasonably anticipated, they have failed. The cure, though it may be aided by judicious legislation, will be and must be essentially moral. But this only lends increased weight to the reasons which should move the Legislature to refrain from taking any step calculated to neutralise its own work.

The adjournment of the House of Commons over the Derby Day is, perhaps, one of those customs which would be "more honoured in the breach than the observance." There is no real necessity for it. The House is not called upon either by implication or expressly to interfere in any way with the sports of the people, or to pronounce any formal judgment upon their tendency. We can imagine it reasoning with itself after this fashion:—"It is not for us either to extend or to curtail the liberties of the people in the choice and enjoyment of their pleasures, unless a clear public policy imposes upon us the obligation. Certainly it is not our duty to recognise as a national sport that which is, after all, local and accidental only. Our business and the position in which we have been placed by the constituencies demand

The Extra Supplement.

EXECUTION OF SPANISH PATRIOTS.

"Los Comenores en el Suplicio" is the Spanish title of this picture, by A. Giebert, which refers to a sad incident of three centuries and a half ago, in the early years of the Emperor Charles V., reigning as King of Spain from the death of Ferdinand, in 1516. Charles, though grandson of Ferdinand by the mother's side, was very little of a Spaniard, being son of Archduke Philip of Austria, and born at Ghent. He was crowned Emperor in Germany in 1520, and was engaged during the next year or two in dealing with Luther at Worms and elsewhere. Meanwhile, the Spaniards revolted against the regency of his mother, Joanna, or rather against her foreign courtiers and ministers; and the Comenores, as they called themselves, led by Don Juan de Padilla, maintained a brave struggle for their national liberties. Divided counsels proved their ruin, as is usually the case with a popular faction. After many efforts and exploits, in the provinces of Castile and Leon, they suffered a fatal defeat, at Villalar, April 23, 1521, from the Royal army under the Conde de Haro. The heroic but unfortunate Padilla, with several of his comrades, was beheaded next day at Tordesillas, which is the scene depicted by the artist in this picture. Some interesting particulars may be read in Robertson's history of Charles V., with Padilla's touching and manly letter to his wife, Maria Pacheco, just before his death on the scaffold. Queen Joanna, for her part, went mad, and died in 1537, having kept her husband's coffin in her bed-room forty years.

THE PUNJAB INSTITUTION.

The native association at Lahore, with seventeen affiliated local branch societies, called the Anjuman-i-Punjab, is designed to promote the spread of useful knowledge, and to encourage literary studies and antiquarian researches among the people of all races and religions in that British Indian province. It was founded, in 1865, by Dr. G. W. Leitner, Principal of the Government College at Lahore, which has, since 1870, been connected with a Punjab University, instead of depending on the University of Calcutta. The Prince of Wales, as patron of the Sanscrit Text Society, was an early friend of the Punjab Literary Institution. Its members, of whom there are three hundred at Lahore, have sent to his Royal Highness, by Dr. Leitner, now in London, an address with a report of their progress, to which the Prince has sent an approving answer, as well as to an address from the Punjab University. Dr. Leitner himself has received from the Anjuman-i-Punjab a handsome testimonial gift, which they petitioned Government to allow him to accept. It is a massive gold medal, three inches in diameter, set with brilliants, upon which are inscriptions, in Sanscrit and in Arabic, commending him as a true friend, in the first instance, of "the Aryan race," and in the second instance, of "the people of Islam." He is also mentioned as the founder of many institutions, and the author of some ethnological and philological researches on the north-west frontier of India. These have lately been communicated, in part, to several of the learned societies in London; and we have noticed his very interesting collections now open to view in the upper gallery of the Royal Albert Hall, at the International Exhibition of the present year. They comprise sculptures, especially illustrative of the Greek influence upon Indian sacred art from the conquests of Alexander; Bactrian and other ancient coins; beautiful manuscripts in different Asiatic languages; articles of costume, furniture, and instruments of the obscure mountaineer nations; Himalayan plants, insects, and minerals; and an educational collection. At the Vienna Great Exhibition of last year, where some of these collections were shown, Dr. Leitner, who already wears the hereditary Austrian dignity of the Iron Crown, was rewarded with the grand diploma of honour in Group 26, "Education, Instruction, and Culture," the only such diploma, upon that ground, bestowed on a British exhibitor. The north-western province of our Indian empire, and the adjacent countries beyond its frontier, afford peculiar inducements to the scientific pursuit of important researches in the history of mankind.

THE YELLOWSTONE LAKE REGION.

At the base of the Rocky Mountains, half way between the Mississippi and the Pacific, and at two thirds of the space from the Atlantic to the western ocean shore of North America, is a natural wonderland. It is a volcanic region of boiling springs and silicious incrustations, similar to those around Lake Taupo, in New Zealand, and far exceeding the more familiar examples in Iceland. The Yellowstone lake and river, flowing into the Upper Missouri, have given their name to that upland district, which is part of Wyoming Territory, on the border of Montana. By the exertions mainly of the Hon. Columbus Delano, Secretary of the Interior, the means were obtained of surveying and making known this extraordinary region. The United States Congress, by an Act passed in March, 1872, ordained that the whole tract of unoccupied land, measuring fifty-five miles by sixty-five miles, should be for ever preserved as a National Park for public enjoyment and the scientific study of its phenomena. It is distant nearly 2300 miles from New York and 300 miles from the nearest railroad, but will soon be found or made tolerably accessible. Meantime, we have just heard that a surveying expedition returned to Bozeman, Montana, on the 13th ult., in a battered and exhausted state, having been harassed on its march by the Indians, with whom its escort fought several battles. A small book describing the "Wonders of the Yellowstone Region," written by Mr. James Richardson, was lately published by Messrs. Blackie and Son. We are indebted to Mr. Sergeant Sleigh, who has travelled in that part of North America, for the use of some finely-executed photographs, taken under the direction of Professor F. V. Hayden, the official geologist in charge of the Government expedition three years ago. A set of these photographs was presented by the United States Government to Mr. Sergeant Sleigh. Two of them are copied for our illustrations. One represents the "Mammoth Hot Springs" of Gardiner's River. The white silicious deposit here covers the side of the mountain for a length of one mile, and to the height of nearly 1000 ft.; it forms successive terraces, in which basins are hollowed out by the water falling from above. The second view is that of Upper Firehole Basin, from the crater of "Old Faithful," a hot spring so called because of its regular action, ever once in sixty-five minutes. It throws, by successive impulses, a column of water 6 ft. in diameter to the height of 160 ft., continuing twelve minutes. The silicious deposits here are of marvellous beauty.

The people of Paisley had a general holiday on Wednesday to celebrate the centenary of Robert Tannahill, who is held by them to be the greatest song writer of Scotland after Burns.

from us that we should proceed with the work before us from day to day without reference to the holidays which the public, in certain districts, may choose to take for themselves. It is not expedient that we should crown, or even seem to crown, with a national sanction what has no pretension to be more than a metropolitan fête. We are engaged in trying to restrain within the narrowest limits possible facilities for gambling; we are very well aware that nowhere do those facilities more abound, nowhere are they made more available, than on the Epsom Race-Course on Derby Day. Is it consistent, is it prudent, is it politic, that we should go out of our way to give an impetus to what at best is proved by experience to increase enormously the vice which we are otherwise striving to abate? May we not by our example, as an Estate of the Realm, cast some contempt upon the enactments we have placed upon the statute-book? We do not think that the House of Commons would have ill consulted its own dignity by taking such thoughts as these into its consideration. Of course, every member of the House would be at liberty to gratify his own taste. Those who wished to go to the race might have gone; those who did not wish to do so might have remained. But in that case there would have been no break in the continuity of public business, and there would have been no seeming sanction given to the habit which the House itself is endeavouring to repress. We apprehend that the moral effect of making the Derby Day, such as it is, a quasi national holiday, by the customary adjournment over it of the House of Commons, is not precisely that which the Legislature desires.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, continues at Balmoral Castle. Her Majesty receives very favourable accounts of Princess Louis of Hesse and the infant Princess.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, was present, on Thursday week, at the funeral of Peter Farquharson, one of the oldest of her Majesty's servants on the Balmoral estate, where he has faithfully discharged the duties of keeper for twenty-seven years.

The servants' ball in celebration of her Majesty's birthday took place on the following day. The Queen, Princess Beatrice, Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, the ladies and gentlemen of the household, and the Rev. A. Campbell of Crathie were present.

The Queen and the Princess attended Divine service on Sunday at Crathie church. The Rev. Dr. Charteris, Professor of Biblical Criticism of Edinburgh University, officiated.

Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales took leave of her Majesty on Monday and left the castle for London.

The Queen has taken her usual daily drives. Miss Macgregor, the Rev. Dr. Charteris, and the Rev. A. Campbell have dined with her Majesty.

Lord Malmesbury is the Minister in attendance upon the Queen; Lord John Manners, who was officiating, having been summoned to London, in consequence of the illness of Lord George Manners, M.P. Viscount Torrington has left the castle.

The Queen was represented at the funeral of M. Van de Weyer by Sir T. M. Biddulph. The Prince of Wales, the Duke of Edinburgh, and Prince Christian were among the mourners, the Prince of Wales placing a wreath upon the coffin. Wreaths were sent by the Queen and the several members of the Royal family, which were also placed upon the coffin.

The Queen's wedding gift to Mdlla. Ralouka Musurus, second daughter of Musurus Pasha, was a valuable cashmere shawl; that of the Prince and Princess of Wales a gold bracelet set with pearls and brilliants; and that of Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Duke of Connaught a brooch and earrings of pink coral and gold.

A Levée was held, by command of the Queen, on Monday, at St. James's Palace, by the Prince of Wales, on behalf of her Majesty. The Duke of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, the Duke of Cambridge, Prince Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, and Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar were present. The principal members of the Corps Diplomatique were in attendance, and various foreigners of distinction were presented. In the general circle the presentations numbered about 350.

A state concert will be given, on Wednesday next, at Buckingham Palace.

The last state ball of the season will take place on Wednesday, the 24th inst., at Buckingham Palace.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales was present on Saturday last at the guard-mounting parade at the Horse Guards, in celebration of the Queen's birthday. The Princess of Wales, with Princess Louise, Princess Victoria, and Princess Maud of Wales, and the Duchess of Edinburgh, witnessed the ceremony from the Horse Guards. The Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, and the Duchess of Teck visited their Royal Highnesses at Marlborough House. The Prince dined with the Right Hon. B. Disraeli, at his official residence in Downing-street, and was afterwards present at a reception held by the Countess of Derby at the Foreign Office. The Princess and the Duchess of Edinburgh went to Her Majesty's Opera. The Prince and Princess attended Divine service on Sunday. His Royal Highness presided at the annual dinner of the Rifle Brigade (Prince Consort's Own) on Monday evening. The Duke of Connaught was present. On Tuesday Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, attended by the Rev. J. N. Dalton, arrived at Marlborough House from visiting the Queen at Balmoral Castle. The Duke of Edinburgh visited the Prince and Princess. The Prince dined with the Duke of Cambridge and the officers of the 1st or Grenadier Guards' Club, at their annual dinner, Willis's Rooms. Wednesday was the ninth anniversary of the birthday of Prince George of Wales. The Prince of Wales, accompanied by the Duke of Edinburgh, went to Epsom Races. The Princess and the Duchess of Edinburgh drove out. The Prince has sent a donation of 25 guineas towards the building fund of the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat, Golden-square, of which institution his Royal Highness is the patron. Lieutenant-Colonel Ellis has succeeded Lieutenant-Colonel Teesdale as Equerry in Waiting to the Prince.

Princess Stourdzha has left the Alexandra Hotel for Paris. The American Minister has arrived in town from America. The Duke and Duchess of Cleveland and Lady Mary Primrose have returned to Cleveland House.

Ministerial banquets were given on Saturday last in celebration of the Queen's birthday by the Premier, the Right Hon. R. A. Cross, the Earl of Derby, the Earl of Carnarvon, the Right Hon. Gathorne Hardy, the Marquis of Salisbury, the Right Hon. Sir Stafford Northcote, the Right Hon. G. Ward Hunt, Earl Beauchamp, the Marquis of Hertford, the Earl of Bradford, Sir Richard Baggallay, M.P., and the Hon. Corps of Gentlemen at Arms. The Countess of Derby had a brilliant reception at the Foreign Office.

Entertainments have been given by the Archbishop of York, the French Ambassador, the Duke and Duchess of Beaufort, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hertford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Hamilton, the Marquis and Marchioness of Exeter, Earl and Countess Sydney, the Earl and Countess of Ellesmere, the Earl and Countess of Harewood, Lord Carlingford and Countess Frances Waldegrave, Viscount and Viscountess Mountgarrett, the Earl and Countess of Carysfort, Earl and Countess Delaware, the Countess of Newburgh, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cairns, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton, Lord and Lady Wolverton, Lord Kesteven, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Lady Sutton, the Hon. Sir Balfour and Lady Brett, Mr. and Mrs. Washington Hibbert, Mrs. Ward Hunt, and Mrs. Grisewood.

THE PRINCE OF WALES YACHTING.

The Royal Thames Yacht Club has the Prince of Wales for its Commodore, and his Royal Highness was on board Vice-Commodore Lord Alfred Paget's steam-yacht, the Cecil, to see the first club match of the season, below Gravesend, on Monday week. The competing yachts that sailed were three of the first class—namely, Count Bathynany's Kriemhilda, Mr. W. P. Miller's Vanguard, and Mr. T. Broadwood's Arethusa; and four of the second—Lord Ailsa's Bloodhound, Mr. Macmaster's Myosotis, Major Ewing's Norman, and Mr. E. Fox's Eveleen. The Prince and many other gentlemen went down to Gravesend by special train, and there embarked about eleven o'clock. The rear-commodore, Mr. Brassey, M.P., and Mr. Mellis, and others of the committee, were on board a hired steamer. When the yachts started there was a shower and alight thunderstorm, but the day's weather in general was fine, with a nice E.S.E. breeze. The course was round the Mouse Light and back, which was finished at six o'clock by the leading yacht, the Arethusa, winning the £100 prize in the first class. In the second class, the Bloodhound won the £60 and the Norman won the £30 prize. The Prince of Wales, with Lord Alfred Paget, landed at the Gravesend Town Pier, and returned by train to London.

THE ASHANTEE WAR EXHIBITION.

The large picture of "Sir Garnet Wolseley and the Black Watch Fighting in the Ashantee Forest," painted by Mr. Louis Desanges for the proprietors of the Illustrated London News, is now sent upon a tour of the provincial towns, beginning with Glasgow next week. With this picture are still exhibited the original sketches made by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist, who accompanied the army through the campaign, and is the only Artist that has ever visited the city of Coomassie.

Among those who came to Willis's Rooms to see the picture and sketches last Monday was the only Ashantee to be met in England or Europe—no other than the uncle of King Coffie Calallee. This gentleman, who is an Englishman and Christian by education, is Prince John Anshah, or Ossoo Anshah, son of King Osoo Quamina, who died in 1826, the most powerful and successful of Ashantee monarchs. The readers of our illustrated narrative, "From Cape Coast to Coomassie," published two months ago, will know the chief events of Osoo Quamina's reign—his victorious wars on the Coast, from 1807 to 1824, the defeat he inflicted upon the British Governors, and especially the battle in which Sir Charles MacCarthy was killed. We know more of this Ashantee King than of his predecessors and successors, from the books published by Mr. Bowdich and Mr. Dupuis describing their sojourn as negotiators at his Court. He was succeeded, according to the Ashantee constitutional law, not by his son, but by his brother, Osoo Ockotoo, who was less fortunate in warlike policy, being signally defeated, in 1826, by the British commandant's small forces and native allies.

In 1831, when Mr. George Maclean was President at Cape Coast Castle, a treaty of peace was made, to secure which the Ashantee King delivered to us as hostages for ten years two young Princes of his family—namely, his son, Quantibissah, and his nephew, Anshah. The Wesleyan Missionary Society undertook the care of their education; the two boys were brought to England, baptised William and John, and taught like English boys in a school at Clapham. They were kindly noticed by many persons of rank and influence, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the late Sir Robert Inglis, and the late Sir T. F. Buxton, as well as merchants and politicians interested in West Africa.

In 1841, the ten years having expired, Prince William Quantibissah and Prince John Anshah returned to their native country. They were in the Niger Expedition. Accompanied by two Wesleyan missionaries, the Rev. W. Freeman and the Rev. J. Brooking, they went up to Coomassie; and there Prince William Quantibissah died, many years ago. King Ockotoo was succeeded by King Quaco Duah, in 1833, and he by another; but the present King, "Monday" Calallee, is nephew to Prince John Anshah. It may readily be conceived that the position of Prince John Anshah, while he resided at the Ashantee capital, was a difficult one; and his endeavours, upon some occasions, to serve the cause of peace, and thereby to serve the interests of both Governments, and of the Ashantees, the Asins, and the Fantees, brought upon him the ill-will of conflicting parties. He latterly dwelt at Cape Coast Castle, receiving in his house there, upon occasion, well-disposed Ashantee visitors, while he was engaged in efforts to procure the release of the German Basle missionaries kidnapped on the Volta in 1869. Last year, when the Fantees of Cape Coast Castle were thrown into a panic by the terror of the Ashantee invasion, they riotously attacked Anshah's house, murdered five of his friends and servants, and would have taken his life, but that he found shelter in the Castle. The Administrator, Colonel Harley, was unable to protect him, and sent him away to Sierra Leone, whence he has now come to England. He is accompanied from Sierra Leone by the Rev. B. Tregaskis, general superintendent of Wesleyan missions in West Africa.

At the Exhibition of the Ashantee War Picture, on Monday, Prince Anshah came with Mr. Tregaskis, and Mr. and Mrs. Everett Green, with whom he is staying. He expressed much interest in the scenes depicted both in Mr. Desanges' painting and in the drawings of Mr. Melton Prior, whose acquaintance he made at Sierra Leone; and he explained to the company a few of the objects in the collection of Ashantee weapons, furniture, utensils, and tools, wearing apparel, ornaments, and fetish talismans. Some of these articles he could recognise as those which he had often seen at Coomassie. He called, the same day, at the establishment of Messrs. R. and S. Garrard, in the Haymarket, to see the collection of gold ornaments and emblems or trophies from King Coffie Calallee's palace.

THE YELLOWSTONE LAKE REGION OF NORTH AMERICA.

MAMMOTH HOT SPRINGS ON GARDINER'S RIVER.

UPPER FIRE-HOLE, FROM "OLD FAITHFUL."

TOLOSA, BASQUE PROVINCE OF SPAIN.

TOLOSA, BASQUE PROVINCES.

About twenty miles inland from San Sebastian, and upon the railroad an hour's ride after entering Spain from France, is the neat and thriving Basque town of Tolosa, near the confluence of the Azpiros and Oria rivers. It has about eight thousand people, and is the capital of Guipuzcoa. The lofty hills, or rather mountains, of Ernio on the west side, and Loaza on the east, overlook its picturesque valley. The town is of high antiquity, containing the family mansions, or casas solares, of many illustrious grandees. One such house at Tolosa claimed the ancestral fame of Domenjou Gonzales, whom our Edward IV. created a Knight of the Garter in 1471. This was a reward for the services of a Basque legion in our Wars of York and Lancaster. Three centuries and a half later, England returned the favour by sending a British legion, under Sir De Lacy Evans, to take part in the civil wars of Northern Spain. The Carlist faction is strong in this neighbourhood. The Basque nation, which in Spain numbers 700,000 and in France 140,000, is quite distinct from the Celtic and other races on the western shores of Europe. A stubborn attachment to their local and municipal self-government has often embroiled the Basques with the rulers of Spain.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, June 4.

The Ministry pursues the even tenour of its way, while in the Assembly Right and Left are engaged in a struggle over the proposed new municipal and electoral laws, the final hope of the Monarchical party. It is said that the Government, unless interpellated, will take no part in the discussion, being content with keeping the various departments of the State in working order, and allowing Royalists and Republicans to fight out their quarrels among themselves. The silent system is certainly safest under present circumstances, when a Ministry that dared to speak out boldly one way or another would, owing to the anarchy to which the different parties of the Assembly are now reduced, run the risk of being overthrown in the course of a few weeks. One subject above all others appears seriously to preoccupy the new Cabinet—that of the deficit in the Budget, which every succeeding quarter renders more formidable, and it is understood that as soon as the Finance Minister, M. Magne, is well enough to address the Assembly he will demand an adjournment of the present profitless political debates in order that certain pressing financial measures may be discussed, with the view of avoiding unpleasant complications at the close of the year.

The campaign in the Assembly was opened last Saturday by M. Bérenger, a member of M. Thiers's Cabinet for a few days prior to the ex-President's fall, who proposed that the political electoral law should be placed on the order of the day, before the bill regulating the elections for the municipal councils. This was precisely what the Duc de Broglie had demanded a fortnight previously; and M. Bérenger was somewhat embarrassed to explain why he now asked the Assembly to consent to what he had so recently opposed. Pressed by the Right Centre to give his reasons, he eventually admitted, on behalf of the Thiers party, that their vote on May 16 had been dictated by the generally-felt necessity of overthrowing the De Broglie Cabinet, and not by any opinion adverse to the Prime Minister's proposal. This speech called forth a rejoinder from M. Depeyre, late Keeper of the Seals, who in elegiac language touchingly bewailed the loss of his portfolio; and eventually, after a complication of speeches from members belonging to almost every group, M. Bérenger's proposition was rejected, and priority given to the law on municipal elections.

This measure was accordingly read for the first time at the following sitting; and, after an amusing altercation between M. Jozon, member of the Left, and M. Lorgueil, the well-known defender of Divine Right, young Vicomte d'Haussonville, son of the celebrated Orleanist diplomatist and Academician, delivered a sensational speech against the proposed measure, violently attacking, in turn, the Bonapartists, whom he accused of having violated, on the Second of December, the universal suffrage which they now pretended to defend, and the Extreme Royalists, who by their obstinacy in clinging to the fetish of Divine Right were preparing, he said, the ruin of France. As he had severely apostrophised several of the more noted apostates of the Assembly, one of them, M. Amedée Lefevre-Pontalis, in vain attempted to justify some of his recent votes. Eventually the Assembly decided, by 394 ayes against 298 noes, that the bill should be read for the second time on Saturday next. Another measure, entitled the Organic Municipal Law, was then read for the first time, and the debate upon it adjourned.

On Tuesday the political electoral bill came on for discussion, the debate being opened by M. Henri Brisson, an eccentric member of the Left, who also indulged in a violent and indiscreet attack against the Bonapartists, at this moment in a kind of alliance with his own party. This intemperate address was followed by a veritable tumult, and the sitting was suspended for nearly half an hour. At length something like calm was restored, and M. Bertauld, an eminent Republican juriconsult, spoke temperately in favour of adjourning the discussion. He was followed by M. Lacaze, of the Left Centre, who took upon himself the part of the good Samaritan, eager to heal the wounds of all parties and to restore general peace and concord. Then came M. Tolain, whose remarks against the bill were short and to the point; and finally M. de Lacratelle, who only mounted the tribune to remind the majority that all fractions of the Assembly—Legitimist, Orleanist, Bonapartist, and Republican—were alike the offspring of that universal suffrage which it was proposed to mutilate. M. Brisson had proposed the previous question, which was rejected by a majority of 314; while M. Lacaze had demanded the adjournment of the debate until the constitutional laws had been voted, but his suggestion was also negatived—the majority having diminished, however, in this instance to 73 votes. The discussion was then resumed, a sensible, though somewhat lengthy, address from M. Delorme, of the Moderate Left, occupying the attention of the Assembly until the hour for adjournment.

M. Gambetta was not present at these debates, having undertaken an excursion into the Yonne with the view of sounding public opinion. On Monday he was entertained in the vicinity of Auxerre by M. Bert, one of his colleagues, when he delivered an important speech, again predicting the speedy triumph of the Republic, whose cause, he said, was fast gaining adherents, in spite of the recent election in the Nièvre. He is reported to have alluded to and regretted the differences of opinion which separated him from M. Ledru-Rollin.

A short time ago the annual subvention granted by the State to the Société des Gens de Lettres was suppressed by the Minister of Public Instruction, on its coming to his knowledge that among the society's pensioners were four notorious Communists—MM. Felix Pyat, Paschal Grousset, Jules Vallès, and Razoua. In consequence of this proceeding a committee was appointed by the society to decide whether the names of the implicated parties should or should not be erased from the list of members. The inquiry has just terminated in a ludicrous fashion—Pyat and Grousset being retained in their position as pensionnaires, and Vallès and Razoua being expelled. The decision has caused considerable controversy, the defenders of Vallès and Razoua, fairly enough, asserting that their clients are far less culpable than Felix Pyat. With regard, however, to Paschal Grousset, the Communist "Delegate to Exterior Relations," it is generally admitted that the rôle he played during the insurrection was more ludicrous than dangerous; and that, if any exception at all were made, it might be in his favour.

The Prix du Jockey Club—or, as it is more frequently called, the French Derby—was run for, last Sunday, at Chantilly, in presence of several of the Orleans Princes and Princesses, and a large crowd of spectators, attracted by the unusually splendid weather. The winner was Saltarelle, a chestnut filly belonging to M. Ed. Fould, who won a warmly-disputed race by a short head. The first favourite, Premier Mai, secured the second place.

By a large majority, the proposed measure of capitalisation for a settlement of the coupons in arrear was approved at a general meeting of shareholders of the Suez Canal, which was held here on Tuesday.

SPAIN.

There is no important news, either military or political, to report. Marshal Concha, whose army is suffering greatly from sickness, has not been able to do more than make a demonstration in the neighbourhood of Vittoria, where he is reported to have arrived. Advice received on Tuesday, at Bayonne, state that Ceballos, the Carlist commander in Guipuzcoa, had been canonading the town of Hernani for three days. But the Carlists have had the tables turned upon them; for, fearing a Republican attack, they have withdrawn their siege-guns and retired to Oriamendi, where they are fortifying themselves. Three thousand Republican troops have been sent to reinforce San Sebastian. From Madrid we hear that the Government troops have dislodged and dispersed 4000 Carlists who endeavoured to prevent them entering Chelva, and that the place was afterwards occupied without resistance. A Carlist telegram received from Perpignan says that Prince Alfonso has passed the Ebro with a brilliant staff, including thirty Spanish noblemen.

A rising has taken place in the province of Cadiz, but the insurgents are said to be few in number, and the authorities have adopted energetic measures of repression.

Senor Castelar's arrival at Lisbon is announced by telegraph. He travelled from Cascaes in the English steamer Plantagenet.

In public audience on Saturday, and with the usual ceremonies, Mr. Caleb Cushing, the new American Minister at Madrid, was received by Marshal Serrano. Senor Mantilla has been appointed Spanish Minister at Washington.

After a prolonged stay at Oran the refugees from Carthage have been handed over to the Spanish authorities. They were shipped on board a frigate and a dispatch-boat, under the superintendence of the director-general of Spanish prisons.

ITALY.

The Senate on Monday discussed and approved the bill modifying the grist tax. The bill will be returned to the Chamber of Deputies in consequence of some changes introduced by the Senate.

The Chamber of Deputies passed by secret ballot several bills already discussed, and afterwards voted the definitive war estimates for 1874. The Chamber has approved the final estimates of the Ministry of Finance. Signor Visconti-Venosta laid on the table the additional postal convention concluded between France and Italy.

SWITZERLAND.

The Federal Assembly was opened on Thursday week. It unanimously declares that the new Federal Constitution comes into force from the present date.

The two legislative bodies have chosen their officers. M. Fehr, of Aargau, has been elected President of the National Council, and M. Ruchonnet, of Lausanne, Vice-President. M. Koechlin, of Basle, has been elected President, and M. Morel, of St. Gall, Vice-President, of the Council of States.

The re-elected Grand Council of Berne assembled on Tuesday, and all the members of the former Government were re-nominated by a large majority.

M. Bodenheimer is appointed President of the Confederation.

GERMANY.

Yesterday week the Emperor William and the Crown Prince paid a visit to Prince Bismarck.

It appears that the confirmation of the eldest son of the Imperial Crown Prince is fixed for Sept. 1.

With modifications of an immaterial character, the proposed reform of the confessional system was last week adopted by the Old Catholic Synod at Bonn. The next congress will be held in the course of the autumn at Freiburg, Breisgau.

A crisis has occurred in the Bavarian Chamber of Deputies in consequence of Father Count Fugger's expulsion under the Jesuit Act. The Father lodged a protest, and his friends moved in the Chamber that it was well founded, as his expulsion violated the Bavarian Constitution and the State rights reserved in the Versailles Treaties. Notwithstanding the strenuous opposition of the Government, the motion was carried by 77 votes against 76.

Official announcement has been made in Berlin of the bestowal of the peace class of the Order of Merit on Mr. Thomas Carlyle and Mr. Humphrey Lloyd, of Dublin; and, as home members, on Professor Max Müller, of Oxford, and Count Von Moltke.

RUSSIA.

After completing his course of the waters at Ems, the Emperor will go to Jugenheim, where the Empress and the Duchess of Edinburgh are expected to arrive on June 14.

The Prussian correspondent of the Times telegraphs:—"Abdurahman Khan, the Afghan pretender to the throne of Cabul, living in Russian Turkestan, sent a caravan from Bokhara to Afghan Turkestan, which was attacked and plundered near Balkh. The attack is stated in the Russian press to have been made in the immediate vicinity of a palace inhabited by Mohammed Alum Khan, the Governor of Afghan Turkestan, and a favourite of Shere Ali Khan."

The same correspondent sends the news that a new commercial harbour is to be constructed at Nicolaieff, the old port being set apart for the rapidly increasing navy of the Black Sea.

The scientific expedition to the Amoo Darya (of which the Grand Duke Nicholas was to have had the command) has started, according to intelligence from St. Petersburg. The command has been intrusted to Colonel Soltykoff. The second expedition to Lake Aral is to start in June.

AMERICA.

The President of the United States has nominated Mr. Benjamin H. Bristow, of Kentucky, Secretary to the Treasury, in the room of Mr. Richardson, who is appointed Judge of the Court of Claims; and the Senate has unanimously confirmed Mr. Bristow's appointment.

President Grant has issued a proclamation extending to Newfoundland and the provisions of the fishery clauses in the Treaty of Washington.

The House of Representatives, yesterday week, by 119 to 104 votes, passed a bill reducing the army to 20,000 men, saving seven millions of expenditure annually. The bill was vigorously opposed by the army officers. The concurrence of the Senate is, according to the Times American correspondent, improbable. The House has adopted amendments of the tariff whereby the duty on still wines in cask is fixed at 50c. per gallon, and the same wines in bottle at 2 dols. per case. The duty on hops is given at 10c. per lb., and the silk duties are readjusted. The other changes are slight. A bill for facilitating the dissolution of polygamous marriages in Utah has passed the House.

Miss Grant, the only daughter of President Grant, was married, at the White House, Washington, on the 21st ult., to Mr. Sartoris, an English gentleman.

Mr. Banfield, the Solicitor to the Treasury, has resigned.

Saturday was kept as a holiday throughout the United States, it being "Decoration Day," when the friends of the soldiers who fell in the late civil war visit their graves; and decorate them with flowers.

M. Rochefort and two of his friends reached New York last Saturday, but they declined the reception which the Communists had proposed to give them on their arrival.

The decrease of the United States debt during the month of May was 4,456,839 dols. The actual amount of debt on June 1 was 2,145,268,438 dols.

Gold sales to the amount of 5,000,000 dols. will be held at Washington during the current month. There will be no purchases of bonds.

CANADA.

From Ottawa it is announced that Mr. Fournier, of the Inland Revenue, has been appointed to succeed Mr. Dorian as Minister of Justice. Mr. Geo. Freon has been appointed Minister of Inland Revenue, and Mr. Dorian will shortly become Chief Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

INDIA.

The weekly telegram from the Viceroy of India respecting the famine states that there has been a good general rainfall north of the Ganges and a partial one south of the Ganges. The estimated consumption of Government grain to the middle of May was about 50,000 tons. The sale of Government grain amounts to between 1200 and 1500 tons daily. Near Julpigoree there was a grain riot on May 21, the soldiers were called out, and two of the rioters were killed. No fresh cases of death from starvation have been reported, and four previously reported were not properly famine deaths. The total number of persons who have died of starvation is thus reduced to twenty-two. As an illustration of the enormous labour undergone by the Government officials it is mentioned that 27,750 villages, containing two million houses, have been inspected, village by village.

The Times correspondent at Calcutta, telegraphing on Tuesday, states that heavy rain fell in Calcutta on that day, and that Champaran has been benefited by the fall which has occurred there; but rain is reported to be wanted in Tirhoot, where Sir Richard Temple is now. Cholera is reported to be prevailing at Dinagore. The Government is supplying the Nepalese with seed.

The Comtesse de Chambord has presented the Pope with 10,000*fr.*

Later advices from Acheen intimate that three of the Dutch positions were simultaneously attacked in great force. The enemy were, however, repulsed with loss.

An international conference for the better definition of international rights in time of war is appointed to meet at Brussels on July 27. The adhesion of all the European Governments has been obtained.

The new Constitution granted to Iceland is to come into effect in August, and at the same time will be celebrated the millennial anniversary of Iceland's colonisation, which was begun by some Norwegian families in 874, a thousand summers ago.

We hear from Brussels that a duel has been fought between the Echevin of Public Instruction and the brother of a young lady with whom he had eloped. The Echevin was a married man, and the young lady a teacher in a public school. In the duel her brother was wounded, and he has since died.

Fez has passed through a new fermentation. By way of protesting against the reimposition of the gate tax the tradespeople and artisans flew to arms, and the Ulemas incited them by declaring the tax to be contrary to Mohammedan law. The Ulemas were arrested, but the mob rescued them, and the authorities had to make a truce with the rioters pending further instructions from the Sultan.

A telegram from Nagasaki, dated May 30, states that the Japanese Government has dispatched an expedition to punish the savages on the eastern shore of the island of Formosa, who had maltreated some shipwrecked Japanese sailors. An insignificant engagement is reported to have taken place. Apprehensions were entertained (the telegram adds) of a difficulty arising between the Japanese and Chinese Governments on this account, but they appear to be unfounded.

Intelligence has been received of the loss of the emigrant-ship British Admiral, 1743 tons, owned by the British Ship-owners' Company, Liverpool. The disaster occurred off King's Island, Bass's Strait, near Melbourne, to which port the vessel was bound. Her crew and passengers numbered eighty-seven, and all are believed to have been lost, except nine persons—namely, C. W. M'Ewen (third officer), D. Baker, J. Cunningham, F. Jagooda, and A. Davidson (seamen); and Thomas O'Grady, David Keys, Thomas Jones, and John Harold (passengers).—From Gibraltar we have news of the wreck of the barque Clifton, bound from Malabar to Newcastle.

A terrible story of brigandage and murder is told by the Roman correspondent of the Times. On Whitsun Monday Count Claudio Faina, of Orvieto, a man about sixty years of age, was driving home in his carriage from the fair at Viterbo when he was attacked by a gang of four ruffians, with masks, and carried off to the neighbouring mountains, where a price of £8000 was put upon his head. The daughter of Count Faina, Signora Palacco, who happened to be in Rome, left immediately for Orvieto, probably with the hope of saving her father by complying with the terms of the brigands. But it was too late. The unfortunate nobleman was found dead in a field of corn; and it is supposed that his captors, closely pursued, dispatched him.

The General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church has been holding its deliberations at Belfast. From the sustentation report it appears that there are in the assembly 561 congregations in Ireland, and the subscriptions for the past year amounted to £24,484.

The citation of Mr. Maconochie, charging against him practices in the service of St. Alban's, Holborn, contrary to the ecclesiastical law, will now proceed to the filing of the articles, and immediately afterwards to trial.

Frome church, so rich in sculpture, has just received a further embellishment by the addition of illustrations of three of the parables of our Lord, executed in Caen stone, by Mr. Forsyth, of Baker-street. They represent "The Sower of the Seed," "The Wicked Servant," and "Dives and Lazarus." They are the gift of a lady.

In opening a diocesan conference on Tuesday the Bishop of Peterborough discussed the Clergy Discipline Bill, with the alternative proposals of Dr. Pusey, Mr. Hope, and Lord Shaftesbury. He expressed his readiness to vote for the second reading of the bill. Lord Alwyne Compton moved a resolution as to the desirability of confining the variations of the Church services within due bounds. It was met by an amendment from Canon Broughton, declaring that it was equally desirable to have the rubrics and canons and the general law of the Church revised. The amendment was carried.

In St. Helen's, Bishopsgate-street, there formerly existed two chantry chapels, dedicated respectively to the Holy Ghost and to the Blessed Virgin Mary. In the seventeenth century the latter was built up to form a vestry. The scheme for the demolition of the Church of St. Martin Outwich and the union of its parish with that of St. Helen provides that the monuments shall be re-erected in the church of the united parishes; and, in order to allow of this, the Merchant Taylors' Company, as patrons of the living, have opened out the Lady chapel, and in so doing many objects of archaeological interest have been discovered, the niches for statues still retaining their colour, the steps leading to the altar, with encaustic tiles in situ; tracery windows and pinnacles. The wall built during the seventeenth century was entirely composed of wroughtstone, which had formed part of the adjoining convent or of some other church, such as quatrifolios inclosing shields, sections of pillars, and capitals and bases of pillars. As no other example of a similar character now exists in the city of London, the archaeological student should without loss of time inspect these venerable remains, to which access is most readily and courteously given by the Vicar and the churchwardens.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

In a convocation, on Thursday week, a vote of thanks was unanimously passed to Major-General Rigaud and the Rev. J. Rigaud, B.D., Fellow of Magdalen, for their presentation to the University of the MS. papers of their father, the late Stephen Peter Rigaud, successively Savilian Professor of Geometry and of Astronomy, with a view to their preservation in the library left under the care of his professors by Sir Henry Savile. The degree of M.A., honoris causa, was subsequently conferred on Dr. Richard Morris, whom the public orator presented in a speech dwelling upon his merits as editor of Chaucer and an authority on early English literature. Subsequently the name of Henry J. S. Smith, M.A., F.R.S., Savilian Professor of Geometry, Fellow of Corpus, who had been nominated to the office of keeper of the museum by the delegates, was approved. In a convocation, held on Tuesday, it was proposed "That the assent of Convocation be given to a bill now before Parliament, intitled An Act for Dissolving Magdalen Hall, in the University of Oxford, and for Incorporating the Principal, Fellows, and Scholars of Hertford College; and for vesting in such college the lands and other property now held in trust for the benefit of Magdalen Hall, subject to such alterations as Parliament may think fit to make in it." Carried, on a division—Placets, 122; non-placets, 31.

In a convocation the same day it was resolved to confer the degree of D.D., honoris causa, upon the Right Rev. Henry Callaway, Bishop of Independent Kaffraria.

The judges of the Ellerton Prize Essay have awarded the prize to A. G. Wood, B.A., of Pembroke. They add that the essay of H. B. Otley, B.A., of St. John's, is entitled to high commendation, and recommend that the writer should receive a present of books if the fund will admit of it.

The Gaisford (Verse) Prize has been awarded to E. M. Field, Scholar of Trinity. The judges consider the exercises of H. C. Seddon, commoner of University, and G. Wotherspoon, scholar of Trinity, deserving of honourable mention.

The following have satisfied the examiners in mechanics and physics and in chemistry:—J. Armytage, New; R. J. Colenso, Trinity; J. D. Hird, unattached; J. E. Judson, Christ Church; W. N. Stocker, Christ Church; W. D. Tarbet, Christ Church. The following have satisfied the examiners in mechanics and physics:—G. S. Baden Powell, Balliol; E. O. Daly, University; W. E. Davidson, Balliol; H. D. Rawnsley, Balliol; E. V. Freeman, Brasenose; F. V. Knox, Magdalen; W. A. Smith, Christ Church; A. K. Willis, unattached; C. T. Wilson, St. Mary Hall. The following have satisfied the examiners in chemistry:—T. D. Acland, Christ Church; C. T. Blanshard, Queen's; T. W. Cross, Balliol; W. J. Fanning, Exeter; T. W. H. Garstang, Balliol; A. Haig, Exeter; R. W. Oldham, Keble.

Freeman, Hon. D.C.L., Oxford; Mr. Leverrier, Director of the Observatory, Paris; Mr. J. Barrande, Member Royal Society of Sciences, Prague; Mr. J. C. Greenwood, Professor of Greek, Owens College, Manchester; Mr. G. Benthall, President of the Linnean Society; and Mr. W. Lassell, F.R.S.

The commemoration of the birthday of George III. was celebrated at Eton College on Thursday with the usual rejoicings.

Lord Lyttelton presided, on Tuesday evening, at the distribution of prizes and certificates gained during the winter session by the students of the King's College evening classes.

According to a notice just issued by Dr. Jex Blake, after the summer vacation of the present year every day boy at Rugby, except the old foundationers, is to pay a tuition fee of £13 6s. 8d., instead of £13 6s. 1d.; an entrance fee of £4 4s., a house entrance fee of £3 3s., and a boarding fee of £24, a term, in advance. This amounts to an additional expenditure of more than £30 a head for every pupil entering the school. The circular, however, states that—"When the new fees come in—that is, from the beginning of next term—two meat meals will be supplied daily to every boy in every house."

The Fishmongers' Company has given £100 to the building fund of the Ladies' College at Girton.

The annual meeting of the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wandstead, was held, last week, at the London Tavern—the Rev. Dr. Simpson in the chair. The report stated that the schools were in a flourishing condition.

On a motion introduced by Mr. John Macgregor, and warmly supported by Miss Chessar, Dr. Gladstone, and others, the London School Board decided, on Wednesday, to include cooking in its curriculum.

Dr. Frankland reports a great improvement in the quality of the water supplied to the metropolis during the last month; but the water of the New River and East London Companies still maintained its superiority over that drawn from the Thames.

The United Grand Lodge of England met on Wednesday night, under the presidency of the Marquis of Ripon, the Grand Master, and voted £500 towards the relief of the distressed inhabitants of Bengal.

At a meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, on Wednesday evening, the president, Sir Bartle Frere, introduced Chumak and Suzi, two servants of the late Dr. Livingstone, who were warmly welcomed by the society. Dr. W. Carpenter delivered a lecture on Ocean Circulation.

At a meeting of ratepayers of the parish of Paddington, held yesterday week, under the presidency of Sir John Kennaway, M.P., a committee was appointed to take preliminary steps for the establishment of a free library in the parish. It was stated that the cost would be about £13,000.

Lady Granville, on Tuesday, christened the Castalia, Captain Dicey's twin-steamer, which is to be an effectual preventive of sea-sickness. The launch took place at the dockyard of the Thames Shipbuilding Company at Blackwall, in the presence of a fashionable assembly.

The freehold site formerly occupied by the Church of St. Martin Outwich, at the corner of Threadneedle-street, was, on Tuesday, purchased by tender from the Ecclesiastical Commissioners by Messrs. Hardwick and Holmes, solicitors, for a client, for £32,000. It contains upwards of 2200 square feet.

At Tuesday's meeting of the Court of Common Council letters were read from Baron Brunnow, the Russian Ambassador, and from the Marquis of Hertford, Lord Chamberlain, expressing the sense of appreciation felt by the Emperor of Russia and by her Majesty at the splendid reception accorded to the former in the City on the 18th ult.

The annual general meeting of the National Artillery Association was held on Tuesday—Colonel Harcourt presiding. The report of the council stated that the continued liberality of the patrons and supporters of the association enabled them to recommend an increase in the value of the prizes offered for competition this year. The camp will open at Shoeburyness on Monday, Aug. 3.

Messrs. Lane and Son, of Berkhamstead, are exhibiting their collection of American plants in the gardens of the Botanic Society, Regent's Park.—The exhibition of American plants by Messrs. John Waterer and Son, of Bagshot, is this year on view in the gardens of Russell-square. This day (Saturday) has been set apart for the benefit of the Alexandra Orphanage for Infants, at Hornsey Rise.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the number of paupers last week was 96,071, of whom 33,849 were in workhouses and 62,177 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, there was a decrease of 8044, 11,731, and 30,667 respectively. The total number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 597, of whom 411 were men, 162 women, and 24 children under sixteen.

Magnificent baths and wash-houses, erected by the Paddington Vestry in Queen's-road, Baywater, were opened by the Lord Mayor on Saturday last. His Lordship was accompanied by the Sheriffs and several members of the Corporation, while the Metropolitan Board of Works was represented by its chairman, Sir James Hogg. When the opening ceremony had been performed, his Lordship and about 300 other guests were entertained in an adjoining marquee.

At a crowded meeting of the Victoria Discussion Society, held on Wednesday evening at the Cavendish Rooms, under the presidency of the Earl of Shaftesbury, Miss Emily Faithfull read a paper on Women and Work, in which she insisted upon the necessity for a proper training for women to fit them for obtaining remunerative employment. A long discussion ensued, and at its conclusion a hearty vote of thanks was, on the motion of Sir John Murray, Bart., awarded to Miss Faithfull for her paper.

At the annual general meeting of the Cambridge Asylum for Soldiers' Widows, which was held at the United Service Institution last Saturday, Lieutenant-General the Marquis of Hertford, as chairman, said the condition of the soldier's wife had changed very much since the time when he first joined the Army. His Lordship in graceful terms acknowledged the obligations of the asylum to the ladies' committee, and personally to the Duchess of Cambridge and the Duchess of Teck.

The annual general meeting of the Royal Naval School, New Cross, was held on Thursday week at the Royal United Service Institution—Admiral the Hon. A. Duncombe in the chair. The report of the council, which stated that the number of pupils had increased to 194, and that many former pupils, including Colonel Sir F. Festing, had distinguished themselves in various ways, was unanimously adopted. The council were authorised to admit a limited number of day scholars.

Major-General Sir Garnet Wolsley, K.C.B., G.C.M.G., and Captain Sir John Glover, G.C.M.G., were, yesterday week, admitted to the honorary freedom of the Company of Grocers. In the evening the "Restoration Banquet," which has been given annually since the year 1660, was celebrated in the hall of the company. The newly-admitted members occupied the post of honour on the right hand of the Master, Mr. Joseph Henry Warner, who presided. Speeches were made both by Sir Garnet Wolsley and Sir John Glover.

The second annual meeting of the governors of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children was held at the London Tavern last week, the chair being occupied by Mr. Joseph Gurney Barclay. The report showed that the hospital, during the past eighteen months, has relieved 17,810 out-patients. The committee having greatly felt the need of more suitable premises for the accommodation of out-patients, had decided to erect an additional building on the ground in their possession, and this is being done at a cost of £5000.

At the meeting of the Mansion House Committee of the Bengal Famine Relief Fund, held on Monday—the Lord Mayor presiding—it was stated that £113,000 had now been subscribed; and it was decided to forward another £20,000 to India, making a total of £100,000 sent. Sir George Campbell, who was present, declared his belief that the famine was now mastered, and that very soon, in consequence of the recent heavy rains, the cultivators now being maintained by Government would be able to resume their work.

Last week 2068 births and 1385 deaths were registered in London, both having been below the average numbers. The 1385 deaths included 37 from measles, 26 from scarlet fever, 3 from diphtheria, 41 from whooping-cough, 30 from different forms of fever, 21 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox; thus to the seven principal diseases of the zymotic class 158 deaths were referred, against 153 and 138 in the two preceding weeks. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 387 and 417, rose last week to 437, exceeding the average by 32. Different forms of violence caused 53 deaths; and 12 deaths from fractures and contusions, resulting from negligence or accident, were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The mean temperature averaged 59.5 deg., which was 4.1 deg. above the average for the corresponding period in fifty years.

A meeting of the Royal National Life-Boat Institution was held, on Thursday, at its house, John-street, Adelphi. The silver medal of the institution and its thanks inscribed on vellum were granted to Mr. Michael Langan and Mr. Thomas M'Combie, the first and second officers of the steamer Princess Alexandra, belonging to the Commissioners of Irish Lights, together with a reward of £20 to fourteen men who had put off with them in the steamer's gig and cutter and saved, under perilous circumstances, three of the crew of the brig Hampton, of Dublin, which was wrecked on the Bull Sand in Dublin Bay during a heavy gale from the W.S.W., on April 13 last. Other honorary and pecuniary rewards were granted to the crews of shore-boats and others for saving life from wrecks on our coasts; and payments amounting to upwards of £1100 were ordered to be made on life-boat establishments. Amongst the contributions received by the society during the past month were £75 from the Royal Mersey Yacht Club, being the proceeds of a ball; £10 10s. from the Dramatic Club of the Honourable Artillery Company; and £23 18s. collected from the captain and passengers on board the colonial mail-steamer Windor Castle, on her voyage from Dartmouth to Capetown. The late Captain Robert Gibson, R.N., of Lancaster, has left the institution £100. Reports were read from the life-boat inspectors of the institution on their recent visits to the coast.

On Saturday the largest gathering of Metropolitan Volunteers which has been held in Hyde Park since the memorable occasion when her Majesty reviewed the London and many of the provincial corps was held, and with splendid weather and the general half-holiday the spectacle attracted an immense number of spectators. There were other displays in Regent's Park, Wimbledon, and other places round London. The following were the regiments in Hyde Park:—1st Middlesex (Victoria) Rifles, two companies, under Major Anderson; the 2nd (South) Middlesex Rifles, ten companies, under Lieutenant-Colonel Viscount Ranelagh; the 4th Middlesex (West London) Rifles, two companies, under Lieutenant-Colonel Lord Truro; the 11th Middlesex (St. George's) Rifles, six companies, under the command (in the absence of Colonel the Hon. C. H. Lindsay) of Major Waller; the 28th Middlesex (London Irish) Rifles, ten companies, under the command of Lieutenant-Colonel Warde; the 40th Middlesex (Central London Rifle Rangers) under Major Miller; the London and Westminster, under Colonel Bennett; and the Post Office Rifles (49th Middlesex), eight companies, under Lieutenant-Colonel Du Plat Taylor. Of these the South Middlesex and the Post Office Rifles underwent their annual official inspection—the former in the evening and the latter in the morning. The other regiments were assembled for a brigade field day.—The Duke of Cambridge has arranged to inspect the London Rifle Brigade, of which he is the honorary Colonel, on the 20th inst., in Hyde Park. The 2nd City Rifles will be inspected on the same day, and the 3rd City Rifles on the 13th inst., by Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar.

A severe thunderstorm passed over Cambridgeshire and Huntingdonshire on Tuesday afternoon, and, in the neighbourhood of Kimbolton, was attended with fatal results. A lad and three horses were struck by lightning as they were returning home from ploughing, and all were killed.

PROCESSION OF THE CORPUS CHRISTI FESTIVAL

FROM THE CHURCH OF ST. STEPHEN, VIENNA.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

An unusually large number of members assembled in the House of Commons on the first evening after the Whitsun recess. The reason was obvious; for there was on that occasion to be enacted what is traditionally supposed to be a tragedy, but in action and in fact is not more than a farce. An offender against the high and mighty conditions of Parliament was to be hauled up, and a breach of privilege was to be considered. Very soon after the sitting commenced a person was observed to be standing at the bar, bowing and gesticulating at the Speaker, whose attention was soon caught to the exceptional appearance before him. Thereupon a voice was heard asking that its owner might at once be allowed to raise a question of privilege. Of course, everyone present pricked up his ears, and supposed that the culprit who was expected was before the House. But it proved to be only Mr. O'Donnell, who has just been ejected from the representation of Galway, after a brief tenure of a seat for that borough, during which he evinced a self-confidence and a capacity for everlasting controversy, and qualities generally which rendered it not surprising that he should take the unusual course of appearing personally at the bar, when he was no longer a member of the House. As may be supposed, the Speaker summarily dismissed him, and he went on his way, with, perhaps, not a few wishes that he would be no more seen or heard in that assembly.

In due time the real case of breach of privilege came on. The Chairman of that which is called for the sake of brevity the "Explosive Committee" (which means the Committee on Explosive Substances)—to wit, Sir John Hay—moved that Mr. R. S. France be called to the bar. It seems that this person is one of the irritable genus known as "inventors," and has discovered something which neutralises all explosive substances and prevents them from blowing up, except when legitimately required to do so; and he wanted to bring a mass of evidence before the Committee. Some of his antecedents in the same line before a Committee of the Lords were probably known to the Explosive Committee; and, being unwilling to have their inquiry prolonged until the "crack of doom," they refused to have anything to do with him. Thereupon he libelled the Committee, and the Chairman in particular, with all the force of an expert in the art of abuse. For this he was now called on to answer. Amidst complete silence, the Speaker gave the order to call in the offender; the Sergeant-at-Arms drew himself up in his chair and adjusted his trusty sword, as ready for the worst; and that mysterious telescopic brass rod, which generally lies concealed, and which is the material "bar," was drawn out, and presented a fragile obstacle to the entrance of the culprit an inch into the sacred precincts of the House. The moment ought to have been awful; but, strange to say, nobody seemed to think it so; and, if it were not profane to make such an insinuation, there might have been an inclination to titter prevailing. The intervention of Mr. Forsyth prevented the immediate advent of the accused; for the member for Marylebone, stating that Mr. France was a constituent of his, thus implying an electoral obligation upon him, proceeded to say that he was about to read a long, prosy, and irrelevant statement of his client, the end-all of which was a withdrawal of his calumnious statements and an apology for them. Although, as he himself would probably have admitted, the having to listen to the document which was read was an aggravation of the offence against the House, Mr. Forsyth asked that it might be considered enough, and that Mr. France should be spared the terrible infliction of appearing at the bar. This would probably have been acceded to; but Mr. Disraeli, who has a penchant for making much of breaches of privilege, with a solemnity that might easily have glided into mockery, declared that the House ought not to be satisfied until they had put the offender on so much of the rack as was in its power. Accordingly, Mr. France was brought in, and, standing isolated at the bar, looked very small indeed, both physically and metaphysically. Having been interrogated by the Speaker, and in so many spoken words apologised, he was allowed to withdraw. But again Mr. Disraeli intervened, and, seeming to think that the poor mouse had not been sufficiently played with in cat-like fashion, insisted on its being brought back and made to feel the claws once more—in fact, to be "admonished." Back, looking now really frightened, came Mr. France, and was duly "admonished," the Speaker delivering himself in a manner which might have been supposed to indicate that he had difficulty in restraining his laughter. The culprit being finally disposed of, and endeavouring to appear tremendously impressed with the force and power of "admonition," darted rapidly out of the House, and perhaps, ere he passed through the lobby, snapped his fingers at the whole of the proceedings, even if he did not go the length of placing the finger of scorn to the nose of derision, as the Persian apothegm has it.

Two years ago Mr. Thomas Hughes had the hardihood to attempt to withstand a tradition of the House of Commons which is now as well established, if not even more dearly cherished, than that of privilege—namely, the adjournment for the Derby. On that occasion there were found a not inconsiderable number of members who were either puritanic enough, or devoted-to-the-service-of-their-country enough, to vote against the granting of a holiday for a horse-race. Last year the Derby Day fell during the Whitsuntide recess, so that the custom did not come into question. Possibly Mr. Disraeli anticipated a renewal of the opposition which had sprung up, and therefore, in moving the adjournment, he simply put it on the ground that there was no business on the paper for Wednesday. There was a pause, and it may have been supposed that the proposal was going to be carried by acclamation as in the olden time. But Sir Wilfrid Lawson arose, with his countenance beaming with drollery, and delivered a speech which was the perfection of humorous irony and good-humoured sarcasm. From every point of view the custom of adjourning for the Derby was ridiculed, but in such a manner as to induce a belief that it was only done in order to exhibit the power of the drollery of the speaker, and not with any real intention of striking at the custom; and this idea was strengthened by the comically suggestive way in which Sir Wilfrid Lawson stated that he would not say whether he was going to the Derby himself or not. Altogether he afforded a good deal of amusement by his racy way of treating the subject, and he obtained the distinction of having made so overwhelming a speech that no one attempted to spoil its effect by saying a word after it. Though there was a division, and the malcontents mustered some sixty strong, yet nothing has yet been done to shake the influence which the Derby Day has over the Legislature.

A singular state of things has occurred in the House—namely, that of a great number of the Ministerialists speaking and voting against the Government, who were only saved from a hostile division by the adherence of many of the Opposition. This was not uncommon during the régime of the late Ministry, but it was not predicated of the well-trained Tory phalanx that it should practically revolt from its leader. What induced Mr. Cartwright, who was born, cradled, and bred in diplomacy, and who has hitherto confined himself to mild murmurings on questions of foreign policy, to take up the case of Father O'Keeffe, the Callan schools, and the Commissioners for Education, which Mr. Bouverie made so prickly for the late Government last year, is not comprehensible by the uninitiated. But so it was; and a very warm debate ensued, in which the Commissioners and Mr. O'Keeffe were respectively held up as monsters, opinion being scattered in parcels all over the House. Any unanimity that was obvious was amongst a section of the Ministerialists, who by speech and cheers seemed determined to hold up Mr. O'Keeffe as a martyr to the "Pope-compelled" Commissioners, and they were in open mutiny, led by Mr. Henley, against the Ministry, which had endeavoured to effect a compromise. Hot was the controversy, and notably Mr. Sullivan and Mr. Conolly, each on a different side, distinguished themselves by their energy and their command of strong language. The matter grew so critical that Mr. Disraeli had to rouse himself from that attitude of silent observation which he affects, and to make a speech which was certainly most adroit and astute, but which would have been better adapted for a bench of judges than for the excited audience before him. Whatever might have been its rhetorical effect, the ultimate result was satisfactory, inasmuch as the Ministry was saved the mortification of being put into a minority by a large section of its own followers.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

On Monday the Lord Chancellor's Land Bill was read the third time and passed; the Parochial Records (Ireland) Bill, the Customs and Inland Revenue (the Budget) Bill, and the India Councils Bill, were read the second time.

The House was occupied for some time on Tuesday night in a debate on the Church Patronage (Scotland) Bill, the second reading of which was moved by the Duke of Richmond. The Earl of Selkirk moved the rejection of the measure, but ultimately the amendment was negatived without a division and the bill was read the second time.

On Thursday the Archbishop of Canterbury moved that the House do resolve itself into Committee on the Public Worship Regulation Bill. The Earl of Limerick moved as an amendment, "That this House, while admitting the present unsatisfactory state of the laws ecclesiastical, is of opinion that exceptional legislation is not now desirable, but rather calculated to promote vexatious litigation." A long discussion followed.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

Mr. R. S. France was on Monday called to the bar on a breach of privilege, in having written a letter libelling the chairman and the Select Committee on Explosive Substances, and was admonished. The subject of the removal of officers without court-martial was discussed on a motion, which was negatived by a large majority. The Civil Service Estimates were advanced nearly to their end, the amount voted being £3,781,343; the Revenue Officers Disabilities Bill was passed through Committee; and, amongst other measures, the Juries Bill was taken in Committee.

The entrance upon public business was for a long time barred on Tuesday by the discussion upon private bills. When these were disposed of and the questions answered, Mr. Disraeli moved the adjournment of the House over the Derby Day. The motion was opposed in a lively speech by Sir Wilfrid Lawson, but was carried by 243 to 69. The subject of unsatisfied claims of British subjects for compensation for losses caused by the Alabama during the American War was brought forward and discussed. Then the case of Mr. O'Keeffe, the Callan schools, and the conduct of the Irish Commissioners were revived, and a motion of censure on the latter was negatived by 206 votes against 118.

On Thursday Mr. MacCombie, member for West Aberdeenshire, took the oath and his seat. Mr. E. J. Noel, who has been ill for some considerable time, was, upon taking the oath, greeted with cheers. Mr. G. Hardy, in reply to a question from Mr. Dillwyn respecting the circumstances of Lord Aylesbury and a troop of yeomanry cavalry at the Leamington railway station on the occasion of her Majesty passing through on May 20, stated that Lord Aylesbury in the first place did not obtain admission by violence; and in the second place, he had the permission of his commanding officer to do what he did. Mr. Cross, on rising to move that the Speaker do leave the chair, in order that the House should go into Committee upon the Licensing Act Amendment Bill, remarked that what he had stated when he asked for leave to bring in the bill and upon the second reading had been much misunderstood, and he had been considerably misrepresented. It had been stated that he had found very great faults with the Act of 1872 regarding this question, and that he had also said that the Act did not work satisfactorily. Such statements had never fallen from him in the sense in which they had been understood by the country. He believed that the measure they introduced had been universally condemned, as was the action of the Government upon it; and he thought that some of the restrictive clauses of the measure they introduced had inflicted great hardship upon several persons; but the Act, upon the whole, had done good. He proposed that the public-houses in London should close at half-past twelve o'clock, that the boundaries of the metropolis should remain as they were, that in the large towns in the country the hour of closing should be half-past eleven o'clock; that in the small towns, when the population was under 2500, the closing hour should be ten o'clock; and that, as regarded beer-houses, the hour of closing should be uniform both in London and the country. Mr. V. Harcourt, who had given notice of another amendment, declined to press it, as the Home Secretary had now conceded all he required. The House then went into Committee, and the consideration of the clauses of the bill occupied the remainder of the sitting.

ELECTION ITEMS.

Mr. George Browne and Mr. O'Connor Power have been returned for the county of Mayo, the figures being—Browne, 1330; Power, 1319; Tighe, 1272. The members are both Home Rulers. Messrs. Browne and Tighe were unseated through an informality in the conduct of the previous elections.

A special case, involving the tenure of Lord Kensington's seat for Haverfordwest, was argued before the Court of Common Pleas on Tuesday. At the election Mr. Davis, who offered himself as a candidate, refused to make any deposit with the returning officer for the purpose of meeting the expenses, and the Sheriff declined to appoint a poll, returning Lord Kensington as member. The Court held that the Sheriff had no right to refuse the nomination of Mr. Davis, and that the election of Lord Kensington was void.

Yesterday week the Court of Common Pleas decided the question of costs in the trial of the Taunton petition. On the same day that Parliament was dissolved Mr. Justice Grove delivered judgment in favour of the respondent, Sir H. James, with costs against the petitioners. It was afterwards contended on their part that, under the circumstances, the judgment was not "delivered" during the duration of Parliament, and that the order for payment of costs by the petitioners was void. The Court was unanimous, yesterday week, in deciding that the order was effectual; that under it Sir H. James was entitled to be paid his costs; and, further, that the petitioners must pay the costs of this unsuccessful experiment.

Mr. Baron Bramwell gave judgment, on Monday, on the North Durham petition. After reviewing the evidence, his Lordship remarked that he could not say that the members had lost their seats by bribery, treating, or intimidation by themselves or their agents, but could not but admit the fact that general intimidation had been resorted to by the miners. His Lordship testified to the intelligence which had been displayed by the miners who had been called as witnesses, and to the decorum observed by the large gathering of delegates and other representatives of the miners who had assembled in the galleries during the progress of the proceedings, and said he deplored that a class of men who were so strongly desirous of obtaining the franchise and also the liberty of voting as their judgment dictated should be so far blinded by their partisanship as to deny to others that right they so dearly prized themselves. In conclusion, his Lordship said he could not avoid finding that the charge of general intimidation had been proved. On the issue he had to declare the election void, that the members be unseated, and that they pay the costs of the present petition. At a meeting of Liberals held immediately after the rising of the Court, it was unanimously agreed that, as Messrs. Bell and Palmer were not disqualified from again coming forward for election, they should be selected as the candidates of the party at the new election; and £10,000 was subscribed in the room towards defraying the costs of the contest.

In giving judgment on Monday upon the Drogheda petition, Mr. Justice Barry said that the election was not invalidated by the delay in opening the booths, inasmuch as no elector was present for the purpose of voting. The petition might have been disposed of on a case stated to the Common Pleas. In the mode of bringing up voters there was not any intention of defeating the secrecy of the ballot. The construction of the booths was unknown to the candidates, and there was nothing to show there had been any violation of secrecy; yet it was a serious question whether the endangering of this would not invalidate the election. As the question of the construction was a purely abstract one of law, he thought it would not be in the interest of the public that he should decide it, and he would therefore send the case to the Court of Common Pleas.

Mr. Justice Grove arrived at Boston on Monday evening, and opened the inquiry there. The petition was presented by Mr. J. W. Malcolm, one of the Conservative members for the borough in the last Parliament, against the return of Mr. William J. Ingram and Mr. Thomas Parry, who were returned, in the Liberal interest, at the general election. The case for the petitioner closed on Thursday. Mr. Ingram was then called, and examined at great length. He spoke to the long connection with the borough of his father, Mr. Herbert Ingram, whose representation of it in Parliament was cut short by his being drowned in Lake Michigan fourteen years ago. His father contributed largely to all local charities for many years, and did much for the commercial and social welfare of the town. Since his father's death his mother had kept up the charities, and taken deep interest in the welfare of the borough. He attributed his own popularity and success at the late election to these facts. He denied all knowledge or sanction of treating or other illegal practices in his interest at the election. Mr. Parry was also examined and denied that he had distributed coal with any political object. His Lordship delivered judgment, exonerating Mr. Parry from any charge of personal corruption, but declaring his election void, and condemning him in costs. A point of law was reserved for the Court of Common Pleas as to whether Mr. Ingram could be held responsible for the acts of Mr. Parry after his coalition with that gentleman, the question of costs being deferred. A scrutiny of votes was then demanded on behalf of Mr. Malcolm, who claims one of the seats.

THE SCOTTISH GENERAL ASSEMBLIES.

Both the Assemblies were occupied yesterday week with the discussion of the Government bill for the abolition of patronage. In the Assembly of the Established Church a debate arose upon motions in favour of giving to all professedly Christian ratepayers a vote in the choice of ministers, instead of restricting the electors to communicants, as proposed in the bill. The Rev. D. Wallace was one of the supporters of the more comprehensive principle. On divisions, however, there were found to be overwhelming majorities in favour of the proposal in the bill. In the Free Church Assembly a resolution condemning the Government bill was carried by 433 votes to 66. Afterwards a resolution was carried by 295 votes to 98 in favour of disestablishment, "effected in a just and equitable manner."

The General Assembly of the Established Church considered, on Monday, an application for admission to the Church on the part of the Rev. Mr. Knight, Minister of St. Enoch's, Dundee, who recently left the Free Church while proceedings were pending on a libel charging him with erroneous doctrine promulgated in articles in the Contemporary Review. A motion to the effect that Mr. Knight be forthwith received as a minister and his congregation as members in full communion with the Established Church, after some discussion, was carried by 152 to 63. The Moderator having delivered his closing address, the Assembly was closed by the Lord High Commissioner with the usual formalities. The Free Church Assembly resolved to memorialise Government to maintain with vigour the policy which dictated the mission to Africa of Sir Bartle Frere.

At the sitting of the Free Church Assembly on Tuesday a letter was read from Dr. Duff, stating that, in consequence of what had taken place in connection with the election of Dr. Rainy to the principalship of the new college, he felt it his duty to resign his professorship of Evangelistic Theology, and all the other offices he holds in the Church. A deputation waited on Dr. Duff, who consented to withdraw his resignation. The sittings of the Assembly closed in the evening.

Mr. Gates was, on Thursday week, elected the first Mayor of Peterborough under the newly-granted charter of incorporation. The occasion was observed as a gala day, and there was a display of fireworks at night.

The state apartments of Windsor Castle, including the rooms used by the Emperor of Russia, are open to the public. Tickets can be obtained at the principal bookellers in the town. The shrubs in the beautiful rhododendron walk in the Great Park are in full bloom.

The series of International Exhibitions at South Kensington coming to a close with the present year's, Mr. W. E. Randle has suggested that the Society of Arts should hold a series of similar exhibitions in the leading provincial cities, beginning at Manchester in 1875. Mr. Randle proposes to surmount the difficulty of a suitable building by constructing his portable miniature crystal palaces in each town in succession.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE EPSOM SUMMER MEETING.

In spite of the long spell of dry weather, which made the course very hard and slippery, there were capital fields on the first day at Epsom. Oxonian, whose stamina appears to improve with age, had no trouble in winning the Craven Stakes, in which St. Patrick ran very badly. Madame Toto beat a very moderate lot in a Maiden Plate, and then Kaiser (9st. 4lb.) gave Cambuslang (7st. 3lb.) such an easy beating that Andre's performance in the Great Cheshire Stakes was considerably discounted, and therefore the trials of Atlantic and Aquilo were somewhat depreciated. For the Woodcote Stakes, Chaplet, the sister to Rosicrucian, was made a very hot favourite. She has, however, been recently amiss, and Ladylove, whom she defeated with consummate ease at the First Spring Meeting, at Newmarket, completely turned the tables on her. Behind the pair were two or three very aristocratic youngsters, including Fille du Ciel, an own sister to Reine, by Monarque—Fille de l'Air, and The Grey Palmer, a half-brother to Formosa, by The Palmer—Eller. There was only one casualty during the day, Sister to Viridia, the favourite for Madame Toto's race, coming down very heavily and breaking one of her legs. The filly had to be destroyed, but T. Cannon, who rode her, escaped with a shaking, and was able to be in the saddle again on the following day.

A heavy fall of rain on Tuesday night softened the course, laid the dust, and made Wednesday one of the pleasantest Derby Days we ever remember. It is, of course, impossible to estimate the number of people on Epsom Downs, but the road seemed patronised to a greater extent than ever, and the stands and the side of the hill looked unusually crowded. Little attention was paid to the first race, and the moment it was over there was a rush to the paddock to inspect the Derby horses. The first we saw was Ecossais, whose toilet was personally superintended by Tom Jennings. The colt, though decidedly above himself, appeared to have done a fair amount of work; his badly-shaped forelegs were, however, bandaged up to the knees, and he did not appear to relish his task, repeatedly lashing out with his hind legs. Mr. Cartwright's pair were the next that attracted our attention. Volturino, who was merely started to make the running, is a very mean, common-looking colt, whose appearance gave no promise that he would fulfil his mission as well as he did. George Frederick, on the contrary, agreeably disappointed us. He has always been a grand-looking animal, and now, for the first time in his life, was thoroughly fit. His heavy shoulders have firmed down considerably, and his owner, who stood by to see him saddled, looked the picture of confidence. A large crowd near the centre of the paddock told of some more than ordinary attraction, and we strolled there to find Matthew Dawson's quartet doing a walk round. Atlantic headed them, but, though he looked in perfect condition, we were not favourably impressed with him. There is far too much daylight under him, and his swollen knee gave evidence of his fractious behaviour on the journey down. Aquilo is, on the whole, a better-looking horse; and Trent, though small, is compact and beautifully proportioned. Leolinus, however, secured the chief share of popular admiration. He appeared to have great substance and power; but, as we did not see him without his clothes, we cannot give a critical description of him. Glenalmond had also a large attendance of admirers. He is a beautifully-shaped, very bloodlike colt, and his condition was perfect; but he struck us as being a trifle short, and lacks the size that one expects to find in a Derby winner. Tipster was also very fit; but his want of quality prevented his making many friends. Couronne de Fer pleased us immensely, for, though he has not grown much since last season, the report that he was very leggy proved totally unfounded. Sister to Ryehworth is a racing-like filly; and we have little to say of the remainder.

A capital start was effected at the second attempt, King of Tyne and Volturino at once showing in front. After going a quarter of a mile Tipster took the lead; but at the mile post the above-named pair again passed him, and Ecossais went into third place. Nearly the same order was maintained down the hill; but as soon as they entered the straight Custance sent George Frederick along and took up the running. Couronne de Fer and Rostrevor being his immediate attendants. Nothing, however, had the least chance with Mr. Cartwright's horse, who, passing the Tattersalls inclosure, came right away, and won in a canter by two lengths from Couronne de Fer. Atlantic finished very strongly, and was only beaten a neck for second place, being the same distance in front of Leolinus, nearly in a line with whom were Trent, Aquilo, and Rostrevor, the quartet being just clear of Mr. Savile's filly. All the rest were beaten a long way. Reverberation, who broke down, being about last. Custance thus won his third Derby, and it was clear that the best horse in the Heath House stable had been sold, for we doubt if Atlantic's accident affected his running. Ecossais looked very formidable for about a mile; and Glenalmond was the only one of the favourites who thoroughly disgraced himself, for he stayed no better than the majority of the Blair Athols, and, moreover, could never go the pace. George Frederick's antecedents are not those of a Derby winner; but it is clear that Mr. Cartwright has laid himself out solely for this race, and the horse has never previously been fit to run. The defeat of Lady Glenorchy in the Stanley Stakes by Pope Joan was the only noticeable feature in the minor races of the day. There was, however, a scrimmage at the start, which gave the winner a lead of a couple of lengths, and her jockey took full advantage of it.

The Epsom Meeting naturally occupies so much of our space that the other events of the week must be treated very briefly. Cricketers are now hard at work all over England, and several very important matches have been played during the past few days. The M. C. C. have beaten Oxford University by forty runs, after an exciting contest, the result being mainly due to the fine batting of Mr. G. F. Crook, who scored 52 in his second innings. Cambridge University v. Surrey was drawn, the scoring being so heavy that three days proved insufficient to complete it. For Surrey, Jupp (66 and 69), Mr. Weeding (20 and 82), R. Humphrey (32 and 52), and Pooley (not out, 20 and 97) did best; while Mr. W. S. Patterson (86) was top score for his University. The match between the Gentlemen of England and Cambridge University produced a wonderfully close finish, the latter pulling it off by one wicket. The Gentlemen had not the assistance of Mr. W. G. Grace; but Messrs. I. D. Walker (57) and E. R. Pryor (46) batted well, as did Messrs. G. Macan (35), H. M. Sims (46), and C. Tillard (46), on the opposite side. Mr. W. G. Grace played for the M.C.C. against the North of England. The champion, however, did not "come off" quite as well as usual, though his 43 was the highest score on his side, and the club succumbed by forty-five runs, in spite of the magnificent bowling of A. Shaw, who took all ten of the northern wickets in the first innings. The Ashantee Division played a Twelve of the Household Brigade at Prince's on Tuesday; but their cricketing powers are by no means equal to their fighting capabilities, and they suffered an easy defeat.

The eleventh annual athletic meeting of the Civil Service took place at Lillie-bridge on Saturday last, in the presence of about 8000 spectators. The best performance of the afternoon was unquestionably that of Walter Slade, amateur champion at one and four miles, who won the open mile handicap from scratch, doing the full distance in the unprecedented time for an amateur of 4 min. 26 sec. The most successful competitors in the closed races were G. F. Griffin (Post Office) and J. H. A. Reay (Inland Revenue). The former won the 220-yards challenge cup, the 300-yards handicap, and the quarter, and the latter took the hurdle-race for the third successive year, and the broad jump.

In a professional three-mile walking-match at Lillie-bridge, on Monday last, R. Perkins beat J. Stockwell (the champion), covering one mile in 6 min. 23 sec., two in 13 min. 28½ sec., and three in 20 min. 46 sec., the times for each mile being the fastest on record.

John Roberts, jun., played 1000 up even against Joseph Bennett, on Monday evening last, for £100 a side. It was a very hollow affair; for Roberts, who was in capital form, made a break of 140 (21 spots) and won by 432 points. Bennett seemed completely out of play, and 68 was his largest contribution.

THE MAGAZINES FOR JUNE.

The Cornhill has an interesting paper on Dr. Schliemann's discoveries in the Troad, evidently the production of some one of considerable local knowledge, but dealing, we regret to say, in an ungenerous spirit with the labours of the self-taught archaeologist, whose eccentricities are too palpable to be harmful, and whose discoveries are a standing reproach to all who have hitherto preferred theorising to practical exploration. It is even insinuated that the ornaments found by Dr. Schliemann may be of recent date, although they are admitted to have been discovered many feet under Greek remains older than the time of the Cæsars. We can no more understand how forgeries should have got there than how the name of New Troy, given to the Greek colony, should prove the site as well as the city to have been a new one. Such instances as New Carthage and New Sarum are not to the point, as these were built while the parent cities were still in existence. One good suggestion the article does contain, that the presumed site of the Grecian camp should likewise be excavated. There is not much else of mark in the number; but "A Bye Day in the Alps" is very pleasantly written, and "Dreams" contains some striking anecdotes of prophetic visions. Thackeray's recently discovered lines on Frederick the Great's father are a characteristic specimen of his style, though not remarkable as regards matter.

Macmillan is unusually good, having no fewer than five really important contributions. Mr. Freeman, an authority on architecture, traces the outgrowth of the Romanesque or Byzantine style from the original Roman discovery of the arch, made in the regal period, but long kept in abeyance from the influence of the Greek style. Mr. Wedmore's essay on celebrated masters in etching, especially Rembrandt, is an equally interesting contribution to a minor branch of art-criticism. Mr. Lecky vindicates the Irish Parliament of 1782-98 against Mr. Froude, but, though impressive in his rebuke of the latter's extravagances, fails to show that this Legislature accomplished anything for the country. Mr. Goldwin Smith's argument against female suffrage is temperate and masterly. A scheme for the abolition of the sale of livings is exceedingly well intended; but the writer is mistaken if he thinks that the momentum essential to so great a change can be created otherwise than by an unconditional transfer of the patronage to the parishioners at large.

There is nothing very remarkable in Fraser, which has, nevertheless, a number of fairly interesting papers. The most weighty is a severe indictment of Turkey for her bad financial administration, with a prophecy of her speedy conquest by her powerful neighbour. The writer has eyes for only one side of his subject, and ignores the fervour of religious zeal which such a contest would call into activity, and which—as the Dutch are discovering to their cost in Achæen—goes a long way to supply the absence of every other source of national vigour. A writer on "The Political Consequences of Army Reform" anticipates that the effect of the short-service system will be to lighten the working classes with a strong Conservative element from the re-absorption of discharged soldiers. Equally ingenious reasons might be produced in support of a diametrically opposite conclusion; but, in fact, it seems doubtful whether the discharged soldiers will be sufficiently numerous to produce any appreciable effect either way. "Sussex Cottages" and "Things We have Eaten" are excellent light papers; and Mr. Sayce's summary of recent Assyrian discovery will be found valuable.

"Alice Lorraine" continues to be the most attractive feature of Blackwood, which is, however, very readable throughout. A review of Victor Hugo's last work is written in a fine spirit of appreciation. "Poets at Play" enshrines some capital specimens of occasional verse; and, although the story of the recent changes in Japan has been often told before, it is told exceedingly well.

The Fortnightly has a very important paper by Mr. Cliffe Leslie, treating of the enormous rise in wages which has been taking place over the Continent while the price of agricultural labour has remained so nearly stationary in England, and of other anomalies puzzling to political economists. The question, as it affects ourselves, is briefly discussed by Mr. R. Jeffries, whose view of the labourers' prospect of success in the pending struggle is not an encouraging one. In the second part of his essay on "Compromise," Mr. Morley dwells eloquently on the mischief of neglecting to investigate principles of action on the ground of the time not having yet arrived for their practical application. Karl Hildebrand contributes the first part of a spirited sketch of Winkelman, and Mr. Wallace concludes his defence of spiritualism. We fear that the prestige of this eminent naturalist's name will be the chief advantage the spiritualists will derive from his advocacy: it would be impossible to imagine anything looser than his notions of evidence, or more careless than his scrutiny of the stories which he dignifies by that title.

Mr. Gladstone's essay on Homer's place in history in the Contemporary is a much more valuable contribution to the study of Homer than his translations. After discussing the identity with Troy of the remains discovered by Dr. Schliemann, to which he inclines without expressing an absolute conviction, he directs his argument to the period of Homer, endeavouring to establish from the evidence of Egyptian inscriptions that the destruction of Troy cannot have taken place later than the end of the fourteenth century B.C., and from the employment of the term Achæans that Homer cannot have written long after that date. The evidence for both propositions appears to us at present insufficient, but they are discussed with admirable spirit and ingenuity. By appearing in the character of Cassandra Mr. W. R. Greg intimates a distrust of his countrymen's common sense which really seems uncalled for, considering that he has this time no more disputable proposition to enunciate than that our manufacturing supremacy must some day come to an end. Mr. Davies's review of Lord Lytton's fables is very agreeable reading, and Mr. Rowse's list of ancient sinecure places even more so—now that we have got rid of them. Archbishop Manning's reply to Mr. Fitzjames Stephen is very feminine in its logic, and not very honest in its vindication of the Roman Church against the charge of persecution. Dr. Manning knows very well that the charge against his Church is not that she anathematises religious toleration three centuries ago, but that she does so still.

The Gentleman's Magazine puts forth a remarkably attractive number. Mr. Francillon's "Olympia" is as interesting as ever; "An Emigration Sketch" is full of humour; and the criticism on the recent autumnal manoeuvres is evidently the work of an impartial writer, addicted neither to compliment nor to fault finding. Some of the eccentricities of the House of Commons are well hit off in the sketch of the independent members. Judging from the specimen of Mr. Buchanan's "Last Poet" with which we are favoured, the predicted extinction of the species will be a subject for profound congratulation.

The most remarkable among the Transatlantic's appropriations is Senator Schurz's fine oration on Charles Sumner. Scribner's Monthly is good, especially for the article on the present condition of South Carolina. Old and New does not shine as a repository of indigenous talent, but makes a respectable appearance with imported contributions from Anthony Trollope, Turgeneff, and the Rev. James Martineau.

The Month somehow does not improve under its present accomplished editor, and contains nothing of interest except a notice of M. d'Iderville's graphic reminiscences of the occupation of Rome by the Italian forces. The transaction was certainly humiliating to France, and should serve as a lesson to her not again to occupy a position from which it is so difficult to devise a dignified exit.

We have specially to note in Belgravia Mr. Sala's clever exaggeration of Thackeray's manner in his "Venus de Medici's Marriage;" in Tinsley the continuation of "Linley Rochford;" and in London Society that of Mr. O'Shaughnessy's "Portraits Charman's." We have also to acknowledge Good Words, All the Year Round, the Monthly Packet, the New Monthly, the St. James's Magazine, Good Things, Aunt Judy, the Victoria Magazine, the Popular Science Review, the Sunday Magazine, Cassell's Magazine, and a number of parts of serial publications from the enterprising publishers of the latter periodical.

LAW AND POLICE.

Vice-Chancellor Malins has adjourned an application to restrain the performance of "Vert Vert," at St. James's. The applicants were Messrs. Boosey and Son, the music publishers, who claimed to have purchased the copyright from M. Offenbach in 1869, a few days after it was brought out at the Theatre Imperial. On an agreement to let the application stand over the defendant undertook to pay, as the Court might direct, three guineas for each performance in the interim.

The appeal case of "Roberts v. Egerton," which came before the Court of Queen's Bench last Saturday, raised an important question on the Adulteration Act—whether the sale of an article, as tea, which is adulterated can be excused on the ground that it is known to be so in "the trade." On behalf of the appellant, who had been convicted of selling green tea, faced with gypsum and Prussian blue, it was contended that he had sold, just as he bought it, what was known as green tea in the trade; but the Lord Chief Justice, Mr. Justice Blackburn, and Mr. Justice Archibald concurred in thinking that the article was adulterated, although Mr. Justice Quain dissented. The conviction was accordingly affirmed.

Liabilities of £900,000 were stated on Wednesday in the case of Oppenheim and Schröder, in the Bankruptcy Court, the assets being roughly estimated at £700,000 or £800,000.

Mr. Jacobs, the German jeweller who sued Sir Robert Carden for £20,000 damages for false imprisonment, has been summoned at Bow-street in a matter of 12s. He had purchased a lot of waistcoats from a man, and wished to settle the claim by reading to him from various Acts of Parliament. A policeman having sent them to the station to arrange their dispute, Mr. Jacobs renewed his recitations from the statutes. Ultimately he was induced to pay the 12s., but next morning he repented, and wished to serve a writ on the inspector. When the magistrate declined to give him a warrant he threatened him with proceedings. Afterwards, the usher of the court incurred his vengeance by having to remove him from the court.

At Marlborough-street, on Wednesday, a man was prosecuted by the guardians of St. Pancras for having neglected to provide his daughter with proper food and raiment, whereby her life was endangered. He was sent to prison for four months, with hard labour. At Worship-street, in a similar case, a man and woman were committed for trial.

Mr. Edward Welby Pugin, the well-known architect, appeared on Tuesday at the Westminster Police Court, charged on a summons with having published false and defamatory libels upon Mr. John Rogers Herbert, R.A. The letters complained of had been addressed, two to Mrs. Herbert, one to Mr. Ryan, a solicitor, and several to Mr. Herbert himself, the cause of Mr. Pugin's annoyance being some legal proceedings pending between him and the prosecutor. The magistrate decided upon sending the case for trial, accepting two sureties.

Gustave Bernard Cennovich, a Pole, whose extraordinary behaviour at the house of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar, in Portland-place, caused some excitement on Monday, was charged, on Tuesday, at Bow-street, with being a person of unsound mind, wandering about to the public danger. The man, who is known to the police as a lunatic, has invented a shooting-machine, which he was anxious to bring under the notice of Mr. Disraeli and the Commander-in-Chief. Failing access to them, he thought to gain the ear of Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar by exploding his blunderbuss in front of the Prince's house. After evidence had been heard as to his erratic proceedings in Portland-place, he was remanded for inquiry.

Two police-constables were among the delinquents at the police-courts yesterday week. At Westminster Archibald Small was fined £4 for getting drunk while on duty, and at Marylebone George Poole had to pay £5 for threatening a sergeant who had reported him for gossiping on his beat.

For stealing a watch from a person named Solomon Apple, Henry Evans was, in spite of his defence to the effect that his hand had come accidentally in contact with the prosecutor's watch-chain, found guilty at the Middlesex Sessions yesterday week, and several previous convictions being proved against him, sentenced to seven years' penal servitude and five years' police supervision.

The opening cruise of the Royal Ulster Yacht Club took place, last Saturday, in Belfast Loch.

GENERAL SHUTE, M.P. FOR BRIGHTON.

MR. ASHBURY, M.P. FOR BRIGHTON.

THE MEMBERS FOR BRIGHTON.

The late general Parliamentary election deprived Brighton and the kingdom, for a time, of the services of two very good Liberal representatives. But Mr. White and Mr. Fawcett have long been known to the whole community of Liberal politicians throughout Great Britain. Mr. Ashbury and General Shute, who have gained their seats, were known in other than political circles. The former is an active and influential man of business, a manufacturing engineer, and a famous yachtsman. The other is a military officer of distinction, who has served in India and the Crimea.

Mr. James Lloyd Ashbury, who was born in 1834, is only son of the late Mr. John Ashbury, of Manchester, founder and proprietor of the great manufactory of railway rolling-stock at Openshaw. That establishment, the largest of its kind, covers twelve acres of ground, and employs 2000 hands. The member for Brighton, leaving Huddersfield College at sixteen years of age, underwent a thorough practical training in the work and business of his father's concern. In 1859 he went to Russia, and lived there two years, representing his father as contractor for the construction of the Riga and Dunaburg railway. He has since been engaged in railway business in Turkey and Egypt, Italy and Spain; from the Spanish Government he has received the orders of Charles III. and Isabella II. His father partially retired in 1862, and died in 1866. The firm was converted into a joint-stock company, the "Ashbury Railway-Carriage and Iron Company," with limited liability, of which Mr. James Ashbury is managing chairman. He was at one time a director of the firm of Sir John Brown and Co., of Sheffield, the armour-plate manufacturers, employing 4000 men; also director of the Carnforth Iron Company, in Cumberland; the Norton Iron Company of Durham, the Brecon and Merthyr Railway, the Hereford and Brecon Railway, and four or five other companies. Several of these appointments he has relinquished, but he still retains the office of chairman of the Denbigh, Ruthin, and Corwen Railway, director of the Smyrna and Cassaba Railway, and two or three others. In addition to these business engagements, Mr. Ashbury is a member of the Institution of Civil Engineers and the Institute of Mechanical Engineers. He takes much interest in scientific education, as he showed by a gift of £4000 to Owens College, Manchester. In 1867 Mr. Ashbury resorted to yachting as a recreation for the benefit of his health. He built the famous Cambria, which in 1868 beat the American champion yacht Sappho, but was defeated by that yacht, under different conditions, in 1870. Mr. Ashbury then accepted the challenge of Mr. James Gordon Bennett, jun., of New York, to race his Dauntless across the Atlantic. The Cambria, after a stormy sail of twenty-three days, won this grand race by an hour and a half. Mr. Ashbury, in 1870, was chosen commodore of the Royal Harwich Yacht Club, and, this year, of the Royal London Yacht Club, but he has parted with the Cambria to another owner. He was a candidate for Brighton in 1868, but did not then succeed. His majority of votes over both the Liberal candidates upon this last occasion was above a thousand. Mr. Ashbury is unmarried.

The second member for Brighton is Major-General Charles Cameron Shute, C.B. He is eldest son of the late Mr. Thomas Deane Shute, of Bramshaw-hill, Hampshire, by Charlotte, daughter of the late General Neville Cameron, of the East India Company's service, and was born about the year 1817. He was educated at Winchester College. He entered the Army in 1834 as Cornet in the 13th Hussars, with which regiment he served with distinction in India; he also served with the 6th (Inniskilling) Dragoons in the Crimean campaign, where he was Assistant Adjutant-General of the Cavalry Division. He became a Colonel in 1858, and was in command of the Inniskillings, and subsequently of the 4th Light Dragoons, previous to attaining field rank in 1871. He is also a Knight of the Legion of Honour, and bears the Turkish medal and the Order of the Medjidie. General Shute, who is a magistrate for Sussex, and honorary Colonel of the Sussex Rifle Volunteers, now enters Parliament for the first time. He married, in 1858, Rhoda, daughter of the Rev. H. T. Dowler.

The Portrait of Mr. Ashbury is from a photograph by Messrs. W. and A. H. Fry, of Brighton; that of General Shute, from one by Messrs. Lock and Whitfield.

ST. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, VIENNA.

Every tourist who has been in a Continental Roman Catholic city on the Thursday after Trinity Sunday knows the procession that is customary in honour of the ecclesiastical festival of Corpus Christi, which in France is commonly called the Fête Dieu. This scene is represented in our Engraving as it took place last year, during the Vienna Great Exhibition, before St. Stephen's Church. We prefer here to comment less upon the religious ceremonial, than upon the stately edifice with whose ministry it is connected, and which is one of the grandest features of the Austrian capital. St. Stephen's Church was built by the Dukes of the old Hapsburg line in the fourteenth century, but has been completely restored, in the correct style of Gothic antiquarianism, within the last twenty years. Its graceful steeple rises to the vast height of 436 ft. The Riessenthor, or Giant's Door, and the Heidenthürme, which means Towers of the Heathen, with profuse decorations of sculpture, attract the spectator's notice outside the church. The interior, of which Mr. S. Read's artistic pencil has given some interesting views, presents several halls beneath the towers, the nave and choir surrounded by monuments, carved stone pulpits, chapels, and nearly forty altars. The ascent of the lofty tower, by 750 steps, is a labour for which the sightseer is rewarded with one of the finest views in Europe. The open place in front, called St. Stephan's Platz, abuts on the Graben, which is the most fashionable business street of Vienna.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
It is not generally known that the largest and most successful Watch Factory in the World is located in America. Yet such is the case. The American Watch Company, whose Works are at Waltham, Massachusetts, U.S.A., have manufactured over a hundred thousand watches annually, and all of most excellent quality. This Company has been in operation about twenty years, and in that time has made and sold about eight hundred thousand watches. In America Waltham Watches are regarded as standard time-keepers, and are universal used on all the numerous railway lines throughout the country. The American Watch Company was the first to apply machinery to all the details of watch-making, and has brought this system to great perfection. Probably no finer mechanism exists than that in the machine used at Waltham, and every part of the watch is produced with systematic exactness. As a result, every movement of the same grade is precisely alike, and all the parts are interchangeable. Waltham Watches, as they are popularly known in America, are near in appearance to the most beautiful watches in the world, and are not liable to get out of order; they are made both as key-winders and stem-winders, of six different sizes and of various grades. A very interesting pamphlet, illustrated with fine engravings, describing the manufacture of watches at Waltham, will be sent free by post to all who write for it. Address: THE AMERICAN WATCH COMPANY, No. 16, Hatton-garden, London.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
The theory of the Machine-Made Waltham Watch has always been inappreciable. The hand-made watch was best as long as machinery was imperfect, but good watches made by hand were always high-priced, while low-priced watches were almost worthless. The application of perfected machinery disposed of both of these drawbacks. It cheapened the cost of the higher grades and improved the quality of the lower, and thus for the first time brought good time-keepers within the reach of all.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
The experimental period of the machine-made watch is now in the past. There were difficulties to surmount, prejudicial to overcome. The attainment of requisite perfection in machinery involved long delays. The Waltham Watch is now, however, an established success. American enterprise and skill have proved their ability to compete with the finest workmanship of hand labour in the Old World.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
More points of excellence are claimed for Waltham Watches than are found in those of any other manufacture. Every improvement has been adopted that experience has shown to be desirable, and no pains or expense spared in constructing machines to produce watches which are perfect even in their most insignificant parts.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
The interchangeable system in which Waltham Watches are made is worthy of careful attention, and deserves some explanation. Every part of the watch is made to an exact gauge, and any part of one watch is exactly like the same part in another; and if ten watches of one grade were taken apart, and the screws, springs, &c., mixed together, ten perfect watches could be made by putting these parts together again without any reference to their former combination. This is a great advantage; for if any part of a Waltham Watch is injured, it can readily be replaced, and at a trifling expense.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
This same principle applies to fitting the movements in the cases; a gold or silver case made for one Waltham movement will fit any other movement of the same grade—no nearly fit, but exactly, without any variation or adjustment whatever. Of course, this perfect relation of all the numerous parts of so delicate a piece of mechanism as a watch could never be attained by hand labour. It is only possible where machines are used which finish some parts of the watch to a gauge, which shows a variation of the ten-thousandth part of an inch.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
The Waltham Watch runs with the greatest accuracy, and its substantial construction will commend it to all who appreciate a really good article. The longer it is worn the more it is liked, and the facility with which, in case of accident, it is repaired obviates an objection which is felt towards other watches. In price, comparing quality with quality, it is the best for the money in the market, and in intrinsic cheapness (that is, estimating price according to value) the Waltham Watch has no competitor.

AMERICAN WATCHES.
The pamphlet, which is sent free by post to all who write for it will be found very interesting. It shows what a great advance has been made in the art of watchmaking, and correctly describes one of America's most successful enterprises. It is also illustrated with diagrams and fine engravings. Address: THE AMERICAN WATCH COMPANY, No. 16, Hatton-garden, London.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-

GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards. The ever-increasing culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured. The instruments now offered to the public will be found superior to all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like. Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows. The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost. CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW MUSIC.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM, with TWO ROWS OF KEYS, four feet and eight-inch tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 5 octaves, F to F. THE LATE M. VAN DE WEYER, FORMERLY BELGIAN MINISTER IN LONDON.

The death of this accomplished Belgian gentleman, who had lived in London forty-three years, and had married an English lady, was recorded some days ago. M. Sylvain Van de Weyer was seventy-two years of age. He was the son of a lawyer, who held a Government office at Amsterdam, where the subject of this notice was born, under the French Republic and Empire. The kingdom of the Netherlands, founded on the fall of Napoleon, and including both Holland and Belgium, was scarcely more acceptable to Belgian patriotism. It was overthrown by the Revolution of 1830. Van de Weyer, then an advocate and journalist at Brussels, was one of five delegates who represented the grievances of Belgium to the Dutch King. The dispute came to an armed struggle, in which the Belgians were aided by France. The British Government, under the Duke of Wellington's and Lord Palmerston's Administrations, consented to the Belgians forming an independent kingdom. Van de Weyer was engaged in negotiating for this object, and in 1830 became Belgian Minister, which post he retained till 1867. He was a great scholar and collector of books. Two volumes of his essays have been published. The portrait of M. Van de Weyer is from a photograph by Messrs. Hills and Saunders, of Eton.

SWIMMING-BATH OF THE TRAINING-SHIP INDEFATIGABLE AT LIVERPOOL

NEW BRIDGE AT HUDDERSFIELD.

This flourishing town of the West Riding of Yorkshire, with its great woollen manufacture, has grown rich enough for ornamental as well as useful public works. Its buildings are constructed to good advantage of the fine light brown stone which abounds in the district; the streets are well planned, and there is an air of handsome prosperity about the place. The new bridge at Aspley, over the river Colne, which was opened on Monday week, is called Somerset Bridge, in honour of Lady Guendolen Ramsden, wife of Sir John Ramsden, Bart., late an Under-Secretary of State, and chief landowner at Huddersfield. This lady is a daughter of the Duke of Somerset. The bridge was formally declared to be opened by Lady Guendolen, accompanied by her husband, at the request of the Mayor, Mr. H. Brooke. A christening ceremony was performed by her breaking a bottle of champagne against the bridge wall. There was afterwards a banquet given by the Mayor at the George Hotel. The cost of the new bridge is £12,000, partly borne by a grant from the County Sessions and partly by subscription, but the greater part by the Town Corporation. It was commenced in September, 1872, when Alderman Mellor was Mayor. The designer was Mr. J. H. Abbey, borough surveyor; Messrs. Abraham Graham and Sons were the contractors, who executed the work. The bridge has a span of 70 ft. Its width is 50 ft., and it is 25 ft. above the river. Our illustration is supplied by Mr. Reginald Spurr, photographer.

A SHIP SCHOOL SWIMMING-BATH.

The Liverpool training-ship Indefatigable, in the Mersey, for the education of sailors' orphan sons and others, has now a floating bath connected with it, in which the boys learn to swim. This structure was designed by Mr. W. R. M'Kaig, engineer, and Mr. J. Carlton Stiff. It was made at the Windsor Ironworks, Garston. Its form and plan are shown in our illustration. The permanent moorings were provided by a donation from Mr. Albert Wood. Captain Gardner, an active member of the executive committee of supporters of the Indefatigable training-ship, superintended the construction. It seems to answer its purpose very well. It is an iron cellular structure, the pontoons or compartments of which are so arranged as to inclose a space 50 ft. long by 20 ft. broad, which forms the water area. The depth at the shallow end is 3 ft. 6 in., but at the deep end it can be regulated from 3 ft. 6 in. to 6 ft. 6 in., by means of an adjustable bottom or tray, hinged at one end and supported by chains at the other. The lifting power is supplied by two small worm-wheel and pinion apparatus. The bath is moored at one end, and swings with the tide. The water, entering at the deep end, passes out at the shallow; so that, as the bath is open to the sky, one may enjoy all the benefits of sea-bathing combined with the safety and comfort of an ordinary public plunge-bath.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The closing performances of last week, following those already noticed, were repetitions of "Lucia di Lammermoor" on Thursday; "Il Barbiere di Siviglia" on Friday; and "Faust" on Saturday, with Mdlle. Marimon as Margherita for the first time at this establishment, the début of Mdlle. Calasch as Siebel, and M. Faure again in the part of Medefotele, other features of the cast having been the same as recently. The performances of Mdlle. Marimon and M. Faure displayed all those high merits which have before been commented on. Of the débutante we prefer to speak after her second appearance, her extreme nervousness on Saturday having almost overpowered her self-possession. Nevertheless, she was considerably applauded after the song in the garden scene, "Le parlait d'amour."

The programme for this week consisted entirely of operas repeated as previously given—"Don Giovanni" on Monday, "Rigoletto" on Tuesday, "Dinorah" on Thursday, "Guglielmo Tell" on Friday, and "La Sonnambula" on Saturday, with the début of Signor Piazza.

The third of this year's concerts at the Floral Hall, on Saturday afternoon, again drew a large attendance. Among the many features of interest the most special were the brilliant performances of Madame Adeline Patti and Mdlle. Albani.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Pending the production of Balfe's "Il Talismano," fresh interest was given to the proceedings of this establishment by the reappearance, on Saturday, of Madame Christine Nilsson, whose return took place in one of those charming performances which have for some seasons been specially identified with her name. Margherita, in "Faust," was the second character in which this artist became known to the English public, her début here (in 1867) having been made as Violetta, in "La Traviata." Again, on Saturday, Mdlle. Nilsson's Margherita displayed its wonted charm, with an enhanced degree of dramatic power and pathetic intensity. In the dreamy ballad founded on the legend of the King of Thule, in the bravura "jewel song" (encored), in the exquisite sentiment of the love music in the garden scene, in the despair, remorse, and penitence of the last two acts—in all these varied situations the performance of this great artist was alike admirable, and her reception was of the most enthusiastic kind. The cast of the opera in other respects was that noticed a few weeks ago.

On Monday "Marta" was repeated, with the second appearance of Mdlle. Singelli in the character of Lady Eriehetta, in which she achieved a decided success on the previous Thursday. Another change in the cast was the Plumketto of Herr Behrens, whose ponderous bass voice gave resonant effect to the song in praise of beer. On Monday Signor Fancelli resumed the part of Lionello; and other characters were filled as in earlier performances.

On Tuesday "Faust" was given again, with the second appearance this season of Madame Christine Nilsson as Margherita. For Thursday "Les Huguenots" was announced, with the début of M. Achard as Raoul.

At the first of her two recitals (last week) Madame Annette Esipoff gave ample proof of the extent and versatility of her powers by the performance of a selection of unaccompanied pianoforte music of the most opposite styles. Of her magnificent bravura playing we have already spoken in noticing her admirable execution of Chopin's first concerto and the fourth of those by Rubinstein at the New Philharmonic concerts. At her recital this accomplished lady also proved her knowledge of the various classical styles by playing Beethoven's "Waldstein" sonata, and pieces by Bach, Handel, Mendelssohn, and other composers. Madame Esipoff's second recital is to take place on Saturday next.

Another interesting recital, also given last week, was that of Mdlle. Krebe, whose fine playing was heard in a well-contrasted selection, commencing with Beethoven's great sonata "Appassionata," and including specimens of ancient and modern pianoforte music.

The third of this year's summer concerts at the Crystal

Palace, on Saturday, was appropriated to a performance of Signor Randegger's cantata, "Fridolin," a work originally produced at last year's Birmingham Festival, and subsequently repeated with similar success in various places. On Saturday it was given with the same solo singers as at Birmingham—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, and Signor Foli; and the performance was conducted by the composer. At the concert of to-day (Saturday) the purpose of illustrating national music will be resumed. The first concert was devoted to the German school, the second to that of France, and the programme of the fourth is to consist of selections from English composers, including anthems, glees, madrigals, part-songs, and ballads.

The fifth concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on Monday, when Herr Alfred Jaell made his first appearance this season. This eminent pianist was heard in Beethoven's first concerto (in C) and in Schumann's "Concert-Stück," in both of which his highly-cultivated powers were displayed to advantage. The symphonies were Haydn's "Surprise" and Beethoven's No. 5 (in C minor), the first part of the concert having closed with Mr. Macfarren's overture to "St. John the Baptist," and the second part with the march from Mendelssohn's "Athalia" music. Miss Blanche Cole and Mr. E. Lloyd were the vocalists.

Eight Scandinavian ladies, who have recently arrived here, have attracted much attention by their characteristic singing of national melodies. Their first public appearance took place at St. James's Hall, on Saturday afternoon, when their performances were much applauded.

Dr. Wesley has concluded engagements with the principal singers for the Gloucester festival. He has secured the services of Mdlle. Titiens and Miss Edith Wynne, sopranos; Madame Trebelli Bettini, Miss Sterling, and Miss Griffiths, contraltos; Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Bentham, tenors; and Signor Agnesi and Mr. Lewis Thomas, basses. Mr. Sinton is to lead the orchestra, which will comprise many of the best London instrumentalists. The three cathedral choirs of Gloucester, Hereford, and Worcester will be reinforced by choristers from London and the chief provincial towns. The programme has not yet been finally settled, but the following will probably be the arrangement:—On the Tuesday morning, Spohr's "Last Judgment" and Weber's thanksgiving cantata, "Praise Jehovah." A performance of sacred music will take place in the cathedral on Tuesday evening, consisting of Haydn's "Creation," followed either by "Israel in Egypt" or Rossini's "Stabat Mater." As usual, "Elijah" will be given on Wednesday morning; but on Thursday Rossini's "Messe Solenne" will be performed, with "Israel in Egypt" or "Stabat Mater," according to the final arrangements for Tuesday evening's performance. The "Messiah" will be the oratorio on the Friday morning, and the festival will conclude with a special service in the cathedral, at which the members of the three cathedral choirs will assist.

A new cantata, entitled "Supplication and Praise," composed by Dr. Sloman, of Scarborough, is to be produced at the Royal Albert Hall on June 17, when it will be given with full band and a grand chorus consisting of Mr. W. Carter's choir.

Miss Sophia Flora Heilbron, the well-known pianiste, announces her farewell concert, prior to her departure for America, next Tuesday, at Tavistock House, Tavistock-square.

The death is recorded of Mr. William Ewing, long known in musical circles at Glasgow, where, many years ago, he was the means of introducing glee and madrigal singing.

THEATRES.

Whitsuntide is generally a season of dramatic productivity, but it is seldom a prolific one. The present boasts only of two new dramas. That at the Haymarket we have already noticed, celebrating "the monarch of mountains," but trusting too much, we fear, to the scenic artist—too little to story, dialogue, and character. At the Court Theatre dependence is also placed on the attractions of a local name. "Brighton" is the title of a new drama, which is by Mr. Frank Marshall, and professes to be a comedy. The idea of the piece, indeed, is as comic as it is obvious. The neighbourhood is just the place where a visitor may meet with a host of acquaintances, and a vain youth, with a number of flirtations on his conscience, might here easily enough meet with many of his victims, willing to combine for a common revenge. Robert Sackett (Mr. Charles Wyndham) is the hero of such an adventure, and the ladies are Effie Ramington (Miss Sylvia Hodgson), Virginia Vanderpump (Miss Kate Phillips), and the Widow Alston (Marie de Grey), all of whom are found assembled at the Grand Hotel; and, to make the matter worse, are all well acquainted with each other. They catch him at once in their arms; to defend himself he flourishes a claret-bottle, and they, in fear of having their dresses spoiled, are compelled to retreat. But, in his turn, he finds himself in danger of several duels, which, however, in the end, are compromised. There is little in such a plot as this, yet it is made to furnish the materials for four acts; and, being very well acted, is full of amusement.

Mdlle. Favart, having concluded her engagement at the Princess in her favourite part of Camille, M. Got, of the Théâtre Français, has appeared for three nights in "Le Gendre de Monsieur Poirier" and in "Mercadet." In the former character every shade of the individual was minutely rendered; in the latter part M. Got gave a more sentimental version than that to which Mr. Charles Mathews has accustomed us. The latter play was preceded by "Les Jurons de Cadillac," in which Mdlle. Wilhelm and M. Didier succeeded in provoking much laughter.

The total number of pauper lunatics in the United Kingdom is 69,982, of whom 43,367 are in county, borough, Royal, district, parochial (Scotland), and private licensed asylums, and 26,615 in workhouses and elsewhere.

The new line of railway from Sevenoaks to Maidstone, branching from the London, Chatham, and Dover Railway, was opened on Monday, and Maidstone wore a holiday aspect.

Lord Alfred Paget's steam-yacht, while proceeding to Havre, fell in with a disabled and helpless screw collier, which was taken in tow by the noble owner of the Cecile; and, after a heavy pull of fifteen hours, the tide being adverse, was brought safely into Southampton.

A camp of military instruction has been established at Aldershot, in accordance with the recommendation of the Duke of Cambridge in his report upon last year's autumn manoeuvres. It is composed of two brigades of cavalry, six of infantry, two batteries of Royal horse artillery, six field batteries, and a strong body of engineers. The whole command is in charge of General Sir Hope Grant. Notwithstanding the oppressive heat, drill is being diligently pursued, and the troops are reported to be in excellent health. On Tuesday the cavalry and Royal Horse Artillery were out in the Long Valley practising outpost duty.

THE DERBY DOG.

Run under a broiling sun, as when Doncaster's victory last year astounded everybody (except those wonderful people who have always seen the winner's name in a dream, and never by any chance backed their vision); struggled through in a blinding snowstorm, as in the year of the scarecrow Hermit; won amid the muttered curses of a patriotic ring by a favourite like Gladiator; or walked off with in some miraculous manner by an outsider like Caractacus;—under all circumstances, changeless in the midst of change, the Derby clings to its dog—the Derby Dog has his day. At the right moment—in other words, at the wrongest of all possible moments—this hardy annual, springing from his resting-place beneath the turf of Epsom Downs, rushes madly down the course, a phantom fiend, a squealing cur, and an amateur Aunt Sally at the same time; till the spell is broken, the mystic words are unconsciously pronounced by some infuriated cooermonger, and the Derby Dog vanishes through an imperceptible chasm to rejoin the pack of Herne the Hunter, to follow for another year "Lutzow's wild chase," or to sleep until again at the echo of the starter's voice he has to dress his mystic weird.

Such, at least, is the supernatural (and sensible) theory as to the nature of this strange and invariably phenomenal. Some "practical minds," as they are ironically termed, have, with their usual utter disregard for probability, maintained that it is possible that every year a fresh dog may, by some marvellous coincidence, stray on to the course just after it is comfortably cleared for the race of the day. It is possible, just as it is possible that our grandchildren may prefer being burnt and potted to quietly indulging in the imposing funerals and decent oak coffins of respectable householders of the present day. It is possible—as is the flight of pigs, regarding which the Irishman so charmingly remarked that "they were an unlikely bird to see on the wing."

The only rational argument in favour of this preposterous theory is the undoubted fact that almost all human affairs have their Derby Dog. When anybody is to be installed, or fêted, or in any way made a fuss about, someone is sure to mar the ceremonial—generally at the most critical moment—by somehow or other "putting his foot in it;" indeed, some men cannot even die without giving others a chance of making some ridiculous blunder which completely destroys the pleasure of the funeral. Like his canine prototype, the blunderer is probably doing nothing morally wrong—nothing, perhaps, which on three hundred and sixty-four days in the year, and at twenty-three hours of the three hundred and sixty-fifth, he might not with impunity do. Only at one particular place, on a certain hour of one noted day, its result is a terrific shower of curses, bludgeons, and possibly even ginger-beer bottles (or their moral equivalents—whatever the moral equivalent of a ginger-beer bottle may be). So then and there, as a matter of course, he does it.

To such unhappy men applies with singular interest the question which so completely upsets the anti-supernatural theory as to Derby Dogs—"What becomes of them afterwards?" Where are all the old Derby Dogs now? Supposing for a moment that it is a fresh dog which every year threatens to spoil the great race, how long is he chafed by other dogs about his unfortunate appearance (with his tail between his legs) at a moment when his presence, though unquestionably of general interest and amusement, would so willingly have been dispensed with? Is the rest of his (probably brief) existence passed under the insulting nickname of "Derby"? Does his owner, if the Derby Dog possesses anything so respectable, content himself with one hearty kick; or does the misfortune of a moment involve a perpetual endurance of sneer and contumely? On the other hand, does he ever fortunately serve a master who takes the whole affair as a capital joke, and treats him for ever after as a sort of comic hero—pleasantly re-christened, perhaps, "Colonel Henderson," or "George Frederick," in honour of the day?

In like manner, what afterwards becomes of the human Derby Dog? In diplomacy, in the Army, at the Bar—it is said that one blunder is fatal: that the young attaché, for instance, who once does the wrong thing, or even the right thing at the wrong moment—who makes himself or his embassy ridiculous in the eyes of the little world it moves in—never hope to recover the unblemished, unlaughed-at prestige he had perhaps been years in acquiring. Once make yourself a laughing-stock—once gain a comic and uncomplimentary nickname—and it will take all your patience and geniality and popularity to escape from the unpleasant position (somewhat akin to that of the "natural" of a Scotch village) which will be forced upon you: a thin skin, a constant suspicion that people are laughing at you or whispering about "that confounded blunder" dooms you to an eternity of undignified but very real suffering. Is it pleasant, after waltzing with a blue-eyed sylph, enfolding that sylph of creamy muslins and silks (or whatever the charming conglomerations are composed of) in your trembling arm, murmuring into the little ear that peeps out so daintily from its golden umbrage a confession of the tender influence Gung'l always has upon you—is it pleasant, after ten minutes' delicious happiness, to see those dreamy eyes awake and glitter towards you with unkind amusement, as Haughton of the Guards (confound him!) whispers the malicious information that you are the unlucky hero of that field-day at Aldershot, or that reception at the Guildhall? Of course, she looks upon you as an excellent joke ever after—the silkiest moustache and the tenderest melancholy are valueless when regarded from a comic point of view; and if you dance with her again the odds are that you are too angry with yourself, and her, and Haughton, and those condemned newspapers, and the world in general, to be anything but excessively disagreeable and singularly uninteresting.

No; it is not a nice thing to be a Derby Dog, certainly. But there is one curious speculation to which both the supernatural and anti-supernatural theories give rise. Does the wrong dog ever suffer? When the genuine animal is either joining in Lutzow's wild chase aforesaid, or hiding securely under a friendly carriage, is not occasionally some unlucky cur faintly resembling him hooted and chaffed by an undiscerning mob? Surely in human Derbies it is sometimes so—a subaltern has to suffer for his chief's stupidity, or an ingenious blunderer may even shift the ridicule on to the shoulders of some one entirely unconnected with the affair. To find oneself a laughing-stock is bad enough at any time; but to be laughed at for somebody else's misdeed must be cause for justifiable suicide—or homicide. To be deputy Derby Dog, kicked by heavy-booted men, and contemptuously barked at by the canine object of your affections, and all with the consciousness (which you can not impress upon others) that you were, at the precise moment in question, discussing most absordedly a stray pigeon-pie, this must make one inclined to go and muzzle oneself forthwith, or to seek out and violently attack the real and genuine (if spiritual and unearthly) Derby Dog of 1874.

The Bath estate of Earl Manvers, which is estimated to yield an annual income of £8000, has been sold for £44,000.

FINE ARTS.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

FIFTH NOTICE.

The controversy respecting the treatment of the landscape-painters by the Royal Academy, which has been renewed on the opening of each Academy exhibition for many years past, has been reopened with increased intensity. From the circumstance that all the members of the hanging committee for the present year happened to be figure-painters essentially, it was not unreasonably inferred that such a committee could feel little interest in landscape art; and by some contributors of landscapes and critics the conclusion was arrived at—rather hastily, perhaps—that less consideration had never been shown than now in the placing of the accepted landscapes. We confess that this last specific charge appears to us to have little foundation. The landscapes have, on the whole, fared, we think, rather better than usual. Mr. Brett's pictures are almost for the first time on "the line;" works by J. Linnell, P. Graham, H. Dawson, J. W. Oakes, G. E. Hering, and by less-known painters, such as D. Cameron, J. Smart, A. S. Wortley, and others, are likewise on the line; so, too, are the better of two pictures by H. Moore, and one of three pictures by W. B. Leader; whilst the works of C. P. Knight and J. G. Naish are not "asked" as heretofore. Several landscapists of the Scotch school have been less fortunate; but we may, as we proceed, find reasons for Academic discouragement in this case.

The controversy has not been mollified by a letter to a contemporary written by the junior member of the hanging committee, who, undertaking the championship of that committee and of the whole council of the Academy, compared the complaining landscapists and the remonstrances of their friends to "the late Claimant and the diatribes of his counsel," intimating at the same time that their protests were useless, and that "their interests would not be furthered by charging the council with incompetence and ignorance." Such charges have not been made, so far as we are aware, but only that of want of sympathy. And now can it be otherwise, when, if we except Mr. Cooke (the marine painter) and Mr. Vicat Cole, there is not one of the sixty Academicians and Associates who won his diploma simply and solely as a landscape-painter? Nor, properly speaking, is this branch of art taught in the Academy schools, although there is a landscape competition for the gold medal given by Turner expressly to supply a crying deficiency. When also we remember that our school is admitted to excel in landscape even by foreign critics, and that such masters as John Crome, Patrick Nasmyth, William Muller, David Cox, and John Linnell have had no Academic recognition, is it not natural for the outside landscapists to suspect that their claims are not fairly considered by the great majority of figure-painters in power within the Academy? Nor, although we acknowledge an improvement this year, can we admit that (whatever may be the cause) landscape art yet has that prominence at Burlington House which might reasonably be expected. Certain it is, moreover, that the few foreign landscapists have received scant justice: it would be hard to find persons acquainted with the works of J. Maris, Meesdag, Van Luppen, and Hemy, an English pupil of the same school, who would acknowledge that the positions they occupy correspond to their merits.

The Academic landscapists need not detain us long. We have already paid homage to the renewed and increased triumph won by Mr. Millais in the diversion of his pencil towards landscape. We have likewise offered the high praise due to the landscape and marine portions of Mr. Hook's pictures. Why Mr. E. W. Cooke is not represented in the present exhibition we are at a loss to imagine, as ill-health is, we are happy to hear, not assigned as the cause of absence. Mr. Redgrave (who, like Mr. Hook, was elected into the Academy as a figure-painter) contributes several small landscapes in his usual manner, and Messrs. Herbert and O'Neil have, apparently, sought relaxation in some unpretending landscapes.

Mr. Vicat Cole, the solitary landscapist among the Associates, is the only painter within the pale of the Academy, besides Mr. Millais, who sends landscape work of an ambitious character. "The Heart of Surrey" (111) is one of those large representations of the familiar beauty of Surrey scenery, its hills with golden marl-banks, its rich woodland, ripe corn-fields, and great undulating plains of fields and hedgerows, glowing in afternoon sunlight and gorgeous in autumnal livery, by which the artist has acquired his position. The theme is ever welcome; it is treated with skill, and we are not among the number of those who would quarrel with a painter because he may be supposed to have acquired an easy popularity by constantly dealing with favourite and familiar subjects in an adroitly-superficial manner. No painter, probably, was more guilty of self-iteration than Claude himself; and Mr. Ruskin has assured us that he was, besides, most superficial and conventional. Still there is something wanting in this picture; it fails, somehow, of the strength of realism on the one hand, and of the sentiment of romanticism on the other. It conveys to us the impression of a sketch that has lost a good deal of its spirit and directness in studio elaboration. We infinitely prefer the "Misty Morning" (296); indeed, we think this the best thing Mr. Cole has ever done. It is "morning;" but the sun is up, suffusing the "mist," glorifying the autumnal foliage of the trees, and striking golden bands athwart the sloping meadows, in delicious contrast to the soft, silvery breaths of hoar frost still lying in the shadows. The effect indicated is a lovely one in nature. Turner has rendered it with his subtlest truth, and Mr. Cole's vagueness has helped to realise it with very considerable success. "The Evening Glow" (242), a large landscape by Mr. J. C. Adams, and several works by Mr. A. A. Glendinning, seem to have so much affinity to, if they are not imitative of, Mr. Cole's works that further comment is unnecessary.

Outside the Academy we look for and find the strongest work by Mr. Linnell, senior—"The Woodcutters" (528), a magnificent autumnal view, looking from a wooded eminence over a great reach of blue distance, the whole canopied by fleecy cumuli—a wonderful picture for a painter over eighty. This is not simply an imitation or what we should call even a representation of nature, in the common acceptance of the word. It is a translation of natural appearances in a compendious, nervous, and eloquent style; and who that is susceptible of artistic impressions will say that this does not convey a richer, more suggestive, and more animated idea of what we can see and remember of nature, taken in the mass? The painter's sons, though they have not yet mastered so large, free, and bold a style, follow closely in his steps—Mr. James Linnell, in "The Mower Whets his Scythe" (493), approaching nearest in the expression of atmospheric effect; and Mr. William Linnell, in "Kent Weald" (451), attaining much of his father's grand impressiveness and pomp of colour. Mr. H. Dawson (who is likewise closely followed by his sons) has also proved himself a master of "style," which, however, sometimes verges on mannerism—that is to say, the attention is occasionally arrested by the dappled execution; therefore it does not perfectly perform the function of a symbol. But the artist is not adequately represented in two small pictures of Shoreham under morning and evening effect (503 and 507).

Mr. Oakes has a sincere artistic feeling, and his colouring is often as original as it is agreeable. "A Sandy Bit of the Road" (976) is a good though not important example. Mr. Leader laid the foundation of his success in close and careful study, but he owes his present popularity to qualities similar to those of Mr. Vicat Cole, though he works in a cooler, greyer key. His subjects are generally familiarly picturesque in themselves, gay and sparkling in effect, and they are worked out with an ornamental pencil, a light and graceful touch. "A Fine Day in Autumn—the Thames at Streatley" (563) is a very pleasant presentment of a pretty spot. Two larger landscapes are rather conventional—due, perhaps, to haste.

None of the preceding painters seek for that poetic side of Nature where she presents her more mysterious beauty or awfulness; indeed, there is an almost entire absence of imaginative sympathy in this direction in our whole landscape school. Mr. A. W. Hunt possesses that sympathy, and he has successfully given utterance to it in water colours; but he seems to us to have failed to do so in his two pictures here, "Rents and Scars in Coniston Fells" (1361), with a pall of thunder cloud darkling over the savage scene, save where forked lightning cleaves its devious way; and a landscape with the last rays of a sunken sun striking "From Mount to Mount through Cloudland" (79). Mr. Hunt is evidently less at home in oil-painting, which may account for the palpable opacity in the first picture, that fails to strike the desired note of awe, and for the lack of that beauty and sentiment to be looked for in the effect of the second work.

The most truly impressive picture in the entire exhibition is, we think, Mr. H. Moore's "Rough Weather on the Coast, Cumberland" (1033). What fine imaginative perception, what fidelity of observation, what descriptive power of hand in every sweep of the brush, are there not here! It seems positively alive as you look at that boiling, foaming waste of water! Never have we seen the peculiar light on the hoar, turmoil of the breakers in a storm so truly rendered—it is like moonlight, but not due to the beams that, struggling ghastly pale through a rent in the drifting clouds, faintly disclose this conflict of the elements and that battered hull, telling of its fatal fury; it is not the gleaming lustre of the driving masses of foam, though white as drifted snow—it is the phosphorescent glimmer so often emitted by the sea when buffeted by the wind, or lashing the shore, or cut by a ship's prow. This picture, however, defies description; it must be seen and studied by the reader for himself.

Another remarkable coast-scene is "Our Northern Walls" (20), in which Mr. Peter Graham takes us once more to the inhospitable Sutherlandshire coast to watch the Atlantic break in futile foam against its rocky ramparts. As before, the grey, cold sky is full of drifting rain; the tide is at that stage when the sea, in stormy mood, washes over, but does not submerge, the fallen rocks, over which the cormorants skim and dip; when, still in full force, the waves burst against the precipitous cliffs, or dart into the cloven caves, to recoil, sucked over the sandy detritus by their own gravity. The contest is a tremendous one in fact, and Mr. Graham has caught much of the spirit of it; yet the representation does not impress us like Mr. Moore's. The phenomena are more limited, and the work seems like a gigantic sketch; the surf and spindrift are chalky, the waves have hardly weight enough to make the rocks tremble and resound, and the "walls" themselves have not the air of a very solid stable barrier. We prefer Mr. Graham's other picture, "The Misty Mountain Top" (494), a great heathery acclivity, with a few sheep, its shadowed summit passing beneath mist-wreaths. The beautiful snowy lustre of the softly rounded mist is very felicitously rendered; but the rest of the picture is almost too much subordinated by slowness of execution to that focus of effect. This, like other recent landscapes by the same artist, would form but a fragment of the "Spate in the Highlands," that admirable epic of Scotch scenery and effects which first brought him into note. Self-repetition, limitation of range, and specious daintiness of manipulation are faults and failings common in the Scotch landscape school. The school is also deficient in colourists, effects of light and dark being alone sought for. These remarks apply more or less to Mr. Colin Hunter's twinkling loch scenes with fishing-boats, which, effective and spirited as they unquestionably are, merely repeat, while they do not equal, former subjects, the nearer waves in particular appearing to us heavy and opaque almost as clouds (see Nos. 297 and 385); to Mr. C. E. Johnson's swollen peat-stained river in No. 610, and (in a less degree) to "The Old House of the Maodougalls;" to Mr. McWhirter's study of moonlight on the sea (709), a singularly empty picture; to Mr. Docharty's inkily dismal "Loch Achray" (161) and "Glencoe" (228); and to Mr. J. Smart's gloomy "Pass of the Cateran" (2) with its heavy mists and struggling herd. More complete and even solid, though in a delicate gamut of silvery tints, is Mr. D. Cameron's "Loch Fyne" (666). There is some colour here, as also in J. Farquharson's "Leaving the Hill" (647), a shepherd with his charge—the hazy morning light very truly rendered. Mr. McWhirter, whose moonlight is mentioned above, is a humourist with strong sympathy for the assinine tribe—he has painted the donkey in the pitiless storm, he has painted him "in clover," now he has painted him (and very skilfully too) "Out in the Cold" (648); the poor beast stands outside the locked door of his shed in deeply drifted snow.

Most of the artists we have hitherto reviewed address themselves to the mind, so to speak, and two or three to the imagination; we now come to a small group of painters who seem to address themselves exclusively to the eye. Foremost in this category is Mr. J. Brett, whose "Summer Noon in the Scilly Isles" (130) is a miracle of patient, exact, and vivid mimicry. Every part is equally elaborate—the foreground cliff and ponderous boulder, with all the accidents of structure, texture, cleavage, water-worn channel, or porosity, stratification, and what not; with their scant clothing of shreds of soft mosses and patches of lichen and tiny, fairy-like flowering plants of variegated, beautiful hues; the sea with its myriad dancing wavelets of blue, and purple, and pink, reflected from the sky; the distant isle, with every minute feature of its contour; the cloudlets basking in the sunlight as they idly float in the azure above, all fall on the retina clear and sharp as the reflection in a mirror, not, however, as they could possibly be seen at once. If we analyse the impression we receive from our visual sensation of this work we shall find that, like a child looking through an inverted telescope, it is primarily one of surprised and delighted wonder at finding by a sort of legerdemain the reality—which yet we know to be not the reality, but a counterfeit—where we did not expect to find it. We also admire the beauty and complexity of the scene, but we derive no secondary emotion, sentiment, or imaginative suggestion whatever. Perhaps, too, it is owing to the glassy, still perfection of the reflected image that this "summer noon" conveys no idea of heat or warmth, though a girl, pretending to be overcome thereby, is feigning sleep under the shadow of the boulder. We have not space, however, to attempt to determine how much or how little true art, as distinguishable from exquisite workmanship, may be here; but certain it is that these are more things in nature and in art than are dreamt of in Mr. Brett's philosophy.

"A Spring Tide in Ramsay Race" (114), by Mr. C. P. Knight, is more faithful to the general optical impression, though less illustratively exact in details. The rush of the foaming waves across the rocky bar, and the effect of sunlight on the eminence to the right, are capably copied. There can be no doubt that Mr. Naish is a simple and honest student of nature; it is shown throughout his picture called "Homeward Bound," representing "the chops of the Bristol Channel, inside Lundy Island" (126). He is particularly happy in the painting of the sea here, from the bottom of the chasm in the foreground to the distant horizon. His execution is broader, however, than that of the two last-named painters. We think the shadows of the rocks somewhat black and forced. The four following works may also be conveniently grouped together:—"Heath Scene, near Haslemere, Surrey" (472), by Mr. G. Cole; "Late Autumn on the Cumberland Fells" (65), by Mr. A. W. Williams; "Night in Egypt—Overflowing of the Nile" (1038), by Mr. A. Gilbert; and "Loch Coruisk, Isle of Skye" (253), by Mr. S. R. Percy. Three of these artists belong to the Williams family of landscapists, which, not many years back, occupied a rather prominent position in British art. They have all, like many others, distinguished themselves in the gallery of the Society of British Artists—a gallery that was formerly regarded (it can hardly be so now) as a home for landscape-art seeking refuge from Academic exclusiveness and antagonism. The present examples of these painters have all considerable technical merit. Then how is it that they will probably be overlooked by the critics, if not by the public? The answer may be found in the works themselves. Their producers have their admirers and their market; but, like so many of their brethren, they can have little hope of titular Academic distinction; hence they have been content to adopt a fixed routine of work, the remunerative nature of which is assured; their labours of to-day are the same as they were ten or twenty years ago, and, consequently, there is nothing new to say of them. Mr. Birkett Foster is another painter who has settled into a mannerism, and one that is less acceptable in his oil pictures than in his water-colour drawings. "The Life-Boat: Return from a Wreck" (535), is formal in execution, without the effectiveness of his drawings, and sombre, yet unimpressive. We have seen something like Mr. G. E. Hering's "Passing Gleams: Glen Torriden" (91) before; nevertheless the treatment is very respectable, if a little tame. Mr. C. J. Lewis is rather too fond of infusing blue and other related cold hues into his pictures, whatever their effect. No. 1018—a scene up the Thames—has, notwithstanding, a fresh and but little forced charm of natural truth in the effect. The title, "Evening's Light of Amber," is, however, a misnomer, for the twilight sky that is seen through rifts in the slate-coloured clouds is pale primrose. Mr. E. A. Waterlow, a recent Turner gold-medallist, has perhaps been a little reminiscent of Mason or Walker in one or two of his contributions; but "The Land Storm" (940), in the consentaneous expression in every part of the force of the wind, gives promise of future excellence. Mr. W. L. Wyllie, another recent gold-medallist, has a scene on the Goodwin Sands (1330), which testifies to a close and diligent study of nature which is bearing good fruit. Similar commendation is due to "Harbour Fishing" (97), by the last-named artist's younger brother, Mr. C. W. Wyllie. Fair promise is likewise afforded by two other young landscapists, Messrs. F. W. Meyer and J. Aumonier. "Evening on the Coast" (73), a twilight effect, by the former, is rendered with equal refinement and truth. "An Easter Holiday" (727), by the latter, shows a number of charity-school girls scattered about a knoll that is radiant with primroses and gladdened by brilliant spring sunshine.

We must content ourselves by commending to the visitor the following meritorious works:—"Sunshine in January" (557), by R. Gallon—true and beautiful in its effect of illumined mist veiling the middle and remoter distance; "Fall of the River Clyde, Stonetyres, Scotland" (1399), by E. Gill; "Inns and Outlets of a Welsh River" (1408), by F. W. Hulme; "The Conflict" (196), by J. Danby—ships locked in battle, with the sun setting impressively in blood-red mist; "The Wild Ducks' Haunt" (560), by J. H. Davies; "Shiplake Loch and Mill" (631), by T. O. Hume—noteworthy for its silvery, sweet effect of grey daylight; No. 645, a scene in a wood with "bracken glistening with metallic light," by G. Sant; "Late in the Day" (536), by J. L. Pickering—effective, truthful, and very careful in the drawing of the almost leafless trees, as seen against the autumn evening sky; "Morning" (490), by E. Hume—fishermen bringing the night's taking ashore and filling the fishwives' baskets: both the figures and coast scene well painted, and the morning light truly rendered; "Sailors' Gardens, South Devon" (1379), by T. Lloyd; "Scene on the Tamar" (240), a landscape of considerable merit, by A. B. Collier; "The Embankment" (588), a capital picture of London's latest improvement by J. O'Connor the well known scene painter; "Holmbury Hill" (633), by F. Walton; "Tide Pools" (36), one of G. F. Teniwood's artistic and suggestive little coast views under moonlight effect; marine pieces by R. Dudley; and contributions by J. Raven, A. Parsons, G. B. Head, W. Luker, G. Chester, G. C. Stanfield, R. P. Richards, C. Ricketts, and A. de Breamski.

In the Lecture-Room is a rather large landscape (987), by A. S. Wortley, an amateur we believe. The picture represents a view "In Wharfedale Chase." Snow lies on the ground, but not deep enough to cover a few patches of sere, copper-coloured ferns; a little removed from the foreground a cluster of oaks rear the skeleton forms of their strong stems, tortuous branches, and thousand ramifications of twigs and sprays, telling black almost in contrast with the snow and against the grey, wintry sky. The sharpness with which the arboreal anatomy is made out is rather suggestive of photographic aid; in colour and effect, however, the work shows genuine artistic study. "Clearing after a Storm in the Alps" (394) and "On the Mer de Glace" (381) are by Sir Robert Collier; and, as usual, the diversions of an autumn vocation would not discredit a professional painter. The strongest painter-power, however, possessed by any English amateur, so far as we know, is evinced by Sir Henry Thompson in "Tea à la Russe" (728), a composition of kettle, coloured drinking-glasses, cut lemon on Japanese tray, and other articles, which, save for a quaint blue-stained teapot, might be taken as preparatives rather for grog than tea-drinking—the whole relieved against a rich background of stamped leather. The colouring is superb, the handling most masterly in its breadth and freedom. But the marvel of it is, how does an eminent surgeon in very extensive practice find time to produce pictures of this quality? A group of "Rhododendrons, &c." (569), by W. J. Muckley, is most brilliantly and beautifully painted. The flower-pieces by the Misses Mutrie are, as always, excellent in their kind.

Messrs. Downey, the celebrated photographers of Newcastle-on-Tyne and London, have published a most excellent cabinet-portrait of the Emperor of Russia, for which his Imperial Majesty gave a sitting when in London. The same photographers have also issued a family group of the Emperor, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, and the Grand Duke Alexis.

THE NEW ZEALAND PREMIER.

The insular colony of New Zealand has an enterprising ambition which vies with the most prosperous Australian mainland provinces, Victoria and New South Wales. Its total population is now above 300,000, of whom but a tenth are Maori natives. Its trade, whether export or import, amounts to the value of nearly £6,000,000 yearly. Gold and wool are the chief products exported. The two islands, rather larger than Great Britain and Ireland together, are divided into nine provinces—Wellington, Auckland, Taranaki or New Plymouth, and Hawke's Bay, in the North Island; Canterbury, Otago, Nelson, Marlborough, and Westland, in the South Island. The government is federal; each province, with an elected Superintendent and Council, managing its own affairs, but sending delegates to a General Assembly, convened by Sir James Fergusson, the Queen's representative, at Wellington. The Hon. Julius Vogel has, during the last five years, assumed a leading part in colonial politics. He is now Prime Minister and President of the Council. There may be—indeed, there is—a difference of opinion among the more experienced colonists with regard to the extraordinary boldness of Mr. Vogel's financial policy. A lavish expenditure for the construction of railways in twenty districts at once, and costly attempts to force immigration of English labourers, may involve New Zealand in premature heavy burdens, to be felt most severely, perhaps, in future years of less favourable seasons and markets. The public debt, including both that of the General and those of the Provincial Governments, already exceeds ten millions sterling, with an annual charge of £550,000; and it is likely to be half as much again before Mr. Vogel leaves office. Meantime, his administration seems to be still very popular, at any rate, in those provinces, Wellington, Canterbury, and Otago, which enjoy the high tide of prosperity just now. On Jan. 6, in the city of Dunedin, which is the capital of Otago province, Mr. Vogel was entertained at a banquet, where a testimonial of the value of £500 was presented to him. His Excellency the Governor honoured the occasion with his presence. The captain and officers of the French warship Vire and most of the leading residents were among the company. Mr. Vogel took the opportunity of making a speech, embracing all the principal subjects of political interest of the day. The testimonial gift was a service of plate, manufactured by Messrs. R. and S. Garrard, of the Haymarket, London.

THE LATE PRINCESS HOHENLOHE-LANGENBURG.

A monument has been designed by his Serene Highness Count Gleichen, Prince Victor of Hohenlohe, to be placed over the grave of his mother, Princess Hohenlohe-Langenbourg, sister of Queen Victoria, in the cemetery at Baden-Baden. She died on Sept. 23, 1872. The design represents a beautiful female figure, an embodiment of the soul, who is seated at the foot of a large upright cross. The monument being in situ, the face of the figure is turned to the charming little villa, two miles distant from the cemetery, in which this Princess resided during many years, and where she breathed her last. Our Engraving is from a photograph of the monument by Mr. John Watkins, of Parliament-street.

HEAD OF THE EMPEROR HADRIAN FOUND AT JERUSALEM.

HEAD OF HADRIAN, AT JERUSALEM.

A remarkable head of a statue was found last year among the fallen blocks of a stone wall just outside the walls of Jerusalem. It is believed by M. Clermont Ganneau, who first observed the importance of the relic, to be the head of the Emperor Hadrian. If this be the case, it is probably that of the statue which the Emperor erected in the Temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, on the site of the Jewish sanctuary. It was after crushing the last and most terrible of Jewish insurrections, led by Barcochebas, "son of the star," that Hadrian changed the name of Jerusalem to that of Ælia Capitolina, and placed his own statue in the Temple of Jupiter, erected there. It was there standing two hundred years later, being mentioned by the Bordeaux Pilgrim and by St. Jerome. Probably it was destroyed, together with the Temple, in that iconoclastic fury which followed the conversion of Constantine. This head is clearly a portrait, and not of a vulgar type. The opinion of M. Ganneau that it is no other than the head of Hadrian is shared by the Archimandrite of the Russian mission at Jerusalem, who has bought the relic. Mr. Vaux, late of the British Museum, confirms this view, so far as it is possible from the photograph. He says, "The characteristics of Hadrian's physiognomy are the crisp beard, the straight nose, the curved eyelids, and the curved if not curled moustaches. All these are here." But without hastily assuming that the head is that of the Emperor, it is at least a striking and even an imposing monument. If, when a cast reaches England, it should turn out to be the actual head of Hadrian, it will justify the reflections of M. Clermont Ganneau:—"Strange irony of fate," he writes, in his report to the committee of the Palestine Exploration Fund: "Thrown face downwards on the old highway, this triumphant head of the conqueror of Barcochebas, the rebuilder of Jerusalem, the divine Hadrian, with the laurel wreath and the eagle of empire, has been trodden under foot for twelve centuries by everybody, great and small, who has entered the holy city; and after this long ignominy, for a last outrage, the mutilated head, still with the same pride in its look, has been picked up by a poor peasant, and thrown among his common building stones."

SIR MOSES MONTEFIORE, BART.

This venerable Jewish citizen of London, now in the ninetieth year of his age, has just received a compliment due to his eminent personal character and social standing. He was admitted, on the 14th ult., to the freedom of the Fishmongers' Company. The document was inclosed in a gold casket, made by Mr. Ellis Reynolds, of Bishopsgate-street, the design of which is shown in our Engraving. It is of Elizabethan character, richly ornamented, and pierced with openings through which is seen a blue enamel ground. The lid is surmounted by the arms of the Fishmongers' Company, three dolphins swimming between two crossed pairs of lances or pikes, with a merman and a mermaid supporters, and motto, "All worship be to God only." On the front of the box are the Montefiore arms—a cedar-tree rising above mounds of flowers, with the lion and stag supporters, bearing a flag inscribed with the name "Jerusalem" in Hebrew; beneath is the wise and pious motto, "Think and Thank." The arms of the City of London appear on two other sides. Sir Moses Montefiore is a native of London, born Oct. 24, 1784. He served the office of Sheriff in 1837, when the young Queen Victoria came to visit the City. He obtained a knighthood, but in 1846 was raised to the baronetcy. This rank he has not failed to adorn by his benevolent and patriotic labours for the relief of distressed Israelites all over the world, and by other works of charity.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

PHYSICAL SYMMETRY IN CRYSTALS.

Professor Maskelyne, Keeper of the Mineral Department, British Museum, in his third lecture on Physical Symmetry in Crystals on Thursday week, resumed the consideration of the different way in which the same crystal behaves towards different forces, his explanations being fully illustrated by models and experiments. Beginning with heat, he referred to the various ways in which its effects are manifested—viz., radiation, conduction, and expansion. In respect to radiation, he noticed the resemblance between heat and light, both being due to the transverse vibration of the ether. Matter, he said, influences the ether, and makes it denser, thereby slackening its elasticity and rendering it more sluggish, and, in consequence, the vibratory impulses are slower. A ray of light entering a crystal is generally constrained, as a consequence of the modification in the elasticity of the ether-medium induced by the crystal, to exchange its planes of vibration for two that are perpendicular to each other and definite in their directions in the crystal. The two rays, thus plane-polarised, move on through the crystal with different velocities, the slower ray being the more refracted. This was exhibited by means of a sphere of calcite or carbonate of lime. When it was rotated, at certain times two balls of light appeared on the screen; at other times the two were combined in one; and analogous results were produced by tourmalines and other crystals. In reference to the question as to what becomes of the heat and light absorbed by a crystal, Professor Maskelyne explained that they do work—first, in transferring increased motion to the molecules, and thereby raising the temperature; and, secondly, by opening wider the intervals or excursions of the molecules—that is, by expanding the substance. He then explained how the comparative degrees of facility with which heat travels by conduction along different directions in a crystal may be illustrated by the isothermal curve that bounds the region which has risen to a certain temperature at any given interval of time after the heating process has begun from a point within the crystal. Two pieces of quartz were heated by means of pieces of wire inserted in them, and the curves were shown upon the very thin layer of wax with which they were coated. These curves are always circles or ellipses, and the combinations of circles or ellipses thus formed can only build up spheres, spheroids, or ellipsoids. Professor Maskelyne showed that these different figures represent three groups of crystalline systems, and said that an ellipsoid or spheroid may also be made to express the action of a crystal in regard to radiation, but in a far more artificial manner. The movement of a wave of light through a crystal is not in form an ellipsoid; but an ellipsoid represents with close accuracy the variations in elasticity of which the wave-motion and the wave-surface are the results. In reference to expansion by heat in crystals, the Professor explained how the differences of expansion in different directions may be calculated from the alteration in the angles between the faces of the crystal that accompany a change of temperature. In the latter part of the lecture he noticed some of the modifications of light by a crystal, and illustrated them by experiments, observing that there was a greater apparent symmetry in regard to some of their physical properties exhibited by crystals of the oblique and anorthic systems than they show in their morphological features. Such, for instance, would be the case in the wave-surface of a single colour; and, finally, he exhibited, by a beautiful experiment, the influence of heat in modifying the optic electricity of a crystal, and brought into contrast, by exhibiting with coloured threads on a set of axes in wire, the relative crystallographic, optical, and thermic relations, as well as the co-efficients of expansion for 100 deg. centigrade of a crystal of aragonite.

THE ROMAN CATACOMBS AND EARLY CHRISTIAN BELIEF.

The Very Rev. Dr. Stanley, Dean of Westminster, at the Friday evening meeting, May 29, began his discourse by stating that he proposed to consider the question, What was the belief of the early Christians from the close of the first century to the conversion of the Roman empire to Christianity in the third? The answer was difficult, since the books of the period were few, and these the work of scholars; and even in the present day the belief in England can only be gathered from intimate conversation with the people, not from newspapers and literature only. An easy reply to his question is found in the Roman catacombs: galleries dug in the rocks by the Christians for the burial of their friends, over whose remains they put up what afforded the most consolation and pleasure to themselves. These places, after being covered over with rubbish by barbarian invaders, were excavated after the revival of learning in the seventeenth century, and are to early Christianity what Pompeii is to Paganism. The Dean alluded to the Eastern character of these structures and inscriptions, showing that Greek was the language of the early Roman Church, whose members followed Syrian rather than Latin usages. This indicated toleration rather than persecution. The subjects of the paintings in the catacombs were chiefly biblical, those from the Old Testament frequently representing the Creation, and incidents in the history of Abraham, Moses, Jonah, and Daniel; those from the New Testament included Zacharias in the sycamore-tree, the raising of Lazarus, and Pilate. These topics, the Dean remarked, coincide with the theology of the Eastern rather than with that of the Western Church down to the present time, as may be seen in Russia. Selecting the tombs of the lady Domitilla and her family, the Dean noticed three characteristics—that in them everything was cheerful, and even joyous; that there was neither the cross, nor the crucifixion, nor the tortures of martyrdom, nor skeletons, but wreaths of roses, winged genii, and children playing; while many of the decorations were from heathen sources—the classics of the Hebrew and the heathen were not yet parted. The chief token of the creed of the early Christians found in the catacombs was the Good Shepherd, intermingled with other pictures, but always present, alike on the tombs of the humblest and the very highest. The kindness, grace, love, and beauty of the Good Shepherd were to them the Prayer-book, creed, and canons, all in one. It was, said the Dean, an instance of the general connection between the new Christian belief and the old pagan world, since Mercury was represented as a figure much resembling the Good Shepherd. The catacombs represent to us the joyful, cheerful side of Christianity, the very reverse of the desponding, wailing cry often heard in later days. The first object of the Christian community was not to repel, but to include—not to condemn, but to save; and this was represented by the Good Shepherd carrying sometimes a kid, instead of a lamb on his shoulder. Another sign of early Christian belief was the vine, with its branches of varied shape, and the joyful vintage. The departed soul was often represented as a beautiful bird, and the usually very brief epitaphs express sentiments of the deepest natural affection. In summing up the evidences of belief derived from the catacombs, the Dean said that they differ widely from the statements of contemporaneous authors, showing the striking divergence which exists between popular belief and that set forth in books. They differ also even more widely from our own forms and from those of the whole of Christendom for 1500 years. He suggested that if the principles expressed by these forms are true, it might be well to ask whether what we call the attack and defence of our religion are directed against or for the faith and hope of the dwellers in the catacombs. Hardly one of their principles, he said, is assailed in Strauss's "Old and New Faith;" and, as a general rule, the belief of the catacombs is neither that which is defended by modern theologians nor that attacked by modern sophists. After all, perhaps, it may be worth while to ask if there is anything so very absurd in supposing that Christians have really something in common with each other. The pictures of the Good Shepherd and the Vine have not become watchwords of parties or the subject of popular agitation; but to the early Christians "they were not vague, unsubstantial, and colourless, but were the food of their daily lives, their hope under the severest trials, the very dogma of dogmas—if we choose so to call them—the very life of their life." Sir Frederick Pollock, Bart., vice-president, was in the chair.

PHYSICAL CONDITION OF THE LARGER PLANETS.

Mr. R. A. Proctor, author of "The Sun," "The Moon," "Saturn," and other astronomical works, began his fourth lecture on the Planetary System, on Saturday last, by exhibiting a series of charts, on which he pointed out the positions to be occupied by the many observers appointed by various nations for the most favourable study of the transit of Venus over the sun's disc in the present year and in 1882; after which he showed several views of Mars. He then proceeded to consider the relations presented by the giant members of the solar system—Jupiter, Saturn, Uranus, and Neptune; and entered into a series of arguments for regarding Jupiter and Saturn as in a semi-sunlike condition, referring in particular to the signs of disturbance in the atmospheric envelopes of these planets, which indicate the action of forces much more powerful than the sun can exert on such distant bodies. He stated also that so many points of evidence favour this view of the condition of the greater planets, that the new theory may be regarded as not far from demonstrated. In passing he remarked that four years ago, when the evidence was yet far less complete, Sir John Herschel, in a letter to himself, which he partly read, expressed the feeling that there was much evidence in its favour; and Mr. Proctor added that, at the last meeting of the Astronomical Society, the Astronomer Royal had, indeed, noticed it with approval, but as a view then for the first time heard of. Professor Peirce, the eminent chief of the American Coast Survey, also has adduced mathematical reasoning which he himself regarded as in itself substantiating the new theory. Mr. Proctor regards Uranus and Neptune as probably in a condition intermediate between the state of the earth and that of their larger brethren, Saturn and Jupiter. The concluding lecture, to be delivered this day (Saturday), will be devoted to the discussion of the past and future of the Solar System, and will present a new theory of life in other worlds. It will be illustrated by means of the oxy-hydrogen lamp and lantern.

MUSICAL WIND-INSTRUMENTS.

Dr. W. H. Stone began his second and concluding lecture on the Theory of Musical Instruments, on Tuesday last, by explaining and illustrating by experiments the law of vibrations of air in tubes, and stating that the material of the vibrating tube exercised some influence on the quality of the sound, its pitch being due to the length alone. Overtones or harmonics are produced from open pipes, including the flute, the oboe, and brass instruments in one series, and in stopped pipes in another series. Dr. Stone expressed his opinion that more might be done in reproducing imitative stops on the organ by combining the harmonic registers, as indicated by Helmholtz. Wind instruments are of three kinds—flutes, reeds, and instruments with cupped mouthpieces. In flutes the column of air is split against a sharp edge; in reeds a wooden or metal vibrator starts the undulation, and is reinforced or modified by the tube of the instrument. In the third kind, such as the French horn, trumpet, and trombone, the tense lip of the performer fills the office of a reed, or rather of a split membrane somewhat resembling the vocal chords in the human larynx. Besides the lip or embouchure, there is the wind-chest. This has been materially improved in the organ by increasing the pressures; but Dr. Stone said that he was not aware that it had been investigated in the case of orchestral wind instruments, till his own experiments, made some years ago for a physiological object, when he measured the actual wind-pressure employed for the production of notes on each instrument in every part of its register. He then exhibited the apparatus employed, consisting of a simple water-gauge, connected with a fine india-rubber tube; and illustrated its use himself. The extreme height (about six feet) to which the water can be raised by a forced expiration into a tube placed between the lips measured their strength, inasmuch as they are forced to yield long before the expiratory effort fails. The instrument is connected with the chest by introducing a small bent glass tube into the angle of the mouth. The performer is then placed with his back to the gauge, and directed to sound in succession all the principal notes on his instrument. As soon as the tone becomes firm and even the height of the column of water is noted down. Dr. Stone exhibited a table of the results obtained from many experiments, which showed that the clarinet stands apart from other instruments in requiring a stronger pressure for the lower than for the higher notes. In most cases the pressure noted was very small, and certainly not calculated to injure the lungs. The latter part of the lecture was devoted to the history and description of the various kinds of wind-instruments used in the orchestra, including the flute, flageolet, oboe or hautbois (probably the classical tibia), the clarinet, the French horn, the trombone, and the bassoon. Dr. Stone expressed his regret that several forms of the last two had fallen into disuse, and stated that he himself had endeavoured to reinstate them, and as an example he exhibited and sounded a double bassoon. The charming illustrations given in the course of the lecture began with a quintet for wind-instruments alone by Reicha: this was followed by a flute solo by Kuhlau (given by Mr. Rockstro), an oboe solo by Barret (given by Mr. G. Horton), a concerto for clarinet by Mozart (given by Mr. Lazarus), a sonata by Beethoven for the French horn (by Mr. Fletcher), and a concerto for the bassoon by Beethoven; all these pieces, except the flute solo, had a pianoforte accompaniment by Mr. H. R. Bird. In the performance of these difficult pieces, nearly all seldom heard, the artists well sustained their deserved reputation.

In reference to the communication from Dr. W. J. Fitzpatrick respecting the Galileo documents, given in our last week's Number, page 593, Mr. Sedley Taylor requests us to state, on his authority, that the trial-record in question is now in the Vatican Library—or, at any rate, was there in 1867, when M. Henri de l'Épinois was allowed to copy the greater part of it, which he published in the Revue des Questions Historiques for that year. Mr. Taylor's reason for urging publication in facsimile is that there are strong reasons for thinking that a particular entry in the record is a fabrication, and that a paleographic examination of the original or of a transcript might go far to settle this point, on which, in fact, the whole trial turns.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN JUNE.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Mars on the 14th, the day of new Moon; she is near Mercury on the 15th, Venus on the 16th, and Jupiter on the 21st. Her phases or times of change are:—

Last Quarter	on the 7th	at 18 minutes	after 1h.	in the afternoon.
New Moon	" 14th "	53 "	6 "	morning.
First Quarter	" 21st "	1 "	8 "	afternoon.
Full Moon	" 29th "	48 "	6 "	afternoon.

She is nearest to the Earth on the morning of the 11th, and most distant from it at midnight on the 22nd.

MERCURY is an evening star, setting after the Sun: the interval between sunset and the setting of this planet becomes larger each successive evening till the 18th day, after which it decreases. On the 8th day he sets at 9h. 42m. p.m., on the 13th at 9h. 56m. p.m., on the 18th at 9h. 59m. p.m., on the 23rd at 9h. 56m. p.m., and on the 28th at 9h. 44m. p.m.; being 1h. 10m., 1h. 31m., 1h. 41m., 1h. 42m., 1h. 37m., and 1h. 26m. respectively after sunset on these evenings. He is therefore favourably situated for observation throughout the month. He is near the Moon on the 15th, at his greatest eastern elongation (25 deg. 39 min.) on the 28th, and in his descending node on the 29th.

VENUS is an evening star, setting at 10h. 19m., or 2h. 8m. after sunset on the 9th day; at 10h. 17m. p.m., or 2h. after sunset, on the 19th day; and at 10h. 9m. p.m. on the last day. She is near the Moon on the 16th.

MARS is an evening star throughout this month, setting at 8h. 53m. p.m. on the 10th day, or 41m. after sunset; at 8h. 43m. p.m. on the 20th day; and at 8h. 31m. p.m. on the last day, or 13m. after sunset. He is due south in the middle of the month at 0h. 26m. p.m. He is near the Moon on the 14th.

JUPITER is an evening star, setting on the 11th at 0h. 44m. a.m., or 3h. 1m. before sunrise; on the 21st at 0h. 7m. a.m.; and on the last day at 1h. 28m. p.m.; and is visible throughout the night till these times. The Countess of Rosalyn gave a reception at Holyrood Palace yesterday week, for which upwards of a thousand invitations were issued.

The Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland held its annual meeting in the Protestant Hall, Omagh, on Tuesday, when several important matters were considered, and steps taken in connection with the approaching anniversaries.

The monthly return relating to the eight principal towns of Scotland has shown for every month of this year a mortality under the average, when corrected for increase of population.

The certificates and prizes gained by students in the Sheffield Centre, at the last Cambridge local examinations, were distributed, yesterday week, at the Outlers' Hall, by Lord F. Cavendish, M.P. Mr. Mundella, M.P., and other gentlemen interested in the work of education were present.

The eleventh annual dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund took place at Willis's Rooms on Saturday last—the Duke of Somerset in the chair. The toast of "The Navy" was acknowledged by Admiral Sir Spencer Robinson; that of "The Army" by Colonel Sir F. W. Festing; Lord Houghton, the president of the fund, responded to the toast of the evening. Among the other speakers were Sir Samuel Baker, General Sir W. Codrington, Lord Stanley of Alderley, Mr. Scourfield, M.P., Mr. Edmund Yates, Mr. Danby Seymour, and Sir Julius Benedict. The subscriptions amounted to upwards of £1100.

Mr. Arch presided at a meeting of the executive council of the National Agricultural Labourers' Union on Monday. Mr. Morley, M.P., and Mr. George Dixon, M.P., attended, and expressed regret that their efforts to effect a settlement of the eastern counties and Lincolnshire lock-outs had proved ineffectual. The committee adopted a resolution renewing their offer to refer everything in dispute to arbitration, but affirming that any settlement which did not secure increased wages would be unsatisfactory. The secretary reported over 2000 men still locked out, this being an increase of over 200, although 200 had migrated and emigrated. The committee voted £1300 for their relief.

The question of tenant right was discussed at a meeting of the Leicestershire Chamber of Agriculture last Saturday, and a resolution requesting the council of the Central Chamber to prepare a bill to give to tenants on leaving power to recover the existing value of capital invested by them in improvements suitable to their holdings and not removable by them, where such power may not be already given by custom or agreement, was, on the motion of Mr. A. Fell, M.P., adopted almost unanimously. A further resolution for securing compensation to landlords for the damage or deterioration of their property caused by default of tenants was also adopted unanimously. At the monthly meeting of the Central Chamber, on Tuesday, Lord Hampton introduced the subject of compensation for unexhausted improvements. He gave his own opinion, as a landlord, that the best security was a long lease and careful covenants. His Lordship's resolution on the subject was adopted. A counterpart resolution was also passed affirming the right of landlords to compensation for damage or deterioration of the property caused by the default of tenants.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

SIR EDMUND BECKETT, BART.

Sir Edmund Beckett, fourth Baronet, of Somerby Park, in the county of Lincoln, J.P. and D.L., died on the 24th inst. at his residence in Doncaster. He was born Jan. 29, 1787, the third son of Sir John Beckett, first Baronet, the eminent banker of Leeds, by Mary, his wife, daughter of Christopher Wilson, D.D., Bishop of Bristol, and succeeded to the title at the death (on Nov. 17, 1872) of his brother Sir Thomas, the third Baronet. He held for several years a leading position in the town of Doncaster, was M.P. for the West Riding of Yorkshire from 1841 to 1859, and was chairman of the Great Northern Railway Company from 1847 to 1865. He married, Dec. 14, 1814, Maria, daughter of William Beverley, Esq., of Beverley, and assumed, in 1816, in right of his wife—who was grandniece of Lady Denison, widow of Sir Thomas Denison, Judge of the Common Pleas—the surname of Denison, in lieu of that of Beckett. By that name he was subsequently known until 1872, when he retook his patronymic, Beckett. The issue of his marriage consisted of three sons and four daughters. Of the former, the eldest, Mr. Denison, the eminent Q.C., now becomes Sir Edmund Beckett, fifth Baronet, taking the surname of Beckett under the Royal license of 1872. He was born May 12, 1816, and is married to Fanny Catherine, daughter of Dr. Lonsdale, Bishop of Lichfield.

SIR J. D. MACPHERSON.

Major-General Sir James Duncan Macpherson (of Ardersier), K.C.B., of the Bengal army, died on the 29th ult., at the age of sixty-three years. He entered the Bengal Infantry in 1823, served as Brigade Major during the Punjab campaign of 1848-9, and was, from 1852 to 1858, Military Secretary to the Government of the Punjab. He was Quartermaster-General in Bengal in 1858 and 1859, and was in command of the Dinapore and Agra Brigades from 1862 to 1864. In the latter year he became Commissary-General of the Bengal army, which office he held till 1868, vacating it in consequence of his promotion to the rank of Major-General. He was made C.B. in 1858, and K.C.B. in 1873. Sir James married, 1840, Mary, daughter of Lieutenant-General Kennedy, C.B.

SIR THOMAS ROSS.

Sir Thomas Ross, Kt., of Dardistown Castle, in the county of Meath, Captain (retired list) R.N., died at Pau, France, on the 23rd ult. He was born May 5, 1797, the second son of Thomas Ross, Esq., of Rossford, in the county of Cork, by Anne, his wife, daughter of John Attridge, Esq., of Greenmount, in the same county. Ross entered the Royal Navy in 1812, and was successively employed in cruising on the coasts of Norway and Denmark, on the coast of Africa, and on the Brazilian and West Indian stations. On his return he was appointed to the coastguard in the county of Kent. Subsequently he held the post of Inspecting Commander of the Coastguard in Ireland, and, in 1839, received the honour of knighthood from the late Marquis of Normanby, who was then Lord Lieutenant, for his gallant conduct in saving lives from a wreck at Malahide the previous year. He became Captain on the retired list April 1, 1856. Sir Thomas married, April 29, 1835, Anna Maria, daughter of George French, Esq., Q.C. (cousin to Lord De Freyne), and had five children.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, with two codicils, dated respectively Sept. 16, 1873, and Feb. 3 and 18 last, of the Most Hon. Ulick John, Marquis of Clanricarde, K.P., of Portumna Castle, Galway, and No. 17, Stratton-street, Piccadilly, who died on April 10 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by his son, Hubert George, now Marquis of Clanricarde, and Charles Appleyard, two of the executors, power being reserved to prove hereafter to the Right Hon. William Ulick, Earl of Howth, the other executor; the personal estate being sworn under £180,000. The testator, after appointing to his daughters certain funds under his marriage settlements, bequeaths to his wife, Harriet, Marchioness of Clanricarde, £10,000 and an annuity of £1000, in addition to her jointure of £3000 per annum; to the Earl of Howth, £1000; to Charles Appleyard and his agent, John Blake, £500 each; to his butler, James Montague, and Harriet Peake, £100 each; to John Rushe, £50 and an annuity of £120; and the residue of all his property to his said son.

The will of John Hobart Caradoc, Baron Howden, a Lieutenant-General in the Army, and G.C.B., late of Howden and Grimstone, Yorkshire, who died, at Caradoc, near Bayonne, in France, on Oct. 9 last, was proved on the 22nd ult. by Sir Robert Charles Dallas, Bart., and Edward Richard Meade, the acting executors, the personal estate in England being sworn under £180,000. There are other wills relating to his property abroad. Testator desires that his body may be left quietly and obscurely wherever it may have been buried in the first instance.

The will, dated Feb. 6, 1866, of Henry Smith, late of Wilford, Notts, who died on Feb. 7 last, was proved in London, on the 18th ult., by Henry Abel Smith, the son of the deceased, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £140,000. The testator bequeaths to his nephew, Frederic Chatfield Smith, £200, free of duty; to each of the clerks in the banks at Nottingham and Lincoln with which he is connected £10 each for mourning; to each of the domestic servants who have been in his service for one year at Wilford and the bank at Nottingham £2 for every year of their service; and to every labourer at the same places £1 for every year of their service; a black coat to each old man and a black gown to each old woman who at the time of his death is an inmate or married to an inmate of the almshouses at Collins and Librains Hospital, Nottingham; the remainder of his estate, real and personal, testator leaves to his son, the said Henry Abel Smith.

A seam of 12 feet of coal has been discovered at a depth of 248 yards on the Duke of Sutherland's Trentham estate.

Reports of the illness of Garibaldi have recently been in circulation. A telegram has been received from Caprera which states that the General is in good health.

The largest meeting of National teachers which has ever been held in Ireland took place in Portadown last Saturday. Resolutions were passed calling upon the Government to increase the salaries, stating that no system of national education can be complete that does not make provision for the granting of pensions to teachers when obliged by old age or infirmity to retire, pointing out the necessity of free residences being provided in proximity to the schools, that a large number of deserving persons have suffered by the late action of the Commissioners in calling off good-service salary, and that the restoration of this grant to those entitled to it would be but a simple act of justice. Several grievances of a minor character were also discussed.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

* * All communications relating to this department of the News should be addressed "To the Editor of the ILLUSTRATED LONDON NEWS," &c., and have the word "Chess" legibly written on the outside of the envelope.

J. S., St. Petersburg.—Accept our thanks for the correction, and for the very curious problem you have been so good as to send at the same time. The latter is now under examination.

E. O. E., Elm-hill.—"First Compositions in Chess" should be consigned to the waste-paper basket. Pray send us no more such.

E. A. S.—I. A notice in this part of our paper will speedily find you a competitor, but you must give some initials and address, that correspondents may write to you. 2. We are unable to reply to letters by post.

R. M.—Certainly a very elegant game; but, if we are not mistaken, a game we have seen thirty years ago.

W. A. L., Groomwell-road.—The game has been taken down incorrectly, and is quite unintelligible. In the first place, the odds are said to be the P-awn and move; and in the manuscript there are the Pawn and two moves. In the second place, the giver of the odds is made to play first. If you will be at the pains to have the moves correctly set down, by some one accustomed to the task, we shall with much pleasure examine them.

T. M. R.—There will be no difficulty if you send the address of some post office.

W. V. G. D.—I. Problem No. 1573 is perfectly correct, and can be solved only in one way—the author's. 2. No. 1576 can be solved, as the composer proposed, by 1. Q to K R 7th; though it admit, as we have said, of other solutions. We cannot spare space for further notice of these problems.

Tryso.—You must be good enough to send us second copies of your problems. The former, being unaccompanied by any name and address, were, no doubt, destroyed. Always make a diagram of each problem, placing your name at the top, and then write the solution on the back.

W. R. M.—It is correct, but not quite up to our standard.

(To the Editor of the "Illustrated London News.")

Sir,—I observe in your Number for May 2 a statement that Mr. Zukertort has played with me a match, giving the odds of the Knight. I request you to mention that I never had the pleasure of seeing Mr. Zukertort, and, consequently, of playing with him.
Respectfully yours,
St. Petersburg Chess Club, Demidoff-street.

WEST YORKSHIRE CHESS ASSOCIATION.—The nineteenth annual meeting of this society was held at the Queen's Hotel, Huddersfield, a few days back, and, compared with former gatherings, was in every sense successful. The company present included, among others:—From Bradford Messrs. A. Messing, E. Wall, T. Fieldsend, D. Mills, and G. F. Onions; Halifax—Messrs. T. W. Field and J. Farrar; Holmfirth—Messrs. T. Arkwright, J. Moorhouse, J. Wagstaff, and J. Schofield; Huddersfield—Messrs. J. Watkinson, Dr. Scott, E. Dyson, C. W. Whitman, A. Finlison, T. Holliday, T. S. Yates, W. Allen, J. E. Hawkins, W. Thomas, T. K. Mellor, D. Breyler, W. Senior, and W. H. Wolstenholme; Leeds—Messrs. F. Dunne, A. Bilbrough, E. Grant, S. Taylor, J. W. Stringer, J. White, W. Trickett, and W. C. Myers; Manchester—Mr. J. G. Bentley; Orsett—Mr. W. W. Hunter; Penistone—Messrs. P. Hodges and W. F. Moorhouse; Sheffield—Messrs. T. Brown, W. Shaw, and A. Godwin; Shipley—Messrs. T. Spencer and W. Bottomley; Wakefield—the Rev. Allen Grace, Mr. W. H. B. Tomlinson (ex-Mayor of Wakefield), and Messrs. W. L. Robinson, J. C. Marks, S. Day, J. Elliott, O. Ellis, and J. W. Young. Mr. John Watkinson was the president for the year, and Dr. Scott vice-president. Play began at two o'clock in the afternoon, and, with an intermission of about an hour for refreshment, was continued with great spirit until ten at night. It comprised three tournaments, the prizeholders in the first being Messrs. Finlison and Godwin; in the second, Mr. Shaw and Mr. Fieldsend; in the third, Messrs. Hawkins, Field, and Breyler; and also a match between Leeds and Wakefield, six combatants a side, of which the following was the final score:—

Archæology of the Month.

At the late general meeting of the London and Middlesex Archæological Society Mr. Penrose read a short paper on the discoveries which had been made in the course of recent excavations at St. Paul's Cathedral. Certain fragments had been found of a Norman character in a wall plainly connected with the existing church, being parallel to its walls, whereas it is known that the present church deviates from the direction of Old St. Paul's by five or six degrees. A wall, however, has been discovered which there could be no doubt formed a portion of the wall of the old churchyard. It appears clear that all available materials of the old church were used in building the present edifice; and some time since, on digging into an arch in the choir, there were found among the rubble masonry several fragments of the old church.

There has recently been a supposititious discovery of documents in Canterbury Cathedral, the real state of the case being that certain papers which had always been known to exist (not in the crypt, but) in St. Andrew's Chapel, after having disappeared in the removal of the floor by which the chapel had been divided into an upper and a lower room, were brought to light by Mr. J. B. Shepherd; and, having been arranged and mounted by him, have been found to possess a value and an interest which were not suspected when, in a former generation, they were thrown aside as refuse. The work, which has been sanctioned by the Historical Manuscripts Commission, does not relate to these papers only, but to the whole collection of documents belonging to the Dean and Chapter.

Mrs. J. G. Nichols has sent to the Archæological Institute some original MSS., comprising a letter under the Great Seal and Sign Manual of Edward VI. and the Lords of the Council, empowering the officers of the Mint at Canterbury to arrest and retain for their service goldsmiths and other artificers, and to take possession of metals and minerals. The other MSS. were several thirteenth-century deeds relating to Ticehurst, &c., in Sussex, with seals attached; a commission, &c., for the Mayor, &c., of Hastings, for the carrying of the canopy at the coronation of Charles II.; and a power of attorney by the Superiors of the town of Youghall to give service of land there, temp. Richard II.

Among the valuable additions lately made to the British Museum are some architectural fragments from Tel el Yahoudeh (the mounds of the Jews), in Egypt, being the site of Vicus Judæorum in the Roman Itinerary, thirty Roman miles to the north of Heliopolis. It is called Onion in Claudius Ptolemy's Geography, and is where the Jewish high priest, Onias IV., built his temple to God. These fragments are some of them, as we must suppose, part of the Jewish temple, because they are not Egyptian in style; while some of them, bearing the name of Rameses III., belong to the older Egyptian temple, which, as Josephus tells us, had gone to ruins on the spot. The Jewish fragments are porcelain tiles, set as ornaments in the bricks, and encircling a column on a capital.

St. Clement's Well, or the Holy Well of St. Clement, northward of St. Clement Danes Church, has recently been filled in and covered over with earth and rubble, in order to form part of the foundation of the Law Courts of the future. Penitents and pilgrims used to visit this well as early as the reign of St. Ethelred. Fitzstephen speaks of its waters as "sweet, salubrious, and clear, and whose runnels murmur over the shining stones;" whether the scholars used to saunter from Westminster in the summer evenings, when as yet the Strand was a country road, with noble mansions on each side.

Dr. Barlow, in a communication to the Builder, demonstrates that the parish church of Newington, Surrey, shortly about to be razed to the ground, since the Norman Conquest has never changed its situation.

Fragments of the ancient Abbey of Paisley have lately been brought to light—viz., a portion of the south wall, 19 ft. in length by 30 ft. in height. The abbey, one of the finest specimens of Gothic architecture in the west of Scotland (twelfth century), is believed to have been long a Royal burial place.

Recent excavations on the site of the old Parliament chapel at Nottingham prove that the manufacture of pottery was carried on at a much earlier date than is generally supposed. In and near some old kilns have been found jars, jugs, and flat-bottomed pots of mediæval manufacture, and all of a red clay body, with the upper outside covered with green salt-glaze. Other kilns and fragments of encaustic tiles, with coats of arms and inscriptions, have also been found; and Mr. Sulley, in the Nottingham Guardian, is of opinion that the works existed in the fourteenth century.

Fragments of ancient British Kent have been discovered near Snodland, "on the summit of a steep bank, where several stones of a large size appear to have formed an oval ring, on the north-east side of which are some outlying stones, as is the case with so many of our British circles. The diameters of the oval would seem to have been from 40 ft. to 50 ft., but there are—so closely adjoining it as to suggest the possibility of their having been constructed with the stones of the oval—the remains of a large sepulchral chamber; and several stones, which no doubt formed part of one or other of these monuments, are scattered at the foot of the bank."—Builder.

Fragments of ancient British Leicester have been found between the site of the Old Nag's Head and the Peacock Inn at the end of Peacock-lane. Included in the range of buildings were the house of the Master of Wigston's Hospital, dating from about the reign of Henry VIII.; the old Nag's Head, built in the reign of Charles I.; and several brick houses, in all probability erected in the reign of George I. or George II.; and others of succeeding periods.

The ecclesiastical ruins on the Rock of Cashel are the only ancient remains which have as yet constituted national monuments under the twenty-fifth section of the Irish Church Act. For their preservation a sum of £71,000 has been vested in Government funds.

According to the latest news from Athens, the Judges rejected, on May 15, the demand of the Turkish Government for one half of the treasure which Dr. Schliemann discovered at Hissarlik and conveyed to Athens. The arrangement now come to seems to be (the Times says) that Dr. Schliemann is to employ 100 to 150 labourers for three or four months at Hissarlik, and that whatever is found by them is to be the property of the Turkish Government. In the mean time the Turkish Government has not been inactive. The large slabs on the road, which were discovered at Hissarlik, at a depth of 30 ft., have been removed, and below that pavement a much more ancient pavement of large chalk-stone slabs has now been brought to light. Those who believe that there must be some kind of historical foundation for all mythological and epic poetry will have to assign this new stratum to Laomedon, Priam's father, whose Ilium was destroyed by Hercules, "with only six ships and fewer men."

Among the bibliographical treasures in Sir William Tite's sale was a copy of "Joe Miller's Jests, or the Wit's Vale Mecum," first edit., 1739, sold for £7 15s. Mr. Daniel's copy brought £6 15s.

EXTRACTS FROM LE JOURNAL DES MODES, Edited by Madame MARIE SCHILD:—VISIT TO JAY.

"Can this really be a mourning-warehouse? Such is, however, the case. Not one article is sold here but what can be called mourning."

"One was a very handsome train skirt of rich pail de soie, made of violet, trimmed with revers of black. Another skirt was grey silk, the front being arranged in inverted folds."

"Beads were everywhere; and a plain black silk costume was converted into a perfect jewel-case by the trimming of beaded pascamenterie."

"By-the-by, here is the place to purchase a useful black silk, black silks being their specialty. Messrs. Jay are enabled to buy very largely and directly from the manufacturers; consequently, the silks can be sold cheaper than at most other places."

"A tablier composed of alternate rows of lace, each worked with a design and perfectly covered with out beads, forming a deep apron in front and out of completely at the sides, finishing off the back with a small basque. Such things must be seen to be properly appreciated."

FETES and CEREMONIES. Messrs. JAY have the honour to announce they have some very elegant novelties in Millinery, Silk, and Lace, and at fresco Costumes, which can be worn either in or out of mourning.

JAY.

SUDDEN MOURNING.—MRS. JAY are always provided with experienced Dressmakers and Milliners, ready to travel to any part of the Kingdom, free of expense to purchaser, when the circumstances of sudden or unexpected mourning require the immediate execution of mourning orders. They take with them dresses, bonnets, and millinery, besides materials, at 1s. per yard and upwards from the piece, all marked in plain figures, and at the same price as if purchased at the London General Mourning Warehouse, in Regent-street. Reasonable estimates are also given for household mourning at a great saving to large or small families.

"A SHADY NOOK." BY P. RUMPF, OF DUSSELDORF.

SOUTH KENSINGTON MUSEUM.—The Special LOAN

doubtedly be given." And, to crown all, there is the bill, which is not a Government measure, introduced by the Archbishop of Canterbury, affecting the Church.

Do we contemplate with derision these Legislative projects? By no means. They constitute what it is possible to regard as a fair body of useful legislation. But one of two things may be predicated concerning them. Either they are not measures "of primary importance," in the sense conveyed by Mr. Disraeli's language—that is to say, they are not likely to tax to any overpowering extent the time and labour of the House, or they will not be placed upon the Statute Book in this present year. Let it be borne in mind that we are now well on towards the middle of June. After the commencement of July it has been found all but impossible to keep more than a minority of members from anticipating for themselves the close of the Session. There are still some Legislative Acts, not adverted to by Mr. Disraeli, that must be passed. It is true that Tuesdays, normally consecrated to the motions of private members, are henceforth to be at the disposal of the Government. It may be taken for granted that morning sittings will be instituted twice a week from the beginning of next month. It may be apprehended that the labours of hon. members will be prolonged pretty frequently into the small hours of the morning. All this may suffice to dispatch a considerable list of minor measures, the object of which is social, and the difference of opinion relating to the provisions of which is not great. Where there is no commanding policy to be given effect to, bills pass through their several stages in Parliament with great rapidity towards the close of a Session. We cannot detect in the long catalogue of Government measures any one aiming at the introduction of a doubtful and disputable policy, with the exception of the Factories Bill and the Friendly Societies Bill. All the rest may be got through without drawing too largely upon the persistent toil of the House. If not, the probabilities are that they will not be got through at all. Mr. Disraeli is to be commended for striving to avoid a "Massacre of the Innocents." That would be an event scarcely suited to the leisurely progress of the Session. But he need not, in his anxiety to escape one extreme, have fallen into another. As is sometimes the case with him, he has overacted his part. Nothing which can now be accomplished can make the present Session memorable for legislative industry, fruitfulness, or even discussion. It is a pause—and no true representation of the case can make it notably either more or less.

MR. FRANCE AND THE EXPLOSIVES COMMITTEE.

The article "Sketches in Parliament," in our last Number, contained a paragraph relating to the proceedings on the appearance of Mr. R. S. France at the bar of the House on an alleged breach of privilege. That gentleman has written to us complaining that such article injuriously reflects upon him when at the bar, and also imputes to him that, as an inventor, he had a pecuniary interest in writing the letter which the House considered was a breach of privilege. We cannot concur in the construction placed by Mr. France upon our article, but at the same time we think it right to say that it was not intended to reflect upon his conduct at the place mentioned or to impute to him that he had a pecuniary interest in writing the letter. Further, Mr. France informs us that he is not an "inventor," and we, therefore, willingly withdraw the term. We learn, and are happy to state, also, that Mr. France is not in any way pecuniarily interested in any explosive, although, as an act of courtesy, he has allowed a War-Office Committee and others to carry out experiments with explosives in his quarries.

THE COURT.

The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, has made various excursions during the week on Deeside, having visited the Linn of Quich and other picturesque localities. Her Majesty and the Princess attended Divine service on Sunday last, at Crathie church. The Rev. A. Campbell, of Crathie, officiated. The Earl of Malmesbury dined with the Queen, and left Balmoral the following day. The Duchess Dowager of Athole, who was in waiting on her Majesty, communicated to the Queen the melancholy intelligence of the death of her brother-in-law, Lord James Murray, on the 2nd inst. Lord James had long and faithfully served the Queen and the Duchess of Kent. He was Equerry to the Duchess from 1846 to 1861, and after her death was appointed Groom in Waiting to her Majesty. The Duchess Dowager of Athole left the castle, and was succeeded by the Countess of Erroll. Miss Macgregor has also left Balmoral.

By command of the Queen a state concert was given on Wednesday, at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales, attended by their suite, arrived at the palace from Marlborough House, escorted by a detachment of Horse Guards. The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck were present at the concert. The Yeomen of the Guard were on duty, and a guard of honour of the Coldstream Guards was in attendance. The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the members of the Royal family, conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and attended by the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, entered the saloon at twenty minutes past ten o'clock, when the concert commenced. The artistes were Mesdames Adeline Patti and Trebelli-Bettini, Mdles. Titiens and Marimon; Signori Nicolini and Agnesi, Herr Walter, and Messrs. Santley and John Thomas. Conductor, Mr. W. G. Cousins. Mr. Sims Reeves was prevented by indisposition from being present. The band and chorus (consisting of upwards of 160 performers) were selected from the Italian Opera, the Philharmonic and Sacred Harmonic Societies, and her Majesty's private band. The principal members of the Corps Diplomatique, with the ladies of their families, and about 1000 distinguished personages were present.

A state ball will take place on Wednesday, the 24th inst.; and a state concert will be given on Wednesday, July 1, at Buckingham Palace.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh were present at Epsom Races on the Oaks day. The Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh attended a concert given by Mr. Charles Hallé at St. James's Hall. The Prince dined with Baron Ferdinand de Rothschild at his residence in Piccadilly. On Saturday last the Princess stood sponsor at the christening of the infant daughter of the Count and Countess D'Otrante at the Chapel Royal, St. James's. Subsequently the Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh and the Duke of Connaught, went to Hurlingham and were present at the opening match of the Polo Club, played between the officers of the 1st Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards. In the evening the Prince presided at the regimental dinner of the 10th (Royal) Hussars at Willis's Rooms. Their Royal Highnesses, with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, attended Divine service on Sunday. The Princess, accompanied by the Duchess of Edinburgh, visited the School for Art-Needlework in Sloane-street on Monday. The Prince went to the House of Lords, where the Duke of Connaught took his seat. The Duke was introduced by the Prince and the Duke of Edinburgh. In the evening the Prince and Princess of Wales were present at a dance given by the Duke and Duchess of Sutherland at Stafford House. Their Royal Highnesses, with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, visited the horse show at the Agricultural Hall on Tuesday, and in the evening were present at the full-dress rehearsal of "Il Talismano." At the end of the rehearsal his Royal Highness sent for Madame Balfe, widow of the composer, and, after expressing the gratification he had derived from the performance, accepted the dedication of the work. The Prince accompanied Lord Alfred Paget in his Lordship's yacht from Gravesend on Wednesday, and witnessed the schooner and yawl race of the Royal Thames Yacht Club. His Royal Highness has accepted the presidency of the Royal Cornwall Agricultural Society for the present year.

The Duchess of Edinburgh inspected the Yeomen of the Guard, on Tuesday, in the gardens of St. James's Palace. The corps numbered 108, and was under the command of Lord Skelmersdale. The Duke of Edinburgh was present during the inspection. The Duke and Duchess have been to Her Majesty's Opera, and her Imperial and Royal Highness has visited the Royal Botanical Gardens, Regent's Park. The Duke received Mr. T. Hitt, of Northumberland-street, Charing-cross, on Monday, at Buckingham Palace, and inspected his model of an iron-clad of novel construction, which also includes a new system of working the guns. On Thursday afternoon the Duke and Duchess were present at the annual distribution of prizes to the successful students attached to the Medical and Surgical College in connection with St. Thomas's Hospital.

The Duke of Connaught went to the Prince of Wales's Theatre on Monday.

Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein visited the Empress Eugénie at Camden Place, Chislehurst, last week. The Empress also visited the Prince and Princess at Cumberland Lodge, Windsor Park.

The Duke of Cambridge, as Field Marshal Commanding-in-Chief, held a Levée on Tuesday, at the Horse Guards, which was fully attended.

The Duke and Duchess of Hamilton have arrived at Easton Park, Brandon, Suffolk, from Egypt and the Continent.

The Duke and Duchess of Leeds have arrived in South Audley-street.

The Marquis of Bowmont, eldest son of the Duke of Roxburgh, was married to Lady Anne Emily Spencer Churchill, fourth daughter of the Duke of Marlborough, on Thursday, at St. James's Church, Piccadilly.

Entertainments have been given by the Duke and Duchess of Cleveland, the Duke of Devonshire, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Marchioness of Hertford, the Marquis and Marchioness of Bath, Earl and Countess Darnley, Earl and Countess Manvers, Earl Fortescue, the Earl and Countess of Stair, Earl and Countess Amherst, the Earl and Countess of Dartmouth, Viscount and Viscountess Mountgarret, Lady Llanover, Lady Sutton, Lord and Lady Chelmsford, Lady Molesworth, the Right Hon. Gathorne and Mrs. Hardy, Mrs. C. M. Palmer, Mrs. Matheson, and Mrs. Ward Hunt.

THE CORBIERE LIGHTHOUSE, JERSEY.

A lighthouse has been erected on the dangerous rocks known as La Corbière, off the south-west extremity of Jersey. The excavation for the tower was commenced last June, the masonry was completed early in December, and the light was exhibited on the 1st inst. These rocks are separated from the mainland at high water by a channel one third of a mile wide, and from 16 ft. to 20 ft. in depth. The lighthouse tower is of concrete, formed in situ, so as to produce a structure which is in effect a monolith. The light is 135 ft. above the mean sea level, and is visible in clear weather from a distance of nineteen miles. Provision has been made for illuminating two dangerous patches of submerged rocks, close to the coast, with a red light, so that the mariner may have due warning that he is approaching the dangerous shoals. In foggy weather a bell will be rung by automatic machinery at half-minute intervals. The illuminating apparatus consists of one of Messrs. Chance's dioptric lenses, of the type usually supplied by them to the Trinity Board. In addition to the lighthouse, a half-tide causeway has been constructed from the mainland to the rock, and two cottages are built for the accommodation of the light-keepers. The lighthouse was formally handed over to the Jersey authorities by the engineer-in-chief, Sir John Cooke, and the resident engineer, Mr. Imrie Bell, on Monday week. The completed work was pronounced highly satisfactory in all respects. The expeditious performance of this work is due, in great part, to the use of concrete as the material for the tower. It is the first, but assuredly will not be the last, work of its kind executed in this excellent constructive material. Many lives and much property might have been saved had this useful design been carried out at an earlier date. Coming at a late period, however, the light will be hailed by mariners frequenting the Channel Islands and the adjacent parts of the French coast as a great benefit, warning them away from one of the most dangerous spots round the island of Jersey. Our view of the Corbière Lighthouse is from a sketch by Mr. Charles W. Law, an artist resident in Jersey. The signal staff on the hill, which may be remarked in this view, is that of La Moye. It serves to announce to Fort Regent, at a distance of six miles, the approach of any ship to the island.

THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

Four portraits of newly-elected members of the House of Commons appear in this week's number of our Journal.

Mr. John Gellibrand Hubbard, of Addington Manor, Buckinghamshire, and of Prince's Gate, Kensington, who was returned in the Conservative interest for the city of London, is eldest son of the late Mr. John Hubbard, of Stratford-grove, Essex, by Mariana, daughter of the late Mr. John Morgan, of Bramfield-place, Hertfordshire. He was born in the year 1805. He married, in 1837, the Hon. Maria Margaret Napier, eldest daughter of the late and sister of the present Lord Napier. His eldest son has been elected for the borough of Buckingham. Mr. Hubbard is well known as a Russian merchant of high standing in the City. He is a director and has been governor of the Bank of England. He has also been chairman of the Public Works Exchequer Loan Commission. He is a magistrate for Buckinghamshire. Mr. Hubbard represented the borough of Buckingham in the Conservative interest from 1859 to 1868. He is author of several pamphlets on matters connected with finance. The return of Mr. Hubbard and his two Conservative colleagues for the city of London was the gain of three seats to their party.

Mr. Alexander Macdonald, of Holytown, Lanarkshire, North Britain, who was successful as "the working man's candidate" for the borough of Stafford, is the son of a miner, who worked at New Monkland, near Glasgow. He was born in the neighbourhood of Clackmannan, about 1823. While a boy he toiled as a miner, and did the same in his early manhood. He saved enough money to enter himself in 1846 as a student in the University of Glasgow. He has taken an active part in organising movements which have led to legislation on subjects connected with the mining interest. He has been long known as an active politician and man of business in the mining districts. He is at present Secretary of the Miners' Association for Scotland, and President of the Miners' National Association. Mr. Macdonald and Mr. Burt are the first "working-man's" candidates who have found their way into the House. The working classes of Mr. Macdonald's native country have agreed to subscribe a certain sum per diem during the Parliamentary season for his support in London.

Mr. Alfred George Marten, Q.C., M.P. for the borough of Cambridge, is a son of the late Robert Giles Marten, Esq., of Plaistow, Essex, by Eliza, daughter of the late John Warrington, Esq. He is a descendant of Sir Henry Marten, Dean of the Arches, Judge of the Prerogative Court and of the High Court of Admiralty, who was esteemed the first civilian of his age, and who represented the University of Oxford in 1628. Mr. Marten is a late Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge, having graduated nineteenth wrangler in the mathematical tripos 1856, and stood first in a bracket in the civil law classes 1854-5. He has been a member of the Board of Legal Studies and examiner in law in the University of Cambridge. He delivered a course of public lectures on law in the hall of St. John's College in the years 1867 and 1868. He was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in January, 1857, obtaining a certificate of honour of the first class in the examination of the Council of Legal Education, established by the four Inns of Court. He was appointed one of her Majesty's Counsel in February last, and practises in the Court of Chancery. He is the author of a paper "On the Judicial Constitution of the Court of Chancery, and its Methods of Procedure in Court and in Chambers." Mr. Marten is a Conservative, and unsuccessfully contested Nottingham in July, 1865. He is married to a daughter of the late Captain Kennett, of Dorchester-on-Thames.

Lieutenant-Colonel Oland Alexander, of Ballochmyle, Ayrshire, returned in the Conservative interest for the southern division of that county, is eldest son of the late Mr. Boyd Alexander, of Ballochmyle; his mother was Sophia Elizabeth, third daughter of the late Sir Benjamin Hobhouse, and half-sister of John, late Lord Broughton, G.C.B., better known by his former name of Sir John Cam Hobhouse. He was born in the year 1831, and was educated at Eton, and at Christ Church, Oxford. He is a magistrate and Deputy Lieutenant for the counties of Ayr and Renfrew, and a Captain and Lieutenant-Colonel in the Grenadier Guards, with which regiment he served through the Crimean War. Colonel Alexander, who now enters Parliament for the first time, was an unsuccessful candidate for the same constituency at the general election of November, 1868. He married, in 1863, Eliza, only daughter of the late Mr. Alexander Speirs, of Elderslie, some time Lord Lieutenant of Renfrewshire.

Photographs of the portraits: that of Mr. Macdonald, London Stereoscopic Company; that of Mr. Marten, Elliott and Fry; that of Colonel Alexander, Hills and Saunders, of Eton.

"A SHADY NOOK."

In the torrid weather we are now feeling we could hardly select a more pleasant subject for an art-illustration than that of the picture by Herr P. Rumpf, of Düsseldorf, which we have engraved from a reproduction by the Berlin Photographic Company. Two young ladies, sweet and engaging, as well as pretty, and with a touch of sentiment in their expression, dressed in loose summer toilettes, are seated beneath the shade of the full summer foliage, in a spot where the luxurious vegetation and wild flowers tell of rural seclusion and repose. The quietude of this nook is only broken by the song of birds, and the voice of the fair reader as she melodiously recites some pastoral poem in the nature, let us suppose, of Thomson's "Seasons." All this, we say, is pleasant and refreshing to those, except, perhaps, the maddest of the "mad votaries of fashion," who are condemned to dwell in towns in the middle of June. But there is "a shady nook" to be found yet in Kensington Gardens.

American papers received on Monday publish a letter addressed by the foreign Minister of Guatemala to Mr. Scholefield, her Majesty's Chargé d'Affaires, relative to the outrage on Mr. Magee. It expresses on behalf of the Government sorrow and indignation at "the deplorable affair," and assures Mr. Scholefield that the authors of the criminal act will be punished with all the rigour of the law. It is stated that Mr. Magee had been offered £10,000 compensation, but he preferred to leave the case in the hands of his Government.

A large and influential meeting on the subject of patronage and disestablishment in the Church of Scotland was held at Aberdeen, on Tuesday, in the Music-hall buildings. Lord Provost Leslie presided. Mr. Greig, from Edinburgh, addressed the meeting. On the motion of Mr. W. Henderson, of Devana, it was resolved to form an association to promote disestablishment, and to petition Parliament against the Patronage Bill as most unsatisfactory, and not at all fitted to heal the divisions in Scotland. Lord Provost Leslie, Mr. G. Thompson, and Mr. G. Webster, advocate, were appointed presidents of the new association. It was agreed to hold another meeting with a view of explaining the nature of the Patronage Bill. A meeting of a like kind was held at Arbroath on Monday evening—Mr. David Cornar, of the Elms, presiding.

MR. A. McDONALD, M.P. FOR STAFFORD.

MR. J. G. HUBBARD, M.P. FOR LONDON.

MR. A. G. MARTEN, M.P. FOR CAMBRIDGE.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL ALEXANDER, M.P. FOR SOUTH AYRSHIRE.

NEW LIGHTHOUSE, CORBIERE ROCKS, JERSEY.

THE FAMINE IN INDIA: THE VILLAGE WELL.

THE VILLAGE WELL IN INDIA.

It is computed that, during the last forty years, above ten millions of people in India have died from the want of water—that is to say, not by thirst, but hunger and disease or weakness caused by the want of food, to the production of which irrigation is needful. This terrible statement we find but too much ground for believing, with the recent experiences of the famine now felt in Bengal and that of Orissa in 1867. To aid the study of this painful subject, we can recommend two or three late publications. One is a lecture "On the Impending Indian Famine," delivered by Sir Bartle Frere to the Society of Arts, in December. It forms a small volume, with three maps, published by Mr. Murray and by Messrs. H. S. King and Co. We cannot, upon this occasion, review the whole discussion treated by Sir Bartle Frere with consummate knowledge, benevolence, and judgment. He remarks, however, that "in no other way can money be so advantageously expended, with a view to future production and cheap supply, as in great works of irrigation and internal navigation." This he considers "the greatest safeguard of India against famine in time to come." A pamphlet read, about the same period, to the East India Association, by Mr. W. Tayler, late Commissioner of Patna, fully bears out the view taken by Sir Bartle Frere, with extracts from the reports of Sir Arthur Cotton upon the results in agricultural economy gained by the Canavery works, in the south; by the Godavery works, and those of the Kistna; and expected from those of the Madras Company at Toombuddra, those of Orissa, the Soane, the Ganges, and the Baree Doab. In answer to the question, Will it pay? Sir Arthur Cotton has this to state—"That the produce of an acre of rice, 1200 lb., at the famine price of 1½d., would be 75 rupees, nearly twice the cost of the most expensive of these works, and eight times that of the cheapest, leaving out the question of life and death to both man and cattle." Another little book is published by Mr. Stanford, entitled "Waterways or Railways? or, The Future of India." Its author, Lieutenant-Colonel F. Tyrrell, shows that the seven great irrigation and canal works of India hitherto constructed, at a total cost of five millions and a quarter sterling, yield an annual return of nearly £1,400,000. Meanwhile railways to the extent of 5000 miles, which are unsuited to the habits and wants of the people, have been constructed by an outlay of £93,000, and the result is a yearly loss of working expenses to the amount £1,500,000, which is made up to shareholders by the Indian Government; and three millions sterling has been added to the public debt. About thirty millions was paid for iron fetched from England, instead of using the iron of India. Colonel Tyrrell explains how the configuration of the country, its levels, mountain ranges, and watersheds, and the climate, winds, and seasonable rainfall in the higher parts, supply abundance of water, if it were properly intercepted and stored up by the works he prescribes. His plan is illustrated by a map and sectional diagrams; but it has no particular application to Bengal. Some interesting facts are mentioned to prove the extraordinary increase of productiveness in such a climate from bringing water upon the soil. It is a melancholy confession that the British Government of India has allowed 30,000 tanks, each useful in its district, to fall out of repair. The Village Well, a sketch of which is presented in our Engraving, is designed rather for personal and household use than for agricultural purposes. But water in India is the life of the land, as well as of the people.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, June 11.

The ill-advised petty tyranny of the defunct De Broglie Cabinet—regarded by many as a foretaste of what might be expected under the Constitutional Monarchy—and the various mishaps of France during the last twelve months seem to have peculiarly favoured the growth of Bonapartist pretension; and a few revelations with which the public has been favoured during the past week show that of late the Imperialists have been carrying on their propaganda actively. From a couple of notes published by a Republican journal of Le Mans, one learns that M. Haentjens, the Bonapartist deputy for the Sarthe, has been distributing portraits of the Prince Imperial wholesale among his constituents, an example which it seems is rapidly spreading throughout the country. So long as the party limits itself to these innocent practices no one has cause to complain, but another stormy debate at Versailles has disclosed some highly objectionable tactics, which help to explain the recent unexpected success of the Imperialist candidate in the Nièvre.

M. Girard, a member of the Extreme Left, produced, on Tuesday, at the tribune, a most curious document—found, it would appear, in a railway-carriage, and bearing the inscription "Comité Central de l'Appel au Peuple" as heading. There was no address save the enigmatical words, "Note pour L. B. 17;" the signature, moreover, was illegible; but at the bottom, in the left-hand corner, was the imprint of a stamp on which figured the Imperial eagle. M. Girard read, amidst profound silence, this curious document, which enjoined the recipient "to recommend all our friends, especially those invested with municipal or administrative functions, to concentrate their efforts upon obtaining for M. de Bourgoing the support of the retired officers and others resident in the Nièvre," and went on to promise the same officers and "others" commands in the projected territorial army and other posts and favours. "Take note, also," added the memorandum, "of all who are hostile, or even indifferent." Then, at the end, came an important phrase formally incriminating one of the members of the Cabinet:—"Inclosed is a list of all the officers paid by the tax-receiver of the Nièvre, which has been furnished by the finances." M. Girard having asked if the Government were aware of the existence of this "Committee of Appeal to the People," the Minister of Justice replied that they were not, and added that he had issued a circular prescribing immediate inquiries concerning it. M. Rouher, the Bonapartist leader, then mounted the tribune; but, owing to the rules of the Assembly, the Chamber had to authorise him by vote to speak. He indignantly repudiated any knowledge of the circular, and even insinuated that it was a forgery; remarks which elicited a powerful rejoinder from Gambetta, who called attention to the last phrase of the memorandum, and expressed the hope that M. Magne would never sit any more as a Minister in that Assembly. A second and very abusive speech from M. Rouher followed, and then General de Cissey made a brief and very unnecessary defence as Minister of War. Next came M. Gambetta, this time to answer certain personal remarks indulged in by the ex-Vice-Emperor. The Radical orator had evidently lashed himself into a state of fury, and in the course of his remarks he applied the epithet of "misérables" to the Bonapartists, for which "propos outrageant" the President called him to order; whereupon, turning to his followers, the ex-Dictator rejoined, "It is certain that the word I have made use of is more than an outrage: it is a branding!"—a declaration which was received with vehement applause by the Left, and procured for M. Gambetta a second call to order. The Assembly ultimately separated, amidst great agitation.

In spite of the excessive heat, which rather predisposes to somnolence, all the discussions in the Assembly this week have been more or less tumultuous. M. Ledru Rollin's speech in defence of universal suffrage, which showed that the once famous tribune had outlived his reputation, drew forth a perfect storm of interruptions from the Right, which led the speaker to give some curious and interesting explanations concerning the more famous incidents in his eventful career. MM. Louis Blanc and Gambetta, who pleaded for the same cause, were listened to more quietly and attentively, and secured signal oratorical triumphs, the whole of the Left—Thiersists and Radicals alike—congratulating round M. Louis Blanc as he quitted the tribune to congratulate him on his eloquent display. Nevertheless the second reading of the new Electoral Law Bill was voted, mainly through the intervention of M. Dufaure, by a majority of 75. The bill regulating municipal elections was read the second time on Monday, and, after a lengthy but interesting debate, the first article was voted by a majority of nearly 200. The discussion was resumed on Tuesday, when MM. Brisson, Jules Ferry, and Ernest Picard successively attacked the provisions of article 2, which regulates the reclamations of electors whose names happen to be omitted in the electoral lists. Their arguments appear to have in some measure influenced the Right, the majority in favour of the article being only 25 votes out of 689. By a decision of the Chamber yesterday, the right of voting in the municipalities has been retained for all citizens who have reached the age of twenty-one.

Great efforts have been made this week by the Right Centre—or De Broglie group of the Assembly—to effect an alliance with certain waverers of the Left Centre, but they have proved abortive. The Right Centre offered to support the Republic provisionally until the close of the Septennate, but the Left Centre has unanimously rejected these offers, and voted a resolution in favour of the definitive proclamation of the Republic.

We have had a remarkably brilliant fête in the Champs Elysées—a kind of fancy fair, in which a large number of Parisian élégantes, the majority of them in toilettes costumées, took part: Princess de Metternich and Countess de Pourtales presiding over a tombola; Baroness Rothchild and Marchioness de Las Marismas selling bonbons; Viscountess Agnada, beer; Madame Abel Laurent, cigars; Madame Flamant, gingerbread; and Countess de Mercy Argenteau assuming the office of flower-girl. All those well-worn amusements which figure at the fêtes in the environs of Paris were provided, and the grounds of the Concert Beselievre, where the gathering was held, were crowded. The receipts, which were very considerable, have been remitted to the Préfet of the Seine for the relief of the Parisian poor.

A diplomatic dinner was given on Tuesday, at the American Embassy, to the Duke Decazes, French Minister of Foreign Affairs. It was attended by all the Ambassadors and most of the Ministers in Paris.

SPAIN.

The Minister for Foreign Affairs has sent a circular to the diplomatic representatives of Spain abroad, stating that the Government will use every effort to restore order to Spain and terminate the war with the Carlist and Cuban insurgents.

Mr. Caleb Cushing and Marshal Serrano have exchanged speeches on the presentation of credentials by the new American Minister.

Orders have been issued by the Minister of the Interior for the enrolment of the conscripts of the last levy to be proceeded with at once.

The Carlists under Don Carlos's brother, Prince Alfonso, and General Cucala have suffered a severe repulse. They were routed near Gandesa, Aragon, 8000 strong, by Generals Despujols and Delatre. Dona Blanca was present at the engagement, which lasted five hours. The Carlists had eighty killed and thirty prisoners, comprising a leader and several officers. They also lost a flag. The Carlists, in order to allow the country people to sow their land, have suspended the blockade of Fontarabia and Irun. The Carlists officially state that they have 101 battalions of troops in the field, composed of men from various provinces, and that their cavalry numbers 3000. In obedience to Carlist orders, the Tarragona Railway Company has discontinued its trains to Villafranca. A Carlist band has entered the town of Badalona in Catalonia, and carried off some of the inhabitants as hostages. From Santander it is stated that Marshal Onocha has recovered from a slight indisposition; and the Republican forces are now marching towards Tafalla. The Carlist lines extend from Estella to the Arga Valley.

ITALY.

The King has conferred the collar of the Order of the Annunziata upon Signor Minghetti.

The Senate has approved of the monetary convention with France, Belgium, and Switzerland; the treaty of commerce with Mexico; and the postal convention with Brazil. On Thursday week there was a discussion on the subject of finance. General Cialdini moved a resolution in favour of postponing the Fortifications Bill till the country should be in a better position for carrying out its enactments. He made this proposal on the understanding that the Government would not indefinitely postpone the bill. Signor Minghetti said the Ministry had not finally abandoned any of the army or public works bills, and the motion of General Cialdini was accepted almost unanimously. General Menabrea spoke against postponing the Fortifications Bill. Parliament was prorogued sine die.

The Pope is better, but still suffers from slight attacks of fever. Last Saturday he received Mgr. Guibert, the Archbishop of Paris, who talked to him for a long time on the condition of France. Mgr. Guibert at the same time handed to his Holiness a sum of 150,000fr.

On Tuesday the Pope received the American pilgrims, about 200 in number. He spoke with great hopefulness of the prospects of Catholicism in the New World. One of the pilgrims read an address in Latin, and another an address in French. Pius IX., in reply, said that the presence of the pilgrims was a proof of the triumph of the Church, which, notwithstanding its persecutions, was rapidly advancing all over the world. Some valuable presents, including considerable sums of money, were then offered to his Holiness.

A monument to the late Prince Rayaram Maharajah of Kolapore, who died in Florence in 1870, was publicly unveiled there on Sunday.

HOLLAND.

In the Chamber, on Monday, a question was asked respecting the conduct of the war in Acheen. The Minister for the Colonies, in reply, stated that nothing had yet been decided with regard to fresh operations. A motion, which was regarded as one of censure upon the Government, was afterwards rejected by 36 votes to 26.

BELGIUM.

The Brussels correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette states that the marriage of Princess Louise, eldest daughter of the King and Queen, with Duke Philip of Saxony will take place towards the end of August next. Great fêtes will be given at Brussels to celebrate the event.

The result of the elections is that the Conservative majority in the Senate has been reduced from eight to four, and the Conservative majority in the Chamber of Representatives from 22 to 14. The Minister of Public Works has been defeated.

SWITZERLAND.

The Council of States has ratified the extradition treaties concluded between Switzerland and Great Britain and Belgium.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

All the European Powers have accepted the invitation of Count Andrássy to send representatives to the conference which is to be held at Vienna for the purpose of discussing the terms of an international treaty respecting measures of quarantine upon an outbreak of cholera.

RUSSIA.

According to arrangement, the King of Saxony has visited the Emperor of Russia at Ems.

Imperial decrees promulgated at St. Petersburg introduce various new financial regulations, and one of them reduces the tariff for inland telegrams by one half.

DENMARK.

At Copenhagen, the twenty-fifth anniversary of the Danish Constitution was separately celebrated by the loyal citizens and the democrats. The former marched through the town in procession 25,000 strong, and afterwards presented an address to the King at Christiansberg Castle. The democratic celebration is reported to have been a failure.

AMERICA.

President Grant has published a memorandum in which he recommends the earliest practicable return to a specie basis as indispensable to the national prosperity. He also recommends the repeal of the Legal-Tender Act, the redemption of the greenbacks in gold bonds, an increase of taxation, and free banking.

Amendments in the Free Banking Bill have been agreed upon by the Conference Committee of both Houses of Congress at Washington. The amount of greenbacks to be withdrawn for every million of national bank notes issued is fixed at 375,000 dols. The resumption of specie payments is postponed from General Grant's date to January, 1878.

The substitute brought in by General Butler for the Geneva Award Bill has passed the House of Representatives. It provides for the payment of direct losses and war premiums, and determines that the insurance companies shall only be reimbursed for their actual losses.

Colorado has been admitted by the House of Representatives at Washington as a State of the American Union.

The bill for the construction of a canal from the Lower Mississippi to the Gulf of Mexico, free to all nations, has passed the House of Representatives.

A Democratic Governor has been elected for the State of Oregon by a majority of 400 over his Republican competitor.

Some apprehension is felt (a New York telegram states) of an attack on the white population in Texas by the Comanche and Cheyenne Indians.

INDIA.

The Viceroy of India, in his weekly telegram respecting the famine, says that he has visited many relief circles, and is satisfied that the organisation reaches every village. Much improvement has taken place in the appearance of the people since relief began. No fresh deaths from starvation are reported.

The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphs on Tuesday:—"There have been serious food riots, directed against exporters, in the district below Darjeeling to Titalea. The military have been summoned. Several persons have been killed and wounded. The rainy season is promising over Northern India, including Tirhoot." Calcutta intelligence of Tuesday's date, received through Reuter's agency, indicates "a marked improvement in the condition of the famine districts. Grain was being largely imported into Tirhoot by private traders. The rains which had fallen encouraged the people to leave the relief works and return to cultivation. Cases of actual starvation were becoming very rare." While a Bombay telegram of Wednesday's date, which comes through Reuter's agency, says that the rains in the Bombay Presidency have been full and general.

The death of Dr. G. S. Beaton, the principal medical officer on the Bengal Staff, is announced.

We learn from Calcutta that the Indian Government is about to contract a new loan of £2,500,000, at 4 per cent. Tenders will be received up to July 8.

A telegram from Calcutta of Monday's date says that the first bridge built over the Ganges in that city has been opened.

A statue to the late M. van de Weyer has been voted by the municipality of Louvain.

A new organ, which will cost 24,000fr., has been ordered for the Brussels Opera.

Henry Ludlow, Esq., barrister-at-law, has been appointed Attorney-General for the Island of Trinidad.

The Japanese expedition against Formosa consists of four European-built frigates and 15,000 men.

A great fire occurred in Geneva last Saturday morning, by which a large carpentering establishment and twelve houses were burnt down.

A telegram received by Messrs. Siemens Brothers announces the successful laying of the Nova Scotia and New Hampshire section of the Direct United States Cable.

The Roumanian Chambers, having disposed of the railway convention with Hungary by 75 votes against 34, is discussing a Loan Bill for twenty-seven million francs.

Lieutenant-Colonel Jovanovics has been appointed Serbian Minister of Public Works, and Colonel Zach First Aide-de-Camp to Prince Milan.

A telegram from Melbourne announces that the court of inquiry has exonerated the officers of the British Admiral from all blame in connection with the loss of that vessel.

Mdlle. Simonowitch, of Odessa, has obtained the diploma of doctor of medicine from the University of Berne, where she had pursued her studies.

The Minister of Public Works in Paris has approved of the establishment of a school for the study of insect life, especially in connection with agriculture and horticulture. The building will be erected in the gardens of the Luxembourg.

Burglars in Berlin have turned their particular attention to the Corps Diplomatique: entering the house of Lord Odo Russell and breaking open a desk; attempting a robbery at the Austrian Embassy, where, however, the thieves were foiled; and carrying off a quantity of plate from the Belgian Legation.

The Rev. Francis Gerald Vesey, Minor Canon of Ely and Rector of All Saints', Huntingdon, has been appointed Archdeacon of Huntingdonshire, in the room of Bishop M'Dougall.

Lord Shaftesbury presided, last Saturday, at the sixth annual meeting of the Protestant Deaconesses' Institution. The report showed that gratifying progress had been made.

It appears from a statement lately published by Archdeacon Davies that there have been restored in the archdeaconry of Brecon since 1859 fifty churches, at a cost of £53,006; there have been built ten new ones, and there are more in progress.

Two ladies were admitted, last Saturday, to the office of Deaconess by the Bishop of London in the chapel of Fulham Palace. They had previously been trained in the London Diocesan Deaconesses' Institution for more than two years.

Mr. Nicholson, of Basing Park, has undertaken to pay the deficit of £750 which remained on the restoration of Petersfield Church, Hants. The cost of the work has been £6000, of which Mr. Nicholson's contributions have not fallen far short of half.

Last Saturday the beautiful new church at Erith, of which Mr. J. P. St. Aubyn is the architect, was consecrated by the Archbishop of Canterbury. It is in the Early English style. It is a free church, and accommodates from 600 to 700 persons.

In the library of Lambeth Palace, on Wednesday, the Archbishop of Canterbury presided at a conference of lay and clerical delegates, among whom were Lord Fitzwalter, Viscount Hardinge, Earl Stanhope, Mr. Knatchbull-Hugessen, and Mr. Beresford-Hope.

At St. Paul's the annual sermon to charity-school children was preached, on Thursday week, by the Bishop of Carlisle. It was attended by the Lord Mayor, the Sheriffs, and a number of Common Councillors. The choral service was rendered with splendid effect by the children, with the assistance of the choir.

In consecrating a new church at Blackburn on Monday, the Bishop of Manchester preached a sermon in which he denounced all vested interests in pews as being opposed to the theory of a national Church. The present age, he said, was degenerate in not observing the sacraments of baptism and the Lord's supper.

The annual meeting of the London Diocesan Home Mission was held, on Tuesday, in Willis's Rooms. It was presided over by the Bishop of London, with whom were the Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of Peterborough and St. Asaph. Lord Ebury, Sir John Kennaway, and other gentlemen took part in the proceedings.

At the fourth annual meeting of the Christian Evidence Society at Willis's Rooms, yesterday week, the Bishop of London in the chair, the subject of infidelity was considered, addresses being delivered by the Archbishop of York, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, and other distinguished Churchmen.

The Bishop of Guildford closed his visitation of the archdeaconry of Surrey with a charge delivered at Guildford. In commenting on the Public Worship Bill, he said he would rather trust to the good sense and moderation of the clergy than see the strong arm of the law brought to bear on them. He condemned the sale of next presentations, and gave a very satisfactory account of the state of education in the diocese.

The new Church of St. Augustine, Pendlebury, the fifth that has been erected in the neighbourhood within the last sixteen years, was consecrated by the Bishop of Manchester last week. It has been built at the sole expense of Mr. E. Stanley Heywood, and it is thought that it must have cost between £20,000 and £30,000. It was designed by Messrs. Bodley and Garner, and it is in every respect a magnificent structure, being in the style of the fourteenth century. The stained windows, which are from the works of Messrs. Burlison and Grylls, of Newman-street, are of unusual excellence.

When the Dean and Chapter, a few years back, took in hand the work of restoring Rochester Cathedral, under the skilful guidance of Sir Gilbert G. Scott, there was a great amount of work to be done. They have accomplished a portion of it, to the great improvement of the building, and have spent upwards of £10,000 in doing it, while Dr. Griffith, formerly a Canon, and Mrs. Griffith, have provided £3000 for the restoration of the interior fittings of the choir. But here the work must stop unless the public will contribute funds, those at the disposal of the Dean and Chapter being exhausted. Sir G. Scott estimates that the work of restoration still urgently needed will cost £17,000.

Lord Selborne presided, on Tuesday, at the eighth annual meeting of the Association of Lay Helpers for the Diocese of London, which was held at Sion College. His Lordship, in opening the proceedings, observed that he had been for some time past a member of the association, though he had no other claim to belong to it than that of having worked for a large number of years in his own parish in one of the ways which came within the scope of their operations—namely, as a teacher on Sundays of an adult class of young men. The annual report gave a very satisfactory account of the work of the past year, and stated that there had been a larger addition to the number of the associates during the past twelve months than during either of the two previous years, the net increase being 350.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The Rev. J. R. T. Eaton, late Fellow and Tutor of Merton, and Bampton Lecturer of 1872, was, on Saturday, elected Whyte Professor of Moral Philosophy.

The Chancellor's and Newdigate prizes have been awarded as follows:—1. English Essay—Mr. Gerard Baldwin Brown, B.A., Fellow of Brasenose. 2. Latin Essay—Mr. Reginald Merriock Fowler, B.A., Scholar of Pembroke; subject, "De Colonia apud Romanos Militaribus." 3. Latin Verse—Mr. William Hind, Scholar of Balliol; subject, "Melita." 4. Newdigate—Robert Jocelyn Alexander, Commoner of Brasenose; subject, "The Last of the Red Indians." It is somewhat singular that Mr. Alexander's father (who is now Bishop of Derry), when a member of Brasenose twenty-four years since, gained the Denyer prize essay, and in 1860 was the successful competitor for the prize for the sacred poem.

The Stanhope Essay has been awarded to Mr. John Woulfe Flanagan, Commoner of Balliol. Proxime Accessit—Mr. Philip Lyttelton Gell, Scholar of Balliol. The subject for 1875 will be "Cardinal Beaufort."

The following candidates have been elected to scholarships in University:—Classical Scholars—R. N. Arkle, Exhibitioner of the College; and A. Kensington, of Marlborough College. Proxime Accessit—J. C. Seaton, of Tunbridge School. Mathematical Scholar—J. W. Botsford, of Bruce Castle School.

CAMBRIDGE.

At a congregation, yesterday week, the seal of the University was affixed to a letter of thanks to the Chancellor, the Duke of Devonshire, for his munificent gift of the Cavendish Laboratory of Experimental Physics.

The Master and Seniors of St. John's have appointed to theological lectureships Mr. H. M. Gwatkin (B.A. 1867, first class in mathematics, classics, moral science, and theology) and the Rev. F. Watson (B.A. 1868, first class in mathematics and theology), both of them Fellows of the college and late Croese and Tyrwhitt University Scholars.

At Sidney prizes for mathematics have been adjudged to Temperley, third year; Fisher, of the second year; Wilson, Vintner, and Cobbald, of the first year. For classics, to Adams, H. A. Smith, Hutchings, Spencer. For divinity, to Holmes and Lloyd. For natural sciences, to Shelley and Foster. Reading prizes, to Temperley and Sharman. English essay, Fisher. Elected to foundation scholarships, Adams, Beckley, Holmes, Fisher. Taylor scholars, to Shelley and Foster. Taylor exhibitioners, Swallow, Wilson, Vintner, Cobbald. Levett exhibitioner, Wetherell. Micklethwaite exhibitioner, Lloyd. Bancroft exhibitioner, T. E. Smith.

The following elections to open scholarships have been made at St. Catherine's:—J. E. Jacob, private tuition, £60; E. W. Stocks, Clergy Orphan School, Canterbury, £50; J. T. Black, Norwich School; G. P. E. Blomesfield, Malvern and private tuition; R. E. Gurney, Doncaster School; F. W. Christie, private tuition, £40 each; D. Evans, Wellington and private tuition, £35.

The under-mentioned students of Jesus have been elected to foundation scholarships:—Compton, £30; Jones, £30; James, £30; Browne, £20; Hamilton, £20. Gwyther has been elected Gifford Scholar, £16.

The Vice-Chancellor, on Tuesday, published certain proposals that had been submitted by the council of King's College, London, as a basis for negotiation with the view to the affiliation of the latter college with the University. It is suggested that associates of King's College and such other students as shall have attended the regular course of lectures at King's College, and gained special distinction in the examination, shall, on presenting satisfactory certificates from the principal, be allowed to enter as second-year graduates, provided that they pass such examinations as the University may require. Further, that undergraduates of Cambridge shall be allowed, on obtaining special permission, to spend their last year at one of the technical schools at the college, receiving all the advantages of matriculated students, and shall take their degrees at the University in regular order.

"WHO COMES?"

In this picture a little romance seems to be suggested. The costume carries us back to the fifteenth or early in the sixteenth century, when the liberty of the young girls of the period was much more circumscribed than it is now. How is it, then, that this evidently highborn damsel is found at this lonely place at approaching dusk, unattended save by her canine protector, and with an expression so anxiously expectant? Is it not that this is the trysting-place, that she awaits a knightly lover who has been detained by some misadventure, or he surely would have been the first on the spot? But someone approaches. Is it he? or is it a relative inimical to the lovers? or is it merely some idle marplot? The moment is obviously one of intense interest to the fair maiden herself, though there is little fear as to her personal safety with that noble dog at her side. We must, however, leave it to the reader to weave the incident represented into a story according to his own fancy. The picture, which is exhibited at the French Gallery, is by M. F. A. Kaulbach, a nephew of the illustrious German artist of that name.

Princess Louise is to present the prizes this (Saturday) afternoon at the flower show of the People's Garden Club at Willesden, a charming place of summer resort, after the style of the German Volksgarten.

The Judges of the Irish Court of Common Pleas having been equally divided respecting the merits of the case drawn up for them as affecting the Drogheda election, the matter was consequently remitted to the decision of Mr. Justice Barry, who tried the petition. On Monday he gave judgment, declaring that the election was a pure and free one, and that the secrecy of the Ballot Act had not been violated. He accordingly certified Dr. O'Leary, the sitting member, to have been duly elected.—The Conservatives of Denbigh have subscribed £1100 for the Hon. George T. Kenyon, the defeated candidate at the last election, towards defraying his expenses.—Lord Kensington was on Thursday returned unopposed for the Haverfordwest Boroughs. Petitions have been lodged against the return of Mr. Dorington, the Conservative member, and of Mr. Stanton, the Liberal member, for Stroud.

LAW AND POLICE.

The Lords Justices of Appeal delivered judgment, on Thursday, in the appeal of Lady Westbury from the decision of the Master of the Rolls on a question submitted to his Honour in the suit of "Bethell v. Abraham." Sir George Jessel decided that it was not the intention of the testator that his daughter-in-law (the appellant) should take £400 a year in addition to the annuity of £2000, given for the maintenance of herself, her husband, and their children, until the expiration of five years from his death. Their Lordships have affirmed this decision and dismissed the appeal, all costs to come out of the estate.

Vice-Chancellor Malins gave judgment, last Saturday, in the case of the "Corporation of Hastings v. Ivall," in which the plaintiffs asked for an injunction to restrain the defendant from spoiling the seashore at Hastings by making large excavations therein, and carting away the soil. The defendant denied that the Corporation had any title to the seashore, but they insisted that at a very remote period the Crown had constituted them owners of the shore at Hastings. The case was argued at great length several weeks ago. His Honour held that the evidence proved the plaintiffs' title, and he granted a perpetual injunction against the defendant.

In the case of "Ogden v. Benass," affecting the liability of bankers for the amount of cheques paid on forged indorsements, Mr. Justice Keating delivered judgment on Tuesday. On the principle that the drawer had a right to get back his money from hands into which it had improperly passed, he decided that a verdict must be entered for the plaintiff. The defendants were money changers in Liverpool, who got the cheques cashed by their London agents, and paid it to a man who indorsed the cheque "Vincent Willis." His Lordship held that the plaintiff had a right to demand back his money from them, seeing that it had improperly come into their hands.

Damages £250 were, yesterday week, awarded, in the Court of Exchequer, to Miss Charlotte Simons, the daughter of a farmer at Broadgates, Essex, plaintiff in an action for breach of promise of marriage against Mr. Walter Stephen Jones, a coal-merchant at Bognor, in Sussex.

In the Bail Court, on Saturday, a clerk with £120 a year was cast in damages of £50 for breach of promise of marriage, the plaintiff being an artist's model, between whom and the defendant about 300 letters had passed.

The June sessions of the Central Criminal Court was opened on Monday. On the surrender of Henry O'Hagan and John Muir, to take their trial for conspiring to obtain £30,000 by false pretences from a Mr. Wright, the counsel for the prosecution declined to take the responsibility of offering evidence in support of the charge. He explained that subsequent proceedings in Chancery had thrown a new light upon it. The jury, having been instructed that they had no alternative, returned a verdict of "Not guilty." Application was made to the Recorder that the case of Sergeant Brennan, indicted for wilful and corrupt perjury, be allowed to stand over till July. As both sides agreed in desiring the adjournment, it was granted by the Bench. On Tuesday a verdict of "Not guilty" was unanimously returned respecting the case of Walter James Midwinter, charged with wilfully making a false declaration for the purpose of marrying one Laura Tomline, a ward in Chancery. Richard Fulkner Edgell, a merchant, pleaded guilty to the charge of obtaining £1000 from different firms in the City by means of forged bills of lading, and was sentenced to twelve months' hard labour. Frances Stewart, a widow, over seventy years old, indicted for the murder of her grandchild by throwing it into the Thames, was found guilty on Wednesday, but recommended to mercy on account of her age. Mr. Justice Blackburn, in passing the capital sentence, said the recommendation would be forwarded to the proper quarter. Another charge, the hearing of which occupied a considerable time, was that against George Alexander and Ada Olifford, who were indicted before the Lord Chief Baron for the murder of the infant child of one Margaret Jane Southey. The prisoners were convicted of manslaughter, and each was sentenced to be kept in penal servitude for twenty years. The trial of Mr. Edward Welby Pugin, who stands indicted for a libel on Mr. J. Herbert, R.A., has been postponed until next sessions.

A case under the Merchandise Marks Act was heard at the Mansion House last Saturday. A firm carrying on business in the Minorities was summoned for having exposed for sale a sauce purporting to be "Yorkshire Relish," with a forged and counterfeit trade mark, which was alleged to be an imitation of a label used by a firm at Leeds, the makers of "The Celebrated Yorkshire Relish." It was stated that an arrangement had been come to, by which the defendants agreed to give up all the counterfeit labels in their possession, to pay part of the cost of the prosecution, and to insert an apology in the newspapers. Sir Robert Carden, however, in addition, fined the defendants £5, which they paid.

For assaulting the Rev. Philip Holder, and for damaging his residence by throwing stones, Mr. John Irving, of Orom-well-road West, was fined by the Marylebone police magistrate £5, in addition to damages and costs, and was sentenced also to two months' imprisonment, as well as to pay, at the expiration of the term, a sum of 40s. for an assault on a constable.

Fines were imposed in two cases of adulteration proved before Mr. Bodkin at Highgate on Monday. The offence was selling mustard that had been mixed with flour and turmeric. Summonses were dismissed where the mustard, being sold in packets, was described as an admixture of mustard "with farina and choice condiments."—At Greenwich, on Tuesday, Edward Pursall, dairyman, of High-street, Deptford, appeared to an adjourned summons, at the instance of the Greenwich District Board of Works, charging him with selling milk adulterated with salt, and he was fined £5 and costs.

A detective caught a prize at the opening of the horse show. Having formed a suspicion about a well-dressed young man in the assembly, he watched him for several hours, saw him attempt to pick the pockets of about fifty ladies, and at last arrested him as he was leaving the hall.

Several charges of assaulting the police came before the Thames stipendiary magistrate on Monday, and sentences varying from between fourteen days' imprisonment and three months' imprisonment, with hard labour, were passed.

For robbing a friend of his watch George Maxwell, sixty years of age, who bears the character of an inveterate idler and spendthrift, was sentenced, on Tuesday, at Clerkenwell, to two months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

Lucretia Jane Fatchell, locally known as "the white witch of Somerton," has been committed to gaol for six weeks, with hard labour, by the magistrates sitting at Shepton Mallet, for having obtained various sums of money by unlawful means. Several witnesses, who gave their evidence most reluctantly, were called to prove that prisoner had pretended to cure them of disease, to rid them of persons who were supposed to be overlooking them, and to prevent their enemies from destroying cattle supposed to have been bewitched.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

That which by a familiar abbreviation is called the Drink Bill has proved rather a doubtful good to the "strong Government." In fact, it has rather over-weighted Mr. Cross, who for once in his Parliamentary life has got into a muddle. Perhaps the subject insensibly influenced those who took part in the debate, and that talking so much about strong liquor produced an effect akin to that which is produced by drinking it, for the discussions were loud and animated and confused, and partook a good deal of the nature of habble. As an instance of the want of resolve and vacillation of the Home Secretary, it may be mentioned that there was absolutely an avowed difference of opinion between him and Mr. Ward Hunt upon a very crucial provision of the bill, and the curious spectacle was to be observed of the First Lord of the Admiralty trying to run out of the House to avoid voting against his colleague. But then Mr. Hunt has shown some time ago that he is impulsive, and prone to express half-formed opinions with the certainty of dogmas.

If an example of individual weakness in the strong Government is paraded, in common justice an instance of vigour and equality to a situation in another member of the Ministry deserves to be recorded. The Secretary for War on one evening had to manage at least three departmental interpellations, and he did so with a readiness, a dexterity, and an adaptation of variety of tone to each which were exceedingly effective. The first inquiry was of rather a delicate nature, and he had to confess that "twas true, 'twas pity, but 'twas true," that the men of a militia regiment, out for training, were obliged to sleep two in a bed; but that, as they did not mind it, though theoretically inexpedient, practically there had been no grievance; and this was said in a way that gave the matter a capital comic aspect, and so any bad impression was laughed away. Then came Sir Henry Havelock with an inquiry whether the Surveyor-General of the Ordnance had, at a Conservative banquet in Essex, accused the late Government of having left the Army in a deplorable state, which the present Secretary for War was about to remedy; and a request was added that the remedies that were imminent might be mentioned. This time Mr. Hardy assumed a swelling port, spoke with the vehemence which is natural to him, and, with a mixture of indignation and contempt, protested against being called on to answer for anything Lord Eustace Cecil, the inculpated after-dinner speaker, had said; while as to declaring the measures he might have in contemplation—if, indeed, he had any—for reconstructing the Army to the anxious inquirer, he would suffer him to burst in ignorance rather than gratify him by a word of information. The third question was put by Mr. Hayter, in a prickly form, its object being to ascertain why a regimental band had headed a procession of Conservatives on their way to the grand banquet aforesaid, and whether the Tory War Department would lend military bands for like Liberal demonstrations. The question, from its nature and the pointed way in which it was put, brought the House into a mirthful humour; and Mr. Hardy, catching the spirit of the moment, mirthfully explained away the incident, and, by implication, expressed his intention not to allow regimental bands to take part in political festivities of any kind, and therefore when Mr. Hayter and his co-thinkers demonstrated they must blow their own trumpets, of which he insinuated that the honourable member was himself very capable. The laughter which burst forth proved that a palpable hit had been made.

The Prime Minister has been giving proof of his capacity for managing the House, which with him is an instinct, expanded by experience and habit. In the first place, he has achieved a success in a matter usually most difficult, that of inducing private members to yield up all their motions in favour of a Government bill on a Tuesday evening. This was most adroitly effected, without private members perceiving the probable result of their yielding the proverbial "inch." For a day or two afterwards Mr. Disraeli, who had sounded a note of alarm about a long and laborious, instead of brief and do-nothing, Session, which was a prevailing notion, declared a monster programme of measures, which would have been startling in the first week of February, but which was positively appalling in the second week of June. Of course, no one knew better than he the impossibility of carrying out the scheme; but, doubtless, his object was so to manage as that two or perhaps three important measures might come to fruition by Aug. 1 or sooner, so that there should be no Liberal sneering during the recess about the laches or incapacity of the strong Conservative Government. To this end, more Government days in the week were wanted. It was amusing to observe how craftily he insinuated that such a House as he had the distinction to lead could effect wonders in the way of legislation, if they avoided garrulity and granted the Government the Tuesday evenings for the rest of the Session. The request was glided in so artfully that private members were taken by surprise, and had no word to say then, and were trapped. Protests on a subsequent occasion of course were made, but in vain.

More than once it has been mentioned in this chronicle that the Irish section of the House has asserted itself considerably this Session. As a body, the Home Rulers are organised; they have a regular "Whip," to which, for a wonder, they answer with docility and assiduity, and they flood the notice-paper with motions and bills. Notably, one evening this week there were three or four of their motions set down, so thickly and so near each other that they crowded out all the others, and there was a complete rehearsal of the proceedings of a Home Rule Parliament. Two of them were duly considered; and, as may be supposed, the object of both of them was asking for State help for poor down-trodden Ireland. Let all credit be given to Mr. O'Shaughnessy for the temperate, practical, and gentlemanly way in which he dealt with the subject of intermediate education in his country. Perhaps his very un-Irish way of doing his work caused the discussion rather to flag; and it was doubtless shortened by one of those politic speeches promising "consideration" and concession with which Sir Michael Hicks-Beach contrives to catch the sympathies of too-confiding Irish members. The next motion was not destined to go off so quietly. Its demand was direct for increase of payments by the State to National School teachers in Ireland, and it was made in a speech of rather wishy-washy fluency by Mr. Meldon, a gentleman who has shown a tendency to garrulity in this his first Session; and it was supported by Mr. Richard Smyth, in a speech of great rhetorical power, slightly disfigured by a touch of sermonising in delivery. Things were going on tolerably quietly when Mr. M'Laren rose and, in that pity-the-sorrow-of-a-poor-old-man style which he affects, and which covers astute ideas sturdily adhered to, suggested that the example of England, and especially of Scotland, in the matter of increase of payment of National teachers, might be followed—namely, by paying them out of local resources. This was literally throwing a shell amongst combustible materials, and the result was almost a chaos of ardent protestations, out of which the only formed idea that could be obtained was condemnation of the brutality of asking that Ireland should pay anything. While on Irish matters Parliamentary, a touching instance of patriotism in an Irish member may be chronicled. Mr. O'Sullivan, with some pathos, inquired if it was legal that pure Irish whisky should be mixed in bond with horrible foreign (Scotch being particularly understood) compounds. On being informed by the Chancellor of the Exchequer that the custom was legal, if it was not nice, Mr. O'Sullivan, with an angry burst, declared that he would make it the subject of solemn Parliamentary inquiry.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week, after the Customs and Inland Revenue Bill (the Budget) had been read the third time and passed, the subject of free passage through the Suez Canal was raised by Lord Dunsany, who was assured by Lord Derby that the position in respect to the right of passage was not precarious, all the maritime rights being well defined. The Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment Bill, which transfers ultimate appeals from Scotland and Ireland from the House of Lords to the Supreme Court of Appeal under the Judicature Act, was discussed, and passed the second reading.

The Royal assent was given by Commission, on Monday, to several measures of public and private importance, amongst which were the Betting Bill and the Customs and Inland Revenue Bill. Prince Arthur was introduced by the Prince of Wales and the Duke of Edinburgh, and took the oath and his seat as Duke of Connaught. Their Lordships were occupied throughout the remainder of the sitting, which extended beyond midnight, with the further consideration in Committee of the Public Worship Regulation Bill.

In a laborious sitting, on Tuesday, the Scotch Church Patronage Bill and the India Councils Bill were passed through Committee, and further progress was made in Committee with the Public Worship Regulation Bill. The Infants' Contract Bill was read the second time.

On Thursday the attention of their Lordships was almost entirely given to the consideration of the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment Bill.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

The House, yesterday week, went into Committee on the Intoxicating Liquors Bill, the consideration of which it resumed at the second clause, which fixes the hours of closing. Sir Harcourt Johnstone moved to substitute "nine" for ten o'clock on Sunday nights in the rural districts; but the motion was defeated by 198 to 182, and "ten" was retained in the bill. A series of divisions subsequently took place. Lord C. J. Hamilton sought to fix the hour of opening at five o'clock, instead of six, in the morning; but the proposal was rejected by 319 to 94. Considerable discussion arose on the section providing that the hours of closing on Sunday afternoons should be from three until six o'clock. By 216 to 68 the Committee decided upon striking out the word "six," and by 211 to 38 refused to fill up the blank with the word "five." Eventually it was resolved to supply the hiatus with the word "seven," the Home Secretary undertaking to reconsider the matter and allow it to be reopened on the report. Clause 2 having been affirmed, clause 3 became unnecessary by the amendments introduced into clause 2, and was expunged. The clauses repealing the exemptions in favour of houses near theatres, and empowering visiting justices to vary the hours of opening on Sunday afternoons and to grant early-closing licenses, were agreed to without a division. The clause defining the "bona-fide traveller" provoked considerable debate; but at length it was settled that he should be a person who had lodged on the preceding night at least three miles from the place where he demanded a supply of liquor, the distance to be calculated in a straight line on the Ordnance map. After the clause relating to the hours of closing night-houses had been agreed to, the House resumed, and the Chairman reported progress.

Mr. Disraeli entered, on Monday night, upon an explanation and defence of the statement he made last week respecting the amount of business before the House, and wound up with a warning that he must ask private members to give up Tuesdays to the Government after this week. The Government has seventeen important bills, as well as supplementary estimates, to get through during the current Session. The House then resumed the consideration in Committee of the Licensing Bill, taking up the eleventh clause, relating to mitigation of penalties, which was agreed to. Mr. Rathbone proposed the omission of clause 12, which provides for the indorsement of convictions on licenses, and, on a division, was defeated by 345 to 41. On clause 19, Mr. Stevenson moved an amendment providing for the licensing of new premises only when they were constructed for the purpose of carrying on the trade. The amendment was negatived, and the clause was agreed to, as were also the clauses up to the twenty-eighth. Sir E. Watkin moved a new clause, the object of which was to prevent the billeting of soldiers on publicans without those persons' consent. On a division the clause, which was opposed by the Home Secretary, was negatived by 151 to 34. After some discussion the bill passed through Committee, and, amidst the cheers of the House, was ordered to be reported. In a speech of an hour's duration Sir Stafford Northcote introduced the Friendly Societies Bill. The measure, as described by the right hon. gentleman, is one to consolidate the existing law and to amend it, chiefly in the direction of strengthening and improving the central organisation. The bill contains eighty clauses, and, with a view of improving its chances of becoming law this Session, the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposed to the House a somewhat novel course of procedure. The bill would, he said, be printed in two or three days; the second reading would be taken on the 22nd inst., and the Committee would be fixed within a reasonable time after. Between the second reading and Committee hon. members who take an interest in the question are, by the invitation of the right hon. gentleman, to "see him out of the House," and to submit any amendments that may occur to them. The House will then resolve itself into Committee pro forma in order to have the bill reprinted with the amendments which the Government have thus been induced to accept, and by these means the Chancellor of the Exchequer hopes to reduce discussion in Committee to a minimum and get the bill through this Session. Leave was given to bring in the bill, and a long list of other measures was disposed of.

The subjects of intermediate education in Ireland and the remuneration of Irish national school teachers were, on Tuesday, discussed upon two motions, both which were withdrawn. On Mr. Newdegate bringing forward the subject of monastic and conventual institutions, the House was counted out.

The second reading of the Elementary Education Act Amendment Bill, the object of which was to repeal the twenty-fifth clause, was moved, on Wednesday afternoon, by Mr. Henry Richard; and, after a smart discussion, was rejected by 373 votes against 128.

On Thursday, in answer to Mr. Serjeant Simon, Mr. Bourke stated that proposals had been made by both the French and Russian Governments for the amelioration of prisoners of war, and had invited the Governments of Europe to a congress at Brussels to consider the subject. But her Majesty's Government had not made up their minds on the matter. Mr. G. Hardy, in the unavoidable absence of Mr. Disraeli, moved that on Tuesday next, and succeeding Tuesdays during the remainder of the Session, orders of the day have precedence of notice of motions, Government orders of the day having the priority. After many objections urged by private members, the motion was agreed to. On the second reading of the Factories Bill, the object of which was to limit the labour of women and children to 56½ hours a week in textile manufactures, Mr. Fawcett moved "That, in the opinion of this House, it would be inexpedient to pass those portions of the bill which impose new legislative restrictions on the number of hours during which adults are to be permitted to work." The remainder of the evening was occupied in the consideration of this subject.

"FRA ANGELICO."

Modern artists are not unnaturally fond of subjects commemorative of the early masters of their craft, and among such early masters there is no figure more interesting than that of the last representative of the art of the fourteenth century, the Beato Fra, or Beatified Brother, Giovanni da Fiesole, or, as he is more generally styled, Fra Angelico, the Angelico Brother. His works were conceived and executed in the most exalted spirit of piety, and his whole life seems to have been in accord with his works, which was certainly not the case with all those early painters. He is said to have always commenced his day's painting with prayer; to have been very frequently interrupted by tears when representing the Saviour's sufferings, as in the fresco of the "Crucifixion," still preserved in his convent of San Marco, Florence; to have never painted for money; to have regarded his pictures as the result of inspiration, therefore sacred, and, when once finished, not to be improved or retouched. He was most at home in pictures—whether illuminated MSS. tempera or fresco paintings—of the heavenly hierarchy, of the crowds of blessed patriarchs, prophets, apostles, saints and martyrs at the Resurrection, such as the picture in our National Gallery. He is depicted as engaged on a work of this class in the water-colour drawing by Mr. Walter Duncan (son of the well-known landscape and marine painter), which we have engraved. This drawing is one of those with which the young painter has made his debut upon his election as an Associate of the Old Water-Colour Society. We need not say more, as we have noticed this and other contributions of the artist in our review of the exhibition in which they find a place.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Nearly one thousand ministers of metropolitan places of worship have consented to preach sermons and to make collections in aid of the Hospital Sunday fund to-morrow.

The annual ball in aid of the funds of the Yorkshire Society took place, on Monday night, at Willis's Rooms, under distinguished patronage. Nearly 400 persons were present.

At a meeting of the City Commissioners of Sewers, on Tuesday, Dr. William Sedgwick Saunders was elected medical officer of health and food analyst for the City, in succession to Dr. Letheby, resigned.

A large and brilliant assembly met, on Wednesday, at the conversazione of the Royal Geographical Society, Willis's Rooms. Sir Bartle Frere, the president of the society, and Lady Frere received the visitors.

In accordance with a custom that has been lately introduced, the patients at the Middlesex County Lunatic Asylum were entertained, on Wednesday, with an open-air fête, at which most of them were permitted to be present.

Mr. C. S. Read, M.P., presided, on Wednesday, at the fourteenth anniversary festival of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution, which was held at the London Tavern, and was attended by a large circle of leading agriculturists.

The twenty-seventh annual meeting of the Clare Market Ragged Schools was held on Monday, under the presidency of the Rev. R. J. Simpson. The report stated that 550 children and 370 adults receive instruction or aid from the institution.

The second summer fête was held in the gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park, on Wednesday, and was more fully attended than for many years past. It was estimated that nearly 10,000 visitors passed through the gates.

Wednesday, being the twentieth anniversary of the opening of the Crystal Palace, was selected as an appropriate occasion for the presentation of a group of plate to Mr. George Grove, the late secretary of the Crystal Palace Company, by his past and present colleagues.

The annual festival in connection with King's College Hospital was held in the lecture-room of the college, Strand, on Wednesday evening—Lord Selborne in the chair. The subscriptions for the evening amounted to over £2000, besides a sum of £200 contributed by a lady through Lord Hatherley.

Mrs. Tait, wife of the Archbishop of Canterbury, distributed the prizes, on Tuesday, to the children competing at a flower show in the Horticultural Society's Gardens. Most of the exhibitors were little girls; and one of them, Georgiana Watson, took the principal prize for a scarlet geranium that would have done credit to a show supported by professional growers.

A deputation of Irish national teachers, accompanied by many members of Parliament, waited on the Chief Secretary for Ireland, last Saturday, to press upon the Government the necessity of taking some action with a view to a removal of their grievances. The inadequacy of the present rate of remuneration was one of the principal causes of complaint for which redress is sought.

Sir Charles Reed, the chairman of the School Board for London, announced at the weekly meeting of that body on Wednesday, that a letter had been addressed to him by Mrs. Baines, stating that she was prepared to hand over to the board 100 guineas, to be devoted to the offering of prizes for essays or manuals on cookery and household work suitable for the use of board teaching. The letter was referred to the school management committee.

The Extra Supplement.

REAR-GUARD PROTECTING CONVOY.

Sixty or seventy years have not effaced from the mind of our nation the memories of its noble Peninsular War. The political behaviour and condition of Spain may have failed, since that struggle for its independence, to reward British lovers of orderly freedom with results worth our large sacrifice of blood and gold in its cause. But it was a noble deed for the people and rulers of our island kingdom, when their home safety, with that of their colonies and commerce, had been secured by Nelson at Trafalgar, to send their land forces under Moore and Wellington for the rescue of Continental Europe. The campaigns of Vimiera, Talavera, Busaco, Torres Vedras, Fuentes de Noya, Badajoz, Ciudad Rodrigo, Salamanca, and Vittoria, with the final avenging burst over the Pyrenees, are held to be some of the best work yet done for the world by English, Scottish, and Irish manhood in arms. With all deference to the Peace Society, we think such a martial vindication of justice, performed by the steadfast valour of this nation continually exerted during six years, was as holy and blessed public work as the abolition of the slave trade, or even the repeal of the corn laws! It is, nevertheless, too true, as the French proverb runs, that there is no making omelettes without breaking eggs; and we cannot fight battles, or kick out Napoleons, without killing a number of brave men. We admit, however, that the French side had its brave men as well as ours; and some of them appear in the French picture (from one of Goupil's photographs) represented in our Large Engraving. The minor incidents and accessories here do not require much comment. The slain man in the dress of a mountaineer peasant, who lies prostrate among the rocks in the foreground, was probably a native guide. The convoy of laden mules is slowly winding its way over the mountain pass—somewhere in Biscay, we may suppose—to supply the main army, some miles advanced. This "rear guard" is "protecting" that "convoy," as we see, in a characteristic military manner.

MUSIC.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The only specialty of last week occurred on Saturday, when "Le Sonnambula" was given, with the debut of Signor Piazza, one of the new singers promised in Mr. Gye's prospectus of the season. The gentleman named made his first appearance in England, and obtained a well-deserved success by the display of a light tenor voice of agreeable quality, with good intonation and excellent cantabile style. His admirable delivery of the commencing portion of Elvino's scena, "Tutto è sciolto," produced a very marked impression, and such continuous applause that the movement had to be repeated. Mdlle. Albani's Amina gains in charm and power, and her performance on Saturday was enthusiastically received. M. Faure resumed the character of Count Rodolfo, in which he sang and acted with his well-known refinement and finish.

The opera on the previous Thursday was "Dinorah;" that on the Friday, "Guglielmo Tell"—both repetitions.

Six performances were announced this week. On Monday "L'Africaine" was given for the last time this season. On Tuesday, Madame Vilda reappeared, and displayed improved powers as an actress and a singer by her performance as Norma. She was deservedly applauded in several instances, particularly at the close of the cavatina, "Casta Diva." In the duet with Adalgisa, "Deh con te," Madame Sinico divided the applause with the prima donna, and the concluding allegro had to be repeated. Signor Favani was the Pollione, and Signor Baggiolo the Oroveso.

On Wednesday "Guglielmo Tell" was again performed; cast as recently, except the character of Arnoldo, which was represented by Signor Marini, for the first time in England. This gentleman obtained a special success by his fine declamatory singing, especially in the duet with Tell, in the great trio with that character and Walter, and in Arnoldo's final solo, "Corriam," in which he appeals to his followers to aid him in the rescue of the Swiss patriot. In this passage the exceptionally high range of Signor Marini (including a brilliant ut de poitrine) produced a very great effect, and secured a veritable triumph for the singer, of whom we shall soon have further occasion to speak. The cast of the opera otherwise was as recently.

For Thursday "Les Diamans de la Couronne" was announced, for Friday "Der Freischütz," and for to-night (Saturday) "Dinorah." "Mignon" is to be produced on Tuesday next, and "Luise Miller" on the following Tuesday, the closing night of the season being fixed for July 18.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Since the return of Madame Christine Nilsson (already recorded) that great singer has appeared a second and a third time as Margherita, in "Faust." Her next appearance was announced for Thursday, in Belfie's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," of the production of which we must speak hereafter.

The proceedings last week at this establishment included the first appearance in England of M. Achard, the eminent French tenor, who achieved a great success by his fine acting and singing as Raoul, in "Les Huguenots," a part which is well suited to him in both respects. The romance in the first scene was so effectively given as to draw down unusual applause; and the impression thus early produced was enhanced in the duet-septet and the great duet with Valentina in the fourth act, in both of which the resonant tones of M. Achard's high chest notes were admirably displayed. The Valentina of Mdlle. Titiens presented all its usual excellence; among other important and familiar features of the cast having been the Urbano of Madame Trebelli-Bettini and the San Bris of Signor Agnesi.

"Rigoletto" was performed, on Monday, with the same cast as that of a few weeks ago, except in the character of the Duke, in which Signor Gillandi made a successful first appearance. He was much applauded in the ballata of the first scene, in his share of the duet with Gilda ("Signor, ne principe"), and in the popular canzone, "La donna è mobile," the second verse of which had to be repeated. The cast otherwise was the same as recently.

Drury Lane Theatre was closed on Tuesday evening to allow of a dress rehearsal of "Il Talismano," which has been put on the stage with great splendour as to scenery, costumes, &c. With these advantages, and a cast that includes Madame Christine Nilsson and Signor Campanini in the principal characters, there is every prospect of a successful result.

The first of this year's grand opera concerts at the Royal Albert Hall took place on Saturday afternoon, when a varied selection of music was performed by members of the company of her Majesty's Opera. The solo singers were Mdlles. Titiens, Singelli, Alvinia Valleria, Justine Macvitz, and Risarelli, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Benthams, Signori

Under the presidency of the Lord Mayor, a public meeting was held, yesterday week, at the Mansion House, to consider the means of checking the activity of the slave trade on the east coast of Africa. Among those who took part in the proceedings were Sir Bartle Frere, the Earl of Shaftesbury, Mr. Gurney Hoare, Canon Miller, Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton, the Rev. Dr. Moffatt, and the Rev. Dr. Brock.

The annual meeting of the Newvenders' Benevolent and Provident Institution was held, on Tuesday, at the offices, 9, Laurence Pountney-hill—Mr. P. Terry, the treasurer, occupying the chair. The report congratulated the members on the increasing prosperity and usefulness of the institution; and the committee were in a position to recommend the election of three applicants for pensions of £15 each.

A new school in connection with the London School Board was opened in Kender-street, Hatcham, yesterday week. Sir Charles Reed, chairman of the board, presided at the meeting. In his address Sir Charles stated that in that district the school board had to accommodate 5000 children, of whom 3000 were provided for. The school in Kender-street accommodates 279 boys, an equal number of girls, and 271 infants.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 95,516, of whom 33,747 were in workhouses and 61,769 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding week in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 7195, 11,256, and 29,761 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 615, of whom 426 were men, 155 women, and 34 children under sixteen.

The annual congress of homoeopathic medical practitioners has been held at the Homoeopathic Hospital, Great Ormond-street—Dr. Dudgeon, president, in the chair. The business was opened, on Thursday week, by an able address from the president on "The Influence of Homoeopathy on General Medicine since the Death of Hahnemann." In this he entered into a close account of the history of medicine of late years, and showed that the results of experience had caused allopathic practitioners to come continually closer and closer to homoeopaths, and that, in fact, allopathy was fast merging practically into homoeopathy.

The Duke of Westminster states, in a letter to the Times, that it is proposed to establish in connection with the Westminster Hospital a training-school for nurses. A house in the immediate neighbourhood of the hospital has been rented, and many influential persons interested in the welfare of the sick have come forward to form a committee and make a beginning. Madame Christine Nilsson has generously volunteered to give a public concert in aid of the funds required for the first outlay, at St. James's Hall, on July 1. The concert will be under the immediate patronage of her Majesty and the Royal Princesses.

The forty-seventh anniversary dinner of the friends of the Licensed Victuallers' Asylum—which consists of 170 separate houses, chapel, and chaplain's residence, situated in the Asylum-road, Old Kent-road—was celebrated at the Crystal Palace, on Thursday, under the presidency of Money Wigram, Esq., of the firm of Messrs. Reid and Co., the eminent brewers. The friends of the charity (amongst whom were several members of Parliament) assembled in large numbers, upwards of 2000 dining together in the grand concert-room and centre transept. Many liberal subscriptions were announced.

The British Asylum for Deaf and Dumb Females, Lower Clapton, has received, through Messrs. Glyn and Co., a second anonymous gift of £1000; the Duke of Bedford has given £500 to the council of the Charity Organisation Society; the Baroness Meyer de Rothschild and daughter have presented to the Borough Jewish Schools £250, in memory of the late Baron Meyer Anselm de Rothschild; the Corporation of the city of London has granted 100 guineas to the funds of the Royal South London Ophthalmic Hospital; and the Clothworkers' Company has voted £52 10s. in aid of the building fund of the Metropolitan and City Police Orphanage, £21 to the funds of the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, Hackney-road, and £21 in aid of the Newspaper Press Fund.

During the week ending Saturday last 2233 births and 1257 deaths were registered in London, the former having been 48, and the latter 163, below the average. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 417 and 437, declined last week to 363, and were 43 below the average. There were 44 deaths from measles, 32 from scarlet fever, 7 from diphtheria, 33 from whooping-cough, 23 from different forms of fever, 22 from diarrhoea, and not one from smallpox. The deaths from diarrhoea do not yet show any considerable increase; the death of one infant resulted from choleraic diarrhoea in Bethnal-green. The 23 deaths referred to fever were 19 below the average, and included 8 certified as typhus, 8 as enteric or typhoid, and 7 as simple continued fever. Four deaths were caused by horses or vehicles in the streets. The mean temperature showed a considerable excess on each day of the week.

The French Mint, in preparation for the return to specie payment, has begun the coinage of 20-franc gold pieces.

The Roman correspondent of the Times reports another murder of the same description as that of Count Faina, which has been perpetrated by highway robbers in Romagna. Two gentlemen were stopped and made to deliver whatever they had about them, and as one of them, Signor Domenico Muratori, of Murano, begged to retain a pocket-book in which he had important papers, the ruffians, to be rid of his importunity, dispatched him with their knives.

The French Minister of Agriculture and Commerce has rescinded some newly-imposed regulations complained of by Lord Alfred Paget and others, and has directed that all vessels from England arriving at Boulogne are to be admitted at once to free pratique, without being required to be provided with a clean bill of health. This will secure to English yachts visiting Boulogne the same facilities as they have until now enjoyed, and the Times believes the measure is applicable to French ports in general.

Brigade movements have been the staple business at Aldershot, more general operations having been postponed till the end of the week. On Monday the First Division was exercised in the Long Valley, and the Second on Cove-common. On Tuesday General Parkes led out his division early, and marched it to Wiske-moor-common. General Smith's division paraded in the Long Valley. Aldershot was visited, on Wednesday, by the Duke of Cambridge, who inspected the whole of the troops in the Long Valley, and afterwards saw the infantry division put through an hour and a half's drill. The First Division, under the command of Major-General Smith, left the camp at five o'clock on Thursday morning, for Broadmoor, where they encamped and cooked their rations, marching back to Aldershot in the evening. General Parkes's division did home duty, but was to march out at an early hour on Friday.

Fancelli, Urio, Agnesi, Galassi, De Reschi, Borella, and Herr Behrens. The fine opera band contributed some orchestral pieces, and Mr. W. G. Cusins conducted.

In pursuance of the scheme of illustrating national music—suspended on May 9 for the great flower show, and in the following week for the fête to the Emperor of Russia—the Crystal Palace summer concert of Saturday last was devoted to compositions of the English school. The programme comprised anthems, madrigals, glees, part-songs, and ballads, and included the skilful pianoforte-playing of Mr. J. F. Barnett in two movements of Sir W. S. Bennett's fourth concerto; the pianist having conducted the performance of a "scharzo" from a MS. symphony of his own composition. The selection also comprised two organ solos, skilfully played by Dr. Stainer, and some of the incidental music composed for "The Merchant of Venice" by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, who conducted the concert with the exception just referred to. The solo vocalists were Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Patey, Mr. E. Lloyd, and Signor Foli. The concert of to-day (Saturday) is to consist of Italian music.

The preparations, musical and otherwise, for the Triennial Handel Festival at the Crystal Palace are now nearly complete. The solo vocalists announced are Mdlle. Titiens, Madame Sinico, Mesdames Otto-Alvalleben, Lemmens-Sherrington, Trebelli-Bettini, and Patey; Mr. Sims Reeves, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. Santley, Signor Foli, and Signor Agnesi. On Friday next this great celebration will open with the grand public rehearsal, at which portions of the programme of each of the three days' performances will be given.

Miss Philp, long known as a successful composer of songs and ballads, and as a most efficient teacher of singing, gave her annual concert, yesterday (Friday) week, at St. James's Hall, with a programme that comprised several of her own pieces, two of which—"Restored" and "Lillie's Good-Night"—were sung by herself with much effect. Other vocal performances were given by Miss Marian Severn, Mesdames Edna Hall and Osborne Williams, Mr. Santley, Mr. Cummings, and Herr Heine Ugo. Herr van Biene and Mr. W. Coenen contributed solos (violin and piano), and Sir J. Benedict, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, Mr. Hamilton Clarke, and Signor Randegger acted as conductors. The room was filled with a fashionable audience.

Sir Julius Benedict's annual concert has long ranked among the specialties of our musical season, and its recurrence on Monday afternoon offered no exception to the rule. This was the fourth occasion of its being held in the Floral Hall, which was again attended by a brilliant company. Madame Adelina Patti, Mdlle. Albani, and other eminent members of the Royal Italian Opera contributed a series of effective vocal pieces, which were interspersed with instrumental solos by Madame Norman-Néruda (violin) and Mdlle. Marie Krebs (pianoforte), and some concerted pianoforte performances in which Sir J. Benedict, Mr. Charles Hallé, Mr. Lindsay Sloper, and Mr. F. H. Cowen took part. Several of the concert-giver's compositions were included in the programme.

Madame Christine Nilsson's annual benefit concert took place on Wednesday afternoon, and drew a large attendance to St. James's Hall. The great vocalist sang, with marked effect, "Angels, ever bright and fair;" "Let the bright Seraphim" (trumpet obbligato, Mr. Reynolds); and some Swedish national melodies, which were encored and replaced by the song "Give me a penny." Other eminent artists of Her Majesty's Opera contributed to the performances, which included brilliant pianoforte solos by Mdlle. Krebs and the clever pianoforte-playing of Signor Li Calzi in Spohr's septet, with string and wind instruments.

The eighth and last of the New Philharmonic Concerts took place on Wednesday evening, when the programme comprised Mendelssohn's "Scotch" symphony, the overtures to "Rosa-munda" and "Guillaume Tell," and Schumann's pianoforte concerto, played by Herr Jaell. Madame Trebelli-Bettini and Signor De Reschi were the vocalists.

Signor and Madame Gustave Garcia gave their first annual concert, on Wednesday, at St. George's Hall, to a fashionable audience, assisted by Mr. Santley, Signor Gardoni, and other celebrities.

This week's concerts have included some important pianoforte recitals. On Thursday Mdlle. Marie Krebs gave, and to-day (Saturday) Madame Esnaffort is to give, the second of their two performances; and yesterday (Friday) Mr. Charles Hallé's sixth recital took place.

The sixth concert of the Philharmonic Society takes place on Monday next, when the selection will comprise a new vocal bolero by M. Gounod and Rheinberger's overture to "The Taming of the Shrew," both for the first time of performance.

We have already given an outline of the arrangements for the forthcoming Gloucester festival. Following this, a festival is to take place at Leeds on Oct. 14, 15, 16, and 17, the principal features in the performances, so far as at present announced, being "St. Paul," selections from "Israel in Egypt," the "Lobgesang" ("Hymn of Praise"), Mr. Macfarren's "St. John the Baptist," Rossini's "Stabat Mater," and "The Messiah."

Her Majesty has contributed £50 to the funds of the Royal Counties (Berks and Hants) Agricultural Society, and has also entered a large number of cattle and sheep for the forthcoming show at Reading. The Prince of Wales will also be an exhibitor.

The Recordership of Preston has become vacant by the death of Mr. Thomas Batty Addison, at the age of eighty-seven years. For the last two years Mr. Addison held the office of Constable of Lancaster Castle.

The death is announced of M. Auguste Visscher, who was president of the Peace Congress at Brussels in 1848, and one of the vice-presidents of the congresses held at Frankfurt and London in 1850 and 1851. M. Visscher was formerly director of mines in Belgium, and has been president or vice-president of nearly all the administrative commissions appointed in Belgium for many years.

Contributed by the young ladies of Gravesend who acted as flower-strewers at the debarkation of the Duchess of Edinburgh, Miss Lake, the Mayor's daughter, received a handsome present on Tuesday. It consisted of a gold and enamel locket, with the monogram B. I. L. in diamonds. On the face round this were eight large diamonds, and in the suspending ring another large stone. Attached was a massive gold chain. After the presentation the Mayor entertained the young ladies.

The Cowley Manor estate, Gloucestershire, has been sold to Colonel Richardson-Gardner, M.P. for Windsor, for £80,000. The estate comprises a freehold mansion and 1870 acres, and was sold by direction of the executors of the late Mr. James Hutchinson. The Henley estate, Shropshire, comprising a mansion and a compact domain of 1066 acres, has been sold to Mr. E. T. Wood, of Stoke-on-Trent, for £63,000. The Ship Hotel and other premises in Spring-gardens has realised £30,000, or nearly £10 per foot.

FETTES COLLEGE, EDINBURGH.

Mr. Phelps as Job Thornbury.
"Job." (throwing the waistcoat on the floor violently) "I'd as lieve go into my coffin! — she'll have me there soon. Psha! not it — I'm going to snivel!"

Mr. Charles Mathews as The Hon. Tom Shuffleton.
"Shuffleton." — "But the fact is, Baronet, we improve. — We have voted many qualities to be virtues now, that they never thought of calling virtues formerly. The rising generation wants a new dictionary."

Mr. Toole as Dennis Brulgruddery.
"Dennis (abstractedly) 'Six thousand pounds upon a counter!'"

NEW MUSIC.

We can only glance very briefly at the numerous cricket-matches. At Prince's, North has beaten South by three runs, after a most exciting contest, in which the scoring was not high, Lockwood (58) and Jupp (52) doing the best for their respective sides. A very weak Lancashire team fell easy victims to Derbyshire; Surrey, for which Jupp (60) played exceedingly well, beat Gloucestershire by six wickets; and the M.C.C. and Ground, thanks chiefly to the fine batting of Mr. Hornby (72 and, not out, 27), defeated Notts by just the same number of wickets.

SUBSCRIPTIONS may be forwarded to the Lord Mayor or the following Banks:—The Imperial Bank, Lothbury, E.C.; Messrs. Glyn, Mills, and Co., Lombard-street; Messrs. Coutts and Co., 89, Strand; Messrs. CHAPPELL and CO.'S SCHOOL-ROOM PIANOFORTE. In Canadian Walnut or Mahogany Case. Price TWENTY GUINEAS. This instrument combines good quality of tone and accessibility of touch. It has the merit of standing well in tune, and is capable of enduring hard school practice without going out of order.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S YACHT PIANOFORTE. With Folding Keyboard, Check Action, Telescop Treble in solid Mahogany or Black Canadian Walnut Case, THIRTY GUINEAS; or, in Maple, THIRTY-FIVE GUINEAS. Constructed for Ships' Cabins, to occupy the smallest possible space, and to stand the damp of a sea voyage; the back is strengthened with iron bars and metal plates, and the whole of the mechanism is of the best quality.—Chappell and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM, solid dark Oak Case, by Alexander. Price FIVE GUINEAS. This Harmonium has been designed to meet the demand made for a small instrument of good quality of tone, at a price within the reach of all. By the aid of newly-invented machinery, Messrs. Alexander have been enabled to make this a marvel of cheapness, elegance, and good quality of tone. It will be found invaluable for small class-rooms, cottages, or library.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered); with celeste stop; compass four octaves; price FIVE GUINEAS.
Manufactured expressly for CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE PEOPLE'S HARMONIUM (Registered); compass five octaves; price FIVE GUINEAS.
Manufactured expressly for CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

THE ALEXANDRE NEW SEVEN-GUINEA ORGAN HARMONIUM. Solid Oak Case. Five Octaves, and Two Footboards.
The ever-increasing musical culture in all classes of society has created a demand for free reed instruments of a superior quality to those hitherto manufactured.
The instruments now offered to the public will be found devoid of all that has hitherto been considered objectionable as regards tone. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like.
Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.
The new system is applied to all the large instruments with still greater effect, and without extra cost.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

NEW MUSIC.

ALEXANDRE'S TWELVE-GUINEA ORGAN-HARMONIUM, with TWO ROWS OF KEYS, four-foot and eight-foot tone. Upper row 4 octaves from tenor C; lower row, 5 octaves, F to F. The combined keyboards have a compass of 84 octaves. Suitable for the practice of Organ Music. The cheapest double-row ever made.—CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

ALEXANDRE'S NEW ORGAN MODEL.
Two Rows of Keys; Knee Pedal to Swells for upper row; five stops; four-foot, eight-foot, and sixteen-foot tone (sub-octave), adapted for Church or Drawing-Room. The appearance is elegant and the tone round and full. Price—Oak, 35s.; Rosewood or Walnut, 50s.
CHAPPELL and Co., 50, New Bond-street.

CHAPPELL and CO.'S PORTABLE AMERICAN ORGAN, with automatic swell, compass four octaves, solid dark oak case (as supplied to H.R.H. the Prince of Wales). Size, when packed, 3 ft. 3 in. by 1 ft. 8 in., 1 ft. 4 in. deep. Suitable for travelling or the extreme changes of an Indian climate.

THE YARKUND MISSION : THE CITY OF KASHGAR.

THE YARKUND MISSION : VALLEY OF THE SHYOK.

THE YARKUND MISSION.

Several Illustrations have lately been given, from sketches by Captain E. F. Chapman, R.A., of the diplomatic expedition of Mr. T. Douglas Forsyth and his party to the sequestered East Turkish country of Yarkund and Kashgar, beyond the Karakorum or Tsung-Ling mountain ranges, north of Middle Thibet and Cashmere. The Mohammedan potentate who rules that country, since its revolt against the Chinese Empire some twelve years ago, is now entitled Yakoub Khan Ameer, by a special firman from the Sultan of Turkey, instead of his former title, which was Yakoub Beg Atalik Ghazeh. He has agreed to a commercial treaty with the British Government of India; but the mercantile and political connections of Russia, which are strong at Kashgar, will probably stand in the way of its complete execution. The Chinese Government, too, has lately invaded the territories which were so long under its dominion, and this attempt of reconquest, in the north-east, may interfere with the establishment of a peaceful trade on the British Indian side. We present, meantime, a view of the city of Kashgar; and one of the valley of the Shyok river, which is a tributary of the Upper Indus, north of Ladak or Middle Thibet. It was in December that the British diplomatic mission arrived at Kashgar, having first stayed three weeks at Yarkund. Their toilsome journey to Yarkund, from the Indus valley up the Shyok and over the Karakorum, took place in October, and has been fully described. We had better, upon this occasion, speak first of the Shyok valley, with the tremendous glaciers above it. Captain Chapman writes to us as follows:—

The glacier system of the Shyok is a very remarkable one. The head waters of the river spring from the great Reino Mer de Glace, a magnificent expanse of ice, at the head of which two giant peaks rear themselves to elevations approaching 28,000ft.; and within a distance of twenty miles two other mighty glaciers feed the stream, which continues its course to join the Indus. Each of these glaciers, the upper and lower Kundalun, has pushed right across the valley, the river making a way for itself through these formidable barriers. The route by the Shyok is only practicable during the dry season of the autumn, when the glacier is passed by fording through the river its entire breadth, or during the winter, when the frozen waters are easily traversed. In 1841 the choking of the stream by the downward movement of the glacier, and the subsequent outpouring of the waters pent up in the upper portion of the Shyok valley, caused an inundation, the effects of which were observable at Attock, twenty-six miles from Peshawur. Mr. Shaw's adventures in this region are graphically told in his book, "High Tartary, Yarkund, and Kashgar."

With reference to the city of Kashgar, the capital of Eastern Turkestan, from which Captain Chapman sent us his sketch on Dec. 20, he writes the following particulars:—

"The time when the present city was constructed is not easily determined from the records. They vary in fixing the destruction of the ancient city at dates ranging from five centuries to two thousand years ago. This event, however, is associated with the Mogul invasion under Timour. From the condition of the ruins of the old citadel, where my sketch was taken, we may believe it was replaced by the present Kashgar in the fourteenth century of our era. Portions of the walls and bastion-towers now standing lead one to picture an extensive inclosure with very formidable fortifications, in possession of the Chengiz Tartars when the army of Timour came down and laid siege to it on its northern side. If the Turkish legend is to be believed, the solid walls of ancient Kashgar defied the efforts of the invaders a whole year, and, but for the turning of a branch of the river Kizil, the waters of which the mighty conqueror made use of to effect a breach, the garrison might have resisted during an indefinite period. They must have been brave fellows, those Chengiz Tartars, under their leader, Ilias Khoja, if the current story of their defence and retreat be true. When once they realised that the waters of the Kizil must give an entrance to their powerful enemy, every arrangement was made for abandoning the town, and, when all was ready, a large drum was tied to a camel, which, with its singular load, remained to cover their retirement. For days afterwards the noise of the drum, as the unfortunate creature wandered about in alarm at the sound that he caused, was such as to make the expectant Moguls imagine that strong reinforcements had reached the town from the south. It was not until the river had fairly flooded the city that the exhaustion of the camel and the silence which ensued gave the besiegers courage to enter. This is no story extracted from ancient histories, but a plain rendering of the account of the fall of ancient Kashgar, as given by an opium-smoking but intelligent old Kalmuck who occupies a snug little residence in the angle of the ruin."

THE FETTES COLLEGE, EDINBURGH.

The Fettes College, one of the most beautiful school buildings in the kingdom, stands upon the rising ground between Edinburgh and Granton. It commands a magnificent view of Arthur's Seat, the city, and the Pentland Hills. The building is an imposing and highly decorated specimen of French Gothic architecture. It was designed by Mr. David Bryce, R.S.A. The institution and endowment are due to the beneficence of Sir William Fettes, a distinguished merchant of Edinburgh, who was twice elected Lord Provost of the city, and was created a Baronet in 1804. His only son having died early, he bequeathed the whole of his property, amounting to about £166,000, "to form an endowment for the maintenance and education of the sons of parents who have died without leaving sufficient funds for that purpose, or who from innocent misfortune during their lives are unable to give suitable education to their children." No steps towards the carrying out of this intention appear to have been taken for several years. This was probably because, as Edinburgh was almost over-supplied with hospitals for the education of children of indigent persons in the humbler ranks of life, the trustees hesitated to apply the magnificent fund at their disposal to the foundation of another institution of this class. Eventually it was decided that they would best supply a want among the educational establishments in Scotland by founding a college after the model of the English public schools. To carry out the benevolent intention of the founder, fifty boys are provided for upon the foundation. These are elected, without restriction as to place of birth, from the sons of such people of gentle birth as seem most to need assistance in their education. The course of education is intended to qualify boys for proceeding to the Universities and for professional life. Non-foundations are received, as at other public schools, in a house erected by the trustees upon the college grounds, and placed under the care of one of the masters. An attempt has been made to render the relation of the house-master to his pupils a purely moral and intellectual one. No master supplies any of the boys in his house with provisions, and the foundationers and non-foundations take their meals together in the college hall. The present number of the boys at the college is about 170. There are several scholarships and other rewards for those who proceed to the University of Edinburgh. Two exhibitions of £100 a year have been founded by Mr. David Anderson, of Mureddun, one of the present trustees, to enable the holders to proceed to Oxford or Cambridge. It is said that the trustees contemplate founding others of a similar kind out of the college funds. Within the college grounds are a spacious cricket-ground, gymnasium, sanatorium, and skating-pond. Our illustration is from a photograph taken by Mr. Annan, Princes-street, Edinburgh.

MESSRS. TOOLE, PHELPS, AND MATHEWS.

Mr. J. L. Toole preceded his departure for America with a series of performances which, when repeated in the New World, will not only delight the hearts of our Transatlantic brethren, but bring to himself an accession of that good fortune which has invariably attended his career. "Paul Pry," "The Spitalfield's Weaver," "Wig and Gown," and the farce of "Ici on Parle Français," stood him and his audiences in good stead. But we have higher remembrances of him, in which he not only "shone as a bright star," having the firmament to himself, but as one of a constellation, in which he might be measured, as to his brightness or his capacity, with other astral wonders, and in which he did not suffer either by contrast or comparison. We now desire to consider him in connection with these, and with the illustration accompanying this essay on their combined merits.

The national sentiment of the principal work of the younger Colman, the famous comedy of "John Bull," has secured it a continued existence on the English boards. It was performed more than once at the Gaiety with the strongest cast possible at the present time. Job Thornbury, as our readers know, was sustained by Mr. Phelps, the Hon. Tom Shuffleton by Mr. Charles Mathews, and Dennis Brulgrudery by Mr. Toole. Our Artist has presented three full-length portraits of these gentlemen, which all will readily recognise. Opinions will differ on the question whether these three representatives of old comic character are equal or inferior to their predecessors in the same parts. Comparisons are proverbially odious, and a comparative inquiry would lead us too far afield, and transcend our limits. Each of these gentlemen, besides, can afford to stand on his own merits, which are sufficiently obvious for general recognition. Mr. Phelps has steadily progressed from his first arrival in town till the present hour, and, without any necessity for visiting America or our colonies, has gradually risen in public estimation until he has placed himself at the head of his profession. For the variety and extent of his grasp he has not been excelled by any actor of any time; and in two or three parts he stands alone. These facts are enough to justify his position, and will secure his name among the most famous in theatrical biography. Of Mr. Charles Mathews, we can only say that for a long period he was reputed as the most thoroughly finished and perfect actor on the English stage; and, notwithstanding that circumstances have materially altered, and that we have now many well-educated young men who, in assuming fashionable, or drawing-room characters, have really made a distinguished mark, Mr. Charles Mathews still remains at the head of this class—unapproached, perhaps unapproachable. Of Mr. Toole, public experience commences at a later date, but his career, as we have already said, has been singularly fortunate. He always acts with the utmost care and attention, and is now without a rival, not only as a low comedian, but in many characters requiring pathos and exquisite finish.

THEATRES.

The French plays still command the stage of the Oxford-street theatre, and Madame Pasca has made her debut in "La Fiammina"—a drama, as it happens, of unquestionable morality. The ethical lesson it teaches may be simply stated, and, indeed, is as thorough a commonplace as can well be conceived—namely, "when a woman goes wrong, there is no end to the trouble that she causes in all the relations of life." Madame Pasca has all the qualifications of an actress; yet, somehow, she seems to lack heart—that essential thing in the best and most perfect acting, without which we fail to apprehend the sincerity of the artist. The recognition of this gives more pleasure to an audience than all the skill in the world, artificially directed and coming from a doubtful source. M. Gouget has never appeared to so great advantage as in the character of Daniel Lambert, an artist. How in the world came the French author to select such a name for his hero—a name which, for an English audience, is associated with enormous size and weight? Another part, Lord Dudley, is also too suggestive, and brings to mind a well-known aristocrat, made more pointed by some references to his gallery of pictures.

The latest work of M. Leococq was produced at the Opéra Comique, last Saturday, for the first time in England, and in it we may distinctly trace the features of a real opéra comique. It is entitled "Giroflé-Girofla," and was admirably interpreted by the artistes engaged. M. Mario-Widmer, M. Jolly, and Mlle. Luigini, as opéra bouffe singers, have never been excelled. The interest of the piece combines comedy and grotesque incident. Madame Luigini sustains a double part; the sisters Giroflé and Girofla equally find in her an adequate representative—each, indeed, a brilliant example of fine acting. In both characters she had to sing, and won well-deserved encores. The music is exceptionally good;—so good that we fear almost for its popularity. It is executed, however, by the entire Brussels company with a style and completeness that defy competition. A large audience assisted at the representation, and M. Leococq had a most cordial reception. He had come to London expressly to witness the performance, and from a private box testified his acceptance of the applause intended for him by frequent bows to the delighted audience.

At the St. James's the management have judiciously revived Mr. John Oxenford's four-act adaptation of Mrs. Wood's novel "East Lynne." Miss Rose Coghlan ably sustained the two characters of Lady Isabel Carlyle and Madame Vine. Miss Bessie Hollingshead, daughter of the manager of the Gaiety, made her debut on the occasion as Barbara Hare, and acted with grace and sensibility. She was decidedly successful; and, indeed, we have the satisfaction of stating that the revival was altogether well received.

The anniversary festival in aid of the Royal General Theatrical Fund was held on Tuesday evening at Freemasons' Tavern—Mr. Alderman Cotton, M.P., in the chair. Mr. Cullenford (secretary) announced subscriptions to the amount of £589.

The Ulster Railway Company has approved of a bill for making a line from Dungannon to Cookstown.

There was a large attendance at the opening of the Bath and West of England Agricultural Society's Show, at Bristol, on Monday. The animals were of a superior quality. With Sir Massey Lopes in the chair, at the annual meeting, on Tuesday, Mr. R. Banyon, M.P., was elected president for the coming year. The next annual meeting will be held at Croydon.

FINE ARTS.

THE ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

THE PORTRAITS, ETC.

We have not heard so many complaints of an undue preponderance of portraits this year at Burlington House, though several of no interest, either artistic or as regards the persons represented, might well have been spared. This arises, perhaps, from the fact that there are fewer works palpably and obtrusively bad in prominent situations. A respectable average is more uniformly maintained; but on the other hand there are very few portraits indeed, besides those of Mr. Millais (already reviewed), which attain commanding excellence—which, like the portraiture of the old masters, carry the conviction with them of intense penetrative truth to individual nature, and yet are "pictures" in the best sense of the word, and, as such, compel warm admiration, independently of our knowledge of, interest in, or sympathy with the man, woman, or child that happens to be presented on the canvas. Such being the test of fine portraiture, it is evident that this is one of the very highest, and consequently one of the most difficult, branches of art. Historical painting of the grand school—i.e. with life-size figures—is indeed but a development of portrait-painting, for no historical work of any real value was ever yet produced the figures in which were not individual or typical portraits. A Royal Academy of Art is therefore justified in giving all reasonable encouragement to portrait-painting, especially in a school where historical painting of the higher kind has never taken root, and is now almost unknown. Moreover, although few of the portraits in this collection will bear the double test we have proposed, there are, as we have said, many works of considerable ability, and this department will bear comparison with any other.

The absence of Mr. Richmond is, we are happy to learn, not to be attributed to ill-health. That cause must, however, we fear, be assigned for Mr. Knight being represented by two bust portraits only. The style of the president, Sir Francis Grant, is so well known that it will suffice to say that, besides minor works, including a repetition of an earlier portrait of "Lord Palmerston" (115), he has two full-lengths, the one of Mr. T. Brassey (324), the other of Mrs. Albert Grant (245), the latter being the artist's most successful effort of the year, and equal to anything produced in his prime. Mr. Sant, another long-established favourite, particularly as a painter of children and ladies, is rather unequal; but the stately and broadly-graded whole-length of Mrs. Charles M. Palmer (239), and "Peaches" (158), well sustain his reputation. The last represents an infant child with chubby, peachlike cheeks, standing against a peach-laden garden-wall, and holding two of the fruit in her little hands. Mr. Wells's principal work is a solidly and richly painted whole-length of Lord Selborne (321) in his Chancellor's robes, and with the insignia of that high office. Portraits of Mr. Samuel Morley (664), Mr. Philip Worsley (25), and Mr. J. Remington Mills (316) are also contributed by the same artist. In aiming, apparently, at greater technical force, Mr. Wells is inclining to heaviness, both in colour and handling; we miss the refinement and the more delicate traits of character that were seldom wanting in earlier works. Mr. Watts sends several bust portraits, notably the late J. Stuart Mill (246), a physiognomy to which the philosopher's autobiography lends peculiar interest; the Rev. James Martineau (51), remarkable for the gentle, philanthropic expression and the soft, dreamy eyes; and Mrs. Le Strange (44), in which the air of high-bred distinction is perfectly caught, though the draughtsmanship is not quite satisfactory. Mr. Watts, as usual, occupies a place apart in respect of his works possessing some qualities rarely found except in portraits of the old masters, which we prize accordingly, such as dignity and gravity in male heads, beauty and grace, entirely removed from meretriciousness, in female portraits, together with an avoidance of crude or garish colouring. Indeed, the artist seems positively to dread pure colour; his hues are broken and degraded to an extent that is certainly not justified by nature. Nor is the technical resemblance to the present aspect of the works of the old masters thus presented more than superficial; for, however deep the toning of Time, it always preserves a degree of transparency unattainable by Mr. Watts's opaque method.

Outside the Academy we rejoice to see Mr. Oulless more than maintaining the high position he has won within a very few years. He, too, has been looking at the old masters, and he has done so intelligently. But his works evince more directly the fact of his pupilage under Mr. Millais. The younger painter's execution is, as might be expected, more painstaking and minute; he has not yet acquired that largeness and suggestive freedom of style which come with long practised and assured mastery; but otherwise he is a worthy follower of Mr. Millais, and his two portraits here are an honour to our school. One of them is a half-length of Mr. W. Sale (19), painted for the Clarendon Club, Manchester. The pale, intellectual, singularly shrewd and lawyer-like looking head is relieved from the dark background with extraordinary force and vitality; the hands also are painted with fully corresponding truth and power; drawing, modelling, colouring, characterisation, are all first rate. The half-length of Lord Selborne (578), in his robes as Chancellor, is not a whit less admirable, saving that the shadows are a trifle hard and black. Notice the artistic toning of the gold embroidery. Another very excellent portrait is Mr. R. Lehmann's subscription whole-length of Sir William Ferguson (19.). Though smoother in texture and execution, the draughtsmanship, modelling, light and shade, and characterisation leave nothing to be desired. It would form a capital companion portrait to Mr. Millais's Sir James Paget of last year. Like the eminent surgeon just named, Sir William is represented as in the lecture-room. On the black board before which he stands is a chalk outline of a human shoulder and shoulder-blade, in a glass on the table is a human scapula—in alusion, no doubt, to Sir William having successfully, and for the first time, removed a diseased scapula from a living subject. Mr. Lehmann likewise sends a capital portrait of General Mohsin Khan, the Persian Ambassador (1373)—a study for one of the figures in the artist's large picture commemorative of the ratification of the Persian concessions to Baron de Reuter, which we described some time back. A low-toned portrait of Mr. E. M. Baillie of Dochfour (304), by Mr. W. Fussli (a name new to us), is grave and fine in conception and treatment; and similarly high praise is due to a group of children (725) by the same artist. Among male portraits noticeable for sound workmanship and fidelity to the individuality, as well as on account of the personages depicted, we should specially commend the whole-length of Monseigneur Capel (92), by M. Yvon, in which the keen and even aggressive expression is felicitously caught; a quite English-looking picture, though by a French painter; Mr. J. E. Williams's seated whole-length of Lord Lawrence (21), painted for the London School Board, in which the artist has mastered the difficulty of indicating not only the brave, leonine, set expression, but also the benevolence and sagacity behind that almost grim outer mask; Dr. Newman (143), by Mr. W. T. Roden, in which there is no attempt to smooth down the strongly-marked characteristics; and Mr. John Bright (112), by Mr. L. Dickenson, in which the painter is, however, scarcely so fortunate as usual, either as regards the too self-satisfied expression or the poverty of the colouring.

Dr. W. Lindsay Alexander (489), by Mr. N. Macbeth, may be classed with the preceding, in consideration of its self-evidently great truth to nature, though, like most portraits by Scotch artists, it inclines to hardness. The late J. C. Schetky, the marine-painter (565), by Mr. J. J. Napier, is another good Scotch portrait. There is, however, a marked falling off in the Scotch school of portraiture, if we may judge by the diminished number and generally inferior quality of the works here exhibited. M. O. Weber's picture of Baron von S. (685) at a fox-hunters' "meet"—another very English-looking work by a foreign artist—is the best equestrian portrait. The horse, in all his points, is thoroughly well done; we can only object that the Baron's "pink" coat is too fiery a scarlet. Still more realistic than any work we have noticed—"literalistic" would be a better word—is Mr. Holman Hunt's nearly full-length of Mr. Thomas Fairbairn (660), seated on a crimson velvet ottoman, with a background formed of a gallery-vista and rows of show cases that are filled with objets d'art, in reference, we presume, to the prominent part taken by Mr. Fairbairn in the formation of the Manchester and other art-treasures exhibitions. The face and hands in this portrait are mapped out and modelled with a patient, minute carefulness, and a palpable honesty, of which there is scarcely a parallel in the entire collection. The smallest modification of form, the slightest variation of texture, whether caused by muscles thick or tenuous, by adipose cushions or tendinous attachments, by osseous and cartilaginous structure, or by shaving of lip and chin, are set down by the artist as though he had painted on oath, or with the desire to compete with photography. The very trousers are an elaborate study of stripes in perspective and as influenced by cross folds. Yet how is it that, with all this painstaking and veracity, the portrait is so little satisfactory that to the ordinary observer it even approaches the ridiculous? The eye of the latter may, it is true, be vitiated, may be rendered incapable of recognising actual truth to nature by the conventionality and artificiality prevalent in the usual run of portraiture. Nevertheless, we must maintain that this portrait is not artistic in any sense above that of mere copyism. More than this, we must assert that it is not truthful even as imitation. Why did Mr. Hunt select a pose that is about the least graceful that he could have chosen? Why does the flesh seem as hard as painted wood, unless it be that he is insensible to those pearly atmospheric half-tints so characteristic of human epidermis—half-tints which, when he has noted them in other of his works, appear only as positive blue. By rigidly seeking for all details, those least desirable almost inevitably assume undue importance. Finally, there are observable in every face transient, but most essentially characteristic, expressions, to which a thousand details are subordinated, at least in our impression; and painting that addresses itself more to the eye than to the mental impression in so far falls short of the higher attributes of fine art.

One of the most agreeable female portraits is Mr. Storey's whole-length of Dame Octavia Beaumont (226), in brown velvet robe, white satin petticoat, and broad-brimmed hat and feather, feeding a pet owl. It is graceful in feeling and very mellow in effect. Mr. Archer hails, we believe, from Scotland, but his portraits have no characteristic of the Scotch school except, perhaps, their prevailing key of grey colouring. The artist is very liberally represented, but his important works are a group of Mrs. Williamson and her two children (307), and another large portrait composition of an elder girl reading to two younger sisters (333), both presenting a happy combination of figures with landscape backgrounds. Of how little, provided that little is precisely of the right sort, goes to make acceptable portraiture, these works are striking examples. They are delightfully simple, natural, and pure. While free from plagiarism, they remind one of the successes of Hainsborough and Reynolds in some portraits which, like these, are little more than sketches. Still, when Mr. Archer's work is shown (see No. 291) on "the line," we can but regret its extreme lightness. Herr von Angeli's portraits of the Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany (395 and 404) are extremely dexterous not less in the rich costumes than in the heads, but the "carnations" are somewhat wanting in freshness. Professor G. Richter's half-length of the Duchess of Edinburgh (194) has the required freshness, but we crave permission to say that, let the Professor be ever so much a courtier, he has erred egregiously in substituting vague conventional prettiness for the charming individuality of the fair Imperial lady. We have our own fashionable and courtly painters, not yet named, who paint to please, though their flattery may really be the worst of compliments. No doubt they reflect some of the ton of high life; they are apt also to have reminiscences of Reynolds and Gainsborough to which we would not object, as in the Hon. H. Graves's Countess of Chester (69); occasionally they may even hit on a naïve touch of nature as in the formal pose and locked hands of Mrs. Wemyss (287), by the same; but sometimes they make awful mistakes, as in the hunting portrait, still by the same, of the Earl of Maclesfield, who stands at least eight feet high. Mr. Wiggall's portraits of ladies and children, and the ladies and children of Mr. Buckner, may be grouped with the preceding. Serious criticism on many productions of this kind would be like breaking a butterfly on a wheel, yet it is hard to repress one's critical choler in presence of the varnish artificiality and man-millinery of the last-named painter. As a portrait-painter Mr. Desanges may be classed among fashionable practitioners, though no one would understand the remark as made reproachfully who has seen the artist's masculine and vigorous picture of the fighting in the Ashantee forest, painted for the proprietors of this Journal from the sketches of our special artist, Mr. Melton Prior. Nor, indeed, can any of the usual faults of fashionable portraiture be alleged against Mr. Desanges's natural and pleasing family-portrait composition, numbered 942. The motive of the picture is quite original—an elder and two younger sisters stand "Waiting for the Eclipse," half in the blue moonlight, half in the red artificial light falling on them from a hall-door—an incident which has enabled the artist to deal with those exceptional effects of lighting in the rendering of which he is an adept. Failing space compels us to content ourselves with commending to notice the following meritorious works:—Mrs. Charles de Kierzkowski (1), by Mr. C. Lutzens; Lady Simeon (200), by Mr. C. E. Hallé, refined, if not quite happy in colour; Mr. S. Hey, F.R.C.S. (164), a presentation portrait by Mr. Sidney Hodges; Portrait of his Mother (1358), by Mr. E. N. Eddis; Mr. W. L. Thomas (696), by Mr. M. W. Ridley; Madame X. (681), by Mr. E. R. Thirion; portrait studies by Mr. J. H. Walker; an exquisitely modelled study of "A Capri Girl" (1040), by M. Sain; "My Sister" (190), by Miss E. Montalba; and a study of a head, of considerable promise, by Miss F. Sothorn.

In the Water-Colour Room, among the more remarkable drawings are two lifelike portraits: the one of Mrs. George Smith (869)—a lady seated, in a white dress, partially covered by a light Chinese embroidered shawl, the excellent drawing and modelling of the head evidently faithful to nature—by Mr. F. W. Burton, formerly a member of the Old Water-Colour Society, lately appointed Director of the National Gallery; the other a still larger drawing—being a half-length of a lady with a background of rhododendrons (933)—by Mr. J. M. Jopling. While acknowledging the difficulties that have been conquered here, we cannot be insensible to the deficiencies of water colour for the painting of heads of the dimensions of nature. Take even the first named, and, though an unusually complete work for water colours, it is unquestionable that greater variety of texture, and more descriptive detail in modelling, could have been attained with half the labour in oil. Several drawings in this room have been noticed incidentally in previous articles, and others are by well-known painters whose works elsewhere we have occasion to review; simple mention, therefore, taking the order on the walls, will suffice in most cases. "The Turn of the Tide, below the Pool, London" (735)—a large and very able drawing, by W. R. Beverley, noteworthy for that command of breadth for which scene-painting is the best of preparation; "On the Teign, Devon" (745), by E. H. Bearne—marked by considerable power and promise; "Thebes during the Inundation" (747), by E. Vacher; "The Wetterhorn" (762), by A. Croft; "Mount Sorrel, Leicestershire" (770), by J. Orrock; "Phoebe Dawson" (773), by J. Parker—distinguished by tender colouring and sense of beauty; "Gorleston: Port of Great Yarmouth: Morning after a Gale" (776), by W. J. Callcott—a large, spirited, and impressive drawing; "The English Gamekeeper" (811), by J. Hardy, jun.; "Mysterious Night: Memnonium" (816), A. MacCullum; "Peace" (857)—a very suggestive little design of an angel sitting on a Woolwich Infant, by J. Tenniel; "Decorative Treatment of Modern Subjects: North Country Wrestling" (876), by E. Buckman; No. 881, another smaller portrait by J. M. Jopling; "A Court-yard, Cairo" (883), by S. Palmer; "Summer" (895), by R. T. Waite; "Nursery Tales" (904), by Mr. Dobson (we shall engrave this drawing, and therefore have another opportunity of noticing it); and "The Canterbury Pilgrims" (930), by E. H. Corbould.

THE BARKER COLLECTION.

One of the most remarkable art-sales in recent years took place at Messrs. Christie, Manson, and Wood's, on Saturday last, when were dispersed the pictures, chiefly of the Early Italian schools, forming the celebrated collection of the late Mr. Alexander Barker, of Piccadilly. As fine examples of these schools (so important relatively to the history of art) come into the market on occasions more and more rare, we are glad to say that, although the allowance for the year had, we believe, been forestalled, no less than thirteen pictures were purchased by Mr. Burton, at a cost of £10,000, for the National Gallery. The extra vote thus required will, doubtless, meet with public approval. The acquisitions for our national collection are:—Vivarinis—"The Madonna and Infant Saviour," £189. Cosimo Tura—"The Madonna," £84. Benvenuto di Siena (a master not before represented in our National Gallery)—"The Madonna with Infant Saviour, and angels playing musical instruments," £525. Carlo Crivelli—"St. Catherine" and "The Magdalene," a pair, £210; the same—"The Madonna in Ecstasy," from the chapel of the Malatesta in the Church of S. Francesca, at Rimini, £577 10s. Piero della Francesca—"The Nativity," the Madonna kneeling over the Saviour, St. Joseph, a blind (?) man, and five figures singing and playing musical instruments; painted in a light-brown tone, but the greens have blackened; probably left unfinished; it is described by Messrs. Crowe and Cavalcaselle as having been, when they saw it, in a very damaged condition; if so, it has been skilfully restored. This interesting picture is mentioned by Vasari; it was purchased by Mr. Barker from the Marini Francheschi family, descendants of Piero. After a very warm competition it was knocked down for £2415. The fine example of the master, "The Baptism of Christ," already in the National Gallery, was bought at the Uzielli sale for only £241 10s. Luca Signorelli—"The Triumph of Chastity," a fresco transferred to canvas, £840. Bernardino Pinturicchio—"The Return of Ulysses to Penelope," or, according to Waagen and others, "The Visit of Collatinus to Lucretia," of great interest as a rare work in fresco (transferred to canvas) by the painter with whom Raphael was associated at Siena; it was supposed by Mr. Barker that Raphael himself was a model for the foremost figure, but Waagen points out that the hair is light, whereas it is dark in the authentic portraits of Raphael, £2152 10s. The same—three pictures representing the story of Griselda, at the prices respectively of £210, £241 10s., and £273. Sandro Botticelli—two mythological pictures, "Mars and Venus," reclining with cupids, £1050; and "Venus," reclining in a landscape with three amorini pelting her with roses, £1627 10s. These are admirable illustrations of Botticelli's poetical fancy in secular subjects, and, like those by Pinturicchio, are welcome additions to the national collection. Mr. Gruner, acting, it was understood, for the Dresden gallery, secured the following:—Giovanni Bellini—"The Madonna and Infant Saviour, St. Peter and St. Helena," £756. Giorgione—"A Grand Landscape with Borsio D'Este and Lucretia Borgia," £609. Gentile da Fabriano—"The Madonna," £399. A. Privante—"The Madonna," £693. Luca Signorelli—a pair of pilasters with figures of saints, £267 15s. Lorenzo di Credi—"The Madonna," £483. The same—a grand altar-piece, £483. The very interesting series of six pictures, by Botticelli, illustrative of Boccaccio, painted for the Casa Pucci, were knocked down at prices ranging from £420 to £997 10s., to Mr. Brodhurst, to whom, also, went the "Portrait of a Youth," ascribed to Raphael, but more like the work of Leonardo da Vinci, £3990, and some minor works. The other principal lots were:—Hemmelinck (Memling), more probably Q. Matsys—"The Madonna and Child Enthroned," £1281 (Brooks). Giorgione—"Portrait of his Mistress," from the Manfrini Gallery, £399 (Graves). Filippino Lippi—"The Adoration of the Magi," £735 (Calvetti). Fra Filippo Lippi—"The Madonna with Infant Saviour, the Magdalene, and St. Catherine," £504 (Gullick). Francesco Francia—"The Madonna," £682 10s. (Brooks). Antonio Pollaiuolo—"The Madonna with Infant Saviour," £693 (Castellani). Of the French school, a Pater, "Blind Man's Buff," fetched £525 10s.; and a set of eight panels, with small paintings by Boucher, formerly in Madame de Pompadour's chateau at Crecy, realised the large sum of £6352 10s. (Wertheimer). The total of the pictures, in ninety-two lots, amounted to £38,591. During the first four days of this week Mr. Barker's splendid collection of sculpture, objets d'art, and decorative furniture has been sold—many of the items at high prices; but we have not space to particularise.

A very interesting loan exhibition, illustrative of the history of the art of enamelling on metal, has been opened at the South Kensington Museum. The collection is an extensive one, and we hope to have an early opportunity of noticing it somewhat in detail.

Mr. Whistler (who is not a contributor to this year's Academy) has done wisely in arranging a separate exhibition of his works, which is now open at 48, Pall-mall. Among the pictures of other artists who seek for greater relief, stronger, more varied colouring, completer realisation in every way, Mr. Whistler's productions must appear slight, flat, limited, hasty—the shadows or ghosts of pictures—aiming, as he does, and as his titles honestly imply, merely at colour "arrangements," "harmonies," and "symphonies." On the other hand, when the aim is so circumscribed, there are decorative qualities, some of them more or less easily attainable—such as purity and beauty of simple tint or hue, and tone, freshness of touch, and delicacy of gradation, which it would be unfair to expect in works of greater elaboration. In carrying out his intentions as a colourist Mr. Whistler is largely indebted to an intelligent study of Japanese principles of decoration, and there can be no doubt that, so far as they go, his works are purely and often delightfully artistic. The qualities in which he excels are, moreover, precisely those which are most apt to be lost in the process of "finishing" a picture, and which are too rarely found in our school. It must also be admitted that Mr. Whistler is an accomplished artist, quite capable of carrying his work very much farther, in the ordinary sense, if his theory or conviction of artistic requirements permitted him to do so. This is evident in his portraits, wherein the essentials of drawing, modelling, and colouring, so far as indicated, are perfect. Under the conditions mentioned very warm admiration is due to the highly characteristic full-length of Mr. Carlyle, seated, viewed in profile; to the similarly treated portrait of the artist's mother, exhibited last year at Burlington House; to a portrait of a girl, strongly suggestive of Velasquez; and to another whole-length of a lady standing before a pinkish background—an ethereally delicate symphony in flesh-colour and pink. There are many small studies in oil and chalks, in which the actualities of scene or person are quite subordinated to the general colour impression; and besides these a series of the artist's etchings, in which Mr. Whistler has long been an acknowledged master.

A mosaic picture, in memory of the late Very Rev. Archdeacon Hale, has been placed in the Morning Chapel, St. Paul's Cathedral. The subject is the Risen Saviour. It was executed by Messrs. Salviati.

The small Burlington Gallery, Piccadilly, has been reopened with a number of water-colour drawings and a few oil paintings by Mr. Elijah Walton. The subjects are from Egypt and other parts of the East, Switzerland, and Norway.

Mr. Mark Firth, of Sheffield, has decided to present thirty-six acres of the Page Hall estate as a public park for the recreation of the inhabitants of a thickly-populated part of Sheffield. Mr. Firth bought the estate for £25,000. A few years ago he built and endowed almshouses at Sheffield at a cost of £40,000.

Arrangements have been made with the Earl of Feversham and Lord Delisle for the construction of a new line of railway in North Yorkshire from Helmsley, through Bilsdale to Ingelton, with a branch to Rosedale, forming a connection with the Cleveland district. The whole country is extremely rich in iron, coal, jet, and freestone.

A meeting of the Manchester Bengal Relief Fund Committee was held, on Monday, in the Townhall—the Mayor in the chair. It was announced that the local subscription amounted to £11,652; and it was resolved that it should be devoted to purposes which the Government, according to the general rules of administration, could not meet. It was also agreed to have a collection in the churches and chapels.

Promotions in, and appointments to, the Order of the Star of India have been gazetted: Mr. Robert Henry Davies, Lieutenant-Governor of the Punjab; Colonel Richard John Meade, Chief Commissioner of Mysore; and Colonel Lewis Pelly, late Political Resident in the Persian Gulf, being made Knights Commanders; while the Hon. Ashley Eden, Rajah Roomanath Tagore, and Mr. Vernon Hugh Scholch are made Companions.

The Liverpool School Board has agreed to pay school fees for children over four years of age in cases where parents are too poor to pay them, and in several cases for children under three years of age where homes are necessarily broken up for the day by the parents going out to work.—A sum of £150 has been subscribed in Dundee to supply clothing to poor children to enable them to attend school.

The monthly Board of Trade returns were issued on Monday. These show that the total declared value of exports for May was £21,229,247, which was a decrease of £1,377,835, compared with the corresponding month of last year, but an increase of £507,944 compared with May, 1872. The total value of the exports for the five months ended May 31 was £98,463,601, and this was £7,862,873 less than in May, 1873, and £916,582 less than in May, 1872.

A general order issued from the Horse Guards states that the Queen has been graciously pleased to signify her pleasure that a silver medal be granted to all her Majesty's forces who were employed on the Gold Coast during the operations against the King of Ashantee, with a clasp in the case of those who were present at Amoaful and the actions between that place and Coomassie (including the capture of the capital), and of those who, during the five days of those actions, were engaged on the north of the Prah in maintaining and protecting the communications of the main army. The medals are to be given to all officers and soldiers who served on the Gold Coast between June 9, 1873, and Feb. 4, 1874, inclusive; or who during that period, or for any portion of that period, were on board ship on the coast.

Many volunteers who find it impossible to leave business entirely for eight days' training at Aldershot with regulars and militia, are yet most anxious for the experience which going under canvas alone can give. To meet this want considerable extension will be given this year to volunteer camps of instruction, where men may drill morning and evening, having leave of absence during the day. On Monday the Civil Service proceeded to Esher, under the command of Lord Bury, for a week's camp life and instruction in guard-mounting, sentry, and out-post duty. The London Scottish follow their example next month, Wimbledon-common being probably the locality. A camp will be formed at Plumstead in July, open for members of the several volunteer artillery corps in the home districts, and the Secretary of State for War has sanctioned the formation of many such all over the kingdom.

The Gazette announces that her Majesty has made the following appointments to the Order of St. Michael and St. George:—To be Knight Commanders: Colonel Stephen J. Hill, C.B., Governor of Newfoundland; Colonel W. F. Drummond Jervois, R.E., C.B., Deputy Director of Works for Fortifications, War Department; and P. G. Julian, C.B., Crown Agent for the Colonies. To be Companions: Lieutenant-Colonel Berkeley Maxse, Governor of the Island of Heligoland; Giovanni Battista Trapani, L.L.D., Collector of Land Revenue and Member of the Council of Government of the Island of Malta; Gordon Gairdner, sometime Chief Clerk in the Colonial Office, and Secretary and Registrar of the Order; Sir George Barrow, Bart., ditto; Virgile Naz, Member of the Council of Government of Mauritius; and Saul Samuel, Postmaster-General of New South Wales.

THE CHELSEA EMBANKMENT, FROM BATTERSEA BRIDGE.

H.M.S. RALEIGH.

THE CHELSEA THAMES EMBANKMENT.

Three or four weeks ago this useful public work, extending along the Middlesex shore of the river from Battersea Bridge to the gardens of the Royal Military Hospital—a length of three quarters of a mile—was opened by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh. The view now presented shows its appearance on looking down the river from Battersea Bridge. To those who love antiquarian associations, the changed aspect of old Chelsea is perhaps an occasion of regret. But they must confess that it was growing shabby and squalid—not, indeed, at the historic frontage of Cheyne-walk, but towards the other end; and when the old garment is worn out, if the body is still alive, it becomes needful to put on a new one. Dean Swift or Sir Robert Walpole, indeed, would scarcely know the Chelsea of this day for that which they used to haunt, if they were now set down at the bottom of Oakley-street, opposite the new Albert Bridge.

H.M.S. RALEIGH.

The trial-trip of this new ship, built at Chatham Dockyard, took place about two months ago, with very satisfactory results. Her speed at full power was about 15½ knots an hour, and 13½ at half power. The vessel is built with iron transverse frames, and with a complete iron skin-plating, half an inch thick, over all her body. This is covered with a wood casing, varying from 6 in. to 12 in. thick, the greatest thickness being near the water-line. The bottom is finally sheathed with copper, in the same way as a wooden vessel. The dimensions are:—Length over perpendiculars, 298 ft.; length of keel, 262 ft.; extreme breadth, and for tonnage, 49 ft.; depth in hold, 16 ft.; burden, 3200 tons; displacement, 4700; load-draught, 24 ft. 6 in. aft, 21 ft. forward; stowage of coal, 580 tons. The engines, by Messrs. Humphreys, are horizontal, not compound, of 800-horse power nominal, with surface condensers; the cylinders of 100 in. diameter, with 4 ft. 6 in. length of stroke. There are eight tubular boilers, containing altogether 5500 brass tubes, fitted with superheaters for drying the steam. These are heated by thirty-two furnaces, each 6 ft. 6 in. long and 3 ft. 3 in. wide. The armament consists, on the main deck, of two 64-pounder chase guns and fourteen 7-in. 90-cwt. side guns, the ports of which are 10 ft. above the water-line; on the upper deck, two 9-in. 12-ton guns revolving on turn-tables, one firing all round the bow, the other astern; with two 64-pounder chase guns and two 64-pounder side guns. The total complement is 520, officers and men. This ship has the ordinary hand-power capstans and hand-steering arrangements. The fire-extinguishing apparatus consists of a powerful steam-engine and two double-action pumps, having a line of 6-in. copper pipe running fore and aft the whole length of the ship, with branches to attach hose for combating a fire in any part of the vessel. The power of these pumps is sufficient to force two streams of water from 2-in. nozzles over the mainyard. This engine is also arranged to pump out water from the bilges in any part of the ship in the event of a leak.

STATUE OF JOHN BUNYAN.

The colossal bronze statue of John Bunyan, by Mr. J. E. Boehm, sculptor, was unveiled at Bedford, on Wednesday last. It was cast at the works of Messrs. H. Young and Co., art-founders, Pimlico. This statue is the gift of the Duke of Bedford to the town of Bedford. It is placed on a large granite pedestal, erected in St. Peter's-green, at the junction of five principal roads meeting in that town. The likeness is taken from a contemporary painting, by Sadler, now in possession of the Rev. Mr. Olive; and the costume is in accordance with that of the period. The attitude is that of a preacher, holding the open Bible in his left hand, the fingers of his right hand resting upon it. The face has a very earnest expression. It is a noble figure, and seems to indicate the greatness of the man's mind.

STATUE OF BUNYAN AT BEDFORD.

At his feet have fallen the symbols of the prison. Around the pedestal are placed relieves, illustrating different passages in "The Pilgrim's Progress." The statue is cast from bronze cannon and bells, recently brought from China, about three tons of metal.

The author of "The Pilgrim's Progress" was born, in 1628, at Elstow, near Bedford, and was bred to his father's trade of tinker. His religious convictions, inspiring a great imaginative intellect, made him one of the most powerful of English Puritan Divines, and one of the most popular English authors. His remarkable autobiography, called by him "Grace Abounding," has lately been republished by the Religious Tract Society, in a handsome volume, with illustrations by Mr. E. N. Downard, engraved by Mr. E. Whymper. It gives a very interesting and instructive view of mental struggles to the attainment of clear vision and firm reliance upon the spiritual realities in which he thoroughly believed. In 1655 he became a Baptist Dissenting preacher at Bedford. He was prosecuted for this crime five years afterwards, and passed much of his remaining life in prison, but was at length released. He died in London, about sixty years of age. We may, perhaps, give some illustrations of the Bunyan Festival at Bedford.

THE LATE REV. DR. GUTHRIE.

The memorial tablet of Dr. Guthrie which is placed in the lobby of St. John's Free Church, Edinburgh, has been arranged as a mural monument. Above a plinth of the simplest possible character, supported on two square brackets, rises a Gothic design of plain but elegant outline, inclosing a panel, from which the head and shoulders of the figure stand out in high relief. From the apex of the structure droop branches of palm and olive, while the mouldings surrounding the panel are enriched with a band of forget-me-nots. In reproducing the well-remembered head of the champion of ragged schools, Mr. Brodie, the sculptor, had before him, in addition to recent photographs, a fine bust executed by his own hand some ten or twelve years ago, and exhibited at the time in the Royal Scottish Academy. Admirable as that bust was, Mr. Brodie has fully equalled, if not excelled, the likeness in his present work. The characteristic expression of the man—his air of mild benignity and buoyant enthusiasm—is cleverly caught; nor has the artist omitted, by the adjustment—or rather want of adjustment—of the clerical bands and necktie, to suggest Dr. Guthrie's easy carelessness of gait and habit. The work, executed in white marble, forms a worthy memorial of one whose name Edinburgh and Scotland will long continue to cherish.

THE KING OF SIAM.

An interesting work of art has lately been manufactured by Messrs. Hunt and Roskell for his Majesty the King of Siam, whose Court ceremonial at Bangkok was described not long ago in some of the London papers. It is an equestrian statuette group, in silver, representing the King attired in military uniform and mounted on horseback. The base of the pedestal is supported by four kneeling figures of white elephants. This animal, of a rare colour, which is not really white, but a brownish yellow, or like what is called cream-colour in horses, is cherished at Bangkok with extreme veneration, a few specimens being kept there in the stables of the Royal palace. There is a fancy in the Buddhist religious philosophy or mythology that the divine person of Eastern Asiatic worship, having passed through a multitude of living forms upon earth in a countless series of ages, finished by inhabiting the body of a white elephant. It is not quite certain whether Buddha may not still tarry in this grand incarnation of purity, the exceptional white one; and the reputed sagacity of the big beast is thought an argument of the existence of indwelling deity in its burly frame. A devout Siamese has been observed to whisper his secrets into an elephant's ear, and seemingly to ask counsel of that mystic wisdom. The late Sir John Bowring, in his narrative of a visit to Siam, describes a pompous state procession, with music and banners, by which the King and courtiers led into the city a white elephant caught in the woods. Some hairs of the animal's tail were sacredly preserved in a golden box, which was presented to Sir John as the most precious of gifts. As the emblem of Siamese Royalty, the white elephant is figured upon coins, flags, and seals; hence its appearance in the handsome table ornament Messrs. Hunt and Rockell have made for the King.

ROYAL INSTITUTION LECTURES.

PHYSICAL SYMMETRY IN CRYSTALS.

Professor Nevil Story Maskelyne, M.A., F.R.S., keeper of the mineral department in the British Museum, gave his fourth and concluding lecture on Thursday week. He began by giving a sketch of the history of our knowledge regarding the effect of magnetic induction on crystals. After referring to Faraday's first announcement of the magnetic character of all matter—para-magnetic bodies taking up an axial position between the poles of the magnet, dia-magnetic bodies an equatorial position at right angles to the former—he showed how gradually, by the light of Knoblauch's and Tyndall's experiments, together with those of Grailich and Lang, the phenomena were traced to the existence in the crystal of a difference in susceptibility to magnetic induction along different directions; Plücker proving that there exists in crystals true magnetic axes like optic axes, round which the crystal presents no preferential direction that tends to a "set." The relations of general symmetry in spheroids or ellipsoids of magnetic induction as compared with the morphological symmetry of the crystal correspond to those manifested in the previously considered cases. Professor Maskelyne then adverted to the results obtained by Wiedemann and by Knoblauch in regard to the transmissibility of electricity under certain conditions by crystals, and took a general survey of the whole of the properties of crystals that had been passed in review, showing that, though concordant generally with their morphological symmetry, no single simple explanation of molecular structure can explain them. In fact, we have not merely to restored, it is not excitable. When either muscle or leaf contracts, electromotive force disappears and work is done; but there is no reason to suppose that there is any conversion of the one effect into the other, or that the source of the force exercised by the muscle or by the leaf in contracting is electrical. Through the kindness and skill of Dr. Hooker's assistants at Kew, several fine specimens of Dionaea were obtained in full growth a month earlier than usual expressly for Professor Burdon Sanderson's experiments. George Busk, Esq., F.R.S., treasurer and vice-president, was in the chair.

LIFE IN OTHER WORLDS.

Mr. R. A. Proctor, in his fifth and concluding lecture on the Planetary System, on Saturday last, discussed, first, the two theories of life in other worlds which are associated with the names of Sir David Brewster and Dr. Whewell, and then proceeded to enunciate his own, which occupies a middle place between the two others. Brewster, in his work entitled "More Worlds than One: the Belief of the Philosopher and the Hope of the Christian," expressed his opinion that the heavenly bodies are either the abodes of life or, like the sun, supporters of life—an idea which was also entertained by Sir John Herschel. Whewell himself, who at one time held this opinion, renounced it in his "Plurality of Worlds," saying that if the planets such as Jupiter were inhabited, it must be by very low forms of animal life. This book, Mr. Proctor said, was productive of much benefit by breaking through the prevailing habit of judging other planets by what we experience on our own, and thus reasoning too much by analogy. He then briefly referred to the geological evidence of the successive changes that have taken place on our earth, and the inconceivable amount of time which was required before the earth was fitted to be the abode of the various grades of life, culminating in man. After this he adverted to the evidence for believing that, eventually, further changes will ensue, whereby life will totally die out on our globe, after an immense interval of time. Accepting, then, on the one hand, the evidence which opposes our belief in the present habitability of all, or even of the chief proportion, of the worlds which people space, Mr. Proctor showed how, on the other hand, it is unreasonable to regard our earth as the sole abode of life, and expressed his conviction that we may regard all those worlds as subserving, at one period of their

BRACELET GIVEN BY THE ROYAL ALBERT YACHT CLUB TO THE DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

VENUS'S FLYTRAP (DIONÆA MUSCIPULA).

Professor J. Burdon Sanderson, M.D., F.R.S., at the last evening meeting of the season, on Friday, the 5th inst., gave a discourse on the mechanism of the remarkable plant named Venus's Flytrap (Dionaea muscipula), which derives its name from the leaf possessing the power of catching and digesting insects. This plant belongs to the small order Droseraceae, all the members of which possess this property in different degrees, and in various forms. This is a peculiarity of function in them, and affords a striking example of development in form and structure, and of adaptiveness to an end. Dionaea stands at the head of its order. It grows in soft damp moss, has very simple roots, and its flowers possess little beauty. The blade of the leaf consists of two semicircular lobes joined by a strong midrib. Each lobe has a hem from which spring twenty spikes. The under surface of the leaf is bright green, smooth and glistening, marked with parallel streaks, and the upper surface is full of minute red bosses, called glands. On each lobe are three delicate hairlike spines or filaments, and the leaf-stalk resembles the handle of a teaspoon. When an insect touches any one of the six filaments the lobe closes sharply upon it, just as a trap closes on a rat when it is caught, but at first the closure is only partial. This Mr. Darwin explained by observing the efforts of the insect to escape. When it is small it creeps through the aperture formed by the crossing of the teeth; in which case the leaf expands again very gradually to prepare for another victim; but when it is large its exertions for liberty are futile. Repelled by its prison bars, it is driven back upon the sensitive filaments, and again irritates them. This causes a still more vigorous contraction of the lobes, and the creature is crushed. The leaf remains closed for a week or more in the same state, and a quantity of juice is secreted from the internal surface of the leaf, by which the insect is gradually dissolved and eventually absorbed. This process Mr. Darwin has proved to be of the same nature as that by which food is digested in the stomach of the higher animals. After illustrating this by experiments Professor Sanderson proceeded to describe the leading properties of contractile tissues, and to demonstrate, by employing the voluntary muscles of a frog and some fresh leaves of the Dionaea, the remarkable relation between contraction and the electrical changes which accompany it. These changes were strikingly exhibited by means of Thomson's reflecting galvanometer. The movements of a small ball of light upon the screen showed when contraction took place and the electro-motive force was manifested. The results of the experiments carried on by the Professor have shown that muscle when stimulated contracts, changing its form and doing work, and that the electromotive force of muscle declines when it contracts; that this result happens also with the leaf of Dionaea when excited either mechanically or electrically; the period between the stimulation and its effect being much longer than in muscle: each stimulation being followed by a period of exhaustion, during which, although the electromotive force is existence, the wants of living creatures, and that now there may be millions of inhabited worlds. Referring to the infinity of space, matter, and time, he said that it is impossible for us, with our finite understandings, to attempt to form any adequate conception of the wisdom and power of the Almighty, as manifested in the Creation. Passing on to the consideration of the solar system itself, he discussed its probable past and future, and then indicated the evidence favouring a theory of evolution differing in some essential points from that of Laplace, which supposes the solar system to have been gradually formed by the rotation of a nebulous mass. These theories were illustrated by pictures illuminated by the oxy-hydrogen light.

With this lecture the Royal Institution season was concluded.

Dr. W. H. Stone has sent us the complete programme of the remarkable illustrations of his lecture on the Theory of Wind Instruments, of which a notice was given in our last week's number, p. 546:—Quintet for wind instruments alone (Reicha); solo, flute (Kuhlau), Mr. Rockstro; solo, oboe (Barret), Mr. G. Horton; concerto, clarinet (Mozart), Mr. Lazarus; sonata, French horn and piano (Beethoven), Mr. Fletcher; concerto, bassoon (Weber), Mr. Wootton; grand quintet, wind instruments and piano (Beethoven); pianoforte, Mr. H. R. Bird.

ROYAL ALBERT YACHT CLUB.

The members of the Royal Albert Yacht Club, of which his Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh is President, have presented, as a wedding gift, to her Royal and Imperial Highness the Duchess of Edinburgh, Grand Duchess Marie Alexandrovna of Russia, the handsome gold bracelet shown in our illustration. The design represented on the face of the pendant is the flag of the Royal Albert Yacht Club.

To urge the importance of carrying into effect, in any new legislation on endowed schools, the recommendations of the Schools Inquiry Commission in favour of establishing provincial authorities and county boards to co-operate with the Commissioners, an influential deputation waited, yesterday week, on the President of the Council.

Mr. Whitworth Jackson, in his evidence before the Committee on the Adulteration of Food, stated that two millions and a half pounds of the tea imported consists of exhausted leaves. He had once been offered the services of a person who represented himself as a "tea improver," and said he travelled about the country teaching his art to unsophisticated grocers. Mr. Allen, the Sheffield analyst, stated that one packet of tea examined by him contained 60 per cent of insoluble matter.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated March 13 last, of Edward Ryley Langworthy, late of Victoria Park, near Manchester, who died on April 7, was proved in the district registry at Manchester, on the 4th ult., by Mrs. Sarah Langworthy, the widow, Anton Philip Rudolph Wedmeyer and Benson William Clegg, the executors, the personal estate in the United Kingdom, including leasehold property, being sworn under £1,200,000. The stamp duty paid on the probate amounted to £16,500; the legacy duty to be paid in addition will also amount to a very large sum. The testator bequeaths to his wife all his furniture, pictures, plate, horses and carriages, and other household effects, his residence at Victoria Park, and a pecuniary legacy of £300,000, to be paid immediately after his decease, in cash or in such securities as she may select; to his nephew Edward Martin Langworthy, £100,000; upon trust for his niece Florence Langworthy and her children, £50,000; to each of the sons of his brother Lewis, £35,000; upon trust for each of the daughters of his said brother and their children, £25,000; to his said brother Lewis Langworthy, £20,000; upon trust for Mrs. Hannah Langworthy, the wife of his said brother, for life, and at her decease for their children, £10,000; to his wife's sister Elizabeth Frances Heaven, £20,000; to his wife's sisters Sophia and Harriet Heaven, £5000 each; upon trust for Mrs. Anne Jane Critchfield and her children, £40,000; upon trust for Mrs. Maria Dolores Clegg and her children, £40,000; to be equally divided between Sarah and Sophia Ryley and Mary Fisher, the daughters of his late uncle, £4500; to each of his executors for their trouble, £1000; to Mr. Wedmeyer, in addition, £2000; to the Rev. Alexander MacLaren and William Bickham, £100 each; to such of his servants engaged in or about his domestic establishment who have been twenty years in his service, £250 each; to those who have been ten years in his service, £100 each; to those who have been five years in his service, £50 each; and to the remainder £5 each. The testator then says:—"I bequeath to the trustees of the Manchester Grammar School £10,000 upon trust to invest the same in their names in or upon such securities as they shall deem most advisable, and to divide the income arising therefrom into twenty equal parts in order to constitute twenty annual scholarships (each of such parts constituting one scholarship), which scholarships respectively shall be open to general competition amongst the students at the Manchester Grammar School, and shall be tenable during the space of one year as a reward for proficiency shown by the student to whom the same shall be awarded in one or more of the following branches—viz., classics, mathematics, physical science, and modern languages. And I declare that the mode of conducting the examination for the same, the subject of such examination, and the conditions upon which such scholarships shall be held, shall be from time to time prescribed by the trustees and High Master of the said school. Provided always that the examination for such scholarships shall be in one or more of the above-mentioned branches, and that no greater number than seven of such scholarships shall be awarded in any one year to students under the age of seventeen years, and no greater number than seven to students over the age of seventeen years and under the age of eighteen years, and no greater number than six to students over the age of eighteen years and under the age of nineteen years, unless the trustees and High Master shall think fit. And I declare that, if the said trustees and High Master shall not in any one year award the whole of the said twenty scholarships, then and in such case the share of income constituting the scholarships so unawarded shall be accumulated and invested by the trustees of the said school, and the interest arising from such accumulations, when invested, shall be applied in increasing the value or amount of the said twenty scholarships in subsequent years, or in increasing the number of scholarships, as may be from time to time deemed most advantageous by the trustees of the said school. Provided always, that if in future years it shall not be deemed advisable either to increase the value or number of such scholarships, then and in such case the said accumulations may be applied by the trustees of the said school in or towards such other purposes for increasing the usefulness of the said school as they may consider desirable. I bequeath to the Corporation of Salford £10,000 upon trust, to apply the same for the benefit of the museum and library now established in Peel Park, Salford; and I direct that the same shall be expended either in the purchase of additional specimens for the museum or in extension of the library, or in both of such objects, as they shall deem most advisable; and I empower them to expend the said sum in or upon one or both of such objects, or to invest the same and apply the annual income for the benefit of one or both of the same objects." The deceased leaves the residue of his property, real and personal, to his wife.

The probate, granted on Jan. 20 last at Dublin, of the will and four codicils of the Right Hon. William Meredith Lord, Baron Athlumney in the Peerage of Ireland, and Baron Meredith in the Peerage of the United Kingdom, late of Somerville, Balrath, Navan, in the county of Meath, to Herbert Riversdale Mansel Jones and John Cornwall, the executors, was sealed in London on the 19th ult., the aggregate value of the personal estate in England and Ireland being sworn under £12,000.

The will, dated Nov. 16, 1834, of Lieutenant-General Sir William Henry Elliott, G.C.B., Knight of Hanover and Colonel of the 51st Foot, who died on March 27 last, at No. 20, Cambridge-square, was proved on the 1st inst. by Dame Jane Elliott, the relict, the sole executrix, to whom he gives and bequeaths all his property.

The will and codicil, dated respectively July 2, 1870, and Feb. 7, 1872, of Miss Mary Masterman, late of Forest-rise, Walthamstow, who died on April 20 last, were proved on the 12th ult. by Thomas Masterman, the brother, and Henry Masterman and the Rev. Charles Harris, the nephews, the

ELECTRICITY IS LIFE. FULVER'S PATENT GALVANIC CHAIN-BANDS, BELTS, BATTERIES, RECENTLY IMPROVED. Approved by the Academy of Medicine of Paris and other Medical Authorities in England and abroad. The remarkable efficacy of these self-applicable Voltaic arrangements is so widely known, that in contradistinction to those unprincipled advertisers who publish statements solely on their own authority, Mr. Fulvermacher sees only one way to the satisfaction of others, comprising many great authorities, whose unimpeachable testimonies in favour of the marvellous curative power of his Medical-Galvanic system are too numerous for insertion here. These are compiled in the pamphlet, "Galvanism, Nature's Chief Restorer of Impaired Vital Energy," sent post-free for three stamps. This mass of evidence is supplemented by the following paragraph recently found in the standard work (p. 18, 1887) of John King, M.D., Clinical Professor of Osteopathy, at Cincinnati:—"These Chains are very useful in many Nervous disorders:—

Neurasthenia, Epilepsy, Torpid Liver, Asthma, Amenorrhoea, Dysmenorrhoea, Spinal Irritation, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Stiff Joints, Hysteria, Hy-Leric Paralysis, Deafness (Nervous), Loss of Taste, &c." DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL. (Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium).

The only real test, medical experience during the last twenty-five years in all parts of the world, has conclusively proved

DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL to be

THE PUREST, THE MOST PALATABLE, THE MOST EASILY DIGESTED, and THE MOST RAPIDLY EFFICACIOUS of all kinds.

As the Remedy for CONSUMPTION and DISEASES OF THE CHEST, DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL stands pre-eminent.

As the Restorative in DEBILITY OF ADULTS and CHILDREN, DR. DE JONGH'S COD-LIVER OIL is unequalled.

SELECT MEDICAL OPINIONS. SIR G. DUNCAN GIBB, Bart., M.D., LL.D., Physician to the Westminster Hospital.

"The experience of many years has abundantly proved the truth of every word said in favour of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil by many of our first Physicians and Chemists, thus stamping him as a high authority and an able Chemist whose investigations have remained unquestioned. "I have found Dr. DE JONGH'S OIL a remedy of great power in the treatment of many affections of the throat and larynx, especially in consumption of the latter, where it will sustain life when everything else fails."

DR. MORELL MACKENZIE, Physician to the Hospital for Diseases of the Throat. "As you have called my attention to the fact that for many years in prescribing Cod-Liver Oil I have specially indicated that sold at your establishment, I cannot refuse to state my reasons for having done so. "These are as follow:—

"1st. That I have found your Light-Brown Oil much more uniform in its action than any other Cod-Liver Oil. 2ndly, That I have found it more uniform in its action than any other Cod-Liver Oil. 3rdly, That I have found it more easily digested than any other Cod-Liver Oil."

DR. WHITMORE, Medical Officer of Health, St. Marylebone.

"If I were asked for an explanation of the marked success which for so many years has attended the administration of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil, I should say that it is owing to its extraordinary medicinal, dietetic, and regenerative properties, which are found to exist in no other medicine that I am acquainted with, in such uniform combination."

DR. HARDWICKE, Medical Officer of Health, Farringdon.

"In the class of tubercular diseases, including Consumption, so prevalent in our great centres of population, the use of Dr. DE JONGH'S Light-Brown Cod-Liver Oil is attended with manifold advantages; and in the case of no therapeutic agent which, in connection with judicious sanitary measures, is better calculated to stay the ravages of these great consuming plagues of the British Islands."

DR. DE JONGH'S LIGHT-BROWN COD-LIVER OIL is sold only in capsule IMPERIAL Half-Pints, 3a. 6d.; Pints, 4a. 9d.; Quarts, 9a.; by all respectable Chemists and Druggists throughout the world. SOLE CHEMIST, ANSER, HARFORD, and CO., 77, STRAND, LONDON.

NEURALINE, the instant Cure for TIO DOLOUREUX, Neuralgia, Sciatica, Tooth-ache, Rheumatism, Gout, Rheumatic Gout, and all Local and Nerve Pain.

GLYKALINE, the prompt Cure for Hay Fever and all descriptions of Colds, Coughs arising from Colds, Hoarseness, Loss of Voice, and Difficulty of Breathing. Homoeopathic Chemists, 8, St. Paul's-church-yard, and 9, Vere-street, W. All Chemists, 1a. 11d. and 2a. 9d.; by post, 1a. 3d. and 2a.

DOGS. NALDIRE'S FLEA-KILLING SOAP. This Medicated Soap Tablet is specially prepared for Dogs, and by its use Fleas and other insects are destroyed, all unpleasant smells are instantly removed from the coat, and the Dog's skin is thoroughly cleansed. Manufactured only by WRIGHT and HOLDSWORTH, and sold in Large Tablets, Price 1a., by all Chemists and Perfumers.

GREAT HANDEL FESTIVAL

approximation of the two Centres. It is this which indicates a real change in the disposition of the Assembly. It is this which looks like the dawn of a better day for France. The actual majority of votes may have been casual, or even unreal; but the contact, for the first time since the overthrow of M. Thiers, between the two Centres, slight as it may have been, promises a more reasonable arrangement of parties, and justifies the hope of a more stable basis for the future government of France. So, at any rate, it has generally been considered. The comments of the press, both Parisian and provincial, interpret the vote in this light. Experience will hesitate to found upon the decision any confident expectations of the good which may follow it. But its aspect is unquestionably towards the light; and, unless the blossom be nipped by a succeeding frost, one may indulge the hope of a glad some fruit-time not long hence.

It is the more desirable that such a hope may be realised inasmuch as the success of the Bonapartists would amount to an earnest of renewed disturbance, not merely of the internal tranquillity of France, but of her foreign relations. It may be, as it is commonly said to be, that the French people prize social equality far more highly than political freedom; but it is incontestable that at the present time they value order, peace, and a free scope for industry and commerce far above martial glory. And they know that Cesarism means an essentially military régime, and that militarism carries within itself schemes of revenge. It may not be on the instant, but it would not be at any remote distance, should the Prince Imperial be summoned to mount the throne of his father, that his council chambers would be crowded with soldiers ambitious of effacing the stain which the late war with Germany left upon the honour of France. Already taxation is as heavy as can be borne. The land proprietors, the manufacturers, the miners, and the merchants of France, crave a period of quietude and confidence. It is indispensable to the rehabilitation of their financial soundness. But this is not all. Bonapartism implies a menace to Germany. Even present circumstances have excited an uneasy feeling at Berlin. It is difficult to conjecture how the Government of the Northern Confederation of Germany would meet the restoration of Imperialism in France. The calamity at Sedan, like that at Waterloo, may perhaps fade away from the memory of Frenchmen after a lapse of years, and purposes of revenge may wither unripened. But it is not wonderful that French patriotism should recoil with fear from the prospect of a new Napoleonic era. This, however, appears to be now a competing chance with the Republic. Of the latter it may be said that it has given to France an earnest of its peaceful conservatism. It has never descended into the streets. It has never disputed the sovereignty of the Assembly. It has prepaid the war indemnity. It has relieved the soil of France from German occupation. It has maintained a friendly understanding with all its neighbours. It has restored France to a high position in Europe. It has reorganised the army. It has administered justice; and, under difficulties which could have been hardly foreseen, it has resuscitated the spirit of the French people. Reasonable men who love their country can hardly shut their eyes to these facts. The leaders of the Right Centre, convinced that monarchy is impracticable save in the shape of Imperialism, cannot well do otherwise than lean towards the Left Centre. Such, at all events, is the situation brought under view by the vote of Monday last. It was the beginning of a political fusion. Let us hope that it will have a more successful end than that of the family fusion of the Bourbons.

THE COURT.

The Queen gave a dance at Balmoral, on Thursday week, to the tenantry, servants, and gillies on the Royal estates. The festivities were held in a marquee erected in front of the castle. Her Majesty and Princess Beatrice, with the ladies and gentlemen in waiting, were present a part of the time. Captain G. Harvey, Lieutenant J. Drury, and Lieutenant S. Lang, of the 99th (Duke of Edinburgh's) Regiment, were invited to luncheon at the castle on the following day, and were afterwards presented to the Queen. Her Majesty, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, drove to the Glassalt Shiel on Saturday last, returning to the castle in the evening. The Very Rev. Principal Tulloch, of St. Andrew's University, arrived at Balmoral. On Sunday the Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service at Crathie church. The Rev. Principal Tulloch officiated, and in the evening dined with her Majesty, leaving the castle the following day. The Queen, with Princess Beatrice, has made frequent excursions during the week, having driven to Glen Tanar and to Monaltrie, Upper Crathie, and other places on Deeside. On Sunday afternoon her Majesty, with the Princess, drove to Mioras, and presented Mr. and Mrs. John Brown with portraits of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

During the servants' ball at the castle Dr. Proffit (who was one of the visitors) was summoned to attend a young man (one of the Royal tenants), who had been attacked with paralysis. The Queen, when informed of the case, with her accustomed consideration, requested Dr. Marshall, her Majesty's medical attendant, to accompany Dr. Proffit.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice will return to Windsor Castle at the end of next week.

Her Majesty has appointed Captain Charles Edmund Phipps to be one of the Gentlemen Ushers Daily Waiters in Ordinary to her Majesty, in the room of Sir William Martins, deceased.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Princess of Wales, accompanied by the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, visited the bazaar held in the riding-school at the cavalry barracks, Knightsbridge, in aid of the funds of the Homœopathic Hospital. On Thursday week, in the evening, the Prince of Wales dined with the Benchers of the Middle Temple. Their Royal Highnesses were afterwards present at a ball given by the Marquis and Marchioness of Lansdowne at Lansdowne House. The Prince presided, on the following day, at Marlborough House, over a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Exhibition of 1881. The Duke of Edinburgh and Prince Christian were present. His Royal Highness also presided over a meeting of her Majesty's Commissioners for the Vienna Universal Exhibition, at which Count Gleichen was present. In the evening the Prince and Princess went to the Princess's Theatre. Madame Eugène Devaux played on the pianoforte before the Princess on Saturday, after which the Swedish Ladies' Vocal Quartet sang. The Prince and Princess dined with the Right Hon. the Speaker of the House of Commons and the Hon. Mrs. Brand, at their residence, Palace of Westminster. Their Royal Highnesses attended Divine service on Sunday at the Temple church. The Prince and Princess, accompanied by the Duke of Connaught, left Marlborough House, on Monday, for Armistage Hill, near Ascot. Their Royal Highnesses have visited the races with the usual state. The Princes have been present each day.

Lady Emily Kingscote has succeeded the Hon. Mrs. Coke as Lady in Waiting to the Princess.

The Imperial Crown Prince and Crown Princess of Germany, accompanied by the younger members of their family, purpose passing six weeks in the Isle of Wight, two or three villas having been taken at Sandown for the accommodation of the Imperial party, who are expected to arrive from Germany early in July. The two eldest sons of their Imperial Highnesses will remain at Potsdam.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh have expressed their intention of opening the new Infant Nursery for the Children of Seamen and others, at the London Docks, on Tuesday next. The same evening their Royal and Imperial Highnesses will leave town en route for Jugenheim, near Darmstadt, to join the Emperor and Empress of Russia.

Prince Leopold is recovering from his long indisposition during the term at Oxford. His Royal Highness was present at the Oxford Philharmonic Society's concert, on Monday afternoon, in the Sheldonian Theatre, and in the evening witnessed the annual procession of eight-oared racing-boats on the Isis, he being in an invalid-chair in a private garden. On Wednesday the Prince also witnessed the fête of the Apollo University Lodge of Freemasons in the gardens of Worcester College from a window overlooking the grounds.

The Duchess de Larochefoucauld-Bisaccia arrived at the French Embassy at Albert-gate on Monday from Paris. The Ambassador has since arrived. His Excellency will only hold office until the appointment of his successor and until he can present his letters of recall.

A marriage is arranged between Earl Grosvenor, eldest son of the Duke of Westminster, and Lady Sibell Lumley, fourth daughter of the Earl of Scarborough; also between Lady Victoria Liddell, youngest daughter of the Earl of Ravensworth, and Captain Edward Rowe Fisher, of Thorncombe, in the county of Surrey.

Entertainments have been given by Count Beust, the Duke of Wellington, the Duke of Norfolk, the Marchioness of Salisbury, the Marchioness of Hertford, the Marquis of Headfort, Earl and Countess Sydney, Earl and Countess Stair, the Countess of Amherst, the Earl and Countess of Hardwicke, the Countess of Newburgh, Viscount and Viscountess Mountgarrett, Viscount and Viscountess Falmouth, Viscount and Lady Halifax, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton, Lady Edwin Hill-Trevor, the Lord Chancellor and Lady Cairns, Lady Dashwood, Lord and Lady Howard of Glossop, Lord and Lady Wenlock, Lord and Lady Dacre, the Home Secretary and Mrs. Cross, and the Right Hon. Robert and Mrs. Lowe.

A FASHIONABLE CHARITY BAZAAR.

The female sex, from its earliest infancy which affects to careen a doll of wax or wood, is fond of playful make-believe employments. We may not indorse those hard lines of an English satirist:—

With varying vanities from every part,
They shift the moving toyshop of the heart.

All is not mere vanity, but graceful and innocent play. Life would be dull to some of us men, if our women and our little girls were averse to sport and jest. But they are apt, we observe, to decorate and enliven their most serious undertakings with the gay devices of a tasteful fancy. Hence comes their predilection for Ritualism in the public worship of the Church. The fantastic additions, ever changed to fresh shapes of novelty, which double or triple the cost of a lady's dress, are a sign of this disposition. To the modern English gentleman no business is more simple and practical than ordering and wearing his needful clothes. But his wife and daughters will exert all their wonderful ingenuity, and that of the milliner, in contriving those factitious or non-essential features of attire. Well, well! taking them as they are, as they must be, for better and for worse, let us say no more but "Heaven bless them!" and "What should we be without them?"

All their proceedings, we again declare, when they are most zealous in the cause they have wedded, are bedizen in this manner with ornamental fictions. If they would relieve the distressed victims of a war or famine, they do it not by the direct gift of money or money's worth, but rather by the purchase of tickets for a ball or concert, or garden party. Or they get up a raffle, or they sell pretty trifles at a charity bazaar. Here, indeed, as shown in our Illustration, we see how they can "shift the moving toyshop," with that marvellous natural talent for the display of attractions and for the seduction of their customers, which enables them, after all, to rule the world. Such is life; and in this pleasant scene of mimic commerce, where the unprotected male visitor feels his utter helplessness to resist their cajolery, we behold a true picture of human society in every land and age. "Women's rights," forsooth! we should be the last to withhold in any proved case of oppression by the muscular arm of the man. Alas for the male brute's bare back is our prescription for that disorder. But among the unquestioned rights of womanhood is that of tempting, coaxing, toying, and coquetting, for the extortion of gold and silver from the pockets of defenceless men. Go on, dear creatures! and prosper in your charming trade!

The members of the Thames Angling Preservation Society have their annual dinner on Wednesday next, at the Star and Garter Hotel, Richmond—Mr. O. E. Coope, M.P., in the chair.

The gold bracelet, studded with brilliants, which was given to the Duchess of Edinburgh by the Royal Albert Yacht Club, was manufactured by Messrs. Hancock and Co., of Bruton-street. It was presented to her Royal Highness on the 6th inst., at Buckingham Palace, by the vice-commander, Captain Conway Gordon, Admiral Sir H. Codrington, and Captain F. Hallows. The Duke is commodore or president of this club.

The Extra Supplement.

DECISIVE CHARGE OF THE LIFE GUARDS AT THE BATTLE OF WATERLOO.

We may assume that this picture is familiar to some of our readers, but we do not think it is so well known as its merits deserve. The composition will, however, speak for itself. The most acceptable observations we can offer in connection with the work will, probably, be a few biographical particulars relating to its comparatively little-known painter, Luke Clennell; especially as the artist's short and brilliant career had a peculiarly painful close, to which this very picture may be regarded as accessory. Luke Clennell was born in 1781, near Morpeth, in Northumberland, and was the son of a farmer. He was apprenticed to a grocer, and for a short time was with a tanner; but, when he had reached sixteen years of age, his love of drawing and making caricatures (which led him into scrapes) induced his friends to apprentice him for seven years to Bewick, the wood-engraver. With this famous artist he made rapid progress. He copied on the wood and engraved the designs of his fellow-pupil, R. Johnson, for the tail-pieces of the "Water Birds," and to these he added some beautiful little sea-pieces and shore views of his own design. In 1801 he came to London, married the daughter of Charles Warren, the engraver, and obtained full employment in wood engraving. Among his works of this class are the illustrations of Falconer's "Shipwreck," Rogers's "Poems," from Stothard's designs, which admirably preserve the designer's grace and feeling; and the diploma of the Highland Society from a design by West, P.R.A., for which the Society of Arts gave him their gold medal. Meanwhile he had been practising his pencil in water colours; he made the designs for Sir Walter Scott's "Border Antiquities," and was a contributor to the Water-colour Exhibition. Samples of his skill in this direction are in the national collection. Oil painting then engaged his attention, and he resolved to abandon wood engraving. His pictures were distinguished in the Academy exhibitions from 1812 till 1816. The picture we engrave was the result of Clennell's successful competition for the premium of 150 gs., offered by the directors of the British Institution for the best sketch of the subject. It was afterwards engraved by Bromley. The success of this most energetic and admirable composition led to his being commissioned by the Earl of Bridgewater to commemorate the dinner to the allied Sovereigns at Guildhall. This undertaking caused him great anxiety, owing to the difficulty of obtaining the required sittings and other causes; and when he seemed to be on the point of succeeding his mind suddenly gave way, at the early age of thirty-six. The remainder of our story is most melancholy. Henceforth the painter's life was spent at intervals in a lunatic asylum, or with his friends in the north in a state of harmless imbecility. When his malady was less severe, he amused himself with attempts at drawing and wood engraving, and even poetry and music; for he had a fine voice, and had known Burns and sung his songs. But his reason was never quite restored, and he died in 1840 at Newcastle-on-Tyne, aged fifty-nine.

Bromley's engraving above mentioned was produced for the benefit of Clennell's family; but the sufferings of his young wife were so great that she also fell a victim to the same fearful malady, and died shortly afterwards. The publication of the engraving, in 1821, was conducted by order of a committee of benevolent gentlemen, Mr. Samuel Rogers the treasurer, and Mr. J. Britton, F.S.A., the hon. secretary. Messrs. Graves and Co., of Pall-mall, allow us to copy the engraving.

THE HORSE SHOW.

The eleventh annual horse show at the Agricultural Hall, Islington, was held on six days last week, including the previous Saturday. The leaping feats of the last two days, the Thursday and Friday, attracted a large number of spectators. Our Illustrations are of two prize-winners among the animals exhibited. The judges of the different classes were the Marquis of Waterford, the Earl of Shannon, Sir G. Wombwell, Bart., Colonel Luttrell, Colonel Kingscote, C.B., M.P., and Colonel Ashley Maude, M.P. These gentlemen had to decide upon the merits of weight-carrying and other hunters, riding-horses, cover hacks and roadsters, park hacks and ladies' horses, harness horses, park cobs, ponies, stallions (roadsters or trotters), and to determine the best tandem and the best four-in-hand, besides selecting the best of Arab, foreign, or colonial horses. The Prince of Wales gained the first prize of £20 in Class X., that of high-stepping cobs for the saddle, with his clever cob, "Bob," which figures in our first Engraving. Mr. W. Armstrong, of Fairfield, Kendal, showed the best hunter in the exhibition—namely, "Cashier"—which thereby won the first prize of £50 in Class III., four-year-old hunters, with the Agricultural Hall cup for the best of all hunters. This horse is the subject of our second Illustration.

DUBLIN UNIVERSITY SPORTS.

On Wednesday and Thursday of last week, in Trinity College Park at Dublin, the students of that famous Irish University showed their powers of muscular limb and deep-breathing chest in the exercises of running, leaping, and throwing, to the admiration of much company. The pleasant summer weather allowed many ladies to be among the spectators, who numbered from ten to fifteen thousand. The Lord Lieutenant of Ireland, the Duke of Abercorn, with Lady Georgiana Hamilton, was present on the second day. Several military bands enlivened the proceedings with music. One of the foot-races is the scene represented in our Illustration.

The forty-second annual meeting of the British Medical Association will be opened at Norwich on Tuesday, Aug. 11, with an address from the president, Mr. E. Copeman, M.D.

The annual exhibition of the Norfolk Agricultural Society has been held at Norwich this week. The Prince of Wales, the Mayor of Exeter, and Mr. Colman, M.P., were among the principal prize-takers in the stock classes.

On Wednesday the Mayor of Birmingham, Mr. Chamberlain, laid the foundation-stone of the new corporate buildings, which are about to be erected on a commanding site adjoining the Townhall. The architect is Mr. Thomason, of Birmingham.

The annual conference of the Lancashire and Cheshire Association of Baptist Churches was opened on Wednesday at Liverpool by an inaugural address from the Moderator. The statistics of the association show a net increase of 811 members during the past year.

Woodcote Hall, situated about three miles from Newport, Salop, the residence of Mr. Charles Cecil Cotes, M.P. for Shrewsbury, took fire on the morning of yesterday week. The dining-room, library, and other apartments were destroyed. A large portion of the pictures and furniture was saved.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.
FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, June 18.

The impotence of the present National Assembly to establish either Monarchy, Empire, or Republic, and the necessity of its speedy dissolution, become more evident every day. On Monday the urgency of definitively constituting the régime under which we have been nominally living during the past four years was debated and put to the vote, and a meagre majority of four in favour of the Republican proposition proves the utter impotence for constituent purposes of the present legislative body. The discussion in question was raised by the Left Centre, which had charged M. Casimir Périer with presenting a project calling upon the Committee of Thirty to take as basis of its labours the first article of the Constitutional law definitively proclaiming the Republic, presented by M. Thiers shortly before his overthrow, and the law of November, 1873, conferring the presidency upon Marshal MacMahon for seven years. M. Périer explained the motives which had led the Left Centre to bring forward this project in a short but energetic speech, in which he successively alluded to the sufferings of all classes of the community. It is necessary, he said, to put an end to the present uncertainty, to effect which a Conservative Republic must be organised; and he concluded by calling upon the Assembly to vote the urgency of his proposition.

M. Lambert de Sainte-Croix, who succeeded him at the tribune, came forward with a bill organising Marshal MacMahon's powers, and expressly specifying that, at the close of the Septennat, the present Republican Constitution might be revised or altogether done away with—a proposal which found a warm supporter in General Changarnier, who urged upon his colleagues the necessity of adopting it. A short address from M. Laboulaye, who energetically seconded M. Périer's motion, followed; and then M. de Kerdrel submitted to the Assembly a third proposition virtually stipulating the maintenance of the statu quo. M. Raoul Duval, who has always passed for a Bonapartist in disguise, profited by the occasion to reveal his true colours, and advocated a plebiscite, amid the plaudits of the Imperialist portion. The startling event of the day, however, was the appearance of the Duc de Larocheffoucauld-Bisaccia, French Ambassador in London, at the tribune with a motion restoring the Monarchy in the person of the Count de Chambord, and conferring the absolute functions of Lieutenant-General of the Kingdom upon Marshal MacMahon. The reading of this proposition was greeted with derisive murmurs by the Left, and with loud applause by the few members belonging to the extreme Royalist fraction. The Chamber eventually divided, and the urgency of M. Casimir Périer's motion was voted by 345 ayes against 341 noes. The proposition of M. de Sainte-Croix was next referred to the Committee of Thirty, but that of the Duc de Larocheffoucauld failed to secure the necessary number of votes to attain that result. M. de Kerdrel temporarily withdrew his proposition in favour of maintaining the statu quo, understood to have been brought forward at Marshal MacMahon's private instigation, and the Assembly separated, profoundly impressed by the importance of the vote on M. Casimir Périer's motion; for, although the majority proved extremely meagre, the result is, nevertheless, highly significant. A month ago M. Périer's proposal would have failed to obtain the same number of votes in its favour. But the recent Bonapartist agitation—notably the election of M. de Bourgoing in the Nièvre and the scandalous circular concerning it which was lately submitted to the Assembly, together with certain disgraceful disturbances of which the St. Lazare railway station has been the scene—appear to have influenced many deputies. At Tuesday's sitting four members, including General de Cussy, Vice-President of the Council, came forward to say that they had or that they intended to have voted against the Casimir Périer proposal; but although the Marquis de Francioli made a frantic attempt to induce President Buffet to reverse Monday's decision, the latter showed himself impartial for once and declined to take any such unconstitutional step.

The consideration of M. Casimir Périer's bill providing for the organisation of the French Republic was begun by the Committee of Thirty yesterday. The Committee unanimously acknowledged the necessity of making its report to the Assembly as speedily as possible, as the measure had been voted urgent.

The disturbances at the St. Lazare railway station which agitated Paris for several days and necessitated the presence of the military were entirely due to the Bonapartists, who sought to revenge themselves for the epithet with which M. Gambetta recently branded them by acts of personal violence. The manifestations began with shakings of fists and shouts of "A bas Gambetta!" and as the sergents-de-ville took the side of the Bonapartist agitators, and dragged Republican deputies quietly passing through the station en route for the Assembly before a commissary of police, personal violence was at last had recourse to. On Thursday evening an individual called the Comte de Sainte-Croix, who had already undergone several years' hard labour for having, when a common soldier, stabbed his corporal in the stomach with a bayonet, struck the ex-dictator in the face with his fist, and was about to repeat the assault with his stick when a deputy, M. Ordinaire, warded off the blow with his hand, several of the fingers of which were severely cut. The Count was arrested, and brought, on Saturday, before the tribunal of correctional police, when, his criminal antecedents having been proved by the public prosecutor, he was summarily sentenced to six months' imprisonment and 200*fr.* fine. In consequence of these disgraceful scenes, the Government—which, through M. de Fourton, the Minister of the Interior, formally defended the culpable negligence and undisguised partisanship of the police—was interpellated by the Republican party in the Assembly; but, terrified at the prospect of a new Ministerial crisis, the Right, although opposed to the Bonapartist agitation, refused to vote against the Cabinet, so that the order of the day was carried by 377 votes to 326.

The attendance at Longchamps last Sunday to witness the running for the Grand Prix de Paris was, perhaps, more numerous than it has ever been since the race was originally established; but, although Marshal MacMahon and Madame de Maréchal, with the Burman Ambassadors and a crowd of state functionaries, occupied the ex-Imperial tribune; although the grand monde was au complet in the Encinte du Pésage, it was generally admitted that the gathering was far from as brilliant as it formerly used to be. The weather, being remarkably windy and far from warm, possibly induced many élégantes to postpone the inauguration of their toilettes d'été until a more propitious occasion; added to which the unusually numerous attendance of the bourgeoisie and the lower classes gave more of a popular character to the gathering than it has yet enjoyed, and necessarily divested it of much of its former exclusive elegance. On the return home up the Avenue de l'Impératrice the proportion of cabs and omnibuses to private carriages was certainly three to one. The race was easily won by Mr. Marshall's colt Trent, who defeated the French favourite Saltarelle—the recent winner of the Chantilly Derby—by a good length.

SPAIN.

It is announced from Madrid that, the bad weather having ceased, the army has resumed its movements; but the only military news is to the effect that Marshal Concha is concentrating his forces at Tafalla. A Pampeluna telegram announces that General Echague had arrived there with 6000 men. He is understood to be operating on the left flank of the Carlists. The defeat of the Carlists under Don Alfonso, at Alcora, near Castellon, in the province of Valencia, is confirmed. The son of Don Henry de Bourbon was killed at the head of the Carlist Zouaves.

By official decree the Council of Public Instruction, abolished by the last Government at Madrid, has been re-established.

ITALY.

In the Senate a Government bill authorising an extensive scheme of harbour improvements was reported against by a committee, who recommended its postponement till the new financial measures had been introduced. The Senate, however, proceeded with its consideration, and adopted the main section of it relative to deepening the harbours at Genoa, Leghorn, and Venice. A Royal decree proroguing the Parliament was promulgated on Tuesday.

The Pope held a Consistory on Monday for opening and shutting the mouths of the cardinals and appointing several bishops. His Holiness blessed a gorgeous banner presented by the College of Georgetown, in America, to "Our Lady of Lourdes." The banner was sent to Rome for that purpose, and was submitted to the Pope by two students of the College of Georgetown, accompanied by their mother, Mrs. Semmes, a relative of the commander of the Alabama. The Pope is said to have appeared in excellent health on Tuesday, the twenty-eighth anniversary of his election, and to have taken an active part in celebrating the day. In receiving a deputation of artists he made a long speech, urging them to persevere in their devotion to the Church and the Holy See. Among the other deputations which went to the Vatican to congratulate the venerable Pontiff were the College of Cardinals, the Noble Guards, and ex-officers of the Papal army.

Great attention has been bestowed on the American pilgrims in Rome. A public reception was given to them yesterday (Friday) week by the Catholic Association. Cardinal Borromeo and Prince Lancelotti delivered speeches in Italian, welcoming them to Rome and commending them for their zeal. They were enrolled honorary members of the chief Roman branch of the association. On Sunday, after mass and a sermon by Cardinal Franchi, amidst the ruins of the catacombs, they were invited to lunch by Mgr. de Mérode. It is said that the sum presented by them to the Pope amounts to £20,000, besides a small box containing nuggets from mines in America. The pilgrims take home with them from Rome an immense number of photographs of the Pope. They informed Cardinal Borromeo of their intention to organise periodical pilgrimages among their Catholic countrymen.

A "Catholic Congress" assembled at Venice, yesterday week, under the honorary presidency of the Patriarch of Venice. The Duke de Salviati was elected actual president by acclamation. At its Sunday sitting telegrams announcing support were read from the Duke of Norfolk, M. Louis Veuillot, and Baron Lohé. The congress held its last sitting on Tuesday, when it discussed the question of the press.

There was a hurricane at Milan on Saturday last, by which thirty persons were injured.

HOLLAND.

While admitting the necessity of improvement, the Finance Minister has stated, in presenting his Budget to the Second Chamber at the Hague, that he is not at present prepared to abolish the sugar duty.

A financial report presented to the Chamber intimates that the deficit for the current year will reach three millions and a half florins. The East Indian Budget shows that up to the present time the Acheen expedition has cost thirteen million florins.

A telegraphic despatch from Acheen, supposed to be of the 10th inst., reports another determined attack on the Dutch positions. It is said to have been repulsed with loss; but the Acheenese are admitted to have fought hard. The health of the Dutch troops is bad.

GERMANY.

The German State Council has voted the extension to all Germany of the new Prussian law for the civil registration of births, deaths, and marriages. On the ground of its being inharmonious with the legislation of the different German States, the Civil Marriage Bill has been rejected by the Council; and Prince Bismarck has been invited to prepare a new measure for the whole Empire. The Council has rejected the proposal of Saxony for establishing in Germany the trial of a certain class of criminal cases by municipal councillors in place of trial by jury.

Herr von der Heydt, formerly Prussian Finance Minister, died at Berlin on Saturday.

About 500 of the principal citizens of Berlin have held a meeting for the purpose of forming a national Liberal association for the capital, where for ten years past at elections for the Diet and city the Progressist party have held possession of the ground unopposed by any national Liberal organisation. Deputy Laaskar, the National Liberal leader, spoke in favour of forming "one great and comprehensive Liberal party."

An international agricultural exhibition has been held at Bremen, at which English stock breeders have achieved fair success. Mr. Farthing, of Stowey Court, carried off two first prizes. Three Hull exhibitors obtained respectively first, second, and third prizes.

RUSSIA.

It is announced from Ems that the Emperors of Russia and Germany have had a cordial meeting.

A special despatch to the Daily Telegraph from St. Petersburg says:—A serious rebellion is going on in Kokand. The Mukhtir has been poisoned and sixteen high officials beheaded.

There was a great fire in Moscow on the 4th inst., amongst a block of wooden houses, when fifty-seven residences in three streets were destroyed, the damage being estimated at 500,000 roubles. No lives were lost, but several firemen were injured.

M. Von Buetzow, the newly-appointed Russian Minister to China, was received by the Emperor at Peking on May 20.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

Baron Kuhn, the Austrian War Minister, has been allowed to exchange his portfolio for the commandant-generalship of Graz. His successor is expected to be Baron von Koller.

The meeting of the international sanitary congress at Vienna has been postponed to July 1. Our Government has appointed Dr. Edward Seaton, assistant medical officer of the Local Government Board, and Dr. Dickson, physician to the British Embassy at Constantinople, to represent the interests of this country in the conference.

DENMARK.

In consequence of the resignation of the Minister of Finance, his colleagues, on Saturday last, announced their intention of also quitting the Ministry; and the King has sent for M. Estrup, a former Minister, to form a new Cabinet.

AMERICA.

The Senate has agreed to the conference report on the currency bill, and has confirmed the appointment of Mr. Bancroft Davis as American Minister at Berlin.

President Grant having intimated that he would not sign the finance bill now before the United States Senate, the House of Representatives has thrown out the bill resulting from the conference of the Committees of the two Houses and ordered a new Committee to be appointed.

A convention of all the cotton exchanges in America has organised a national exchange, with a uniform system of cotton classification. Cotton prospects in the States compare unfavourably with 1873.

INDIA.

In the weekly telegram from the Viceroy of India respecting the famine, it is stated that the reports as to the progress of the coming crops is excellent. Except in a few districts of North Behar, there is no lack of seed-grain. No deaths from starvation are reported. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times telegraphed on Monday that Sir R. Temple has left Monghyr for the Rajeshaye districts. The despatch adds:—"11,200 tons more rice have been ordered for Eastern Tirhoot. The rainfall is copious there. Agricultural operations are proceeding, but only a small harvest is expected in Tirhoot till December. Indigo is largely re-sown. In another telegram he reports that the rain has compelled the closing of the relief works in the North-West Provinces, and the poor-houses have been opened in Butees and Goruckpore." A Renter telegram from Calcutta on Wednesday morning states that 1,700,000 persons are now employed on the relief works, and 300,000 are receiving charitable relief. Agricultural prospects are materially improving in consequence of ample rains.

Cholera still continues to be fatally prevalent in parts. A Calcutta despatch to the Times announces that Mr. Forsyth left Yarkund on May 18, and he is expected at Leh on Saturday. A uniform gauge has been sanctioned for the Indus Valley Railway. The Lahore line is being completed to Rawul Pindé on the narrow gauge, but may be broad hereafter. Works have been sanctioned for thirty miles of the Rangoon to Promé Railway.

Her Majesty's ship Challenger has (a Reuter telegram states) sailed from Auckland.

A Parliamentary return issued on Wednesday shows that the quantity of sugar imported last year was 11,369,512 cwt.

The Queen has given directions for the appointment of Henry Connor, Esq., LL.B., to the Chief Justiceship of the Supreme Court of the Colony of Natal.

At Buenos Ayres President Sarmienti has opened the Congress with a most flattering review of the industrial condition of the country.

A special commission of engineers has been appointed by the French Minister of Public Works to report on the scheme for a submarine tunnel between France and England.

Legal proceedings have been commenced in the French courts against Prince Metternich and Count Montebello in respect of the recent duel between them.

A Reuter's telegram from Melbourne, of Monday's date, says that New South Wales, Queensland, and New Zealand have ratified the arrangements for a duplicate cable via Normanton.

Mlle. Belval, the young French soprano, who so much distinguished herself last season at the Italian Opera House in Paris, under the management of Mr. Strakosch, has made her début at the French Opera in "Les Huguenots," and met with a most enthusiastic reception.

A French detachment in Algeria has had an engagement with some Moorish insurgents who have committed depredations in the south of the colony. The Moors were routed with considerable loss, and it is hoped that the Sahara district will henceforth be safe from their raids.

Among last week's concerts was that of the estimable professor Mr. Charles Gardner, whose own pianoforte performances were prominent features in the programme.

The first yearling sale of the season took place, last Saturday, at the Royal Paddocks, Hampton Court, and realised 3425 guineas.

An amateur performance, under the patronage of the Duke of Edinburgh, is to be given at the Olympic this (Saturday) morning, for the benefit of the Chichester training-ship, the play chosen being "The Hunchback."

With about eighty delegates present, the fortieth annual conference of the British Temperance League was begun at the Temperance Hall at Leicester on Tuesday morning. Mr. J. Barlow, J.P., of Bolton, was re-elected president.

Dean and Lady Stanley, on Saturday last, conducted between sixty and seventy members of the South London Working Men's Institute over Westminster Abbey, in two companies. Tea was provided in the Deanery yard.

The Duchess of Edinburgh has, since her visit with the Duke of Edinburgh to St. Thomas's Hospital, sent a large assortment of toys and books for the children in the Victoria and other wards of the hospital. Their distribution by Lady Mary Butler on behalf of her Royal Highness gave great pleasure not only to the little patients, but to all who have charge of them.

The election for Durham city resulted as follows:—Mr. Herschell (L), 930; Sir Arthur Monck (L), 918; Major Duncan (C), 752; Mr. Barrington (C), 742. At the Wigton Burghs there were 525 for Mr. Mark Stewart (C) and 516 for Mr. Augustus Smith (L). At the general election Mr. Stewart polled 522, and Mr. Young 520. On a scrutiny, however, Mr. Young was declared to be in a majority of one; but by his subsequent elevation to the Scottish Bench a vacancy was created.

At a meeting of the Brighton Town Council, held on Wednesday, the Mayor intimated that Mr. John Bates had bequeathed £12,000, free of legacy duty, to the Mayor and Corporation, with a view to the interest thereon being distributed, on Dec. 21 or 22 in every year, among the poor people of the town who may be over fifty years of age. It was also reported that Mr. Brittan Bailey, of Brighton, after ordering the payment of certain specific legacies, had left the residue of his real and personal estate to various charitable institutions there, including the County Hospital, the Brighton and Hove Dispensary, the Lying-in Institution, the Children's Hospital, and other institutions. The money is to be divided in such proportions as the Mayor and Vicar and certain other persons named shall determine.

On Wednesday the foundation-stone of a new chancel to All Saints' Church, Portsmouth, was laid, with Masonic rites.

At the Mansion House, on Wednesday, the Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress gave a banquet to the Archbishops and Bishops. The Archbishop of Canterbury replied to the principal toast.

On Tuesday week the beautiful new structure which replaces the ancient Norman church of St. Clement, Worlabye, near Brigg, was opened by the Bishop of Lincoln, who preached on the occasion. It has cost £5000.

The revisers of the authorised version of the New Testament met on Tuesday at the Jerusalem Chamber, and continued their second revision of the version of St. Matthew to the end of the nineteenth chapter. Eighteen members were present, the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol being in the chair.

More than ordinary interest was shown, yesterday week, in the service which is held under the dome of St. Paul's, in connection with the 173rd anniversary of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, the occasion being the farewell of the Bishop of Madagascar and his ten missionary associates.

St. James's Hall was filled, on Tuesday night, with the friends of the English Church Union, who had been summoned for the purpose of opposing the Public Worship Regulation Bill. The resolutions were all carried unanimously. The principal speakers were Dr. Pusey and Canon Liddon.

Mr. Mackonochie, on Wednesday, put in a personal appearance to the citation issued against him on letters of request from the Bishop of London. He asked to have his reasons filed, but the Dean of Arches thought it would be contrary to all precedent. Eventually he was allowed eight days to appear.

The Archbishop of Canterbury presided, on Wednesday afternoon, at a meeting of the subscribers to the Wilberforce Memorial, held in Willis's Rooms. A report was read describing the action of the committee appointed to decide on the form of memorial to be adopted. They had agreed that a house, to be called after Bishop Wilberforce, should be leased, and that a body of missionary clergy should be therein maintained, especially for the South London portion of the diocese of Winchester. The contributions already received and promised amounted to £10,974, and the annual subscriptions to £174. On the motion of the Bishop of Winchester, seconded by the Bishop of Peterborough, and supported by Mr. Beresford-Hope, M.P., the report of the committee was adopted.

The parish church of Great Horwood, Bucks, was opened on the 10th inst., after a thorough restoration by Sir Gilbert Scott. The more striking features of the building are a beautiful east window, with its fine flowing tracery; a sedilia, with stone canopies, and an oak rood-screen. The sedilia have been reproduced by Sir Gilbert from some slight remains sufficient to indicate to him what they were; and the screen, which partially remained, has been completed in its original form. We learn from the Guardian that amongst the special gifts which have been received are a handsome oak lectern, the offering of the clergy of the rural deanery; the chalice, the gift of Lady Adams; and a beautifully-worked altar-cover, the gift of the Rev. C. C. Adams. The cost of the restoration has been £4900, and towards this the warden and scholars of New College, Oxford, the lords of the manor, and patrons of the living have contributed £500; Mr. J. G. Hubbard, M.P., £100; and the late Mrs. Coker Adams, £300. But, though largely aided by members of his own family and by the parishioners generally, most of the cost is paid by the Rev. S. T. Adams.

The Incorporated Society for Promoting the Enlargement, Building, and Repairing of Churches and Chapels held its usual monthly meeting (the last but one for the present session), on Monday, at the society's house, 7, Whitehall.—H. Gerard Hoare, Esq., treasurer, in the chair. Grants of money were made in aid of the following objects, viz.:—Building new churches at Biggleswade, Beds; Camberwell, St. Philip, Surrey; Great Malvern, Christ Church; Middlesborough, All Saints; Stoke Newington, All Saints; Middlessex; and Thornes Lane, near Wakefield, York. Rebuilding the church at East Teignmouth, Devon; enlarging or otherwise increasing the accommodation in the churches at Bromley-by-Bow, Middlessex; St. Burian, near Penzance; St. Goran, near St. Austell, Cornwall; Kimbolton, near Leominster; March St. Windreda, Cambridge; Meavy, Devon; Merton, Devon; Outwood, near Redhill, Surrey; Owlpen, near Dursley, Gloucester; Great Plumstead, near Norwich; Earl Stonham, Suffolk; Stetham, near, Ely; and Whitechapel, St. Mark's, Middlessex. Grants were also made from the School-Church and Mission-House Fund towards building school or mission churches at Bucton, in the parish of Bucknell, Salop; Cocker Brook, in the parish of Oswaldtwistle, Lancaster; Newton, in the parish of Field Broughton, Lancaster; and Northumberland Heath, in the parish of Erith, Kent. The society has accepted the trust of a sum of money as a repair fund for Marston church, Great Badworth, Cheshire.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The Encenia, or commemoration of founders and benefactors to the University, was held, on Wednesday, in the Sheldonian Theatre, when the degree of D.C.L. honoris causa was conferred upon the following persons:—The Right Hon. Sir George Mellish, one of the Lords Justices of Appeal; Major-General Sir Garnet Joseph Wolsley, K.C.B., G.C.M.G.; Sir Thomas Erskine May, K.C.B., Clerk of the House of Commons; and Victor Carus, Professor of Comparative Anatomy and Zoology in the University of Leipzig. The undergraduates in the gallery were rather more noisy than usual. In the evening the annual ball was held at the Corn Exchange, and there was a concert at Magdalen.

The Pusey and Ellerton Hebrew Scholarship has been awarded to J. A. Paterson, scholar of Pembroke; F. H. Woods, B.A., scholar of Jesus, being honourably mentioned.

The Kennicott Hebrew Scholarship has been awarded to the Rev. G. H. William, B.A., Jesus College.

The Rev. C. D. Crossman, M.A., scholar of Worcester, has been elected to the vacant fellowship on the foundation of Sir Thomas Cookes in that college.

The examiners for the Craven Scholarships (1874) have awarded them as follow:—Mr. H. H. Asquith, scholar of Balliol, and Mr. H. Broadbent, scholar of Exeter, equal.

CAMBRIDGE.

Cambridge Commencement was celebrated, on Tuesday, with more display than usual. The proceedings are generally of a merely formal character; but this year, as the Cavendish Laboratory was opened, the donor being the Chancellor of the University, his Grace paid a visit to Cambridge to receive the thanks of the senate for his munificent gift, and the occasion was made the opportunity for conferring honorary degrees upon the following distinguished persons:—The Lord Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, Sir Bartle Frere, Sir William Stirling Maxwell, M.P., Sir Charles Lyell, Sir James Paget, Sir Garnet Wolsley, the Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, Dr. Salmon, Dr. Stokes, Mr. E. A. Freeman, M. Leverrier, Professor Greenwood, Mr. Bentham, Mr. Lessell, and Mr. James Russell Lowell. The Lord Chief Justice and Sir Garnet Wolsley had an enthusiastic reception. The prize poems were afterwards recited, and in the evening the Master and Fellows of Trinity College entertained a large company at dinner in the college hall.

Mr. Thomas Herbert Orpen, B.A., late scholar of Christ's, has been elected a Fellow of Pembroke.

At a meeting of the Master and Senior Fellows of St. John's, Professor Miller was elected to a foundation fellowship; and Dean Merivale, Professor Adams, and Mr. Todhunter were elected honorary Fellows of the society.

Mr. George Henry Stuart, B.A., who was bracketed fifth wrangler in the mathematical tripos, 1874, and was awarded the second Smith's prize, has been elected a Fellow of Emmanuel. The following have been elected scholars and exhibitioners of Emmanuel:—Foundation Scholars—B. Wilson, £70; D. E. Higgins, £30. Thorpe Exhibitioners—Stevenson, Flather, Bishop. Johnson Exhibitioner—Colles. Exhibitions were also adjudged to Thurstan, Coutts, Clayton, Higgins, and Chamberlain.

At Downing, Hooton, Stevens, and Munro have been elected foundation scholars. Gratuities of £20 have been awarded to Crosby and Kenny. Prizes for mathematics were awarded to Hurry, Crosby, Hooton, Norman, and Rentoul. For classics, to Peach and Stevens; to Kenny and Munro for law; and to Biss for natural sciences.

At Christ's the following undergraduates have been elected to scholarships:—Third year: Chase, Wilson, Griffiths, £100 each; Macmillan, £60; Mathwin, £50. Second year: Howson, £100; Bather, £30. First year: Dixon, £80; Greaves, Smith, Sharkey, £70 each; Vipan, £50; Grant, Catty, Walker, £30.

At Clare, scholarships have been awarded as follow:—Fulford and Lilly, £60 each; Atkinson, £50; Sutcliffe, Williams, and Mills, £40 each; Rogers, £32. An additional scholarship of £40, tenable for two years, is awarded to Mellison, and scholarships of £20, tenable for the same period, have been adjudged to Pitt, Willis, and Fraser. Prizes of £10 each are given to Arblaster, Kelly, Inchbald, and Fulford.

The Whewell Scholarships for international law have been adjudged as follow:—First scholar, J. E. C. Munro, Downing; second scholar, C. J. Cooper, B.A., St. John's.

At King's the prize for Greek iambics has been awarded to Lilley; to Weldon, Borton, and Douton for divinity; to Molesworth, Blakeley, and Stearn for mathematics; and the Richard's prize to Molesworth.

At Queen's mathematical prizes have been adjudged to Stottard and Walters; for classics to Benè and Duffield. The Pennywhite Exhibition has been awarded to Blackmore.

At St. John's foundation scholarships have been awarded to Clough, Hildyard, Langley, Milne, Nock, Raynor, G. S. Staffurth, and Wellcott, of the third year; Hargreaves, Hunt, M'Farland, Morgan, Raynor, G. H. Simpkinson, Talbot, H. Wace, and J. T. Ward, of the second year. Proper sizarships to Ambridge, Coggin, Easton, Horner, Treadgold, and Trustram, of the second year; and to Heath, M'Alister, and T. S. Tait, of the first year. Sir John Herschel's prize for astronomy has been awarded to Lamplough. A large number of exhibitions have also been adjudged to undergraduates.

The Cambridge University higher examinations began on Monday at Birmingham, Cambridge, Cheltenham, Leeds, Liverpool, London, Manchester, Norwich, Plymouth, and Rugby. The candidates are more numerous than in former years.

The senate of the University of Dublin met last Saturday to consider finally the draught of the Queen's letter regulating the constitution of the future governing body. It was approved of with a few amendments, the only important one being in the clause referring to the election of members of the senate to the council, which as now settled provides that they are elected by the votes of those members of the senate who had not voted at the last election of any existing members of the council either as fellows or professors.

At Durham the University classical scholarship has been gained by W. Hooper, Hatfield Hall—Proxime accesserunt, H. C. R. Marston, Hatfield Hall; W. Milburne, University College. University mathematical scholarship, W. H. Macaulay, University College.

A public meeting was held at Bristol, on Thursday week, under the presidency of the Mayor, to take steps for the establishment of a college of science and literature for Bristol and the West of England. Among the speakers were the Bishop of Exeter, Dr. Jowett (Master of Balliol College, Oxford), Professor Williamson (President of the British Association), Dr. W. B. Carpenter, and others. Last year the faculty of the Bristol Medical School were proposing to establish themselves in new buildings, when they were met by the suggestion that the opportunity should, if possible, be used for the foundation of a technical college of science, of which the medical school might form one department. Negotiations were accordingly begun with the council of the Bristol Museum and Library, with the view of establishing such a college in connection with their institution. At this stage of the proceedings a communication was received from the Master of Balliol informing the committee that his own college, and probably at least one other, would be likely to co-operate in such a work. This led to further negotiations, which ended in a definite offer of co-operation from Balliol and New Colleges. The co-operation of these colleges takes the shape of a promise to assist in the establishment and support of the proposed college by means of a yearly contribution of £300 each for a period of not less than five years, provided that so long as they continue their assistance they shall be represented on the governing body. 2. That the instruction given be literary as well as scientific. 3. That the requirements of adult education be scientifically considered. 4. That the instruction (other than that of the medical classes) be open to women, so far as can be arranged. 5. That lectures on general subjects be provided. To these conditions the committee who had taken charge of the movement readily assented. Resolutions approving of the object of the scheme were unanimously adopted, and liberal offers towards an endowment fund were announced.

The Rev. Dr. Collis, Warden of Trinity College School, Stratford-on-Avon, has appointed Ernest Fynes Olinston, M.A., late scholar of St. John's College, Cambridge, as successor, in September next, to Mr. Gepp, who resigns. Dr. Collis has also appointed the Rev. Theophilus A. Rawson, M.A., of Trinity College, Cambridge, to an assistant mastership in Trinity College School.

The last speech-day of Merchant Taylors' School took place, on Thursday week, in the old school previous to its migration to its new buildings at Charterhouse. Among those present were the Bishops of Ely, Capetown, and Nottingham, and Lord Hatherley. The chief of the prizes were two scholarships at St. John's College, Oxford, to G. Cave and G. H. Wells; the Stuart's Exhibition to Oxford, J. L. Cave.

Speech-day at Harrow is fixed for July 2, when the first stone of the new speech-room will be laid by the Duke of Abercorn.

The Dean of Westminster is announced to preside, next Thursday, at the distribution of prizes and the annual dinner at Cheshunt College, one of the principal institutions for the training of Nonconformist ministers.

POLO AT HURLINGHAM.

This newly-imported Oriental pastime, which may be called "hockey on horseback," was described and illustrated some years ago, as played at Lahore, in North-Western India. Its earliest performers in this country were some officers of the Royal Artillery and of a regiment from India on Woolwich-common. The 9th Lancers have taken the lead in an exercise that agrees so well with the skilful horsemanship, and handling of a shaft with adroit precision, required by their mode of action in the field. The Guards have also patronised this lively game; and on Saturday, the 6th inst., at the opening of the new polo-ground of the Hurlingham Club, in the presence of the Royal Princes and Princesses, Life Guards were matched against Horse Guards. The suburban but rural mansion and estate of Hurlingham, pleasantly situated on the banks of the Thames at Fulham, belongs to a club of noblemen and gentlemen, who meet there almost daily for pigeon-shooting. But its gardens, lawns, paddocks, and groves are suitable for other uses of social recreation; and the polo-ground, 300 yards to 400 yards long and broad, affords a desirable addition to these opportunities of active enjoyment. The company assembled on the opening day was very numerous, including many persons of high rank and fashion. The Prince and Princess of Wales and the Duchess of Edinburgh arrived in one carriage, followed by the Dukes of Edinburgh, Connaught, and Teck in a second. Unfortunately, rain commenced in earnest before the beginning of the game. The match was between the 1st Life Guards and the Royal Horse Guards (Blue). The Blues scored an easy victory by five goals, notwithstanding that their ponies were much smaller than those ridden by the 1st Life Guards. The sides were:—Horse Guards: the Marquis of Worcester, Lord Kilmarnock, the Hon. T. W. Fitzwilliam, the Hon. C. W. Fitzwilliam, and Mr. R. F. Gascoigne; 1st Life Guards: Captain the Hon. R. Talbot, Captain Fellowes, Captain E. M. Dansey, Captain Needham, and Mr. J. G. Dunbar. The umpires (whose office was a sinecure) were:—For the 1st Life Guards, Sir Bache Cunard; and for the Blues, Mr. P. Greene. The first and fourth goals were made by the Marquis of Worcester, the second by the Hon. T. W. Fitzwilliam, and the fifth by the Hon. C. W. Fitzwilliam; all the winning side playing well, although Lord Kilmarnock missed some easy shots. But he made some big hits, which on more than one occasion led to a goal being scored. On the losing side, Captain Dansey tried hard to avert defeat, and once almost succeeded in obtaining a goal.

The Royal Polo Club, at the Lillie-bridge grounds, West Brompton, played its opening match of this season on Tuesday week. Its antagonists were the Monmouthshire Club. There were six players on each side. Those of the Royal Polo Club were Lord Kilmarnock, the Hon. C. Fitzwilliam, Messrs. C. and A. Murietta, Sir Bache Cunard, and Lord Castlereagh. Of the Monmouthshire Club the representatives were Captain Wheeler, Sir Charles Wolsley, Captain Helms, Mr. Mellor, Captain W. H. Wheeler, and Mr. F. Hanbury Williams. The Royal Polo Club won. The officers of the 9th Lancers played at Lillie-bridge three days last week against the Royal Polo Club, the officers of the Household Brigade, and the Monmouthshire Club.

Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar made his annual official inspection of the 3rd City of London Rifles on the Horse Guards' Parade-ground last Saturday. On the same day Major-General Sir J. Hope Grant, G.C.B., made his annual official inspection of the London Scottish Rifles in the gardens of Lambeth Palace; and, like Prince Edward, expressed his satisfaction at the steady and soldier-like bearing of the men. The annual official inspection of the 2nd Middlesex (Customs) Artillery Volunteers took place on the same day at the Tower ditch, the inspecting officer being Colonel Wolsley, R.A. Lieutenant-Colonel Gould addressed the men, and said Colonel Wolsley was very pleased with what he had seen.—The Duke of Cambridge has signified his intention to inspect the London Rifle Brigade in Hyde Park to-day (Saturday). The inspection will be held at five o'clock. Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar will this evening, shortly after six, inspect the 2nd London Rifles on the Horse Guards' parade-ground.

Collections were made on Sunday in most of the churches and chapels on behalf of the Hospital Sunday Fund. The Archbishop of Canterbury and the Bishops of London, Winchester, and Rochester, and Dean Stanley, were among the preachers in the Established Churches. In the Jewish synagogues collections were made on Saturday; in Roman Catholic places of worship they are to be taken next Sunday. The morning service at St. Paul's was attended by the Lord Mayor and Sheriffs in state. The Bishop of Rochester preached. The amount collected was £175. At Westminster Abbey the sum collected was £312. The Lord Mayor and Sheriffs attended in state at the afternoon service. The Prince and Princess of Wales attended morning service at the Temple Church, where Dr. Vaughan preached. The sum collected at the Temple Church was £293; at St. James's, Piccadilly, in the morning, £232; at Grosvenor Chapel, £176; at St. George's, Hanover-square, £101. At the City Temple the collections amounted to £181, and at the Metropolitan Tabernacle (Mr. Spurgeon's) to £210. At Holy Trinity Church, Upper Chelsea, £100 was collected; St. Andrew's, Well-street, £232; St. Michael's, Chester-square, £259; St. Jude's, South Kensington, £241; St. James's, Westmorland-street, £150; St. Thomas's, Stamford-hill, £120; Regent-square Presbyterian church, £110; St. Peter's, Onalov-gardens, £253; St. Stephen's, Paddington, £400; All Saints, Knightsbridge, £155. The amount collected at St. Paul's was £320 less than last year, and at the Temple Church £70 less. The collection at Westminster Abbey showed an increase of about £20.

OPENING MATCH OF THE POLO CLUB, AT HURLINGHAM.

SCENE FROM "IL TALISMANO," AT DRURY LANE THEATRE.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

The Prime Minister is now placed physically in the same category as Chatham and Palmerston—that is, he is becoming a martyr to gout. For two evenings, "shod with felt," he bravely bore up against his enemy and kept his place in the House; but at length he was compelled to strike, and for a time he was enabled to appear but once. This has brought up a curious state of uncertainty as to who is deputy leader in the absence of the Premier. According to etiquette, the Home Secretary, who is foremost in rank, as first Secretary of State, would be guide and director when the leader proper was not present; but the one thing in the matter that is certain is that Mr. Cross is not the delegate of his chief. It would seem that the sub-leadership is put into commission, Mr. Hardy officiating at one time and the Chancellor of the Exchequer at another, and sometimes both together. Now Mr. Hardy is pre-eminent and then Sir Stafford Northcote is predominant; and some are led to the conclusion that Mr. Disraeli is not unwilling to allow anyone to acquire any of that paramount influence with the House which he undoubtedly possesses, and therefore changes his lieutenants at intervals. Generally this answers very well, both Mr. Hardy and Sir Stafford Northcote exhibiting adequate tact in the performance of a duty which is, perhaps, not so difficult, in the face of a helpless Opposition, as it has been ere now.

Sometimes, however, the absence of Mr. Disraeli has been decidedly felt. For instance, he was away when the formal motion was made by which private members were to be deprived of their Tuesday evenings, and Mr. Hardy undertook to "bel. the cat"—that is, he made the possibly prickly proposal. Under these circumstances, those gentlemen who considered themselves victims did not hesitate to pour out their grievances. They were led by Sir George Jenkinson, who was the first to be disestablished of a motion, and who was very plaintive and hardly resigned; while Sir Wilfrid Lawson wickedly lamented the absorption into the Treasury Bench of Mr. Cavendish Bentinck and Mr. J. Lowther, who used, in their unattached days, to be the staunchest champions of the rights of private members. No one has had more "innings" this Session than Mr. Butt; nevertheless, he had a good case when he protested against his being deprived of the day which he had obtained for bringing on the question of Home Rule in a palpable shape. All, however, appeared to be settled, and Mr. Hardy had returned thanks with effusion, when there arose Mr. Martin, the Irish nationalist par excellence, whose aspect somehow suggests the idea of a hermit of great sanctity, and, in his low, gentle tones, which give so much effect to his vigorous and epigrammatic sayings, announced that he had made no speech, moved no motion, this year, and that he was about to be deprived of the opportunity of discussing the only subject on which he intended to speak. There was a mixture of pathos and quiet humour in what he said, which was effective, though the humour was the most appreciated; but he kindled into force and dignity when he declared that nothing could or should content Ireland but a Home Parliament. Sad to say, notwithstanding the reality and intensity of this declaration, the laughter which was going on was increased. A renewal of remonstrance occurred, in which Mr. Sullivan, of course, took part; for there is scarcely any discussion, small or great, in which he does not intervene, and the discussion got very Irish and hot. Whereupon the second commissioner of the leadership, Sir Stafford Northcote, interposed, and in very languid tones said that if the proposal to appropriate Tuesdays for the Government was objected to, there was the alternative of immediate "morning sittings." At this there was a loud groan of "No," probably from old members, who know what a terrible infliction those sittings are, and the matter soon dropped.

Successful first appearances are interesting, and should be chronicled. One night, when the Government Factories Bill was in debate, and immediately after Mr. Fawcett had made one of his most tremendous speeches, which for style and manner suggest the idea of arguing with a Nasmyth steam-hammer, there bounded up a personable young gentleman who dashed vehemently, confidently, and in the loudest tones of voice into the discussion. It was soon found that what he was saying was not mere impulsive bounce, but that he knew what he was talking about. He proved to be Mr. Edward Stanhope, a younger son of Earl Stanhope, who had been an assistant commissioner in an inquiry on a cognate subject to that in hand, so that he was able, though apparently very young, to bring his personal experience to bear upon the discussion. In the same debate there presently rose a member just a week old—to wit, Mr. Evelyn Ashley, who has just been returned for Poole. As a son of Lord Shaftesbury, he has an hereditary right to speak on the factory question; but by his zeal, knowledge of the subject, and his fluency of speech he established a right of his own to the consideration of the House. It is seldom, indeed, that an absolute "breakdown" occurs in the House; but even such a catastrophe has now to be recorded. A gentleman of mature age, stately presence, and of a nationality that is presumed to be peculiarly endowed with the gifts of shrewdness, coolness, and calculation, having given formal notice of an amendment, and therefore must have prepared himself to speak, was so overcome with diffidence, and that in a very thin House, as to be compelled to forego his observations and sink oppressed into his seat.

So many and so incessant have been the discussions in the House on strong drink that the legislative atmosphere has, metaphorically speaking, been charged with alcohol. There has been "liquor here, liquor there, liquor everywhere, but not a drop to drink." The Intoxicating Bill, as it is familiarly called, has been the prevailing topic, and it has been curious to see how fiercely some members have fought for extension of the time wherein strong drink may be obtained, of all times in the world, at the early hours of the morning. Fallaciously applying the word "refreshment" to draughts of beer or drams of spirits consumed between six and seven a.m., in the interests of the labouring class it has been sought to increase the facility for this fearful practice by making the hour in the morning at which men may begin drinking, in the alcoholic sense of that term, five of the clock. Then there is a continued struggle to adapt hours of opening and closing drink-places especially to every particular district, in opposition to the main principle of the bill, which is uniformity of hours; and to this end it has been sought to reintroduce the discretion of the licensing magistrates, which was so peremptorily tabooed on the introduction of the measure. This has led to a Ministerial contretemps, for one evening an amendment was moved by a staunch supporter of the Government, for which thirty or forty of their adherents, joining the Opposition, voted.

The Intoxicating Bill being laid aside for a day, the interval was devoted to the Permissive Liquor Bill, so the alcoholic continuity was not broken. This time Sir Wilfrid Lawson did not open the debate; but it was left to Mr. Whedhouse to utter much "sound and fury signifying nothing" to comparative vacancy for nearly an hour. Anon the debate broadened and became more animated. Mr. Roebuck made a vitriolic contribution to it, and at the moment when it was approaching boiling heat Sir Wilfrid Lawson struck in, and was wittier, droller, more good-humoured, and more fallacious in argument than ever. If his speech had a fault, it was that it was a little too long; but, like the Irish post-boy, who always reserved a gallop for his last mile, he kept some of his best jokes for the penultimate part of his speech. The House was in tip-top spirits, ready to cheer and to laugh on the least provocation; so that Mr. David Davies, who has established himself as one of the jesters of the assembly, was welcomed with shouts, and all his odd, quaint sayings were rewarded with an applause in which some people, might have fancied that they detected a touch of ridicule. Indeed, after a time, when Mr. Davies became too eccentric, to use a mild term, the humour changed, and he was decidedly snubbed and formally put down. Soon there appeared a member who looks as if he was the smallest man in the world, but symmetrically formed, with an expressive countenance, fine eye, and evidently possessed of a glowing temperament and an enthusiastic and philanthropic spirit. This proved to be Dr. O'Leary, new member for Drogheda. He dashed almost furiously into the discussion, and, bringing his therapeutic knowledge into play, told how alcohol could be made "a good familiar creature." It, however, happened that he gave illustrations of the use, as distinguished from the abuse, of strong drinks in so unconsciously comical a manner that roars of laughter interrupted that which in itself was a medico-chemical lecture. Dr. O'Leary bore the interruptions with all good humour, only vehemently repeating statements which he considered important again and again, lest they should be lost amid the hubbub of laughter and cheers which prevailed. The Permissive Bill in the result received another blow, and not the less because the number of those who voted for and against it was less than that of last year.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week the subjects of Cadets for the Navy, the Observation of the Transit of Venus, the Position of the Scotch and Irish Peerage, and the Mode of Electing Scotch and Irish Representative Peers were discussed. The India Councils Bill and the Wenlock Elementary Education Bill were read the third time and passed.

The report on the amendments to the Scotch Church Patronage Bill was agreed to on Monday, and the bill was ordered to be read the third time. The Bishop of Peterborough had on the notice-paper amendments to the Public Worship Regulation Bill, which promised to lead to a long and animated discussion, in anticipation of which the House was crowded. The Bishop, however, withdrew his amendments, and the bill finally passed through Committee. The Statute Law Revision Bill was read the second time.

On Tuesday the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment Bill, the Infants' Contracts Bill, and the Statute Law Revision Bill were passed through Committee; the Married Women's Property Act (1870) Amendment Bill and the Local Government Provisional Orders (No. 2) Bill were read the second time; the Church Patronage (Scotland) Bill and the Magistrates (Ireland) and Commissioners of Dublin Police Salaries Bill were read the third time and passed.

On Thursday the Court of Judicature (Ireland) Bill, after some discussion, was reported, with amendments. The Four Courts Marshalsea (Dublin) Bill, the Local Government Boards Provisional Orders Confirmation (Nos. 4 and 5) Bills, and the Revenue Officers' Disabilities Bill were read the second time. The Infants' Contracts Bill was read the third time and passed. Several other bills were advanced a stage.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

A proposal of Mr. Newdegate's that the Government should bring in a bill for establishing inquiry into monastic and conventual institutions was debated, yesterday week, and rejected by 237 votes to 94. There were discussions on the admission of female students to the medical school of the University of Edinburgh, the method of determining the constitutionality of Acts by colonial Legislature, sent for approval to her Majesty, of medical supervision of convict prisons in Ireland, and other subjects.

Five notices of motion, on going into Committee of Supply, having fallen through, Mr. Lyon Playfair got an early hearing, on Monday, for his motion for a Select Committee to consider how best might be secured an improved condition of Ministerial responsibility in respect of the administration of the votes for education, art, and science. This motion was debated and negatived. The Education Estimates were then moved in Committee of Supply, and the general subject discussed very fully. This year the education vote for England and Wales amounts to £1,356,852. Ultimately the vote was agreed to. The science and art votes, as well as the Scotch education, Galway Colleges, Post Office, packet service, and telegraph votes were taken.

The Intoxicating Liquors Bill was, on Tuesday, taken upon the report, and the greater part of the sitting was occupied in discussing numerous amendments, a few of which were adopted.

Sir Wilfrid Lawson's Permissive Prohibitory Liquor Bill came before the House for second reading on Wednesday, and, having been discussed at great length, was rejected by 301 votes to 75. The remainder of the sitting was chiefly occupied with the discussion of the Rabbits Bill, the second reading of which was moved by Mr. Pell. Its main object was to disentangle the rabbit from the game laws, and make clear the law in relation to the killing of such animals and trespassing in search of them. Eventually it became a dropped order by lapse of time. The Personation Bill was read the second time, and the Working Men's Dwellings Bill was passed through Committee. A bill was brought in to amend the law with reference to the licensing of apothecaries, chemists, and druggists.

On Thursday Mr. G. Hardy, in reply to a question from Sir W. Lawson, stated that Lord Aylesford had made an apology to the Great Western Railway Company for his over zeal in endeavouring, whilst at the head of a yeomanry troop, to enter the station at Leamington on the occasion of her Majesty's journey to the north, and that he had paid a sum of money to the railway officials. Under such circumstances, the military authorities would take no further steps in the matter. The consideration of the Intoxicating Liquors Bill and the Land Bills from the Lords occupied the House during the greater portion of the night.

The death of Mr. John Blackie, sen., at the age of ninety-two, is announced. He was (says the Glasgow Citizen) the founder of one of the principal publishing firms in the country, and contributed greatly to the spread of sound and useful literature during the early part of the present century.

An international congress of Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals was opened on Wednesday, at the rooms of the Society of Arts, under the presidency of Lord Harrowby. Baroness Burdett-Coutts was on the platform. Most European countries were represented.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

THE ASCOT MEETING.

With a truly regal amount of added money, and entries which comprised the cream of our thoroughbreds, nothing but fine weather was wanted to render the Ascot meeting a great success. Unfortunately, this cannot be commanded, and the bitter wind and wintery cold on the first day would have been seasonable in March or November. Notwithstanding this great drawback, however, the attendance was very large, and the Royal procession more brilliant than usual, as the Prince and Princess of Wales, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duke of Connaught, Prince and Princess Christian, and the Duke and Duchess of Teck drove up the course prior to the first race. Proceedings commenced with the Trial Stakes over the New Mile, which proved far too severe for Oxonian; and Thunder, who appears to have fully recovered his great form of last season, and has proved a bargain to Matthew Dawson at £1000, had it all his own way from the commencement of the inclosure. The Maiden Plate, for two-year-olds, was a very favourite race with Sir Joseph Hawley, who chose it for the successful début of The Palmer and Rosierucian, so it is a little singular that it should once more be won by a youngster of his breeding. This is an own brother to Pero Gomez by Beadsman—Salamanca, who was purchased by Mr. Houldsworth for 1300 gu., at the sale of Sir Joseph's stud last year. He is a bay colt, with great size and power, and we should think him a very likely candidate for the highest turf honours, but that he was heavily bandaged on the fore-legs, which seem scarcely strong enough to carry his heavy frame through a long career. Strathavin, the second, is a common-looking roan, who is scarcely likely to improve much; and, among those unplaced, was Camilla, a half sister to Prince Charlie, by Saunterer—Eastern Princess, who, though rather small, has all her sire's quality, and will do better later in the season. The Prince of Wales's Stakes was virtually reduced to a match between the stable companions, Atlantio and Leolinus; and though the former had to concede 12 lb., and only finished a head in front of Sir Richard Bulkeley's horse in the Derby, the precedents of Queen's Messenger and Wenlock, and King of the Forest and Ripponden, were in his favour, and he started at the head of the quotations. Leolinus, however, took full advantage of his great pull in the weights, and, making the whole of the running, was never caught, though Atlantio, who ran with all his usual gameness, made a brilliant effort at the finish. The Ascot Stakes was not a particularly interesting race, as the class of animals that started was decidedly "below par." Once more two stable companions were first and second; but whereas Feve (6 st. 10 lb.) was a strong favourite, Coventry (6 st. 3 lb.), the winner, was allowed to start at 20 to 1. Blenheim's life for the last two seasons has been spent in unsuccessful efforts to defeat Prince Charlie, and he must be one of the gamest horses in training to stand the repeated punishment. At last, however, he has earned his reward; for in the Queen's Stand Plate he had Prince Charlie in trouble a quarter of a mile from home, and won easily by two lengths. So for the first time the "Prince of the T.Y.C." has been beaten over his own course; but it was clearly apparent that, for some unexplained reason, he was nothing like himself; and, in any case, one defeat cannot tarnish so many glorious victories, and Prince Charlie will always be remembered as the fastest horse that ever trod the turf. The withdrawal of Kaiser, who was in reserve for the Cup, spoilt the chief interest of the Gold Vase, which appeared to be at the mercy of Organist. A very slowly-run race, however, did not enable him to reap the full advantage of his fine staying powers, and he only just beat Montargis by a head—indeed, it was the universal opinion that with Fordham or Chalonier on his back the French horse would have won easily. Miss Toto was last throughout, but might have done better had she been ridden differently, as for the first half of the distance she was pulling double, and wasted a great deal of strength in fighting for her head. Still, it is probable that a mile and a quarter is her best distance, and she does not relish a cup course.

The weather on Wednesday was so threatening that the attendance was comparatively small, and the racing of course was not equal to that of the Tuesday, which is always the best of the four days. After his fine performance in the Derby, Couronne de Fer was naturally made a hot favourite for a Biennial over the Old Mile; but the Ascot hill is a terrible obstacle to the success of a roarer, and both Lemnos and Spectator finished in front of him, the former winning as he chose. By a curious coincidence, they passed the judge in precisely the same order as they did in this race last season; and Quantock, who was a good deal fancied in some quarters, found himself quite out of his element in such company. Lemnos ran well for a long distance in the Prince of Wales's Stakes, and it is clear that but for meeting with an accident in the course of the race he must have won the City and Suburban. Atlantio had no trouble in conceding weight to the three wretches opposed to him in the Ascot Derby; but Apology was asked to do a great thing in the Coronation Stakes, in which she had to give no less than 17 lb. to Blancheleur. She accomplished it, however, in such brilliant style that she must have had any amount in hand in the One Thousand, in which Blancheleur, meeting her on even terms, was scarcely a length behind, and is very likely to follow in the footsteps of Achievement, Formosa, Hannah, and Marie Stuart, on the town moor at Doncaster. After her race she was backed several times at 1000 to 400 for the St. Leger, and is now decidedly first favourite for the "red ribbon." The Royal Hunt Cup, which brought twenty-six to the post, admits of little description, as the ex-hurdle-racer Lowlander (7 st. 7 lb.) took the lead immediately the flag fell, and won in the commonest of canters by half a dozen lengths. Maid of Perth (7 st. 2 lb.) was second, and Flower of Dorset (7 st. 5 lb.) third; but these positions may only have been obtained on sufferance, as so many horses were stopped when it was seen that they had not the smallest chance of success. The smart Ladylove had an easy task in a Triennial over the T.Y.C., in which Mr. Savile ran a brother to Ryshworth; he is a thorough Skirmisher in appearance; and, though he ran very gamely, wants more time, and may do better towards the close of the season. If there is a good two-year-old in the Fern Hill Stakes, it generally secures a victory, and the race this year proved no exception to the rule, for Galopin did just as he liked with his four opponents. He is a grand colt, being already as big as many three-year-olds, and has improved immensely since his first appearance at Epsom. General satisfaction was expressed that so good but unlucky a sportsman as Prince Bathyan at length owns a really first-class horse. Slumber, who is very speedy, defeated all the rest; but Quantock again performed extremely badly.

Thursday morning was cloudy and cold, but the rain held off, and just before the hour fixed for the commencement of the racing the sun shone forth in fitful gleams. The attendance was enormous, the lawn being crowded. The Royal party came in state in the same order as on Tuesday, and were greeted with immense cheering. The St. James's Palace Stakes, with which the proceedings commenced, was won, after a fine race, by Leolinus, the succeeding event, the Eleventh Biennial, being carried off by the outsider Cambysses, the favourite, Colonel, being able to get no nearer than third. Then six weighed out for the Cup, the great event of the week, and the excitement became intense. Boiard maintained the position of favourite to the end, although each of the other competitors met with substantial support at their quoted prices. Boiard, however, won at the finish, with something to spare; Doncaster and Flageolet running a dead heat for second place.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

The Court of Aldermen has decided to grant to Mr. Jonas, the retiring governor of Newgate, a pension of £450 per annum.

Mr. John Walter, M.P., has consented to preside at the anniversary festival of the Printers' Corporation on July 15.

The Bank rate was on Thursday reduced from 3 per cent, to which it was lowered on the 4th inst., to 2½ per cent.

The president of the Geological Society held a reception, on Wednesday, of the Fellows, at their new rooms at Burlington House, to which they have removed from Somerset House.

Lord Selborne presided at the fortieth anniversary dinner of the Solicitors' Benevolent Association, at Willis's Rooms, on Wednesday night. The subscriptions amounted to £519.

The Mansion House Fund for the relief of the distress caused by the famine in Bengal now amounts to £117,000, of which £100,000 has been transmitted to India.

The sale of the Barker collection by Messrs. Christie and Manson, which occupied five days, was concluded on Thursday week, the total proceeds of the sale being £65,389.

About 2000 persons sat down to the annual dinner of the licensed victuallers, at the Crystal Palace, on Thursday week, and £4500 was subscribed in aid of the asylum.

The new subway connecting the Metropolitan District and Metropolitan Railways with the Houses of Parliament and the courts of law at Westminster Hall was opened on Monday.

At a meeting of the Royal Humane Society, on Tuesday evening, the silver medallion was unanimously voted to Cecil Herbert Macmillan, nine years of age, for saving two brothers named Cardwell, the youngest being fourteen years old, who were in danger of drowning, near Melbourne, Victoria.

The London Conservative Association held a banquet on Wednesday night at the Cannon-street Hotel, presided over by Mr. R. N. Fowler. Sir Stafford Northcote, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, was the principal speaker. A congratulatory letter was read from Mr. Disraeli.

Sir Stephen Glynne, Bart., died suddenly on Wednesday morning. He had just come to town from Hawarden Castle, and was walking in Shoreditch towards the Great Eastern Railway station, when he staggered and fell down. He was conveyed to the house of a surgeon close by; but he never rallied, and died in twenty minutes.

At a meeting of the Statistical Society, on Tuesday, Sir Charles Dilke read a paper on Local Government among Different Nations. It embodied a brief review of the local institutions and administration of the principal countries in Europe. This was followed by an essay on the Co-Operative Land Movement, read by Mr. Braybrook, F.S.A.

The seventy-first annual meeting of the friends and supporters of the Society for the Suppression of Vice was held, on Wednesday, at the Freemasons' Tavern, under the presidency of Lord Ebury. Mr. Collette, the secretary, read the report, detailing at some length the operations of the society during the past year. The income for the year had been £611, and, after deducting the expenditure, there remained a balance of £55.

At Wednesday's meeting of the School Board for London a report of the statistical committee upon the application of the Industrial Schools Act was brought up. The other subjects of discussion were a report from the school management committee respecting the offer of £500 from Mr. Peck for the encouragement of religious education, and the recommendation of the same body relating to the offer of £100 from Mrs. Baines, to be given as prizes for essays in cookery and home-work.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 95,036, of whom 33,489 were in workhouses and 61,547 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 6854, 11,639, and 30,239 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 496, of whom 323 were men, 131 women, and 42 children under sixteen.

An addition has been made to the learned societies of London by the formation of an association for the study of musical art and science in all its branches. Among those who have already enrolled their names are Messrs. W. Chappell, F.S.A., George Grove, G. A. Macfarren, John Hullah, Dr. Pole, and Professor Tyndall. Dr. Stainer, organist of St. Paul's Cathedral, will act as secretary to the society, admission to which will be reserved for those who have made a study of some form of the art or its history.

At the Crystal Palace to-day (Saturday) the great rose show will take place. On Thursday next there will be an afternoon entertainment and an exhibition of fireworks will take place on that evening; while on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday the entire system of fountains will be displayed immediately at the close of each Handel performance. The week will be brought to a conclusion by a Shakespearean performance on Saturday next, 27th, as well as by the annual gathering of the German Gymnastic Society.

The anniversary festival in aid of the funds of the Royal Caledonian Asylum was celebrated, on Monday evening, at the Freemasons' Tavern—under the presidency of Sir S. Baker. There was a numerous attendance, both of ladies and gentlemen, many of the latter being attired in Highland dress and military costume. Mr. J. Cato-Daniel, secretary, announced subscriptions amounting to about £2000, including donations of a hundred guineas each from the Duke of Buccleuch and Mr. Denny, Dumbarton.

The eighth annual meeting of the Victoria (Philosophical) Institute was held, on Monday, at the House of the Society of Arts—Mr. Charles Brooke, F.R.S., Vice-President, in the chair. Captain F. Petrie, the honorary secretary, read the report; it showed a marked improvement, not only in the society's members, which had increased by 101, and now reached 501 (two-thirds of whom were country and foreign members), but also in the importance of the subjects taken up, especially those written on by Bishop Claughton, Professor Challis, Professor Morris, and others. The outside demand for the society's publications has again doubled itself, and the new "People's Editions" of the papers are much sought after.

The annual distribution of prizes to students of the Female School of Art took place, on Thursday afternoon, in the theatre of the Museum of Geology, Jermyn-street—the Archbishop of York presiding.

Earl Ducie presided, last Saturday, at a meeting of the friends and patrons of the Samaritan Free Hospital, a new branch of which was opened in Dorset-street. Lord Selborne, who was one of the speakers, in proposing the principal resolution, showed that the hospital had been remarkably successful in its treatment of the diseases of women. His Lordship passed a glowing eulogy on Mr. Spencer Wells, one of its surgeons. The meeting was also addressed by Dr. Savage, Sir T. Chambers, M.P., Mr. Daniels, Mr. Forsyth, and the Rev. Mr. Holland; and the secretary announced the receipt of subscriptions to the amount of £500, in response to an appeal by circular signed by Earl Ducie.

The Lord Mayor presided, on Tuesday, at the annual meeting of the Royal Society for the Protection of Life from Fire. It was stated in the report that during the year five new fire-escapes were forwarded to towns outside the metropolis. Attention was directed to the special danger connected with model lodging-houses and the lofty buildings now erected where sites are valuable. The silver medal of the society, with £5, was awarded to William Murphy, fireman, for a courageous though unsuccessful attempt to save life at a fire in Great Windmill-street; and a silver medal was given to Police-Sergeant Faulkner, who rescued the fireman Murphy on the same occasion, after he had become insensible through the heat and smoke. Testimonials on vellum, each with a pecuniary reward, were presented to several firemen and civilians who had saved lives at fires at the imminent risk of their own.

There were 2263 births and 1204 deaths registered in London last week. The births were 60 above, and the deaths 198 below, the average. The annual death-rate from all causes, which in the two previous weeks had been equal to 21 and 19 per 1000, further declined last week to 18—a lower rate than has prevailed in any previous week this year. The deaths included 3 from smallpox, 32 from measles, 38 from scarlet fever, 3 from diphtheria, 31 from whooping-cough, 33 from different forms of fever, and 39 from diarrhoea. The 33 deaths referred to fever were within 7 of the average number, and included 8 certified as typhus, 17 as enteric or typhoid, and 8 as simple continued fever. The deaths referred to diseases of the respiratory organs and phthisis, which in the two previous weeks had been 437 and 363, further declined last week to 327, and were 58 below the average. Seven deaths were caused by street accidents.

When the inquiry into the adulteration of food was resumed before the House of Commons Committee, on Monday, Dr. Augustus Voelcker, chemist to the Royal Agricultural Society, was examined at some length. He gave much valuable information, and expressed his opinion that it was desirable to extend the operation of the Adulteration Act to cattle foods. Dr. Voelcker was in favour of establishing an analytical court of appeal, for he was convinced that the food analysts by their excesses had been the greatest enemies of the Act. "Australian" and "Dutch" butter were the subjects of investigation before the Committee. Dr. Voelcker described both compounds, the staple ingredient in which is American lard. With respect to milk, Dr. Voelcker countenanced the plea of the sellers that allowance ought to be made for natural variations. He said he was astonished at analysts professing to fix the exact quantity of water added. Another witness was Mr. Berringer, a starch manufacturer, who stated that he had re-dried tea which had been damaged by sea-water; and that formerly he had been in the practice of re-facing tea, but not injuriously.

LAW AND POLICE.

Several actions for compensation were tried in the law courts last Saturday, which was the first day of the after-term sittings. In the Court of Queen's Bench Mr. Brinsley, a civil engineer, obtained £550 compensation for injuries received in an accident on the Metropolitan District Railway in August last. In the Exchequer Court the London Tramways Company was cast in £30 damages done to a brougham with which one of their cars came into collision at Clapham-rise.

Having partly heard the arguments on the motion to restrain in the provinces the performance of "La Fille de Madame Angot," Vice-Chancellor Malins, yesterday week, said his impression was up to the present time much in favour of the plaintiffs, Mr. and Mrs. Liston, as opposed to the defendants, Miss Emily Soldene and her husband, Mr. Powell; but he strongly recommended a settlement of the dispute.

Mr. Whalley was, on Wednesday, sued in the Court of Queen's Bench by Mr. East, of the Queen's Hotel, St. Martin's-le-Grand, a fellow-champion of the Claimant, for £100 advanced to the defence fund. Plaintiff having alleged that the money was advanced on Mr. Whalley's personal security, a verdict was given for the full amount.

An action in the Common Pleas was before Mr. Under-Sheriff Burchell and a special jury, at the Sheriff's Court, Red Lion-square, to assess the amount of compensation to be awarded in an action of breach of promise of marriage, in which the damages were laid at £10,000. The plaintiff was Miss Elizabeth Bottenheim, and the defendant Elias J. Davis. Judgment having been allowed to go by default, the suit was sent to this court on the question of damages. An arrangement was come to, and the damages were assessed at £1000.

A will case came up on Monday for proof before the Lord Justice Clerk at Edinburgh. Miss Jessie Crichton, of Newmill, Dunfermline, died leaving property worth from £4000 to £7000, and the residue, after the payment of debts and legacies, was left to the daughter of her legal adviser, a Dunfermline solicitor. The pursuers, Richard and Andrew Crichton, the former a shoemaker and the latter a pensioner, are half brothers of the deceased lady, and were left only £5 each. They contended that at the date of the will their sister was insane, and that her law agent, Mr. J. P. Souter, had obtained her signature improperly. They asked also that an agreement should be quashed under which they gave up their legal right in consideration of a money payment of £600. Before much of the evidence had been taken a compromise was agreed to, under which, in addition to this £600, the pursuers are to be paid £1500.

In the Court of Chancery, Edinburgh, on Tuesday, before Sheriff M'Laren, the claim of Mr. Fulton to the Eglinton estates was abandoned, and expenses were awarded to the Earl of Eglinton in so far as he had defended the case.

Sir W. Carroll, who was Lord Mayor of Dublin in 1869 and 1870, brought an action for libel in the Dublin Court of Queen's Bench, last Saturday, against an artist, claiming £500 as damages for the publication of a caricature in which Sir William was represented suffering from a fit of gout with his legs encased in bandages, and underneath the words, "Is there anything I can go for to fetch for to carry for to get—a Lord Mayor, a Collector-General, a City Marshal, and an Apothecary-General, a City Treasurer, a Town Councillor, anything, everything." The jury returned a verdict for the plaintiff, with £40 damages. In the libel case of "Carroll v. Hayes," tried in Dublin on Tuesday, the jury found a verdict for the plaintiff, with one farthing damages. The Chief Justice certified for costs, upon the ground that there was personal malice, that the publication was wilful, and that the defendant had been asked to apologise and had refused.

Henry Jacobs, the Prussian Jew who has distinguished himself in the Court of Queen's Bench by his acquaintance with English statute law, has learned something of the English doctrine of "contempt of court." He was charged, yesterday week, with having altered the indorsement of Mr. Justice Brett on a summons at chambers. His Lordship's "No order" had been erased and an address written over it. Jacobs said it had been done by a solicitor's clerk, whose address he did not know. He was detained in court till the clerk—one Duffield—came, and explained that Jacobs had brought him the summons with the Judge's order erased, and had asked him to fill in the substituted words. The Chief Justice severely censured Duffield, and sent Jacobs to gaol for six months.

Before the Lord Chief Baron, in the Central Criminal Court, the five men charged with conspiring to defeat the ends of justice by preventing Emily Easterby from giving evidence against the brothers Diprose were put on trial. At the close of the evidence, yesterday week, Mr. Poland summed up for the prosecution. The defence made by Hammond and Baldwin was that they had acted in the matter as the Diproses' servants, while for Harris it was contended that he had acted merely in his capacity of attorney. By the Judge's direction Wells was acquitted, and the other three convicted. Harris was sentenced to fifteen months' imprisonment, Hammond to four, and Baldwin to six months' hard labour. Holman, who had pleaded guilty, and given evidence criminating his companions, was discharged on his recognisances to come up for judgment when called upon. Edward Clapp, who attempted to poison his child by giving its nurse a tin of milk mixed with white precipitate for its use, was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

The June Sessions of the Peace for Middlesex were opened on Monday. Sentence of imprisonment, with hard labour, for twelve months was passed on William Dalzell Pearce, a retired naval officer, aged thirty-two. The prisoner's crime was obtaining money by false pretences. Arthur Jones, a plumber, was convicted of stealing a silver inkstand, value £15, from the residence of Sir William Stephenson, one of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. A previous conviction being recorded against him, he was sentenced to twelve months' imprisonment, with hard labour. On Tuesday William E. Lord, aged eleven, who was convicted last session of stealing £2 5s. 6d. in the dwelling-house of Charles Lavender, was brought up for judgment. The prisoner, it was stated, had been led into the commission of crime by having read penny publications relating to the adventures of highwaymen. Mr. Serjeant Cox said he should not send the prisoner to a reformatory, as he was a very clever boy, and might be the means of corrupting other boys. He meant to teach him that he was mistaken in thinking crime was a grand thing. He would teach him that it was very degrading. The learned Serjeant then ordered the boy to be kept to hard labour for six months, and during that time to be twice whipped, receiving each time fifteen strokes with a birch rod. Mrs. Doherty, who had pleaded to an indictment charging her with an attempt to commit suicide, was certified to be suffering from "religious melancholia." She was formally sentenced to be imprisoned for a month previously to her removal to a lunatic asylum. On Wednesday Emma Lemon, twenty-eight, pleaded guilty to several charges of stealing children's boots and to a charge of stealing a child and its clothing. She had induced children to intrust her with their boots and various articles of clothing, and had then gone away and left them to get home the best way they could. The child she had stolen was sent out on an errand by its mother in Arthur-street, New Oxford-street, and was found some time afterwards, at a police-station in Lambeth, stripped of nearly all its clothing and its boots. The Assistant Judge sentenced the prisoner to seven years' penal servitude.

A French gentleman was, on Monday, charged at the Mansion House with having challenged the manager of the Credit Foncier de Mauritius to fight a duel. The defendant, who stated that he was unacquainted with the laws of this country, pledged his word not again to molest the complainant; and, upon the latter expressing satisfaction with this promise, the proceedings terminated.

At Bow-street, last Saturday, a woman was convicted of robbing children in the streets of articles of wearing apparel, and was sentenced to three months' imprisonment.

Mr. W. B. St. Quintin was, on Monday, committed by Mr. Newton for trial on the charge of libelling a solicitor by accusing him of cheating at écarté. Bail was accepted.

Gustave Bernard, the Pole who took such an eccentric mode of engaging Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar with the merits of his invention, was finally examined at Marlborough-street, last Saturday, on the charge of unlawfully pledging a number of diamonds, and ordered to pay a fine of 40s. and £29 5s., the amount for which the property was pawned—the magistrate being of opinion that he intended to redeem it.

For an assault upon a county-court bailiff, Mr. Matthew Wyatt was, on Tuesday, sentenced by the Marylebone police magistrate to six weeks' imprisonment.

Two charges of neglect of children on the part of parents were investigated by metropolitan magistrates on Tuesday. At Clerkenwell Police Court a man and his wife were brought up for this offence. It was proved that the former earned about £1 ls. a week and his wife 10s.; that the man spent his money in drink, and that their child had been found by the parish authorities in an emaciated and almost dying state, the result of continued neglect and ill-usage. The man was sentenced to three months' hard labour, and the woman was bound over to come up for judgment if called upon. At the Southwark Police Court a boy eleven years of age, who had been wandering about the streets in a destitute condition, and who could neither read nor write, was ordered to be sent to school.

Two cases of sending bad meat to the London market were before Alderman Figgins at Guildhall yesterday week. The first charge was against Thomas Thovey, meat salesman, of Coraley, in Wiltshire. The magistrate sentenced him to one month's imprisonment. James Clarke, butcher, of Axminster, was summoned for sending to market two cows which were diseased and unfit for food, and Alderman Figgins imposed a penalty of £20, and £3 3s. costs.

Mr. Fielder, of Albany Lodge, Fulham, has had to pay a penalty of fourteen days' imprisonment for assaulting the police, an offence which he aggravated by accusing a constable of having first struck him.

NEW MUSIC.

The instruments now offered to the public will be found divested of all things which hitherto have been considered objectionable as regards taste. This end has been obtained by using a larger and thicker tongue, and a new system of voicing, which render the quality rich and organ-like.

Another advantage in the new system is the increased strength of the reeds, and diminished liability to go out of tune by forcing the bellows.

The new system is applied to all the large instruments with at greater effect, and without extra cost.

PRINCESS LOUISE AT THE FLOWER-SHOW IN THE PEOPLE'S GARDEN, WILLESDEN.

THE ASSAULT ON M. GAMBETTA BY M. DE SAINTE-CROIX AT THE SAINTE LAZARE STATION, PARIS.

THE PEOPLE'S CLUB GARDEN.

This popular pleasure-ground is near the Willesden Junction station of the London and North-Western, West London, and Hampstead Junction Railways. It has been acquired and adorned by the agency of a co-operative club, of which Messrs. W. R. Warner, Mayes, Andrews, and G. Howell are directors, and which is promoted by Lord Lyttelton, Sir Harcourt Johnstone, M.P., Mr. Hodgson Pratt, Mr. Thomas Hughes, Dr. W. B. Carpenter, the Rev. H. Solly, and others interested in social progress. That it may be open to all, the purchase of the shares may be paid by instalments of twenty-one pence a month, the possession of one share of twenty shillings in value being necessary to constitute membership; candidates for membership have to be proposed by members. A member can only introduce the same friend twice in a year. The situation commands a pleasing view of the grassy country of West Middlesex, to the hills of Hertfordshire and Buckinghamshire, or to those of Surrey in an opposite direction. The grounds are fairly laid out, in unpretending style. Besides the more modern game of croquet, the older ones of bowling and quoits have not been forgotten, and there are cricket-fields, a small theatre (fitted up by the shareholders as a labour of love in their spare hours) a gymnastic-ground, and a very large dancing-platform.

Her Royal Highness Princess Louise on Saturday presented the prizes to the growers of flowers, fruit, and vegetables, in the annual horticultural show at the People's Garden. The Princess was accompanied by the Marquis of Lorne, M.P., the Countess of Abergavenny, Lady Johnstone, Mrs. Malcolm, Lord Frederick Cavendish, M.P., Sir Harcourt Johnstone, M.P., the Right Hon. William Cowper-Temple, M.P., the Rev. William Rogers, of Bishopsgate, and a distinguished company. They were received by the directors and conducted round the grounds. Mr. Warner, the chairman, explained the arrangements of the People's Garden Club. The flower and fruit show, under a marquee, was inspected by the company. The prizes were given by her Royal Highness on the dancing-platform. The Marquis of Lorne made a brief speech for the Princess and himself, and said that they had great pleasure in attending. The prizes were pretty articles of use or ornament. The chief winners were Mr. J. James, of Isleworth, Mr. Burley, Mr. G. Brush, Mr. T. Parsons, Mr. Mark Walker, and Mr. L. J. Baker. Miss Warner presented the Princess with a handsome bouquet, which was graciously accepted. The amusements of the evening were dancing, a dramatic performance, and fireworks. The sale of refreshments is provided for by this club; but though the members can purchase all excisable liquors, the chief demand was for tea.

THE ASSAULT ON M. GAMBETTA.

At the Paris Chamber of Correctional Police, on Saturday, a Bonapartist military man named Louis Henri Renouard, and styling himself the Comte de St. Croix, was charged with an assault upon the Republican Dictator of 1870. In our last week's Paris letter, relating the debates of the National Assembly, a violent speech of M. Gambetta's was mentioned, denouncing the Bonapartists as "misérables" or wretches, which seems to have been the provocation for this assault. M. Gambetta returned from Versailles to Paris by railway, and, leaving the train at the St. Lazare station, went towards the grand staircase which leads out to the Place St. Lazare. He was accompanied by M. Ordinaire, another member of the Assembly. The defendant sprang forward out of the surrounding crowd, and struck M. Gambetta in the face with his closed fist. He had a stick, which he brandished so that it fell upon M. Ordinaire, who had interposed to shield his friend Gambetta. When brought before the magistrates, he pleaded that his intention was only to provoke M. Gambetta to fight a duel, and he declared that he used his open hand, not his fist. He was sentenced to six months' imprisonment and a fine of 200f. His military rank was not very high, and seems equivocal.

A PORTUGUESE BULL FIGHT.

Some of the Portuguese nobility and gentry, on Sunday, the 24th ult., exhibited a grand bull fight in the Praça Amphitheatre, Campo de Santa Anna, at Lisbon, to raise money for the relief of the sick and wounded, on both sides, in the Carlist civil war in Spain. The illustrations we engrave are from sketches by our special Portuguese artist, Raphael Bordallo Pinheiro. He also sent us the play-bill, which is superbly printed in gold on crimson satin paper; but the following notes, written by Mr. M. Lenetas, bookseller, of Lisbon, will best explain this subject:—

"The bull fight as it obtains in Portugal is a peculiar institution of remote origin, and is entirely different from the Spanish bull fight. For centuries past it has been the custom of the nobility and gentry to take part in this diversion. Many of the Portuguese monarchs and princes have distinguished themselves in it, as it was always considered an excellent school of horsemanship and training of the cavalier for war. One of the first Kings who fought bulls was the ill-starred Dom Sebastian, and the last was Dom Miguel de Braganza.

"The bull fight of which we treat was given under the auspices of the Marquis de Castello Melhor, who is famed for his skill as a horseman. Among others who took part in it were some gallant youths of the Portuguese nobility or Fidalguia. According to the Portuguese system the bull is never killed, and its horns are tipped with balls of leather that it may not kill either man or horse. The performance is attended with some time-honoured customs and regulations. It begins with the courtesies of the "netto," who always appears mounted. His business is to convey the orders of the director of the ring, as well as to take part in the fight. According to a venerable usage, the reason for which is not now known, the netto enters with his face muffled in his cloak, and does not unmask until he reaches the middle of the circle. Before, however, the netto makes his entry, the azemola is led on a mule, richly caparisoned in the old Portuguese fashion; and carrying the box which contains the farpas or darts to be used in the combat. At the same time appear the moços de forcado, whose business is to fasten the bull by main force. These men are armed with short two-pronged pikes. When the netto has done, begin the courtesies of the cavaliers, who greet the public all round the circle to the music of the band. They are superbly mounted, usually on their own horses. Behind them several running footmen lead other horses, which are often very fine animals, to be used as reserve mounts, if the occasions of the fight should require. At the same time enter the bandarilheiros, who ply the bull with flags and cloaks, after the Spanish fashion. The moços do curro and all others who take part in the fight have now entered the arena. The curro is the inclosure where the bulls are kept, and the moços do curro have to attend to their exit and entrance.

"When the cavaliers have ridden slowly round the ring, saluting the public, they retire, change horses, and the business of the day commences. The aim of the cavalier is to fix a farpa, or short lance with a slight wood handle, in the neck of the bull, without his horse being hurt or upset. To do this well requires great skill and practice. When the iron is fixed the staff is broken off by the cavalier, and is thrown away. The feats of the Marquis de Castello Melhor upon this occasion excited great enthusiasm. More than once in his performance the audience stood up, and greeted him, from boxes and pit, with waving handkerchiefs, while two floral crowns were thrown at his feet. When the cavalier has finished, the bull is fought in the Spanish fashion, by the men with cloaks and flags, and darts are fixed in his neck as often as possible. At the finish come in the homens de forcado. Sometimes one claps his hands to the bull; and, when the bull comes on, the man throws himself between the bull's horns, while his comrades pin the bull by the tail and neck and hold him by main force. This is called the "pega." It is the part of the performance most appreciated and applauded by Portuguese spectators, being purely national. In the bull fight, of which we now speak, Senhor Manoel Ferreira Pinto Bastos was the one who most distinguished himself in seizing the bull. When the bull has been fought, the moços do curro, who may be gentlemen of rank, introduce the cabrestes, tame oxen with large bells round their necks. They compel the bull, with the long sticks they carry, to leave the ring along with his harmless brethren. When one bull has been put through the programme another is introduced, until nine or ten have figured in the arena.

"The particular rules and usages we describe are closely followed in the bull fights only when the gentry and nobility take part. The ordinary representations are more like the Spanish system. Nearly all the Lisbon world of fashion, elegance, and title filled the boxes and benches of the Praça on this occasion; the result was a very large contribution of money in aid of the charitable object for which the entertainment was got up."

One of the sketches of M. Bordallo Pinheiro shows the scene in the theatre when the leading cavalheiro, the Marquis de Castello Melhor, rode in to make his bow to the spectators. Behind him walk the bandarilheiros or flagmen, the moços de forcado or pitchfork-men, the abegano, and the moços do curro. The netto, and another cavalheiro are on horseback in the background.

The other page of Engravings presents a variety of figures and actions. In the centre of the page is shown the leading in of the azemola mule, laden with small darts and flags to be stuck in the poor bull. To the right and left of this we see an encounter between a bull and a cavalheiro, who evades the bull's onset and thrusts his slight lance into the beast's neck. Having done this, he is to break off the shaft, so as to leave the point and the flag, to be noted to his credit on the score of this cruel game. The several groups below are now to be remarked. In the middle is the netto, with cloak thrown over his face; he waits in the lists of fight, and serves as herald, but never attacks the bull. He is attended by two andarilhos, or messengers, who pick up the fallen darts and flags. To the left, a mob of moços are teasing the bull to provoke his rage. To the right, we see them in the pega; one man has got between the bull's horns; the other men are holding down the bull by force applied to his back, hind quarters, and tail. The differently dressed performers shown at the top of the page need a few words of explaining. Here the central figure, mounted, is that of the netto. On each hand a mounted cavalheiro supports him, but with some difference of costume; one having the courtier's dress of the last century; the other being equipped as a modern Portuguese sportsman to meet the bull. A bandarilheiro, in full state attire, and two of the bull's keepers, the abegano and a moço do curro, one smoking his pipe, are placed on the right-hand side of the page. On the left-hand side are one of the moços de forcado, or pitchfork-drivers, one of the moços do curro, with a long wand, and a bandarilheiro, holding his cloak ready to cast over the bull's head.

MUSIC.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

The specialty of last week—indeed, one of the chief events of the season—was the production of "Il Talismano" at this establishment, to which we could but briefly allude in our previous notice, as the performance took place on Thursday night.

This posthumous work of the late Mr. Balfe was originally composed to an English libretto written by Mr. Arthur Mathison, who has taken some of the leading incidents of Scott's well-known romance, which he has strung together as a framework for a series of scenes that offer good scope for the purposes of the composer.

Much interest attached to the first hearing of this opera in the same theatre in which the composer made his earliest English success, by his "Siege of Rochelle," in 1835. "The Talisman" was not quite completed when the composer died (in 1870), and the slight additions requisite to finish it, and the recitatives which replace the original dialogue, were supplied by Sir Michael Costa, whose care in superintending the rehearsals and in conducting the performance was of high value. The Italian text has been furnished by Signor Zaffra, and the work is mounted on the stage with great splendour as to costumes and scenery; the latter offering several admirable specimens of the skill of Mr. William Beverly, especially the opening scene of the desert; that of St. George's Mount, with sunset effects; and the final view of the sea, with the fleet of the Crusaders.

The music of "Il Talismano" offers a strong contrast to the earlier style of the composer, in which a light vein of melody is the prevailing feature. This last of Balfe's works displays the same tendency as that which is observable in the operas immediately preceding it—an endeavour at the elaborate combinations and intense dramatic effects of the French romantic school. Notwithstanding this, however, there are several solo pieces which stand prominently out, and which will, doubtless, be largely in demand as extracts from the opera. These are Edith Plantagenet's prayer, with its graceful "largo" ("Placida notte") and the following animated "allegro;" her characteristic romanza, "La Canzona d'Evelina," and her bravura rondeau, "Nella dolce trepidanza." Exclusively sung by Madame Christine Nilsson, each of these movements called forth great applause. A very light and tuneful aria for the Queen ("La guerra appena")—sung with much piquancy by Mlle. Marie Roze—was also among the special successes of the evening, other instances having been the graceful "flower-song" (Candido fiore) for Sir Kenneth, and his aria, "A te coll' aurea sera," in both of which Signor Campanini's voice and cantabile style were favourably displayed. There is considerable character in the solo of Neobanus, "Mi piace un cielo," which was given with much point by Signor Catalani; and Richard Cœur de Lion's air, "Oh! chi d'amor," and his prayer, "Sommo, Signore," have some agreeable cantabile passages, of which Signor Rota made the most.

Of the concerted movements for solo voices the best are the duet for Lady Edith and Sir Kenneth, "Quest' anel" (the bright and tuneful close of which was enthusiastically encored), and the trio for Edith, the Queen, and Richard, "Cara perché si dolente." Of the fuller pieces, the most effective were the opening chorus of Arabs, "Prodi guerrieri Alla" (in which is some characteristic writing), the concerted movement in the scene of dispute at St. George's Mount, and the finale of the second act. The little music assigned to the part of the Emir (who makes but a transient appearance in the first scene) was well sung by Signor Campobello, whose make-up was extremely good. Other characters were efficiently represented by Signor Rinaldini (De Vaux), Signor Casaboni (Duke of Austria), and Signor Costa (King of France).

Of the charm, vocal and personal, of Madame Nilsson's performance it is impossible to speak too highly. Her representation of the character of Edith would alone suffice to render "Il Talismano" attractive.

The Engraving given on page 581 represents the scene at the close of the second act, where Richard raises his battle-axe to strike down Sir Kenneth for his supposed treachery, but is prevented by the interposition of the Queen and Edith.

The opera on Saturday was "Les Huguenots." "Il Talismano" was given again on Monday and Wednesday. On Tuesday "Semiramide" was repeated. "Lucrezia Borgia" was announced for Thursday, and "La Favorita" for to-night (Saturday).

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

The three last performances of the past week were all repetitions of operas with a familiar cast—on Thursday "Les Diamans de la Couronne," on Friday "Der Freischütz," and on Saturday "Dinorah."

This week there were again six operas. On Monday Madame Vilda repeated her performance as Norma, with a renewal of the favourable reception which greeted her reappearance in that character in the previous week.

On Tuesday "Mignon" was to have been given for the first time at this establishment, but was replaced by "La Sonnambula," in consequence of the indisposition of Mlle. Marimon.

"Il Trovatore" was performed on Wednesday; the announcements for Thursday, Friday, and Saturday having been, respectively, "Les Huguenots," "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," and "Mignon."

The triennial Handel festival at the Crystal Palace began yesterday (Friday) with the grand public rehearsal. The programme prepared for the occasion consisted of a selection from that of the forthcoming performances (on Monday, Wednesday, and Friday), of which we shall have to speak next week.

The sixth concert of the Philharmonic Society took place on Monday evening, when the orchestral pieces were the two movements of Schubert's unfinished symphony in B minor, Beethoven's "Pastoral" symphony, a very characteristic and cleverly-instrumented overture ("The Taming of the Shrew") by Rheinberger, and Weber's overture to "Oberon." The instrumental performances were completed by Madame Norman-Néruda's brilliant and refined execution of Mendelssohn's violin concerto. A pretty bolero, by M. Gounod, was sung (for the first time) by Madame Miliano, who also gave Cimarosa's scena, "Ah! parlami." Of the lady, who made her debut on this occasion, we prefer to speak after a second hearing.

Mr. Kuhe's annual concert has of late years assumed proportions similar to those of Sir Julius Benedict, and have also recently been given in the Floral Hall, where, on Monday afternoon, Mr. Kuhe again provided an attractive programme, which included the splendid singing of Madame Adelina Patti, Mlle. Albani, and other eminent members of the Royal Italian Opera, besides pianoforte performances by Mlle. Marie Krebs and the concert giver. The hall was well filled.

Among the interesting novelties of the day are the performances of the "Orchestre des Dames," a band of fifty-three Viennese ladies, directed by Madame Amann Weinlich, who execute overtures and dance music, and occasionally solo pieces, with great precision and refinement. Their second concert took place at the Harrow-square Rooms on Wednesday evening, the third having been announced for yesterday (Friday).

The concerts of this week have also included the second of the Welsh Choral Union, on Tuesday; the matinée, on Wednesday, of that clever pianist and organist, Mr. Frederic Archer; a performance, on Wednesday, at the Royal Albert Hall, of Dr. Sloman's new cantata, "Supplication and Praise" (of which we must speak hereafter); and, on Friday, the second pianoforte recital of M. Duvernoy, and the seventh of the series of the eight interesting performances given by Mr. Charles Hallé.

THEATRES.

A crowded and fashionable audience assembled at the Gaiety last Saturday morning, on the occasion of Mr. George Coleman's benefit, to witness the début of Mrs. Fairfax as Julia in "The Hunchback." The play was altogether strongly cast, Mr. Creswick performing the titre rôle; Miss Fowler, Helen; Mr. Henry Neville, Modus; and Mr. Hermann Vezin, Sir Thomas Clifford. Thus ably supported, the débutante had a fair chance of success. The lady's appearance is in her favour—her person attractive, her countenance expressive, and her eyes of bewildering brilliance. She had not, however, trusted entirely to these great advantages, but had been careful in her study of the text so that she was letter-perfect, and the nervousness under which she laboured produced no further effect than a slight disturbance of gesture and action in her first scene. As the play progressed she grew in power and decision, and manifested capabilities which, with due practice, warrant the highest hopes of her success. Frequently she commanded well-deserved applause. Miss Fowler, too, merits recognition for her Helen, which on this occasion she sustained for the first time. It was altogether a very pleasing interpretation of a gay and lively part. Her scenes with Modus were, in fact excellent and were dryly accompanied with the plaudits of the house. At the conclusion of the performance Miss Ada Cavendish recited, with her usual vigour, the Laureate's poem of "The Charge of the Light Brigade." Mr. Boucicault announces the early production of a new comedy entitled "Led Astray," and in it the introduction of two new American actors—Mr. Charles Thorne, of Californian origin, the representative of the artistic excellence of the Great West of America, and Mr. Stuart Robson, that of eccentric comedy in the eastern cities—New York, Philadelphia, and Boston—where, adds Mr. Boucicault, "both these comedians enjoy positions as established favourites." No doubt the public will heartily respond to this appeal.

Dramatic revivals continue to be the order of the day. At the Haymarket "The Overland Route," for a few nights, is substituted for "Mont Blanc," which is withdrawn; and a new comedy is announced by Mr. Robert Buchanan, representative, it is said, of the manners of the early part of the reign of Charles II. At the Lyceum Mr. Irving has appeared during the week as Charles I., and announces his benefit for Monday, when he will again support the part of Eugene Aram. He will also undertake his favourite character of Jeremy Diddler, in the farce of "Raising the Wind." "East Lynne" continues to attract at the St. James's and the National Standard Theatres.

FINE ARTS. ROYAL ACADEMY EXHIBITION.

THE SCULPTURE.

The dearth of works in the higher branches of sculpture seems to be greater than ever at Burlington House. Some of our ablest sculptors do not contribute at all—Mr. J. H. Foley, for instance, being still conspicuous by his absence—or they are represented sparingly and inadequately. The small proportion of works of any pretensions to idealism, even in aim, is greatly to be regretted, especially in presence of several foreign contributions, very cleverly manipulated, no doubt, but which are merely naturalistic copies at the best, and sometimes most objectionably licentious and meretricious. What should be the highest and noblest form of art is thus abused, calculated to lower the standard of all art-practice, and to corrupt the public taste. If there is any excuse for such tendencies when an artist by working in colour is tempted to luxurious indulgence, there is certainly none when he is dealing with pure and beautiful marble or grave and enduring bronze. Even to descend to trivial unessential details of form seems ignoble, degrading, almost a sin in such materials.

Among the works of highest aim are three bronze statues of heroic size, by Mr. T. Thornycroft—"Clio," "Melpomene," and "Thalia," which have a degree of suitable monumental largeness in treatment, but the two latter are not quite satisfactory in conception. The Muse of History may very properly—nay, should—be an unimpassioned abstraction, as Mr. Thornycroft has represented her; but why does the personification of "Tragedy" raise her mask, if not to seriously and deeply impress us; and why should the countenance of "Comedy" be still tamer? The Mediæval, the Renaissance, and even occasionally the Classical, sculptors have shown that intense expression is perfectly consistent with the severest dignity and loftiest grandeur. Mr. J. Durham's marble group of "The Siren and the Drowned Leander" (1493) is a marked improvement on the model for the same; but a bust of Sir Sydney H. Waterlow (1514) by this sculptor seems to us to require more care and refinement in the modelling. Mr. E. B. Stephens has also a "Leander Preparing to Cross the Hellespont" (1513), in plaster, which promises fairly for its marble realisation. Mr. D. W. Stephenson's graceful "Nymph at the Stream" (1527) and Mr. Brock's spirited "Hereward the Wake" (1533), both in marble, deserve commendation; as also Count Gleichen's model for the monument to his mother, H.S.H. the Princess of Hohenlohe-Langenburg, erected at Baden-Baden, which we engraved a fortnight back; together with Miss Grant's model of "An Incident in the Life of St. Margaret" (1525), very creditable for a lady amateur; and the plaster of "Panthea and Abradates" (1494), by Mr. W. White—the last Academy gold-medal group, recently engraved in our pages. Count Gleichen's work above mentioned has true monumental simplicity, and is altogether treated in very good taste. We may add here that the modelling of the head of Mr. E. B. Head (1444), by the same artist, is quite worthy of a professional sculptor of very good position; and the bronze statuette of Prince Arthur (1594) is a sample of the small work in which H. S. H. also excels. We may naturally pass from the ideal to the decorative, naturalistic, and other works, with mention of "An Implacable Executioner" (1611), by P. D'Epinau, a British subject, we believe of the Mauritius, now working with great success at Rome. The subject is a little Cupid, his foot planted on a heart, and a croquet mallet thrown over his shoulder, with which he is about to vengeancefully "roquet" a second heart already lacerated and bleeding, on which the sculptor has inscribed his own name. Though in idea but a pretty, suggestive conceit, hardly worthy of embodiment in marble, we can but admire the excellent modelling of the Cupid, and be amused at the energy and vivacity of his action and expression.

"Un Premier Enfant" (1496), by the distinguished Belgian sculptor M. C. A. Fraikin—a sweet young mother, en déshabillé, glowing fondly over an infant in her lap—is a charming naturalistic group, chaste in the very nature of the subject, yet treated with much warmth. But the most remarkable work in this category—though it has, of course, none of the beauty or sentiment of the preceding—is "The Horse and his Master" (1520), by Mr. J. E. Boehm. This immense group, for which it was necessary to find a place in the Lecture-Room, was doubtless intended to be on the scale of nature; but, the man being below the average height, the contrast between him and the animal, enormous as is the bulk of the kind of horse in question, is rather too great. The horse is a stallion of the breed derived, we believe, from Flanders and Normandy, and developed with us into the elephantine Suffolk punch and other special breeds. By representing him as rearing on his hind legs, the spirit and likewise the vast bulk and gigantic strength of the creature are displayed to advantage; while his "master" is proportionately reduced to comparative insignificance. Yet the man is modelled quite as ably as the horse; while the two form a group evincing close observation and (within the sculptor's intention) plastic power and technical mastery in a high degree. A marble bust of the Queen (1534) by the same sculptor is one of the most faithful and acceptable portraits of her Majesty we have seen. Mr. Boehm's terra-cotta likenesses also are among the happiest here: witness those of the two painters, Messrs. R. Müller (1545) and R. Beavis (1602). M. Dalou's "Paysanne Française" of last year, which we engraved, was strikingly true to common nature, though, as may be inferred from previous remarks, we are far from thinking this the most desirable thing in sculpture; his group, similar in motive, called "Hush-a-by, Baby!" is, however, much less successful. The deep excavation of the eye-sockets and the open mouth cause the face to resemble a cast after death. Nor will this sculptor's terra-cottas of the two painters, Messrs. F. Leighton (1543) and Alma Tadema (1606), bear favourable comparison with those of Mr. Boehm; it seems to us that to the least desirable characteristics of the subjects are given the most prominence. Another French work is, in the original, probably the most notorious piece of sculpture of our day: we allude to the terra-cotta model of M. Carpeaux's "Groupe de la Danse" (1515)—nymphs circling round a floating, winged figure holding a tambourine—executed for the new Opera House, Paris. There can be no question as to the immense spirit of this group, nor as to the great skill in composition displayed in adjusting and balancing so many figures on so small a base, nor as to the extraordinary cleverness of the execution; nevertheless, sculpture, as applied to a public building, has seldom been so prostituted. This is no illustration of graceful action or the "poetry of motion"; this is no natural abandonment to impulses generated by music; this is not even a lusty bacchanalian revel; that is not the Genius of Dancing in the centre, but a stiff, attitudinising Parisian model; those are not nymphs of Terpsichore, but lewd wantons, their every posture proclaiming their self-conscious lewdness; in short, the group is only worthy to symbolise the can-can, and only fit to decorate a casino, not a national palace devoted to art. Another decorative work of very different character—showing ability, withal, though a little mannered, is Mr. Armistead's set of four alto-relievs of Europe, Africa, America, and Australia, for external spandrels of the New Colonial Offices (1436-9). Near these are three very curious terra-cotta panels, the relief admitting three or four figures to stand before each other, representing "The Garden of Gethsemane," "The Descent from the Cross," and "The Foot of the Cross" (1441, 1467, 1468). They are by Mr. Tinworth, of the Lambeth Pottery, a pupil of Mr. Sparkes, of the Lambeth School of Art, who has turned out so many Academy medallists and assisted Mr. Doulton's pottery revivals. Mr. Tinworth was, we are informed, originally a wheelwright, and his designs, probably unconsciously, strongly recall the works of the early German art-handicraftsmen in their direct naturalistic energy of conception and execution, and their naïve, homely ideas, which, if a little too familiar or forced, are quite refreshing beside the tame conventionality of most church decorative sculpture, of which examples are not wanting here.

Portraiture being the branch of sculpture most in request in this country, there is, as might be expected, some good work, as well as a great deal of mediocrity. Among the statues is a large seated figure of the Queen (1495), by Mr. Noble, presented to St. Thomas's Hospital by the President, Sir John Musgrove, in commemoration of her Majesty having laid the foundation-stone and opened the hospital. It is more acceptable than many similar portraits. M. Malempré's statue of Balfé, the composer (1506), for the vestibule of Drury Lane Theatre, is also fairly successful; and there are various statues of children with pretty motives by Messrs. J. Durham, J. R. Jackson, and T. J. Williamson. Mr. J. Bell's equestrian statuette (1588) of Wellington, with accessorial figures intended to indicate the "scenes of his victories," is, as regards these figures, rather far-fetched. In coming to the bust portraits generally it would be discourteous not to give precedence to the marble bust of the late General Grey (1536), by Princess Louise, especially as it is so meritorious, regarded as the production of an amateur. By its side is an excellently carved and faithful likeness of Princess Alice, by R. Kopf. Sir George Pollock (1455) and Mr. M. T. Smith (1512), by Mr. Weekes, are, as usual, treated in a large, vigorous style; the former is particularly admirable, especially regarded as a posthumous work. Mr. Woolner's sole contribution is a bust of Mrs. Alfred Morrison (1454), in which the emphatic contours and the delicate contained traits of a beautiful model are rendered with truth, feeling, and first-rate carving. We fancy, however, that there is a little of that tendency to exaggerate characteristic forms which is sometimes much more obvious in Mr. Woolner's male busts. Mr. Adams Acton has made a marked advance in several busts, of which we may specially commend a terra-cotta of the Rev. Mr. Spurgeon (1542), evincing the keenest sense of character, without falling into caricature; "Sir Wilfred Lawson" (1443), and two or three members of the Butler-Johnstone family—all animated and conscientiously wrought. The sculptor's sister, Miss Adams, sends a group of hands (1538) nicely posed and very well carved. Other busts of merit and interest are—the Baroness Burdett-Coutts (1509), by W. Brodie; Mrs. Gilstrap (1464), by T. Butler; Miss Hayes (1547), and John Constable, the painter (1549), to be placed in the Royal Academy, by E. Davis; Henry Irving, the actor (1450), by R. Jackson; Miss Edith Wynne, "the nightingale of Wales" (1559), by J. Edwards; Sir John Bowring (1577), by W. S. Webber; Comte Léon (1579), by A. Schoonjans; Thomas Carlyle (1465), by J. D. Crittenden; and Mr. William Morley (1550), by C. B. Birch. The contributions by Messrs. W. Calder Marshall, J. Lawlor, T. N. MacLean, G. G. Adams, G. E. Ewing, and W. Theed are also commended to notice.

In the glyptic art there is little claiming notice. M. Wiener, the distinguished Belgian sculptor, exhibits a frame of nine medals (1474), which show rare talent in various directions—in portraiture, figure compositions, and architectural perspectives. There are also commemorative and prize medals of some merit by Messrs. Wyon.

THE DECORATION OF ST. PAUL'S.

Before we take a final leave of the Royal Academy Exhibition, we must say a few words on the models in the Architectural Room, for the proposed decoration of St. Paul's, by Mr. W. Burges—a scheme which, if begun only to be put in execution, as is now threatened, will infallibly bring discredit on all concerned therewith, and which cannot possibly ever be carried through.

Several years ago we considered that the first false step in the decoration of the cathedral was taken by the employment of Munich stained glass in the windows, and our opinions have been since pretty generally confirmed. Yet the Munich designs harmonise with the building tolerably well, as regards general style. Then came the designs (with an exhibited model) for the decoration of the whole interior, by Mr. Penrose, the accomplished "surveyor" to the cathedral; and here, again, the scheme, though voted too elaborate, and too lavish in the employment of positive colours, did no great violence to the style of the architecture. Mr. Penrose's services were, however, declined (too inconsiderately, as we think) in favour of Mr. Burges, who, we soon after heard with alarm, was to prepare for the cathedral a complete system of "Christian iconography." Now the words "Christian iconography" are applied, and can only apply, to the imagery of the Byzantine and Early Gothic artists, to the Divine Personalities, the heavenly hierarchy, the prophets, martyrs, and other saintly personages, with their respective emblems, to the scriptural and legendary subjects, and the traditional treatment of the painters and sculptors before the Reformation, before even the style of our metropolitan cathedral was developed! It was inevitable that decoration conceived in such a spirit would needlessly provoke antagonism from a large section within the Church and from other denominations, and it was equally palpable that such decoration could not accord with Sir Christopher Wren's architecture; but, on the contrary, must be utterly inappropriate to it, and set at naught all its artistic associations. We have, however, nothing to do here with the religious, but only with the artistic, question. The choice of Mr. Burges, then, for the proposed decoration, seemed, on strictly artistic grounds, wholly unaccountable. He had previously publicly intimated his antipathy to Sir Christopher Wren and all his works. He had been known chiefly for a strong leaning to the grotesque manifested in Early Gothic and Byzantine designs, and to that kind of gaudiness found in the debased art of the Jesuit churches. Surely there never was such a case of trying to force the square man into the round hole. Nevertheless, Mr. Burges was appointed, but with a condition that enjoined him strictly to refer to Wren's style in all he should attempt; subscriptions to the amount of £40,000 were received under a distinct engagement that such should be done; and a fine-arts committee, pledged to be guided by this same understanding, was appointed by the executive committee. Mr. Burges's designs and models have since been made public, and they have been strongly condemned by the fine-arts committee. Thereupon the executive committee, instead of being guided by the decision of the judges of their own appointment (which, as it seems to us, they were bound to abide by), dissolved the fine-arts committee; they also rejected a proposed appeal to the Royal Academy, and have accepted Mr. Burges's design as a basis for the work in the apse and choir. The most threatening part of this recent decision is that the work is to be immediately commenced in that portion of the building—i.e., the apse and choir—which must govern the treatment of every other. Consequently, any false step cannot be retraced, except at great cost, because the decoration is to culminate in the apse and choir. The concentration of the embellishment there may gratify those who desire to give a peculiar import to the altar and its ministrants; but, even in Romish churches of the same style, there are few, if any, precedents for the disproportionate decorations contemplated. Architecturally considered, the dome, the sublimest feature of the building—the feature that, so far as art can do, is best calculated to carry the eye and the heart to heaven—should furnish the keynote of the decoration. It is, moreover, known—and this is almost all that is known of his wishes on this subject—that Wren desired to see the dome richly embellished—filled with rich and durable mosaics. Even at St. Peter's it is the dome that is most richly decorated.

Mr. Burges's proclivities are obvious in the models under notice, yet some of his proposals are the last that might be expected from his antecedents. He proposes, for instance, to veneer, as in the Jesuit churches, nearly the whole interior with marble—this from one understood to be a determined enemy to "shams"! To insert marble into the panels would be feasible enough, but to pare down the stonework, with its countless angels, and lay thereon a marble casing, would be a structural falsification equally impractical and anti-artistic. Gilding and polychromy are to be used far too profusely; they are not to be, as they most certainly should be, confined to the accentuation of the forms, but to be scattered broadcast, in a way that must bewilder the eye, and so conceal the character of the architecture; thereby, as remarked by the fine-arts committee in their protest, displaying the style of Mr. Burges, but certainly not that of Sir C. Wren. The distribution, as well as the quantity of the colouration is very questionable. The lower story is to consist mainly of white marble, and the colours and gilding are to be added in increasing quantity to the vault, and to attain the greatest "richness and depth" in the upper part of the choir and apse. The objections to this are that the supports will appear weak, and the portions above will apparently be lowered and contracted, while the present oppressive gloom will be rather increased than diminished, though its repose may be broken. Gold, colour, and costly material will become everywhere paramount to architectural design and chastity of effect. By frequent and capricious changes in the figures and ornamentation, Mr. Burges seems quite to ignore those laws of symmetry and harmony which constitute the essence of Wren's architecture. Some of the figures would scarcely be distinguishable from below; others are as much too large comparatively; while the disproportions reach their climax in a figure of Our Saviour at the east end of the church, which is so gigantic that it would, beyond all question, dwarf the whole interior, and be a glaring incongruity from whatever point it could be viewed. We might advert to the poverty of design of some of the patterned decoration—its want of relation not only with the character of the architecture, but with itself; but what will be deemed, by all but a few enthusiast antiquaries and ecclesiologists, by far the most objectionable feature of this strange scheme is the style of the above-mentioned colossal figure and its accompanying "subjects." It would, to us, have seemed hardly credible that anyone could seriously propose, in this nineteenth century, to copy in the sanctuary of our national cathedral, in defiance of its sixteenth-century Italian style, an effigy of our Lord after the manner of barbaric Byzantine art, with "cherubim and seraphim," their wings formally disposed, and the various symbols of these and other figures depicted after the same childish fashion. But there is an even more puerile proposition in the scheme—that relating to the treatment of the choir pavement, which is to represent four streams flowing from the altar, with harts drinking, flowers, and so forth, the whole being emblematic of Paradise.

What is required seems really simple enough. The interior generally is insufficiently lighted: this is the main point. Any system of decoration should therefore be limited generally to pale tints—at least in the vault, clerestory, and attic, so as to secure atmospheric effect. Gold and more positive tints (but no such deep blue as in these models) should be used only to loyally and reverently emphasise, never to be apart from or compete with the leading lines and members of the architect's work. Greater richness might be ventured on in the dome, including the drum and pendentives, and, to a reasonable extent, in the apse and choir, for the reason that they are better lighted. Then, and then only, when the architecture has been duly illustrated, should the pictorial decoration be attempted; for this in turn should be subordinated to the architectural forms.

A great-granddaughter of John Singleton Copley, R.A., is very desirous to see his picture "Samuel and Eli," and would feel much obliged if the owner would communicate with Messrs. H. Graves and Co., 6, Pall-mall.

The Duke of Edinburgh has accepted an invitation to visit Liverpool at the latter end of September, for the purpose of laying the foundation-stone of the Walker Art-Gallery, which is to be built at the sole expense of the present Mayor, Mr. A. B. Walker.

Mr. Frederick Havill has just completed a large portrait group of the Jubilee Singers, which is about to be exhibited in London and the chief provincial towns previous to being removed to its final destination—the Fisk University, in America. This valuable building, founded for the education of freed slaves, has been raised wholly through the exertions of these eleven singers.

Arrangements have been made by Government for bringing the various departments at South Kensington into more direct relations with the Education Department, in which they will be virtually merged. The secretary of the Education Department will also be the secretary for the departments at South Kensington. Under Sir Francis Sandford will be an assistant secretary, Mr. Macleod. The office of director of the museum has been given to Mr. Cunliffe Owen; Major Donnelly and Mr. Redgrave, R.A., have been offered the directorships of the science and art divisions respectively. The subordinate arrangements will be completed as soon as possible.

The Daily Telegraph announces the safe return of Mr. George Smith from his second Assyrian expedition. He arrived in England last week, in excellent health, having surmounted all kinds of difficulties in the course of his excavations and journeyings, and bringing home a large collection of new cuneiform tablets and fragments, as well as a great many very interesting objects of Assyrian art, including the entire lintel in sculptured stone of one of the ancient palace gateways.

THE PERFORMERS IN THE BULL-FIGHT AT LISBON.

NEW BOOKS.

The Maori race of New Zealand, after giving much trouble to the Pakeha or European colonists, now become the subject of poetical and romantic literary fictions, like the Red Indians of North America in the novels of Fenimore Cooper, or the Scottish Highlanders of a past age, transfigured by the genius of Sir Walter Scott. Mr. Alfred Domett's narrative poem, Ranolf and Amohia, which was approved by critics as a graceful and original composition, has been succeeded by two elegantly written prose tales, illustrative of the character, the manners, and customs of that energetic and intelligent Australasian people. Ena; or, the Ancient Maori (Smith, Elder, and Co.) is by Mr. George Wilson, who has long resided, we presume as official superintendent, at the native reserve of Te Aro, near Wellington. He is evidently well acquainted with the local scenery, and seems to have carefully studied the traditions and pre-colonial history of the tribes inhabiting that part of the north island, along the shore of Cook's Strait, from Port Nicholson to Wanganui. The picturesque features of this coast, as well as those of the interior, around the volcanic region of Mounts Tongariro and Ruapehu and the shores of Lake Taupo, are very well described. Ena is a Maori Princess, the brave and beautiful daughter of Te Ranpitu-karua, chieftain of the Maupoko tribe, who have been driven from their old inland habitation to dwell at Wairauki, a fortified village or pah on the cliffs of the seashore. Her brother, the heroic young chief Raukawa, becomes the champion and leader of his people in their last desperate struggle for existence against a combined invasion of their relentless foes, the Ngatiraukawa and the Waikato tribes. The besieged tenants of Wairauki are helped by their neighbours of the Kapiti isle, whose chief, named Te Koturu, is the affianced lover of Ena. They are guided and inspired to the actions of patriotic warfare by a tohunga, or priest and soothsayer, called Hahaki, who is also cunning in policy and in strategy, and one of the toughest old fighters in Maoria. The incidents of this siege, in our opinion, are quite as interesting, though perhaps not so well told, as those of the siege of Troy by the Greeks under King Agamemnon; but that is a matter of taste. The fighting is all done with spears and clubs, or with that peculiar weapon, the mere or greenstone mallet. There are no muskets, the time being previous to English colonial settlements or commercial dealings in New Zealand. One English or American girl, Mary Morven, who has been rescued from shipwreck on that shore, lives with Ena and shares the cruel trials which the Maori heroine must endure. Upon the whole, we find "Ena" a very good story, clearly and vigorously set before us, with perfect consistency of plan, and in a tone of animated sympathy. The only fault that can offend the reader is the uniform smoothness and polished propriety of the style, which might be suitable for a tale of conventional society, but seems ill adapted to the present subject. The same criticism, indeed, would be equally applicable to other works of this class, which have been greatly admired.

The second Maori romance which claims our notice is written by Captain J. C. Johnstone, late of the Bengal Army, whose preface is dated at Te Haroto, near Auckland. His book, which, like "Ena," is a single volume, is entitled Maoria: A Sketch of the Aboriginal Inhabitants of New Zealand (Chapman and Hall). Its style is rather better, as it is simpler and easier, than that of Mr. George Wilson's tale. The scene of action is on the west coast of the North Island, at a Maori pah or fortified village called Ngutukaka, near the mouth of the Waitebuna river, which we cannot find in the map of New Zealand. War among the native tribes, as in the story of "Ena," without the intervention of European arms or intrigues, gives occasion for the wild deeds and adventures presented here. The aged Ariki, or chief of the Ngatiroa, Te Au Te Rangī (a nobly sonorous name), has three lovely granddaughters—cousins, of course, to each other. Of these maidens Ora and Tui are to us the most interesting; yet Hira is also an attractive girl. The tohunga, or sanctified public conjuror, in this community, is a clever impostor named Ngawhare; the hero, or true king of men, is Karaka, the old chief's bravest and ablest son. Captain Johnstone has contrived to show us many particulars of Maori domestic life and manners. The fishing, the boating, the collecting of edible fern-root, and preparing it for food; the method of cooking by steam, in a closed pit where water has been poured upon heated stones; the making of canoes, the building of huts, and weaving of flax into cloth; the laborious earth-works and palisades, to fortify the steep ascent of their inhabited cliffs and crags; these branches of native industry are very exactly described. The practice of cannibalism, which must be admitted to be a drawback on the admirable qualities of the Maori race, is but incidentally referred to. The author draws a veil over the scene at these horrid feasts of human flesh. We do not like to think of the pensive Ora and the playful Tui, those sweet young Maori women, as kind and gentle as their sex in our own land, partaking of a slice or picking a bone at such inhuman banquets. The fate of Ora, as the victim of malignant enchantment, is very sad. That of pretty, winsome Tui, though she is wedded to Matuku, the man of her choice, is a mournful end to the story, with the capture of their village fortresses by the merciless Rarawa, and the extermination of their people. The stratagem of the besiegers' feigned retreat, and of the factitious whale stranded in the shallow bay, to cover their secret return, is one which again reminds us of the ancient tale of Troy.

To the conflict of opinion touching the propriety of raising a national monument to the memory of the Scottish hero William Wallace may be traced the publication of two very large volumes entitled The Scottish War of Independence; its Antecedents and Effects, by William Burns (Glasgow, James Maclehose). The author, struck by the variety of views expressed upon the aforesaid subject, conceived the idea of writing something which might produce harmony instead of discord amongst the ranks of those most nearly concerned in the traditions of Scotland, and which might attract the attention and challenge the candid judgment of people in general. Praiseworthy, however, as the author's object was, and manifest as are the heartiness and diligence with which he set about his task, some few questions occur to one at the very outset. Can we be fairly called upon, from time to time, to reform our history, just as we are invited to reform our tailors' bills? Are there no historical points which we are at liberty to consider, so far as our peace of mind is affected, settled and done with, and which we may henceforth use as mere stepping-stones on our further course of investigation? If we believe not Moses and the prophets, is anything likely to remove our unbelief? If we have pinned our faith to those who have made historical researches the study of their lives, and who are received as redoubtable authorities, can we be expected to change it, or even to reconsider it, at the invitation of a gentleman who by his own confession is "not about to attempt writing a history, in the proper sense of the term, founded upon new discoveries or original documents"? When a Niebuhr, or a Mommsen, or a Froude, or a Freeman, who for years has been wholly or in great part devoted to personal voyages of discovery on what may be called the Dead Sea of historical documents and monuments, or even an unknown writer, who claims to have found out some new thing, comes forward with a statement that may revolutionise prevailing ideas, reason would that he should command a hearing, and that, if his evidence and arguments be sufficiently cogent, time-honoured judgments should be revised. But it is altogether different when a gentleman professes to do no more than "reproduce in a connected form" and "with a special design" a multitude of "impressions and convictions" made upon his own mind by such sources of information as are open to everybody, and when the gentleman seems to feel a fiery passion for Scottish nationality and to be moved by a somewhat acrimoniously controversial spirit. His honesty of purpose, however, his acumen, and his painstaking accumulation of facts and collation of interesting passages deserve to be respectfully mentioned. And though there may be no just cause why his voluminous work should be studied by those who have already made up their minds about Wallace and Bruce and the events in which they took a conspicuous part, yet to others, who have never hitherto troubled themselves about such matters or are still undecided, the two volumes will afford a large amount of instructive information and, if there be a sufficient foundation of Scottish enthusiasm to set out with, materials for the construction of a historical creed.

A peculiar, but pleasant and piquant, style enhances the intrinsic value of Spain and the Spaniards, by N. L. Thieblin, better known in the reading world as "Azamat Batuk" (Hurst and Blackett). Nor is the intrinsic value of itself inappreciable. For the author, in spite of the specious simplicity of his manner, is not only "sly, Sir, devilish sly," but also a keen observer, a quick hitter, and a very sponge to suck up more or less entertaining items. Moreover, cosmopolitan as—to judge from his intermixture of languages and the liberality, not to say latitudinarianism, of his views—he has always appeared to be, he seems to have lately added the stars and stripes to his coat of many colours, thrown in his lot with American journalism, and fully adopted the Transatlantic fashion of "interviewing," so that he can speak from personal experience, and as an eye-witness, not only of important Spanish events and places, but also of conspicuous Spanish personages. He performed the, up to that time, as he leads his readers to infer, almost unexampled feat, for a newspaper correspondent, of obtaining an introduction to Don Carlos, with whom he had a conversation that lasted long enough to exhaust a cigarette-case. He gives an account of a visit he paid to the old and purblind Countess of Montijo, mother of the ex-Empress of the French. Of Castelar and Figueras he says that he "saw the two gentlemen at work together;" and he devotes an amount of space, not so disproportionately large as to call for the apology he tenders, to a description of the pair, whom he declares to be "at present only two fallen stars." Marshal Serrano, Duke de la Torre, having shown extraordinary kindness to the author, is let off, if the expression be admissible, with less notice than the reader will probably consider altogether satisfactory. To write about Spain and to ignore bull-fights would be more than human; and the author, who is extremely human, says as much about bull-fights as any but a very strong stomach could well endure. Of course "Azamat Batuk" has something, and something pretty extravagant, to say about the Spanish women. According to him, "you would soon discover, on studying the Spanish woman, that you must take all the virtue of the most virtuous Englishwoman, all the grace and wit of the most graceful and witty Frenchwoman, and all the beauty of the most handsome Italian woman, to make something approaching to a perfect Spanish lady." That is pretty well; and there is more where that comes from.

Royal rank, identity of sex, and interest of a domestic rather than of a political character seem to suggest some slight connection between A Brief Memoir of the Princess Charlotte of Wales, by the Lady Rose Weigall (John Murray), and The Life and Times of Louisa, Queen of Prussia, by Elizabeth Harriot Hudson (W. Isbister and Co.). For though, in the latter case, it has been thought proper to tack the "times" on to the "life," and so to produce sufficient material to fill two closely-printed volumes, such a proceeding was entirely arbitrary and by no means called for by the political prominence or influence of the good Queen herself. Let not this remark, however, be taken to imply that the pages devoted to the "times" are devoid of interest. On the contrary, they are highly interesting. All that is meant is that there were many amongst Queen Louisa's contemporaries to whose biographies an historical sketch of their epoch would be more appropriately attached, and that the only part of the work which has a special attraction, not to be readily derived from other easily accessible sources, is that which exhibits to us an excellent and a lovable sample of a woman. Indeed, the writer's own testimony is that "the warm affection which has so long survived its object is due not so much to the Queen's talents, to her brave spirit and high aspirations, as to the fact that, with these gifts and these exalted aims, she still preserved a tender, sympathising heart—was the mother of the family and the mother of the land." Yes; the occasions on which she lays firm hold of the reader's heart are when she thoughtfully and gracefully begs that she may not be allowed to scare away a tradesman's customers, and when she, in motherly fashion, answers the letter addressed by the trustful little boy to the Christkind, and so on. As for the volume devoted to a brief memoir of that Princess Charlotte of whom the ancients would have said that she was well beloved of the gods so young did she die, it makes one think of the words addressed by Aeneas to Dido, when she demanded to hear his pitiful story; for it tends to "renew unspeakable grief." Yet there was good reason for its appearance: it was suggested by Queen Victoria herself; it has a value derived from authentic materials supplied by her Majesty and by others; it contains selections from hitherto "unpublished papers;" it is provided "with an original portrait from a miniature by Stewart;" and it had little need of the apology offered by the writer for "the faults of an unpractised pen and the imperfect manner of execution."

There was once a time when, nation of shopkeepers though we may be, we could show the way to foreign armies; but things have changed: we imitate instead of being imitated. When the star of France was in the ascendant we Gallicised; now that Prussia has come to the front we Prussianise; and before the fit is over it were well to get all the instruction and amusement possible, plenty of the latter being obtainable, from Military Life in Prussia, translated (by permission of the author) from the German of F. W. Hackländer by F. E. R. and H. E. R. (Sampson Low and Co.). The volume, in which a sketch, pervaded more or less by the spirit of caricature, is given of the life led by "the soldier in time of peace," is to be followed, if the words "first series" mean anything, by at least one other, devoted, no doubt, to the more serious, more admonitory and more interesting, if not more entertaining, portions of a military career. Some of the themes whereon the author discourses—such as equipment, drill, roll-call, arrest, the march, life in quarters, cantonments, and so on—the English reader will be fully prepared for, though they will present many points of novelty; but all that relates to vivandières and some other matters will have the genuine extern flavour. The vivandières, however, will be found to differ in many respects from those fair creatures whom certain writers of fiction have surrounded with a halo of romance; they are mere vendors of eatables and drinkables, chiefly of the latter. The adventures recorded are those of a soldier for whom we have no equivalent in our own army, and are, consequently, such as it requires an effort to properly comprehend. To us it seems incongruous to an almost incredible degree that a mere bombardier should be at one moment discharging his humble duties and at another mixing upon almost, if not quite, equal terms with commissioned officers, and accosting with gallant speeches, and even saluting, young ladies of station in other than the military sense of the participle. It is our boast that all our soldiers are volunteers; we can scarcely realise the position of the Prussian volunteer—unless, perhaps, the condition of a private in the expressly designated volunteers may be taken to convey some faint idea of it. The scrapes into which the Prussian volunteer is liable and prone to fall are described with much spirit, and greatly enliven the volume. A droll account is given of the manner in which a volunteer under difficulties takes refuge in the bed-room of two young ladies, who enable him to escape; and it is worthy of mention that the drollery is not permitted to tempt the narrator a hair's breadth beyond the limits of good taste and delicacy. It would be a pity to miss an opportunity of becoming acquainted with the book.

A preface so gushing and rapturous that it produces bewilderment does not prepossess one in favour of Summer Cruising in the South Seas, by Charles Warren Stoddard (Chatto and Windus), notwithstanding the glimpses that are caught, as one turns over the leaves, of some very unconventional and encouraging illustrations contributed by Mr. Wallis Mackay. Nor is the bewilderment much decreased when the contents of the volume have been fairly grappled with. A hazy idea prevails that a narrative of personal adventure is being related by an American, to whom barbarism is more grateful than civilisation; but the narrative seems to resemble that of the "Ancient Mariner," so far as it may be said to be "incomprehensible, and without head or tail;" and the American, as regards both his nature and his style of writing, though he does not attempt the outward forms of poetry, appears to belong to that peculiar Transatlantic species of whom Walt Whitman is the prototype. The nudity, or all but nudity, which is a striking characteristic of the illustrations creates vague apprehensions of impropriety; and those apprehensions are rather confirmed than dissipated by some of the written descriptions, which, however, are remarkable for so wild, enigmatical and unintelligible a manner of expression that shadowy suspicion is seldom or never converted into solid certainty. No explanation has been vouchsafed, so far as a tolerably careful investigation could discover, of the disjointedness in the collection of experiences recorded; but it is not impossible that a number of separate articles, originally contributed to one or more periodicals, have been put together and made into a volume. The somewhat exasperating want of continuity would thus be fully accounted for. When a more than usually straightforward and lucid method of narration has been adopted, as is the case especially in the chapters headed "In a Transport" and "A Prodigal in Tahiti" respectively, it is abundantly apparent that the author possesses the gift of neat, vivid and grotesquely droll, rather than naturally humorous, delineation. The basis of his volume is "the result of four summer cruises among the islands of the Pacific;" and the influence by which he was inspired when he wrote may be best imagined from a perusal of his own statement: "I have sought," he says, "to reproduce the atmosphere of a people who are wonderfully imaginative and emotional; they nourish the first symptoms of an affinity, and reveal in the freshness of an affection as brief and blissful as a honeymoon."

The Life and Works of Mrs. Barbauld, edited by Mrs. Grace Ellis, reaches us from Boston (Osgood and Co.). Mrs. Barbauld is hardly a household word with the present generation, but, as the editor remarks, lives in the affectionate recollection of so many of their seniors as fully to justify the present biography and selection from her writings. It is, indeed, impossible to over-estimate Mrs. Barbauld's service as the first to introduce healthy and rational juvenile literature into our nurseries and school-rooms; and, although her other literary labours were neither so eminently useful nor destined to equal durability, they are still the productions of an independent, capacious, animated, and liberal mind. While much is antiquated, much among the miscellaneous works here collected may still be read with pleasure, especially the slightly satirical dialogues, whose spirit and excellent feeling remind us of the authoress's contributions to that universal favourite, "Evenings at Home." The more ambitious of Mrs. Barbauld's poetical performances are already forgotten; but her "Lines to Life," like Blanco White's sonnet on the same subject, suffice for one reputation. These miscellanies, prose and poetical alike, are collected in the second volume of the work before us. The first is occupied by the biography, which might be pronounced tame and wordy but for the relief of Mrs. Barbauld's ever bright and graphic correspondence, which affords many glimpses of the manners and literary history of her time.

The faculty of musical utterance is the most distinctive characteristic of the author of Music and Moonlight, by Arthur O'Shaughnessy (Chatto and Windus), and his success is usually in the ratio of the adaptation of his theme for expression in pure song. Few recent poems exhibit a more intimate and exquisite association of melody with feeling than Mr. O'Shaughnessy's "Song of Betrothal," "Outcry," "Zuleika," and most of the little unnamed lyrics, especially those beginning, "I made another garden" and "Has summer come without the rose?" Nor is the poet by any means incapable of loftier flights, when his subject admits of being conceived on a restricted scale. The introductory ode, for example, is a masterpiece not merely of melodious expression, but of dignified sentiment also, and there is much power of thought as well as of speech in individual passages of the "Ode to a New Age" and "Europe." In general, however, the longer poems suffer from a disproportion of the matter to the language; the motive is exhausted much sooner than the minstrel. This diffuseness, together with a not infrequent euphuism of diction equally inconsistent with the perfection of lyrical style, injures the effect of much of Mr. O'Shaughnessy's volume. Wherever he attains conciseness and simplicity he may almost be pronounced perfect in his own sphere, which may be defined as the lyrical expression of the transports and torments of love, chastened by a rapturous yet melancholy mysticism. The blending of these elements is more complete than in the "Epic of Women," upon which the present volume, though less varied, brilliant, and striking, indicates an advance in several important respects.

A spirit and manner quite out of the common way and superior to the common order give a special charm and grace to Studies and Romances, by H. Schütz Wilson (Henry S. King and Co.). Some of the papers have already appeared in magazines; but, if the nature of all may be surmised from the perusal of a few, they are agreeably free from the sort of trademark usually discernible in such contributions.

OBITUARY OF EMINENT PERSONS.

PRINCESS PALAGONIA GRIFFO.

Maud Mary, Princess Palagonia Griffio, née Lady Maude Walpole, who died, on the 2nd inst., at Florence, was born Aug. 9, 1844, the second daughter of Horatio, present Earl of Orford, by Harriett Bettina Frances, his wife, only child of the Hon. Sir Fleetwood Pellet, and was, consequently, great-granddaughter of Horatio, Earl of Orford, who succeeded to the barony of Walpole at the decease of his cousin, the celebrated Horace Walpole. Lady Maude Walpole married, Nov. 11, 1871, Prince Palagonia Griffio, Grandee of Spain of the First Class; her elder and only sister, Lady Dorothy Walpole, having become, three years previously, the wife of the Duc del Balzo, also a Grandee of Spain.

SIR C. FOX.

The death is announced of Sir Charles Fox, the eminent engineer, and the builder of the Exhibition building of 1851 in Hyde Park, and of the Crystal Palace. He was the youngest son of Dr. Fox, of Derby, and was born in that town in 1810. He studied for some time for the medical profession, but subsequently relinquished it, and was articled to Mr. John Ericsson, then in business at Liverpool, and whom he assisted, among other things, at the trial of locomotive engines at Rainhill, on the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, in the year 1829. He was placed by the late Mr. Robert Stephenson on the London and Birmingham Railway, then in course of construction. Since the year 1857 Sir Charles has practised in London as a civil and consulting engineer, with his two elder sons. He was knighted after the opening of the Exhibition of 1851, together with Sir W. Cubitt and Sir Joseph Paxton.

SIR WILLIAM MARTINS.

Sir William Martins, Knt., died, at his residence, 3, Hyde Park-gardens, on the 5th inst., in his eighty-seventh year—the oldest member, it is presumed, of her Majesty's state household. He was for very many years Gentleman Usher to the Queen and Usher of the Sword of State, and received the honour of knighthood in 1840. He married, in 1837, Harriet, daughter of the late Sir T. Maah, of the Lord Chamberlain's department.

MR. T. B. ADDISON.

Thomas Batty Addison, Esq., Recorder of Preston and Constable of Lancaster Castle, died at his residence, Winkley-square, Preston, on the 6th inst., aged eighty-seven. He was son of John Addison, Esq., of Preston, barrister-at-law, by Agnes, his wife, daughter of Thomas Batty, Esq. He received his education at the Charterhouse, and was called to the Bar at the Inner Temple in 1808.

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated April 8, 1872, of Harriet, Countess of Guilford (wife of John Lettison Elliot), late of No. 10, Connaught-place, Hyde Park, who died on April 16 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by the Hon. Frederic Henry North, the son, and Henry Jeffreys Bushby, the son-in-law, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testatrix bequeaths all her India bonds to her husband; £3000 consols to her daughter Lady Harriet Ward; £6000 consols to her daughter Lady Frances Bushby; £5000 consols to the said Henry Jeffreys Bushby; £4000 consols between her two grandsons, Morton William North and Cecil North; an annuity of £120 to her sister-in-law, Augusta Ward; an annuity of £30 to her coachman, Hugh Neil; and the residue of all the property which she has power to appoint to the said Frederic Henry North and Henry Jeffreys Bushby.

The will and codicil, dated July 12 and 19, 1871, of Benoit Josephine, Countess of Montalto, in the Republic of San Marino, in Italy, and wife of John Bowes, of Streatham Castle, Durham, who died on Feb. 9 last, at No. 7, Rue de Berlin, Paris, were proved on the 23rd ult. by Mr. John Bowes, the husband, the Right Hon. Sir William Henry Hutt, K.C.B., Henry Morgan Vane, the Rev. Thomas Witham, Alexander William Kinglake, Edward Young Western, George Adolphus Western, John Dickson Holmes, and Ralph John Dent, the surviving executors, the personalty being sworn under £20,000. The testatrix devises upwards of twenty acres of land at Barnard Castle as a public park and the building thereon as a public museum; and she gives to such museum all her pictures, books, works of art, curiosities, antiquities, and furniture, which are of great rarity and value. The residue of her pure personal estate she bequeaths, during the life of her husband, as he may think expedient, and, upon his decease, as the remaining trustees may think expedient, for the purpose of preserving and maintaining the said park and museum. A great many directions are given as to the management of the said museum and park; the appointment of a curator, his duties, the practicing of the fire-engines once a month, &c. She also directs that the floors of the museum, when dusty, are to be washed, and not swept.

The will, dated Dec. 10, 1872, of Sir Thomas William Holburne, Bart., late of No. 10, Cavendish-square, Bath, who died on Feb. 17 last, was proved on the 2nd inst. by Miss Mary Ann Barbara Holburne, the sister, the surviving executrix, the personalty being sworn under £25,000. The testator bequeaths the portrait by Sir Joshua Reynolds of his grandfather, Admiral Holburne, formerly governor of Greenwich Hospital, to his said sister for life, and at her death to the Commissioners of Greenwich Hospital; £100 each, free of duty, to the Bath Mineral Water Hospital and the Bath Casualty Hospital; £50, also free of duty, to the Royal Victoria Park, Bath; and, subject to two other legacies, the residue, including the property which he has power to appoint under the will of his aunt, Mrs. Cusans, goes to his said sister, Miss M. A. B. Holburne.

The will, dated June 12, 1866, of Frederick Ernest Blatspiel, formerly of No. 9, Warwick-court, afterwards of No. 20, John-street, Bedford-row, but late of No. 30, Tavistock-square, who died March 8 last, was proved on the 13th ult. by Alderman Sir Benjamin Samuel Phillips, Richard Henry Poland, and James Barclay, the executors; the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator bequeaths £200 to each of his executors; £100 each to the trustees of the Parochial School of St. Andrew, Holborn; the London Orphan Asylum, Clapton; and the German Hospital, Dalston; and £50 to the Infant Orphan Asylum, Wansstead. Provision is made for his son and his sister, and the residue is given to his five daughters.

The will, dated July 25, 1872, of Mrs. Maria Sarah Huxtable, late of Sutton Waldron, Dorset, who died on the 2nd ult., at Torquay, was proved on the 2nd inst. by her husband, the Venerable Anthony Huxtable, the sole executor, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. Subject to some present legacies, the husband gets the life estate. At his death there are various legacies to her nephews and nieces and others, and the residue is to go as her said husband shall by will appoint.

Mr. Mechi's farm will be open to the inspection of gentlemen interested in agriculture till harvest.

PROBLEM NO. 1583.

By Mr. DENDRINO.

BLACK.

WHITE.

White to play, and mate in three moves.

MATCH BETWEEN THE LONDON AND VIENNA CHESS CLUBS.

The following is the second game in this interesting contest:—
(Scotch Gambit.)

GAME II.

BLACK (Vienna). WHITE (London).
1. P to K 4th. P to K 4th.
2. Kt to K B 3rd. Kt to Q B 3rd.
3. P to Q 4th. P takes P.
4. Kt takes P. Q to K R 5th.
5. Kt to Q Kt 5th.
This capital move, which was invented by Mr. Horwitz, nearly thirty years ago, still maintains its ground; though some good players are becoming disposed to prefer the move, lately introduced by Mr. G. A. Fraser, of 6. Kt to K B 3rd.

The correct move here was supposed to be 8. Q to B 4th, until Mr. Staunton exposed its fallacy in the following variation:—

8. Q to B 3rd. B to Q B 4th.
9. Kt takes P (ch). Kt to Q 5th.
10. Kt to K B 4th. Kt takes P (ch).
11. Kt takes R. Q takes K. and the first player has the better game.

6. B to Q 2nd.
The correct reply. If Vienna had played P to Q B 3rd or Kt to Q B 3rd, the opponent would have obtained some advantage by taking the K's P, checking, and then moving 8. Q to B 4th in the one case, and in the other taking off the Knight with the Bishop.

7. B to K 2nd. Q takes K P (ch).
8. Castles. B takes K.
9. Kt takes B. B takes K.
10. P to Q 4th. Kt to K B 5th.

The Vienna have lost a Pawn; but, as in the Scotch game, they have a considerable advantage in the opening.
11. Kt to K B 3rd.
The London committee were of opinion after-wards, that they would have done better by playing this Kt to K R 3rd. As it happened, however, their opponents played in a manner which led to the identical position which would have been reached had they played.

12. P to K B 3rd. Kt to K Kt 5th.
13. P to K Kt 3rd. Kt to K B 3rd.
14. Kt to Q 2nd. Kt to K R 3rd.
We have now, according to the London committee, the same position which would have occurred had they played, on their tenth move, Kt to K B 3rd. Each side has lost two moves: London by 10. Kt to K B 3rd and 11. Kt to K B 3rd; Vienna by 11. Kt to K B 3rd and 12. Kt to K Kt 5th.

15. Kt to Q 2nd. Q to K Kt 3rd.
16. B to K R 5th. Q to K B 4th.
17. B to K B 3rd. P to Q Kt 3rd.
The London committee present the annexed variation, to show that they could not safely play the Kt to K 4th:—

17. B to K Kt 2nd. Kt to K 4th.
18. Q to Q 4th. Kt takes P.
19. Q to Q 5th, &c.
20. Kt to Q 2nd. B to Q Kt 2nd.
21. Q to Q 2nd.

The Vienna may not have played altogether unacceptably since their tenth move, but they have certainly contrived to maintain a superiority of position.
22. P to K B 3rd.
This, as the London players admit, looks very tame, but in reality they had no good move at command. Their best mode of attack seems to lie in playing Kt to K 4th or K to K 2nd, either of which turns out well or them upon rigid examination. For example:—

In the first place.
23. Q to Q 4th. Kt to K 4th.
24. Q to Q 5th. Kt takes P.
25. P to K B 4th. Kt to Q B 3rd.
26. Q takes K P. Q to K Kt 3rd.
27. Kt takes P (ch). K takes R.
28. Kt to K B 5th (ch). K to Q 3rd.
29. K to Q 4th (ch). K to Q 5th.
and then gives mate in two moves.

In the second place.
23. Kt to Q B 3rd (ch). K to K 2nd.
24. Kt takes P. K takes Kt.
25. Q to Q 4th (ch). B to K 2nd.
26. Kt takes Q R. B takes Kt.
27. P to Q Kt 5th. Kt to Q K 2nd.
28. B to K 5th. Kt takes P.
29. Q to Q Kt 5th (ch). K takes P.
and wins.

At this moment the Vienna club, abandoning Game I., proposed that the present game should be given up as a drawn battle. As this was resigning the match, the London club consented to the proposal, and the contest terminated. No one will dispute the prudence of London in agreeing to consider the game as drawn, though there can be very little doubt that if it had been fought out they would have won it.

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. have just added to their already extensive series of the "octavo edition of operas" by the publication of Flotow's "Martha," the musical portion edited by Mr. Berthold Tours, and the original German text associated with an English translation, carefully made by Madame Natalie Macfarren. This edition has the same merits as those which characterise previous issues, including frequent indications of the leading features of the orchestral score.

The Organist's Quarterly Journal (also published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co.) now extends to twenty-three parts, and has entered on a third volume. The most recent number commences with an "Offertorium" by Mr. C. A. Barry—a gentleman whose name is favourably known both as a practical musician and as a writer on the art. The piece referred to is well suited to the purpose indicated by its title, and allows of some effective contrasts in the use of the various stops. "Twelve Short and Easy Preludes," which come next, are composed by Herr Augustus Bord, and will be found useful either as preludes or interludes. An "Allegro Marziale," by Mr. F. E. Gladstone, is bold and effective, and will serve well as a concluding voluntary, the following "Andante," by Mr. J. H. Wallis, being equally fitted for the purpose of a "middle voluntary." The fugue by Mr. W. Wilmore (preceded by a short prelude) is based on a well-marked theme, which is treated with much ingenuity. The work is edited by Mr. Spark (organist of the Leeds Townhall).

We have already noticed Messrs. Boosey and Co.'s serial publication entitled "Lillie's Picture-Music," in which the tastes of the youngest students are consulted by a selection of pieces in various styles, interspersed with full-size engravings illustrative thereof; thus keeping childish attention alive without the fatigue of monotony. The second book of the secular series, popular melodies, has just been issued—its contents comprising various well-known subjects, easily arranged for the pianoforte.

Messrs. R. Cocks and Co. have recently contributed some welcome additions to drawing-room vocal music. Signor Ciro Pinsuti's songs, "Don't forget me" and "The Land of Love," have each an agreeable melody, suitable for a mezzo-soprano of moderate compass. The lady formerly known as Miss M. Lindsay has contributed three songs, "The old, sweet story," "When the ship comes home," and "When sparrows build," which are likewise available for a mezzo-soprano voice of limited range. Mr. Brinley Richards's patriotic song, "The Black Watch" (to words by Mr. H. B. Farnie), is a bold and vigorous piece, affording good scope for a declamatory singer.

Among the instrumental music recently published by Messrs. Cocks and Co. are some new numbers of Mr. G. F. West's "Gems selected from the Great Masters"—a series of extracts from classical works, for the pianoforte, with occasional condensation and simplification, and the leading fingering marked for the guidance of students. The later issues include portions of Mendelssohn's second concerto, the adagio from the same composer's "Hymn of Praise" ("Lobgesang"), and the chorus "For unto us," from Handel's "Messiah." "The Duke of Edinburgh's Quick March," by J. Riviere, is an animated pianoforte piece, introducing the air "God Bless our Sailor Prince" and the Russian National Hymn.

Of three songs by M. E. P. Fürstenberg—"Ye little birds that sit and sing," "The parting," and "I'll give to thee" (published by Messrs. Delavanti and Sennel)—we prefer the last two. The first is the most simple, both in its melody and the accompaniment; but the other two pieces have more character in each respect. A voice of ordinary compass will suffice for all.

Three pianoforte pieces by Mr. Westley Richards (Messrs. Lamborn Cocks and Co.), an "Impromptu" a "Capriccio," and a series of variations on the air "Drink to me only with thine eyes," are well written for the instrument, and will afford useful and agreeable practice.

The series of "Standard Russian Songs," published by Messrs. J. B. Cramer and Co., will attract interest at the present time. No. 1, "I love him so," by Kotschubey, and No. 2, "The loved can never be lost," are both characterised rather by a southern suavety than a northern tone; and will, perhaps, therefore be all the more grateful to ordinary vocalists. The melody of each is agreeable, is free from difficulty, and lies within moderate compass. "She's from Cork" is a characteristic song, bearing the popular name of Henry Russell; a contrast to this being offered by "I'll remember thee," in which the composer, Ursula Brook, has applied an expressive melody to sentimental words.

From Messrs. Cramer and Co. we also have some pianoforte pieces, among which a caprice, entitled "The Spinning Wheel," by L. Goldieri, and "The Light Heart," a passing thought, by S. Alice Sheppard, may be commended as being showy without any severe tax on the player's executive powers.

The name of Louisa Gray has for some time been known as that of a successful producer of songs. In that entitled "She waits for me" (recently published by Messrs. Chappell and Co.), the same melodious facility is apparent as heretofore. Mr. J. L. Roeckel's song, "Lilla's Vows" (also issued by Messrs. Chappell), has much grace of character, both in the melody and the accompaniment.

Having sat very closely for ten days under the moderatorship of the Rev. Wm. Magill, of Cork, the General Assembly of the Irish Presbyterian Church concluded its annual deliberations at Belfast yesterday week.

The arguments in the Mar peerage claim, which have occupied the House of Lords, sitting as a Committee of Privileges, for several days, were brought to a close on Tuesday, and the further consideration of the case was adjourned sine die.

Rough and ungenial weather on Tuesday marred the annual fête on board the training-ship Warspite, which is moored off Chatham. The First Lord was, nevertheless, accompanied by a large company of admirals, generals, and friends of the young tars. The drill—which comprised reefing, setting sail, manning boats, and other details of ship duty—was gone through creditably. Mr. Ward Hunt concluded the ceremony by distributing the prizes and addressing a few words to the boys.

A musical performance was given yesterday week, at Grosvenor House, by the pupils of the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music for the Blind, by the permission of the Duke of Westminster, president of the college. The performers, who were totally blind, did themselves and their principal great credit. Some of the solos were sung with very great taste, and Weber's "Invitation à la Valse" was brilliantly performed by four pianists. Funds are greatly needed for the object of enlarging the institution, and we hope that its bankers, Messrs. Barclay, Bevan, and Co., will soon receive the £17,000 still needed for the purpose beyond the £8000 already subscribed. Subscriptions may be forwarded to the hon. secretaries, C. H. Chambers, Esq., and Captain Cavendish C. Fitzroy, at 28, Mount-street, Grosvenor-square.

A SKETCH AT HENLEY REGATTA.

emergency. But a large number of them have; and, while combating with famine, have strengthened all those elements of moral character which are the best earnest of national improvement and growth.

Then, it is to be hoped, that the agony through which India has gone will open her eyes, and dispose her heart to those permanent remedial measures the speedy actualisation of which will prove in the end to be the best economy. Much has been done already in the way of Public Works. Little, however, as compared with the need of them. Periodical famines ought to be made impossible—will be, we trust. No village in India should be difficult of access. No land in India should be dependent for its fertility upon capricious skies; railways, internal roads, storage of water, and well-planned irrigation may be to India trustworthy sources of incalculable wealth. The Marquis of Salisbury fully appreciates these wants of the Eastern peninsula, and, by seeking to add a special Minister of Public Works to the Council of the Viceroy, he has indicated his conviction of the direction in which British policy must henceforth proceed in India. The famine has read a lesson to us all; we have but to appreciate the moral of it. A great opportunity is before us. An enterprise of surpassing magnitude claims our immediate attention. We have subdued the inhabitants of Hindostan, and have thereby put ourselves under the obligation to use our authority to the utmost in subduing the physical evils to which they are exposed.

THE COURT.

The Queen and Princess Beatrice attended Divine service on Sunday, performed at Balmoral Castle by the Rev. A. Campbell, of Crathie. Her Majesty and the Princess, previously to leaving Balmoral, drove to the Linn of Dee, to Loch Callater, and to other picturesque localities. The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, also visited the Rev. A. Campbell and Miss Campbell at The Manse, and the Female School of Art at Abergeldie. Lady Clark of Tillypronie had an interview with her Majesty at the castle.

The Queen, accompanied by Princess Beatrice, left Balmoral Castle at a quarter past one o'clock on Tuesday, en route for Windsor. The suite in attendance consisted of the Countess of Erroll, the Hon. Mary Lascelles, Mdlle. Noréle, Lieutenant-General Viscount Bridport, Major-General H. Ponsonby, Mr. Sahl, and Dr. Marshall. Her Majesty travelled in the customary manner, by the usual route from the Highlands. At Ballater a guard of honour of the 99th Regiment (the Duke of Edinburgh's Own), under the command of Captain Harvey, was in attendance. At Aberdeen there was a large assemblage of the citizens, and upwards of fifty boys of the Mars training-ship were drawn up on the platform, who heartily cheered the Royal travellers as they left the station. At the Bridge of Dun there were also numerous spectators, including the Earl of Dalhousie and Lady Christian Maule, from Brechin Castle, with whom the Queen conversed, Lady Christian presenting her Majesty with a bouquet of choice flowers. Perth was reached at twelve minutes past six. The Queen was received by Lord Kinnaird, and conducted to the committee-rooms of the station, where dinner was served, and, after a stay of forty-five minutes, the journey was resumed, the public not being admitted to the stations south of Perth, in order that the repose of the Queen might not be disturbed. Her Majesty arrived at Windsor Castle at nine o'clock on Wednesday morning. Prince Leopold, who still continues in delicate health, arrived at the castle the previous evening from Oxford.

A state concert will be given at Buckingham Palace on Wednesday next.

The Hon. Mary Lascelles has left the castle. The Hon. Emily Cathcart and the Hon. Mary Pitt have arrived as Maids of Honour in Waiting. Lord De Ros and the Hon. Mortimer Sackville West have arrived as Lord and Groom in Waiting; and Major-General Lord Alfred Paget has succeeded Lieutenant-General Viscount Bridport as Equerry to the Queen.

THE STATE BALL.

By command of the Queen, a state ball was given, on Wednesday, at Buckingham Palace. The Prince and Princess of Wales arrived at the palace from Marlborough House, escorted by a detachment of the Royal Horse Guards. The Duke of Connaught, Prince and Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein, Princess Louise (Marchioness of Lorne) and the Marquis of Lorne, the Duke of Cambridge, and the Duchess of Teck were present at the ball. The Yeomen of the Guard were on duty, and a guard of honour of the Scots Fusilier Guards was in attendance. The Prince and Princess of Wales, accompanied by the members of the Royal family, conducted by the Lord Chamberlain and attended by their ladies and gentlemen in waiting, entered the saloon at twenty minutes before eleven o'clock, when dancing commenced.

The Princess of Wales wore a dress of brown poul de soie, with plaitings of brown tulle and Honiton lace, ornamented with garlands of the rose de thé, and veiled with silver spotted tulle. Head-dress and ornaments of pearls and diamonds. Orders—Victoria and Albert and the Danish family order.

Princess Christian wore a dress of white moire antique and satin trimmed with Brussels lace, white orchids, and tulle. Head-dress, tiara of turquoises and diamonds, with bunches of orchids; ornaments, turquoises and diamonds. Orders—Victoria and Albert, and the Prussian, Portuguese, and Russian orders.

The principal members of the Corps Diplomatique, with the ladies of their respective families, were present, and invitations were also issued to about 1800 personages of distinction.

Mr. D. Godfrey's quadrille band, conducted by himself, was in attendance.

THE PRINCE AND PRINCESS OF WALES.

The Prince and Princess of Wales returned to Marlborough House on Monday, from Armitage Hill, where they had passed the Ascot week. In the evening their Royal Highnesses were present at a ball given by the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador at his residence in Belgrave-square. On Tuesday the Prince and Princess, with Prince Albert Victor and Prince George of Wales, visited the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, at Buckingham Palace, and took leave of their Royal and Imperial Highnesses previous to their departure for the Continent. The Duchess of Teck visited the Prince and Princess at Marlborough House. In the evening their Royal Highnesses were at the Princess's Theatre. The Prince and Princess were at the state ball at Buckingham Palace. The Prince, accompanied by her children, has driven out daily.

The Prince and Princess will give garden parties at Chiswick on Tuesday next and Tuesday, July 14.

THE DUKE AND DUCHESS OF EDINBURGH.

The Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, on Tuesday, opened the Nursery and Mission Room for the Infants of Seamen of the Port of London at St. Paul's, Dock-street. The Duke and Duchess were received at the building by the Bishop of Rochester and various civic functionaries. The 1st City of London Artillery Volunteers, with their band, formed a guard of honour. An address was read by the Vicar, and purses containing five guineas each were presented to the Duchess by ladies and children. Their Royal and Imperial Highnesses inspected the building and also an exhibition of birds and flowers held at the establishment, and after partaking of a déjeuner took their departure amid the enthusiastic cheers of the assemblage. The Duke and Duchess left town on Wednesday en route for Ems. Their Royal and Imperial Highnesses travelled from Charing-cross via the South Eastern Railway to Dover. A Royal salute was fired from the castle upon the embarkation of the Duke and Duchess from the Admiralty Pier, whence they crossed the Channel to Calais and travelled thence via Belgium to Ems.

Entertainments have been given by the Archbishop of Canterbury and Mrs. Tait, the French Ambassador and Ambassadress, the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch, the Duke of Devonshire, the Marchioness of Salisbury, Earl and Countess Sydney, the Earl and Countess of Sandwich, the Earl and Countess of Lonsdale, the Earl and Countess of Shrewsbury, the Earl and Countess of Malmesbury, the Earl of Gainsborough, the Earl and Countess of Cawdor, Earl and Countess Amherst, the Earl and Countess of Harewood, Lord Carlisle and Countess Frances Waldegrave, Mr. Brandling and Julia Countess of Jersey, Viscount and Viscountess Falmouth, Baroness Burdett-Coutts, Lord and Lady Egerton of Tatton, Lord and Lady Howard of Glossop, Lord and Lady Henniker, Lord and Lady Lawrence, Lord and Lady Belper, Lord and Lady Templemore, Lady Marian Alford, Lady Llanover, Lady Dashwood, Lord and Lady Vernon, the Hon. Mrs. Charles Lennox Butler, the Hon. Sir Baliol and Lady Brett, Lady O'Brien, the Right Hon. the Chancellor of the Exchequer and Lady Northcote, and the Right Hon. R. Lowe and Mrs. Lowe.

THE CHURCH.

PREFEMENTS AND APPOINTMENTS.

Burrough, J., to be Rector of Hilborough, Norfolk.
Denny, R.: Vicar of Tatham, Lancashire.
Hook, C.: Vicar of Funtington, Sussex.
Nepean, Montagu Brymer: Vicar of Lenham.
Reith, David: Vicar of Christ Church, Greenwich.
Sandford, E.: Vicar of Denford, Northamptonshire.
Stapleton, Elliot Henry: Rector of Mereworth.
Webb, C.: Vicar of Mansfield Woodhouse.

Hythe Church, which Mr. Street reports to be, "for its size, almost, if not quite, the most artistically designed building in England," is to be restored at a cost of £5500. A meeting was held on Thursday week—the Bishop of Dover in the chair—to inaugurate the work, and a sum of £600 was collected.

The Bishop of Ely, on Thursday morning, reopened the Church of St. Benedict, Cambridge, which had undergone considerable restoration, at a cost of about £1500. The south aisle and the chancel have been rebuilt, and the church has been entirely re-seated.

An influential deputation, headed by the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, waited, on Tuesday, upon the President of the Education Committee of the Privy Council with reference to the transfer of the National Society's schools to school boards. It is desired that such transfers should not be made absolute, but only on lease, and subject to conditions ensuring the fulfilment of the original intentions of the founders.

A beautifully-illuminated address has been presented to the Rev. J. M. S. Brooke, M.A., by the parishioners of St. Mary's, Wolverhampton, to testify their regard and esteem for his labours among them as curate in charge during six months. A handsome gold watch and chain have been given to Mrs. Brooke. The Rev. J. C. Cammack has been presented with a handsomely-bound set of Wordsworth's "Commentaries" and a purse of one hundred sovereigns by members of the congregation of St. James's, Norland, Notting-hill, as a testimonial of the unwearied manner in which he has worked among the poor of that parish during the period of his curacy there. Mr. J. C. Cammack has been appointed to the incumbency of the newly-formed district of St. Clement's, City-road.

The governors of the Corporation of the Sons of the Clergy held a meeting on Saturday, at their house, 2, Bloomsbury-place—the Archbishop of Canterbury in the chair—to distribute benefactions to poor clergymen with families of not less than three children. The cases of 120 clergymen, applying from various parts of England and Wales, having been carefully considered, donations, amounting in the aggregate to £1900, were granted to them. Fourteen applicants had each three children, thirteen others four each, fifteen others five each, seventeen others six each, thirteen others seven each, sixteen others eight each, eight others nine each, three others ten each, two others twelve and thirteen. Some clergymen applied who, not having three children, were not eligible to partake in the particular benefactions referred to, but to whom grants were made from another fund applicable to their cases. The governors next took into consideration twenty-six applications for apprentice fees, educational grants, and outfits for clergy children, and towards these most useful objects gave £350. In May last thirty-four widows and aged single daughters were elected to pensions of £20 per annum, to fill vacancies which had occurred since May, 1873, in the society's list of 712 pensioners, and a few other widows and daughters were elected to pensions of smaller amount. Amongst 111 other widows and daughters who applied the governors distributed £940, and £500 were given for educating and placing out in life forty-eight children.

THE UNIVERSITIES AND PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

OXFORD.

The election to scholarships and exhibitions at Keble has taken place as follows:—Classical Scholarships: J. A. Cyril Brown, Marlborough College. Natural Science Scholarship: W. J. Noble, Epsom College. Classical Exhibition: A. E. Wigan, Radley College. Proxime Accesserunt: A. Shadwell, Uppingham School; and C. W. Townsend, Keble College. There were about thirty-six candidates.

Mr. A. L. Smith, B.A., Balliol, has been elected Fellow of Trinity. Mr. Smith gained "a first class" in classics under moderators in Trinity Term, 1871; a "first class" in the Final Classical School, Trinity Term, 1873, and was awarded the Marquis of Lothian's Prize (subject, "Erasmus") in 1874.

CAMBRIDGE.

The Previous Examination List, the result of the first examination held under the new regulations, was published last week. Of the 230 candidates for the first part, which includes a Greek, a Latin classic, St. Matthew in the original Greek, and a paper of questions in Latin and Greek grammar, 156 have satisfied the examiners, 54 passing with credit in the first class. For the second part, which includes Paley, Euclid, arithmetic, and algebra, of the 253 candidates, 162 have passed, 60 being placed in the first class; 102 have passed the additional subjects required of all candidates for honours out of 171 candidates. Under the new system the number of rejected candidates is considerably less in proportion than formerly. Nine non-collegiate students obtained a first class.

The number of degrees conferred by the University during the academical year 1873-4—that is, from June 18, 1873, to June 20, 1874—is the largest on record, amounting to 822. Of this number eleven took the degree of Doctor—namely, 4 in divinity, 4 in law, and 3 in medicine; 310 proceeded to the degree of Master of Arts, 20 to the degree of Master of Laws, 462 to the degree of Bachelor of Arts, 2 to the degree of Bachelor of Divinity, 11 to the degree of Bachelor of Laws, and 6 to the degree of Bachelor of Medicine. These numbers are exclusive of the honorary degrees conferred last Tuesday, and represent degrees after examination and residence.

Dr. Jex-Blake, the newly-appointed Head Master of Rugby School, presided last Saturday at the delivery of the annual speeches, which took place in the Townhall. He expressed his thorough confidence in the future of the school.

The following have been elected to open scholarships at Marlborough College:—Senior scholars: Chandler and H. Thompson, Marlborough. Berens Scholar: R. D. Curtler, Marlborough. Junior scholar: J. Davidson, Mr. Waterfield's; Grant and Cholmondeley, Marlborough; Tothill, Mr. Waterfield's; Arkle and Eyres, Marlborough.

Prize day at University College on Wednesday brought with it a gratifying account of the state of the institution. The report read by the Dean of the Arts Faculty mentioned that the number of students enrolled had increased to 596. Lord Kimberley distributed the prizes, a share of which fell to ladies.

Wednesday, being speech day, or, to use the phraseology of the school for more than 300 years, "Apposition" at St. Paul's School, a numerous assemblage of old Paulines and other friends of the school met to witness the distribution of prizes. The chair was occupied by the Warden of the Mercers' Company, and among the visitors present were the Bishop of Llandaff, Baron Pollock, and a large number of ladies.

Additional interest was lent to the proceedings at the annual Speech Day at Wellington College, on Thursday week, by the fact that it was the first under the auspices of the new Head Master, the Rev. E. C. W. Wickham, son-in-law to Mr. Gladstone. The latter gentleman was expected to be present, but, owing to the death of Sir Stephen Glynne, his brother-in-law (who was likewise coming), he was unable to attend. The Duke of Wellington, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Lord Hampton, the Bishop of Hereford, the Chaplain-General, the Chancellor of Lincoln, Dr. Benson (the late Head Master), Colonel Paget, and a large company were present.

The annual celebration of Commemoration Day at King's College, London, took place, on Wednesday, with special services in the chapel, at which a sermon was preached by the Very Rev. the Dean of Westminster. At the conclusion of the service in the chapel a large company assembled in the hall to partake of luncheon, at which the Principal of the college presided. He was supported by Lord and Lady Hatherley, the Bishop of Winchester, the Earl of Harrowby, Lord Hampton, the Dean of Westminster, Mr. Forsyth, M.P., Sir F. Grant, Professor Carpenter, and many members of the council.

Last Saturday afternoon the Bishop of Chichester opened a chapel in connection with Eastbourne College—an institution founded mainly by the help of the Duke of Devonshire. The Bishop, in the course of an address, said that it was well and good that the old and wise practice of making chapels an integral part of educational establishments should be followed in our days. Eastbourne College, like many new institutions, had to fight its way through many difficulties; but it had now reached smoother waters, and there was reason to hope that a fair and prosperous future was before it.

The Rev. R. J. Hughes, M.A., Jesus College, Oxford, has been appointed master of Rossall Preparatory School.

The children belonging to the North London Collegiate School assembled, on Thursday, in St. James's Hall, for the purpose of receiving their prizes at the hands of the Earl of Dartmouth. The prize list, which was read by the Head Master, stated that the school again stood first in all England in University honours, and also had passed the greatest number of candidates in the metropolitan district.

The Rev. H. B. Tristram, LL.D., Canon of Durham, in the absence of the Bishop, presided at the speeches and prize distribution of Bishop Auckland Grammar School, on the 19th.

The prizes at Clitheroe Grammar School, founded by Philip and Mary in 1534, were distributed, on Wednesday, by Dr. Hayman, Vicar of Aldingham.

The prizes and certificates won by students of the Manchester centre in connection with the University of Cambridge local examinations were distributed, on Monday, by the Very Rev. the Dean.

HENLEY REGATTA.

That beautiful piece of the river, from Henley Bridge, which is adorned with Mrs. Damer's sculptured faces of Thames and Isis, down to the islet nearly opposite Fawley Court and Remenham, beneath the wooded cliffs of Park Place, has this week been made the scene of the annual contest among English amateur boatmen. The weather on Wednesday and Thursday, though bright at some times of the day, was unfortunately spoiled by violent stormy fits; but there was a pleasant hour for the more fortunate spectators who chanced to escape a wetting. Our front-page Engraving shows the enjoyable position of such a holiday party of gentlefolk on the margin of our gracious Thames, which, from Henley down to Windsor—ay, down to Weybridge and Walton—is as fair a stream, with banks as fair in cultured rural beauty, as any English scenery we know; nor would we consent to disparage the rather suburban attractions of Richmond and Hampton Court. The business of the Henley Regatta may be left to the commentator on "National Sports" in his next weekly chronicle of such performances. Our present aim is to bear witness, as we have often done before, to the charms of the Royal English River that flows through these metropolitan shires.

Lord Henry Lennox, on Wednesday afternoon, laid the foundation stone of the new waterworks at Chichester.

The Alhambra Music Hall at Bristol was destroyed by fire on Tuesday morning.

The Great Western Railway Company has converted all its south-western district from the broad to the narrow gauge.

Leaves from a Sketch-Book.

CORNWALL

The south-western peninsula of Great Britain might have been called "Little Britain." It was, like the mountainous region of Gwynneth or North Wales and the different parts of Strathclyde, including the Cumberland and Westmorland Lake district, a stronghold of Celtic nations against the Saxon and Norman conquerors of this island. The original inhabitants were Cymry or Cimmerians—perhaps those mentioned by Homer, as they were visited in his time by the Phœnician trading ships for tin. They were of kindred race to their neighbours of Dynevor or South Wales, and to their Continental neighbours in Brittany. A grand Celtic League or Confederation, of which King Arthur may really have been the last warlike and patriotic champion, held these Christian kingdoms of West Britain in alliance during the first half-century of the Saxon invasion. The field of Arthur's last battle, where he got his death-wound, fighting against his rebellious nephew, Mordred, is said to be at Camelford, not far from the ruins of Tintagel Castle, on the rock-bound north coast. It is more certain that the Britons, Danes, and Saxons, the last named under King Egbert, fought a great battle here in 823. The very name of Cornwall, like that of Wales, contains a token of this ancient enmity of race, but it contains something more. In the old Celtic tongue Kernio signified "Horn." The shores of this peninsula, like the head of a stag, thrust many an antlered promontory forth against the sea. The Romans, who Latinised every British name, called the province Cornubia, when they ruled here to a certain extent. The Saxons of Wessex, keeping the root of the old name, spoke of it as Corn-wealas; for they identified its Celtic race with the Wealas, or Welsh. This is the term everywhere applied by Teutonic or Germanic nations to foreigners whose language is not of the Germanic family, as the modern Germans to this day call Frenchmen and Italians welch. So it was that Cornwall long remained, to the popular English mind, an outlandish country. To the peasantry of Devon or Somerset it still retains that character; unfamiliar, uncomprehended, rather sinister and uncanny, if not, as in former ages, a land of man-eating giants, of doleful goblins, of malicious witches and elves or pixies, haunting its moors and woods. The true derivation of the name Cornwall has been stated. Anybody who chooses may believe in the hero Corineus, who overcame the giants Gog and Magog, and led them in chains to London, then called Troy-Novant or New Troy, the city founded by Brutus, grandson of Æneas, among the native Trinobantes on the banks of the Thames. We shall believe in no such matter, though we have seen Gog and Magog still captive in Guildhall. It was not Corineus, in our opinion, who gave his name to Cornwall, but the horn-shaped projections of its shores, more especially on the south side, where our Artist has rambled with his pleasing sketch-book.

The south coast of this peninsula, in Cornwall as in Devonshire, much differs from the north coast in its geological structure and the surface of the adjacent lands. On the north side of that bare upland ridge of peaty moor and granite, which stretches from Dartmoor to the Land's End, the shores of the Atlantic and Irish Sea, entering the Bristol Channel, are a precipitous wall, resembling the rampart of a mighty fortress, with turrets and bastions that defy the wrath of the ocean waves. Here and there, high up between the dark slaty cliffs, are little "combes" or hollows of delicious verdure, sloping and opening seaward from the bleak moorland behind them. But along the southern coast, in Mount's Bay, and from the Lizard Point to Plymouth Sound, the scenery is less stern of aspect, and perhaps less grand, yet more beautiful: it displays fine inlets and estuaries, landlocked gulfs and bays, with interior limbs or branches, and clusters of distinct headlands far out to sea. The more sheltered hills inland are thickly clothed with trees on the banks of the inner waters. Such is the estuary of the Fal, otherwise named Carrick Roads, where Pendennis Castle is confronted by the headland, the lighthouse, and the village church of St. Anthony in Roseland, close to the little town of St. Mawes. There is another St. Anthony, seven or eight miles further on, which stands in a similar position at the mouth of the Helford estuary, receiving the little river Hel from Helstone. That is St. Anthony in Meneage, or Meneacan, which means the rugged, stony bit of country terminated by the Lizard Point, the southernmost tip of Great Britain. It is of a third St. Anthony, or "Anthony," as familiarly called by the natives, that we have now to present a few sketches. The Anthony in question is near Saltash and Devonport, upon the shores of an inlet of the Hamoaze, or great estuary of the Tamar, which separates Cornwall from Devon, west of Plymouth Sound. The twin manors of East and West Anthony have a certain degree of dignity in the topographical and genealogical history of the West of England. They comprise what is called the church town and the hamlets of Torpoint, Wilcove, and Tregantle, besides the parish of St. John, with Tregenhawke. The original lords of St. Anthony were the Ardeackne family, from whom, by different marriage alliances, the two manors separately passed to the Carews and Arundels; thence to the Courtenays and Poles. That eminent scholar Richard Carew—in the time of Queen Elizabeth and James I.—who was associated with Camden, Stow, and Spelman in founding the Society of Antiquaries, about 1598, was the squire of East Anthony. His book, "The Survey of Cornwall," is one of the best works upon the antiquities of this county. The church here contains his monumental tomb, and in the manor house his portrait is preserved, with those of Sir Kenelm Digby and Admiral Van Tromp, by Vandyke. It is, perhaps, an odd coincidence that the Rev. Robert Polwhele, a later historian of Cornwall, was Rector of the other St. Anthony—namely, in Meneage. One of our Artist's sketches is a view of Frathy valley and bay. This place is near the St. Anthony and St. John's of the Hamoaze, but is situated on the open seacoast in Whitesand Bay, some distance west of Rame Head, with its newly-constructed fort. Before leaving the neighbourhood of this St. Anthony, let us bear record that the parish claims to be famous, like many others in Devon and Cornwall, by a miraculous thunderstorm having killed, or scorched and not killed, a whole congregation of people in the old church two hundred years ago. The mansion of Thanks, in this parish, was built in the last century, by Lord Graves, an Admiral who performed brave exploits in 1740, in the attack on Spanish forts in the West Indies. Of the Carews so long dwelling at St. Anthony, we may not forget Sir Alexander, who held command, for the Parliament, of St. Nicholas Island, in Plymouth Sound, during the Civil War. He was caught making terms with the King's party for earning a pardon by delivering up his post to the Royalist forces. For this attempted betrayal of his trust he was beheaded on Tower-hill. We have but touched one point of the Cornish coast in our present notice. Something of equal interest might be told of many other places in the Far West of Britain.

THE WOOLWICH INFANT SCHOOL.

The big gun that was built at Woolwich Arsenal for her Majesty's ship Devastation was called "the Woolwich Infant" by way of a joke upon its size. Its parents could not, indeed, have pleaded in their excuse as a young mother is said to have pleaded for her babe—that it was "only a little one;" but a fault it certainly was, for the experimental discharges cracked this mighty piece of ordnance in a most decisive manner. When we think of the explosion of a cartridge 2ft. 6 in. long, with 130 lb. of powder, to throw a 700 lb. shot from a tube 12 in. in diameter (a great bore, isn't it?), we must see it is a rather forcible proceeding. Upon such an occasion the interior surface of the gun has to suffer a pressure in some parts of more than 60 tons upon the square inch, which few infants could endure without bursting. Not much blame, therefore, is due to the original bantling of Woolwich Arsenal, which was recast in a better form; but the great guns of more recent construction, weighing likewise 35 tons each, are designed to endure a more severe ordeal of their strength. When the Emperor of Russia visited Woolwich, a few weeks ago, one of the sights offered to his inspection was the assemblage of fifty guns, large and small, which some facetious officer has called "the Infant School." The very large one, suspended from the crane, is even bigger than those we have mentioned, its weight being 38 tons. Four 35-ton guns are placed in the middle of the row; the others are twenty-five guns weighing twenty-five tons each, and a score of those weighing 20 tons each. Shot and cartridges belonging to the largest guns are placed on the ground near their muzzles. At the feet of the gentlemen who stand looking upon this display of gigantic artillery weapons lies one of the small mountain-guns of steel, throwing a 7-lb. shot or shell, invented for the Abyssinian War, and lately used against the Ashantees. Its length is about 3 ft., and it may be carried with ease by two men, slinging it on a pole, or it may travel on the back of a mule; the gun-carriage forms a separate load. This miniature ordnance will be quite as useful, in its way, as the mightiest cannon in the Queen's naval or military garrison service. Our illustration is from a photograph by Mr. H. Baden Pritchard, of the War Office photographic department.

LABOUR AND WAGES.

On the advice of Lord Walsingham and Mr. Clare Read, the Norfolk Farmers' Labour Defence Association has agreed to modify its rules with respect to locking out men and fixing a maximum wage. Mr. Read declared that the farmers were not fighting against legitimate union amongst labourers, but against a semi-political organisation, which, if allowed to carry out its principles, would become tyrannical.

There was a great trades demonstration at Manchester, on Saturday afternoon, in support of the locked-out agricultural labourers. The cash collected in money-boxes which accompanied the procession amounted to £192 13s., of which £117 was contributed in pennies.

A great demonstration of miners took place at Willenhall on Monday, connected with the Amalgamated Association. Sixteen bands of music and about 20,000 people, with numerous banners, collected upon an open space of ground amongst the pits. The multitudes were addressed by Mr. Halliday, president of the association; Mr. Brown, vice-president; and, amongst others, by two Roman Catholic priests. A strong feeling was expressed by the meeting to continue the struggle "to the bitter end," and Mr. Halliday assured them that there would be funds to enable them to hold out for some time.

The Cleveland miners' strike terminated last Saturday, when the Miners' Council, at a full representative meeting held at Saltburn-by-the-Sea, accepted the employers' terms.

Several persons have been fined for assaulting and intimidating non-unionists.

FOREIGN AND COLONIAL NEWS.

FRANCE.

(From our Correspondent in Paris.)

Thursday, June 25.

Although not devoid of interest, the sittings of the National Assembly have this week been more calm and commonplace than usual. The attention of the political world is just now centred in the proceedings of the Constitutional Committee, supposed to be engaged upon M. Casimir Péri's proposition for the definitive proclamation of the Republic, although, owing to the Committee's resolution to keep all its meetings secret, it is difficult to discover with what it is really occupied, and the newspapers are forced to fall back on a series of on dit more or less absurd and improbable. A debate of considerable importance took place in the Assembly on Saturday last, when, at M. Clapier's suggestion, it was resolved by 358 votes against 328 that the present objectionable system with reference to the appointment of provincial mayors should be maintained in vigour for another two years; and it is only at the expiration of that period that the new law now being discussed will be carried into effect. This contradictory vote has caused no little surprise, as only a few weeks ago the majority were remarkably anxious to have the new measure voted and promulgated. Amongst other bills passed this week by the Assembly may be mentioned one authorising the Government to award a certain number of decorations to successful French exhibitors at last year's Vienna Weltausstellung, and another for the protection of children trained to follow the unhappy calling of acrobats.

The Republican journals, and notably M. Gambetta's organ, La République Française, have commenced, this week, a veritable campaign against the Bonapartist party, exposing some fresh intrigue or manoeuvre every day. The attention of the Government is called to the numerous Bonapartist sub-committees existing in different parts of Paris; the attempts made to establish similar réunions in the provinces are periodically signalled. Colonel Pietri, it would appear, has established a "Comité des Anciens Officiers" in the capital, charged with the mission of winning over the army to the cause of Napoleon IV., and a circular emanating from it has been going the round of the press. The Bonapartists still carry on their propaganda with a high hand in the departments, and, as the Government has begun making seizures of portraits of the Prince Imperial, the wholesale distribution of cartes de visite has been replaced by that of brochures, eulogising the fallen régime and prophesying the speedy enthronement of the youthful exile of Chiselhurst. One of these pamphlets seeks to rehabilitate Marshal Bazaine, whom it describes as a "martyr who sacrificed himself for the army and the nation." In addition to these brochures the République Française calls attention to the appearance of a gaily coloured broadsheet depicting the exploits of the Prince Imperial from his birth to the Bonapartist reception at Chiselhurst on Aug. 15 last, which is sold in the streets, with M. de Fourton's sanction. In reference to the inquiry set on foot by the Government, the semi-official organs announce that the police have already discovered the existence of four secret Bonapartist committees, presided over by MM. Jolibois, Fleury, Lagrange, and Pietri.

The newspapers have been commenting, this week, on the account of last autumn's Fusionist intrigues, recently published by the Times; and General Changarnier has drawn up a declaration on behalf of his colleagues of the once famous Committee of Nine, in which they formally deny that the Count de Chambord ever consented to abandon the white flag, or that they ever pretended he did, the procès verbal of their sittings expressly stating that, in alluding to the maintenance of the tricolour flag, M. Chesnelong spoke in his own name and those of his fellow-negotiators, and in nowise in that of Henry V—a point which does not seem to have been generally understood.

On Friday evening, at six o'clock, after a long and lingering illness, M. Jules Janin, the time-honoured Parisian "prince of critics," expired, at his pleasant rural residence at Passy. His funeral, which took place on Monday, was attended by nearly 3000 persons, nearly the whole of the Paris literary and artistic world being present. Several funeral orations were pronounced—one by M. Cuvillier-Fleury, in the name of the Academy, of which Janin was a member, since 1870, and another by M. John Lemoine, on behalf of the Journal des Débats, in writing for which Janin originally acquired celebrity. France has undoubtedly suffered a considerable loss in the person of this brilliant, polished, and elegant writer, one of the most fertile of his epoch, the long list of his published works, over sixty in number, comprising novels, such as that strange, fantastical composition, "L'Âne Mort et la Femme Guillotinée," with which he made his début in 1829; "La Confession," "La Religieuse de Toulouse," and "Circé;" books of travel relating to Normandy, Brittany, Italy, and the East; historical works, such as his "Histoire de France," and his "Histoire de la Littérature Dramatique;" biographies, such as his well-known studies on Barnave and Samuel Richardson; and translations, including his "Horace," generally acknowledged to be the best in the French language, and his rendering of "Clarissa Harlowe." His last work, entitled "Paris et Versailles il y a Cent Ans," was published only a few months ago.

Statisticians frequently maintain that crime is generally on the decrease; but, judging from the constantly recurring and remarkably horrible criminal cases recorded in the French newspapers, one is scarcely inclined to accept their dictum. During the past week amateurs of assize-court emotions have been revelling in the rumours current respecting the terrible "Drame de Senozan" recently judged with closed doors by the Court of Châlons. The circumstances of the case are rather obscure, but resolve themselves into the indictment of an uncle charged with attempting to murder his niece's lover. The victim, a young avoué, had the lower part of his jaw blown away by a discharge from the prisoner's rifle, and his appearance in the court excited a general movement of commiseration. It would appear that the young persons—the girl, Mdlle. Marie Despey, is the daughter of a Toulouse professor—had known each other for four years, and at the period of the attempted murder their marriage was contemplated, and would probably have ensued. The prisoner, M. Lacroix, has, strange to say, been acquitted by the jury, the reason for which can scarcely be appreciated, owing to the Court having sat with closed doors. Compensation, however, has been accorded to his victim in the shape of damages, amounting to £800, and an annuity of £96.

HOLLAND.

On Thursday week the King of Holland arrived at Ems, and was received at the railway station by the Emperors of Russia and Germany.

In the Second Chamber an unsuccessful attempt has been made to modify universal suffrage. The first clause of the bill was rejected by 29 votes against 32. A Ministerial crisis has occurred in consequence, all the members of the Cabinet having tendered their resignations to the King.

SPAIN.

Delivering a speech at the Madrid Exhibition on Monday, Marshal Serrano said the sole policy of the Government was to obtain peace, and that when that was secured the country would be able to reconstitute itself freely.

There have been some skirmishes, with varying success, between the Carlists and the Republican troops; but attention is wellnigh wholly centred on the impending contest at Estella, where the Carlists have established three lines of defences for a distance of five leagues. It is reported at Madrid that the Republican army consists of 120,000 infantry and 10,000 cavalry, and that Marshal Concha has with him 38,000 men and eighty-seven guns.

ITALY.

Last Saturday the Pope gave an audience to the Ambassadors of France and the Austro-Hungarian Empire, and to the Minister of Brazil, who presented the congratulations of their Governments on the occasion of the anniversary of his Holiness's succession. At the Vatican, on Sunday, there was a brilliant reception to celebrate the Papal anniversary. The Pope was loudly cheered after his reply to an address from the members of the Catholic Congress at Venice. In receiving representatives of all the Italian dioceses, bearing an address from the recent Catholic Congress at Vienna, the Pope has spoken with renewed fervour on the trials of the Pontificate. He concludes with a hope that they would be changed into joys.

The American pilgrims have left Rome. The Rev. Mr. Denby, who was intrusted by the Archbishop of New York with the duties of spiritual director of the pilgrimage, has been received by the Pope, to whom he presented, together with the Archbishop's congratulations, a considerable sum of money sent by the Catholic Union of New York. Four American pilgrims presented his Holiness with a magnificent album, containing eighty signatures, and some diamonds worth 25,000 scudi. In acknowledging sundry gifts presented to him by the American pilgrims, the Pope said that America is now the only country where he is really Pope in the eyes of the Government. Everywhere else his pontifical acts are liable to be controlled by the civil authorities.

At the administrative elections in the city of Modena the clerical party has been completely defeated.

GERMANY.

On the recommendation of the Judicial Committee, the German Federal Council has adopted proposals for the elaboration of the civil and commercial codes and for joint-stock legislation. A legal commission will be at once appointed for carrying out these objects.

The members of the Academy of Science and Art at Berlin, together with the presiding secretaries, the Rector and Senate of the University, and several other personages distinguished in scientific and artistic pursuits, gave a farewell dinner, last Saturday, to Mr. Bancroft, who had occupied the post of United States Minister at that Court.

In his speech from the throne closing the Wurttemberg Diet, on Saturday, the King dwelt upon the voting of the treaties concluded with Prussia as the most important of the Acts which have been passed.

A banquet was given, last Saturday, to the members of the various Commissions at the International Agricultural Exhibition at Bremen. Among the guests present were the Crown Prince of Germany and the King of Saxony. The former thanked the foreign exhibitors for their co-operation in the undertaking, and assured them that nowhere did a more sincere desire exist to continue the work of human culture than in the German Empire.

At Posen the Cathedral Chapter has declined to proceed to the election of a new Vicar-General for the archbishopric. They protest that they cannot do so without violence to their consciences and to their ecclesiastical oaths.

At an early hour on Wednesday the conference of Prussian Bishops was opened at Fulda. There were present ten prelates, besides those of Paderborn, Mayence, and Freiburg. The bishoprics of Cologne, Posen, and Trèves are represented by deputies.

AUSTRO-HUNGARY.

It is announced that the Empress will leave Vienna to-day (Saturday) for Ischl, and sojourn there till July 18. Her Majesty will then go, via Munich, Stuttgart, and Havre, to a villa near Sandown, Isle of Wight. In September the Empress will visit London for a few days, and in travelling home will sojourn seven days in Paris.

Cognisance was taken, by a motion in the Lower House of the Hungarian Diet, on Monday, of the Prime Minister's explanation concerning the recent change in the Cabinet, and also with regard to the omission of the Emperor's signature to his letter, which was declared to have been a mere act of forgetfulness.

Much more satisfactory accounts are now published of the crops in Austro-Hungary. A report of the Agricultural Department, dated the 16th inst., states that the harvest is in some places in excellent condition, and in others promises at least an average yield.

DENMARK.

Count Holstein von Holsteinberg has been intrusted by the King with the duties of Finance Minister ad interim, his Majesty having accepted the resignation of Herr Kreiger.

AMERICA.

The Currency Bill has passed the Senate and the House of Representatives, and has been signed by the President. It emancipates the banks from the liability to hold a certain reserve as a guarantee for their circulation.

With reference to the Geneva award, both Houses have passed the Compromise Bill, creating a commission to distribute the fund among persons having direct, undisputed claims, which will absorb 3,000,000 dollars. The balance of the fund is to remain in the Treasury for future legislation. President Grant has approved the bill.

As a sequel to the distribution of the Alabama indemnity the House of Representatives has passed a resolution affirming the superiority of arbitration to war in the settlement of international differences.

The House of Representatives, before adjourning on Tuesday evening, threw out the Amendatory Tariff Bill, and the bill providing for the civil rights of negroes. The Utah Bill was passed.

Some further particulars regarding the proposed Reciprocity Treaty between Canada and the United States are furnished by the Times' correspondent at Philadelphia. The treaty concedes mutual rights of sea-coast fishery, and contains three schedules of articles which between July, 1875, and June, 1876, are to pay two thirds of the present duties; between July, 1876, and June, 1877, one third of the duties; and after July 1, 1877, are to be free goods. These three schedules embrace all products, agricultural implements, and the greater part of the manufactures of both countries. Canada is to enlarge the canals from Lake Erie to Montreal, to deepen the St. Lawrence River channel so as to admit of vessels drawing 12 ft., and to construct a canal connecting St. Lawrence with Lake Champlain. Mutual rights of navigation are given in these matters, also in the Erie Canal. Vessels built in either country may be bought by persons of the other and admitted to registry. The treaty is to continue for twenty-one years, and is terminable afterwards on three years' notice. The Reciprocity Treaty has been sent to the Senate for ratification, but postponed till December, along with the Amendatory Tariff and Civil Rights Bills.

Mr. Cresswell, the Postmaster-General, has resigned. During a festival which was being held at Syracuse, State of New York, on Tuesday, the floor of a church gave way, by which accident four persons were killed and more than a hundred injured.

INDIA.

In his weekly telegram respecting the famine in India, the Viceroy states that the rains have everywhere set in, and that the prospects of future crops continue very good. One fresh death from starvation is reported, making the total twenty-three. It is announced that the total rainfall in the Bombay Presidency has reached twenty inches. The Times' correspondent at Calcutta telegraphed on Tuesday:—"There has been a sufficient fall of rain everywhere except around Calcutta. The reports of the crops up to Saturday were extremely favourable. In Rungpore the peasantry are cutting the early rice, and elsewhere are sowing or transplanting late rice. The Tirhoot peasantry say that the rain has broken the neck of the famine. In Burdwan fever is increasing. Dr. Wilkie is specially investigating the disease." It was telegraphed from Calcutta, through Reuter's agency, on Thursday:—"The rains continue, and the hoarded stocks of grain are being brought out. Distress is now believed to be stayed everywhere, and the hopes of the people are generally reviving."

Mr. Forsyth has, says a Calcutta telegram to the Times, returned to India by the Koggar route. The ascent of the Jangidawan Pass was severe from the rapid torrent. The descent was indescribably difficult from the melting glaciers.

General Norman, according to another Calcutta telegram, has returned from the Andaman Islands. He has arranged with General Stewart for the distribution of troops and the regulations for the settlements of life convicts, who are increasing in a dangerous proportion.

AUSTRALIA.

A Melbourne telegram states that the Victorian Parliament has had a Constitution Bill submitted to it, and that the second reading was carried by a large majority.

Mr. Jabez Hogg has been elected a corresponding Fellow of the Philadelphia Academy of Sciences.

Advices from Teheran state that differences have arisen between the Turkish and Persian Governments.

Two gun-boats have been launched on the Rhine at Wesel, and more are to follow.

The Anglo-Belgian Prize-Fund Association has ceased to exist, its dissolution having been voted at a recent meeting.

Sir James Drummond, with the Mediterranean fleet, has arrived at Constantinople.

The Gazette announces that the Queen has appointed Mr. Henry Connor Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Natal.

A miniature white elephant, of the race which the Indians formerly worshipped, has been received at the Jardin d'Acclimation at Paris.

The Turkish Government has announced to the United States Minister that it intends to adhere to its recent order prohibiting the sale of Bibles in Turkey.

During the passage of the Sultan from Calcutta to London, with a number of wild beasts, one of them (a leopard) broke loose and took possession of the deck, the crew taking to the rigging and the passengers to their cabins. It was shot.

Early on Saturday last the Church of St. Saviour, at Constantinople, was formally ceded to the Kupelianists, by order of the Grand Vizier. A strong body of police accompanied the Government officers who conducted the proceedings.

The Prussian correspondent of the Times tells us that the new Transcasian district of the Russian empire may be said to extend from Krasnovodsk to the Gurgun river on the south and to the fort of Karis on the east. Karis is about 300 miles west of Merv, while Merv is 250 miles north of Herat.

The national commemoration in honour of Hans Sachs, the people's poet of the sixteenth century, to whom Germany also owes the creation of her national drama, began at Nuremberg by an introductory festivity on Tuesday. The unveiling of the statue took place on Wednesday.

The Turkish vessel Kars, en route for Salonica, was run down yesterday week, in the Sea of Marmora, by the Egyptian ship Behera, coming from Alexandria. Out of 350 passengers and crew of the former vessel, only thirty were saved and taken on board the Behera, which has sustained severe damage.

The Princess Imperial of Brazil arrived at Rio de Janeiro, on Tuesday morning, by the Gironne. In the Brazilian Council of Ministers a civil marriage bill has been discussed and rejected. The Electoral Reform Bill before Congress will, it is feared, occasion a Ministerial crisis. Messages have been sent through the new Brazilian cable congratulating the King of Portugal upon the establishment of telegraphic communication between Europe and the Brazil.

It is the custom in Germany to announce engagements as well as actual marriages in the public prints. The following appears in the Dresden Journal with reference to such a notice:—"With respect to the announcement by which I, at the end of last November, gave notice of my being engaged to the Dowager Baroness Zoe von Kotzebue, I am now obliged to state that this relationship has, at her desire and to my great regret, been broken off, because she did not find in my deportment that gravity which she had a right to expect.—COUNT LUCKNER."

Advices from Cape Town are financially cheerful. Parliament was about to meet, and the Governor's speech was expected to notify a large surplus of revenue in the treasury. A railway policy was in public favour. Bishop Colenso's appeal on behalf of the rebel chief Langilabalele has been granted by the Natal Government, with the further favour of access to the prisoner, but this was neutralised by Langilabalele's removal to Durban. His tribe is said to have assumed a threatening attitude on the frontier.

Alderman Ellis and Mr. James Shaw were, on Wednesday, elected Sheriffs of London and Middlesex for the ensuing year.

The freedom of the Merchant Taylors' Company was, on Wednesday, conferred upon Mr. Disraeli, the Earl of Derby, and the Marquis of Salisbury. The Ministers were afterwards entertained by the company at a magnificent banquet.

Though most of the Jewish and Roman Catholic collections are still outstanding, the amount received on account of the Hospital Sunday Fund is upwards of £24,000. This amount represents the collections of nearly 1000 churches, and it is believed that about 200 more have yet to come.

NATIONAL SPORTS.

The Cup day at Ascot was marred by the same dull, cold weather which prevailed during the earlier part of the week; but this did not appear to have much effect in lessening the number of spectators, and the Royal party, undeterred by the bitter east wind, again drove on to the course in state some little time before the racing commenced. The St. James's Palace Stakes was first on the list, and Aquilo, who received 7 lb. from Ecossais and Leolinus, was a strong favourite. The folly of trusting to a horse whose sole credentials are four defeats was fully exemplified, as he came in third and last, Leolinus beating Ecossais by a neck, though the latter must have won had he run a little more generously. Another very hot favourite in The Colonel was beaten into third place in the succeeding race; but he broke down when some distance from home, and Cambysses probably owed his victory to this accident. The much-overrated Tipster ran second, and his Derby backers must be fully convinced by this time that they were trusting to a very broken reed. After an interval of nearly an hour, the Cup horses emerged from the paddock, and there can be no doubt that six such four-year-olds have never previously started for a race. They were Doncaster, winner of the Derby; Marie Stuart, winner of the Oaks and St. Leger; Boiard, winner of the French Two Thousand and Derby and Grand Prix de Paris; Gang Forward, winner of the Two Thousand; Kaiser, winner of the Prince of Wales's Stakes; and Flageolet, winner of the Goodwood Cup and many other long-distance races. It is estimated that the aggregate value of the half dozen is fully £50,000. All appeared very well, with the exception of Marie Stuart, who had a large thoroughpin on one of her hocks and did not look nearly so muscular as when she won the Leger. Notwithstanding this, however, and the fact that Webb on Doncaster wore the proper colours, backers generally fancied that "the mare was the better horse," and supported her accordingly. They got off at the first attempt, Flageolet leading at a slow pace till the top turn was reached, when Fordham suddenly sent him along, and stole a lead of nearly a dozen lengths from Gang Forward, who was his nearest attendant. As they entered the old course, Boiard passed Gang Forward, and took second place, about a couple of lengths behind Flageolet. This gap he gradually decreased, and, on reaching the distance, closed with M. Lefevre's horse and beat him cleverly by three quarters of a length. Doncaster came terrifically fast at the finish, and succeeded in catching Flageolet, whom Fordham eased in the last couple of strides. Kaiser was a fair fourth, Gang Forward fifth, and Marie Stuart last. This was a great performance of Boiard's, and he has unquestionably shown himself the best cup horse of the year, though it must not be forgotten that in this same race last season Cremorne disposed of Flageolet in far more hollow style. The Windsor Limited Handicap, run over the last six furlongs of the new mile, showed what a certainty Lowlander was for the Royal Hunt Cup, for though he met such speedy animals as Thorn, Drummond, and Oxonian, at fair weight for age, none of them had the smallest chance with him. Galopin was another animal that confirmed his high form of the previous day, as his 9 lb. penalty in the New Stakes did not seem to affect him in the smallest degree, and he fairly romped home in front of his ten opponents. The Beadsman-Salamanca colt, who has just been named Vasco de Gama, was fourth; but he is far from fit at present, and, moreover, is said to be already affected in his wind, a report which, for the sake of his plucky owner, we trust may prove unfounded. The pleasantest feature of the day was the style in which Prince Charlie recovered his lost laurels in the All-Aged Stakes. He was opposed by Montargis and Andre, to each of whom he conceded 3 lb. for the year; but neither of these flyers could even make him gallop, and we have not the smallest doubt that he will take full revenge on Blenheim if they meet again.

There was naturally a considerable falling off in the sport on the Friday; but, to make amends for this, the weather suddenly changed and became very bright and warm. Flageolet was the only one of the Cup horses who cared to try conclusions once more with Boiard in the Alexandra Plate; and the field was made up by Revigny, King Lud, and The Preacher. The severe three miles was run at a capital pace throughout, King Lud taking the lead in the Swinley Bottom and doing his best to cut down Boiard. The French crack drew up to and headed him soon after turning into the straight; but King Lud stuck gamely to his work and, after a tremendous finish, won by a neck. Still, we are of opinion that Boiard is the best Cup horse at present in training. In the first place, he had 5 lb. the worst of the weights; then Carver, well and patiently as he rode in both races, cannot be expected to prove the equal of Outance in a head-and-head struggle; and, lastly, King Lud had the great advantage of being fresh, while it was scarcely fair to ask Boiard to run two long races, over ground like iron, on successive days. However, the pair will probably meet in the Goodwood Cup on perfectly equal terms in every respect. The Ascot Plate showed that Lowlander can go a mile and a quarter quite as well as a shorter distance; so there is really no reason why he should not distinguish himself over a Cup course, and it is almost beyond belief that he was running in hurdle-races at the beginning of this year. From the style in which he disposed of Thorn, Drummond, and others, we have little doubt that, barring Prince Charlie, he is the fastest horse in training, and he is one of the grandest-looking animals ever seen. A most successful meeting was wound up with a Queen's Plate, in which Lilian conceded 32 lb. to Coventry and beat him by a short head, after a desperate finish, in which little Clay was too exhausted to make the most of his mount.

Meetings have been held this week at Newcastle and Windsor; but, after such splendid sport at Ascot, it must be admitted that the proceedings were somewhat tame. The Northumberland Plate was, of course, the great attraction at Newcastle, and the miners once more flocked in thousands to witness it. For some weeks Lilly Agnes (6 st. 11 lb.) has been a strong favourite, and she fully sustained her great two-year-old reputation by winning in a common canter from Louise (7 st. 7 lb.) and Owton (6 st. 2 lb.). As she seems to retain all her brilliant speed, and stays far better than the majority of the Agnes family, it is difficult to account for the two defeats she has sustained this season. Whitehall and Memoria, two animals that ran very badly in the Derby and Oaks respectively, won a race apiece, but had not much to boast; and M. Fould carried off the Ninth Stephenson Biennial Stakes with Colchique, a smart French two-year-old by Light. The Windsor Meeting needs little comment. Daniel, Mr. Merry's "dark" Derby horse, made an inglorious debut in the Royal Cup, as Blenheim gave him 27 lb. and a six-lengths' beating. This race would have been a most exciting one had Sir George Chetwynd started Tangible, but he was represented by Lunar Eclipse, who, of course, had no chance.

The second annual sale of the yearlings belonging to the Stud Company took place at Cobham on Saturday last, and proved a decided success, the thirty-three lots, which were all sold, producing 9570 gs., or an average of exactly 290 gs.

Prices certainly did not run so high as on the day of the first sale; but it must be remembered that a great many of the mares belonging to the company were purchased in foal, and their produce will probably sell considerably better when they are mated with such fashionable sires as Blair Athol, Macaroni, and, in George Frederick's year, we suppose we must add Marsyas, all of whom are now located at Cobham. The premier of the sale was a very fine colt by Blair Athol—Circe, for whom Mr. Chaplin gave 1200 gs. Another Blair Athol colt, from Alcestis, the dam of Devotion, made 1050 gs., at which price he was taken by Robert Peck, Mr. Merry's trainer. Only one other reached four figures, and this was a filly by Beadsman—Madame Eglantine, for which Captain Machell had to pay 1000 gs. She is an own sister to The Palmer, Morna, Rosicrucian, and Chaplet, and, though small, is beautifully shaped and full of quality. The company gave 1000 gs. for Madame Eglantine at the sale of Sir Joseph Hawley's breeding stud, so this very valuable mare may now be said to have cost them nothing. The Blair Athol—Coimbra colt, own brother to Glenalmond and Claremont, did not make the price that was expected, and Joseph Hayhoe secured him for 600 gs., at which we consider him a bargain. His rather loaded neck somewhat detracts from his appearance; but the poor figure cut by Glenalmond in the Derby doubtless made buyers shy, and we fancy that Claremont is not as good as has been represented, or Captain Machell would have put in a strong bid for an own brother to him. Nearly every share in the company is now taken up, and we hope and believe that it has a most successful future before it.

The trial matches which have been played by the University eleven, prior to their annual contest, which will be commenced on Monday next, at Lord's, have naturally been watched with great interest by cricketers. Oxford disposed of Middlesex in most extraordinary style, the whole match—which was won in a single innings, with fifteen runs to spare—occupying only six hours. Mr. C. F. Buller (29) was the only batsman who made any stand for the county; while Lord Harris (39) and Messrs. A. W. Ridley (25) and C. A. Wallroth (36) were the chief scorers for Oxford. Messrs. T. B. Jones and T. W. Lang bowled exceedingly well, taking ten and seven wickets respectively. Cambridge did not fare so well against Surrey, as, though the University men were in front at the end of the first innings, yet they eventually succumbed by 64 runs—a defeat which would have been far more decisive but for the fine batting of Mr. A. S. Tabor (59 and 42). The captain, Mr. G. H. Longman (39 and 10), also played well; but the rest of the eleven did not do much. The same two gentlemen scored freely in a match against the M.C.C. and Ground, which was commenced on Monday. Mr. G. Macan (29) was also in form, and the "light blues" won by nine wickets, Mr. C. J. Thornton (47) being the only one of their opponents who gave them much trouble. Middlesex and Surrey met at Prince's at the beginning of this week; and, after two days' play, the latter won by 102 runs. Jupp (41 and 53) is playing splendidly just now, and he was well supported by Swann (44) and Mr. A. Chandler (20 and 49). The bowling of Street, in the first innings of Middlesex, proved very deadly. Yorkshire secured a very unexpected victory over the U.S.C.C. The latter, on commencing their second innings, had only to get 66 runs to win; but, thanks to the splendid bowling of Hill and Ulyett, were all disposed of for 39.

At the time of writing, the Henley Regatta is in full swing, and we shall give an account next week.

The Royal Thames Yacht Club's Channel race for the Queen's cup was sailed on Wednesday, the course being from the Nore to Dover. Count Bathfany's cutter Kriemhilda took the first prize, Mr. Taylor's schooner Sea Belle the second, and Mr. Jessop's Florinda the third.

The Leamington and Midland Archery Meeting has been held this week.

REBUILDING ST. CLOUD:

Three years and a half ago the palace, gardens, park, and small town of St. Cloud, one of the most attractive suburbs of the French metropolis, were the centre of a tremendous military struggle between the two most powerful nations of Europe. St. Cloud was reduced to a field of unsightly and melancholy ruins by the tremendous storm of warfare that continued during many days to rage over its trim precincts. The work of rebuilding has lately been commenced at the château, having already made some progress in the town. This is the subject of which an Illustration is supplied by one of our Paris Artists. A party of labourers are seen employed in digging out and lifting the loose blocks of stone that encumber the site, in order to lay new foundations there. A two-horse waggon is laden with beams of timber, half charred by the fire that destroyed the former edifice. Two crippled soldiers, one of them a zouave, examine sadly enough the scene which bears such tokens of a disastrous struggle. Much has been done in removing the fragments of the once stately palace, but it is said that the portico looking towards the park may be preserved.

A FRENCH CHARITY FANCY FAIR.

We last week presented an Illustration of the manner in which English ladies of the highest rank and fashion will condescend upon occasion to serve a benevolent cause by playing at the business of shopkeepers, and selling a variety of ornamental toys at extraordinary prices to visitors who may not refuse to buy them. "They manage these things better in France" is a proverbial saying which, in the present instance, we should hardly think likely to be true; for it is the English who are called La nation boutique, and our bustling lady patronesses of so many charitable institutions have a natural talent for making money to support their laudable operations. In the conduct of such affairs in Paris, it has been remarked, there is a more free admixture of innocent gambling, and various forms of avowed entertainment, with the retail trade of the ordinary stall-keepers. The wheel of fortune, tombola or roulette, is made to revolve briskly and impartially with the ventures of an eager company of bystanders; and many a five-franc piece is staked upon the choice of a certain number, or of a particular colour, with the satisfactory assurance that the gentleman who loses, or who has to pay for a lady companion when she loses, will have contributed to a sainte œuvre de pitié. So it was in the Champs Elysées on the afternoon of Thursday, the 4th inst., when a fête villageoise took place in aid of the Maternity Charity of Paris; and this lively scene is delineated by our Artist in the sketch we have now engraved.

A polo-match was played in Windsor Great Park last Saturday, between the Household Cavalry and the Foot Guards, when Captain Reynardson, of the Grenadier Guards, violently cannoned against another rider, and was thrown heavily to the ground, where he lay for some time insensible. It was ascertained that he had sustained concussion of the brain and some serious internal injuries; but he has since been reported somewhat better.

The Extra Supplement.

"NURSERY TALES."

Early to bed and early to rise,
Is the way to be healthy, wealthy, and wise.

The above are the title and motto of the water-colour drawing by Mr. Dobson, R.A., which we have engraved from the Royal Academy Exhibition. The book in the hand of the girl in the drawing tells of the source of the "nursery tales" and ditties alluded to. The elder sister, acting the mother's part, has been amusing her little brother with the wonderful legends of that wondering child-time. But now it is late enough for young folk to go to bed; so, as she takes her charge in her arms, she gives, in the couplet quoted, both rhyme and reason for mounting to the dormitory. The good little fellow is content, as his expression showeth. Good-night, baby brother! May the cherubs watch over the nest where thou liest! And bless thee, too, dear sister, for thy pious affection! Is there anything purer and more unselfish on earth? Technically this drawing has the breadth of treatment for which all Mr. Dobson's water-colour drawings are remarkable.

SKETCHES IN PARLIAMENT.

To members and frequenters of the House of Commons the exit of the Intoxicating Liquors Bill from the place where it had, so to speak, raged so long must have been a great relief. To the Home Secretary the relief must have been greatest of all; for he had to fight for the measure single-handed, his under-secretary scarcely affording him any overt assistance in the way of speechmaking, in meeting the pitiless pelting of criticism and proposed amendment that came from all quarters of the House. In truth, to the depression under which Mr. Cross seemed to labour during the discussion on the bill there succeeded after its departure a buoyancy and a cheerfulness which were remarkable; while to that vacillation and incertitude of which he was accused in dealing with the Liquor Bill there followed, in his conduct of the Factories Bill, a firmness and decision which were the more remarkable because they were unlooked for. The penultimate stages of the Liquor Bill were characterised by discussions so sharp and almost fiery as to justify the sneer of some cynical people that alcohol had got into the atmosphere and insensibly exercised an exciting influence on legislators. Thus, on the night on which it was hoped that the stage of report would be achieved, there arose an almost fierce contention about a point, no matter what, on which the Government and the Opposition were almost ranged in direct hostility against each other. The adjournment of the debate was pressed by the minority in that manner by which a minority can at any time block the progress of a measure, and the interference of Mr. Disraeli became necessary. He conducted himself in that tactical way which with him is now a sixth sense. He permitted the attempts to assert the right of the Government to go on, just so long as to show how factious and unreasonable were the proceedings of the minority; and then gave way in so courteous and pleasant a manner that before any remonstrance could be made the House found itself trapped into a morning sitting. It might have been thought that next day at two o'clock in the afternoon the renewed discussion would be calmer than that which raged at an hour which was nearer to two o'clock in the morning; but, by-and-by, it became quite as fervid. The chiefs of the Opposition came to the front, and the vexed question was hotly canvassed, and a flood of reproaches was poured on the Home Secretary for his frequent "changes of front" during the manipulation of the bill. Something of this was true, but not enough to have put the Liberal front benchers into such pets. At length Mr. Childers led a final charge against the objectionable provision which had been so hotly disputed, and it so happened that several Ministerialists joined him, and signified that the point involved might as well be ceded, and so Mr. Cross, who had had resort to the use of the vis inertiae, not troubling himself to speak, but acting by means of successful divisions, gave way, and in a short time he must have begun to experience the relief above alluded to, which must have been akin to that which Christian in the "Pilgrim's Progress" felt when "his burden fell off."

The liquor bill, however, was destined to go through yet another ordeal, for its third reading was challenged by a formidable opponent in the person of Sir Wilfrid Lawson. Nobody objected to a speech from him, and, as ever, he drew a large audience. Perhaps he disappointed a little, for jest, and quip, and crank did not pervade his address, as is his wont; but he was earnest—almost impassioned—and, truth to say, rather turgid in his style and rhodomontadish in his imagery. A few jokes and comic tropes he did give out, and they were of first quality. Then up rose Mr. Goschen in a vein that was new to the House; for he was passionate, sarcastic, and profuse in ironical phrase-making, and, on the whole, made what may be called a "slashing" party speech. Perhaps he caused a good deal of surprise, but the general feeling might well have been wonder at such tremendous indignation being elicited by so comparatively small a cause. So much might have been gathered from the first sentences of Mr. Cross's reply, which contained the parting words of the Lower House on the bill.

Some first appearances may be adverted to; and, notably, notice may be taken of the advent of Mr. Morris, member for Galway, who had to defend his peccant borough from an assault of Mr. Conolly, who wanted to have it disfranchised for chronic corruption continued down to the present moment. Mr. Morris fulfilled the conventional idea of Irish elocution, but in its best phase. He was humorous, with a special and national humour, and he was declamatory in moderation; and on that particular occasion and on that particular subject he achieved a success. On two successive evenings the new member for Paisley, Mr. William Holmes, delivered himself—namely, on the Friendly Societies Bill and the Factories Bill. To each discussion he brought ample knowledge of the subjects, a steady fluency, and a voice and intonation so like that of his brother, the member for Hackney, as to make him almost familiar to the House. The rhetorical likeness extended no further, for he displayed neither the energy of manner nor the incisiveness of style that characterises his relative. It may or may not be remembered that in an early stage of the Factories Bill Mr. Edward Stanhope, the youthful-looking new member for Mid-Lincolnshire, delivered himself in a confident, dashing way, his authoritative assertion of himself being justified by his knowledge of what he was talking about. He came out again on the Friendly Societies Bill with equal vigour of voice and demeanour and fluency of speech; and, again, what would in most cases of so young a man and member have approached audacity, was only authoritativeness, derived from evident study and perception of the matter in hand.

Amongst lighter episodes there has been one, which, brief as it was, was charged with momentous importance. It seems that the river Liffey, in Dublin, flows near the law courts, and its peculiar characteristic, which need not be too curiously particularised, has had a terrible influence on the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench in Ireland. The matter has been brought to this issue—either the river is to be purified or Ireland is to lose the Chief Justice. The prospect of this calamity was brought pathetically before the notice of the Secretary for Ireland by Mr. Sherlock, and that functionary stated that the Irish Executive had duly felt the shock which the threat of resignation of the great legal officer had produced, and that immediate steps would be taken to suppress the odours which the wind bore between the Liffey and the Chief Justice. Upstarted eagerly the Lord Mayor of Dublin, who represents that city in the House, and declared that even the heartless and soulless Corporation over which he presides had caught the terror which the prospect of a vast vacuum on the judicial bench had generated, and that that body was about to throw itself into the Liffey, and, calling on Hercules to bless its efforts, would make a clean sweep of the river. Naturally, the episode produced much emotion, but it was of the kind which tends to produce laughter.

PARLIAMENTARY SUMMARY.

HOUSE OF LORDS.

Yesterday week Lord Kimberley called attention to the inconsistency of having different regulations prevailing in England and Ireland with regard to the contagious diseases of cattle; Lord Rosebery obtained a Select Committee to inquire into the law relating to the election of Representative Peers for Scotland and Ireland; the Public Worship Regulation Bill was considered on report; the County Courts Bill was read the second time; and the Statute Law Revision Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Board of Trade Arbitrations Bill was, on Monday, read the second time, on the motion of Lord Dunmore; the Report of Amendments to the Supreme Court of Judicature Act (1873) Amendment Bill was received; the Court of Judicature (Ireland) Bill and the Revenue Officers' Disabilities Bill were read the third time and passed; and the Powers Law Amendment Bill, the County Courts Bill, and the Churches and Chapels (Scotland) Exemption Bill went through Committee.

Among other measures which were advanced a stage on Tuesday the Married Women's Property Act Amendment Bill was passed through Committee, the County Courts Bill was read the third time and passed, the Wild Birds Law Amendment Bill was read the second time, and the Intoxicating Liquors Bill was read the first time. Lord Salisbury brought forward the conduct of Lord Sandhurst in writing to the newspapers complaining of the way in which the India Councils Bill was carried through the House, so that he was prevented from objecting to a clause, and this was characterised as irregular, an opinion in which Lord Granville concurred.

The principal subject considered by their Lordships on Thursday was the Public Worship Bill of the Archbishop of Canterbury. After a lengthened discussion it was read the third time.

HOUSE OF COMMONS.

At the first morning sitting of the session, yesterday week, a new writ was ordered for Galway; the consideration of the reports of amendments on the Intoxicating Liquors Bill was concluded; progress was made in Committee with the Valuation of Property Bill; the Juries (Ireland) Bill and the Working Men's Dwellings Bill were passed through Committee; and the Improvement of Land (Ireland) Bill was read the third time and passed. At the evening sitting Mr. Seely's motion on tenant right was discussed and withdrawn, after a statement by Mr. Disraeli; the Building Societies Bill and the Conjugal Rights (Scotland) Bill were read the third time; the Municipal Privileges (Ireland) Bill and the Public Health (Ireland) Bill went through Committee; and clauses 1 to 10 of the Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill were agreed to in Committee.

The Intoxicating Liquors Bill was, on Monday, read the third time, after some debate; the Friendly Societies Bill was discussed at great length on its second reading, and was practically withdrawn for the Session; the Valuation (Ireland) Act Amendment Bill, the Courts (Straits Settlements) Bill, and the Wenlock Elementary Education Bill (from the Lords) were read the second time; and the Juries (Ireland) Bill was read the third time and passed.

The Factories (Health of Women) Bill was taken in Committee on Tuesday, and occupied the greater part of the sitting, and passed that stage in all essential points as the Government proposed it. The Intoxicating Liquors (Ireland) Bill was also taken in Committee. The Courts (Straits Settlements) Bill passed through Committee. The Colonial Attorneys Relief Act Amendment Bill and the Working Men's Dwellings Bill were read the third time.

There were seventeen orders on the paper on Wednesday, but nearly the whole of the sitting was occupied by consideration of the second reading of the Merchant Shipping Survey Bill, which was moved by Mr. Plimsoll in a moderate speech. After an animated debate, it was rejected by the narrow majority of three votes, the numbers being 170 for the measure and 173 against it. The Personation Bill passed through Committee; the Infants' Contracts Bill, from the Lords, was read the second time; and a bill to amend the law of evidence as to bankers' books was read the first time.

On Thursday, Mr. Malcolm and Sir George Elliott took the oath and their seats—the former for Boston, in the room of Mr. Parry, unseated on petition; the latter for North Durham, the former election having been declared null and void. A motion of Mr. Butt for an address to the Crown representing that it would be for the advantage of the administration of justice if the Irish Judges were appointed to the same extent as they are in England, upon the recommendation of the Lord Chancellor, and without reference to political or official claims, was, after some discussion, defeated by a majority of 271 against 62. After the disposal of some other business, the House went into Committee of Supply.

Twelve months ago, St. Saviour's Church, Oxford-street, for the use exclusively of the deaf and dumb, held its opening ceremony, in presence of some members of the Royal family; and on Sunday, after a year's interval, during which sounds have been banished from its walls—prayer being led and instruction conveyed by the agency alone of the sign-language, the doors were again opened to a mixed congregation, and the Bishop of London officiated as preacher. One half of the church was reserved for the ordinary attendants. Among the visitors filling the remainder of the building were Lord Monck, Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Carbery, and other persons of distinction. The officiating clergymen were the Rev. Samuel Smith, Chaplain and secretary, the Rev. W. Stainer, Chaplain of a kindred organisation in the east end of London, and the Rev. J. Ayre, Vicar of St. Mark's parish, within which St. Saviour's Church is situated. Each of them read some portion of the service, and the two former clergymen, by turns, interpreted to the deaf and dumb what at the moment was being read aloud. There were thus, in fact, simultaneously within the church distinct congregations and distinct services. The Rev. Sir Edward Reppe Jodrell, Bart., who was present at this special service, has since forwarded £100 to its funds.

MUSIC.

THE HANDEL FESTIVAL.

This great celebration at the Crystal Palace—which terminated yesterday (Friday)—has, of course, been the event of paramount interest over all the musical doings of the week. This occasion was the seventh assemblage of the kind, and the fifth triennial meeting held at Sydenham. The three days' performances given there in 1857 were experimental, and consisted of "The Messiah," "Judas Maccabæus," and "Israel in Egypt." The success which attended this experiment led to a second festival, in 1859, when "The Messiah" and "Israel" were again given on the first and third days, the intervening Wednesday having been appropriated to a miscellaneous selection, which arrangement has been followed in subsequent festivals; these having, from the date last named, been made triennial in recurrence.

The preparations and arrangements for the festival of 1874 were on fully as grand and complete a scale as in any previous instance. A chorus of nearly 3000 voices was supported by an orchestra of proportionate power, numbering upwards of 450 instrumentalists. The choir was mainly composed of members of the Sacred Harmonic Society and the permanent London Festival choir; having been, however, largely reinforced by some excellent choristers from provincial sources.

The leading violinist was Mr. Sainton, Mr. Willy having been principal second, Mr. Doyle principal viola, and M. Lasserre and Mr. J. Howell at the head, respectively, of the violoncellos and double basses. The string band consisted of 371 performers, and the wind band was accordingly increased far beyond the usual proportions in order to obtain a due balance. Mr. Radcliff stood at the head of the flutes, M. Brossa at that of the piccolos; Mr. Barret was first oboe, Mr. Lazarus first clarinet, and Mr. Hutchings first bassoon. The list of the brass band contained the names, as principals, of Mr. T. Harper (trumpet), Mr. C. Harper (horn), and Mr. Reynolds (cornet); ophicleides, euphoniums, trombones, and drums of various calibre, having all been in the hands of efficient performers.

This gigantic assemblage was marshalled in the great Handel orchestra of the Crystal Palace before midday yesterday (Friday) week, and about twelve o'clock Sir Michael Costa lifted his baton for the commencement of the general public rehearsal, at which portions of the programmes of each of this week's three performances were gone through, without stop or hindrance, affording wondrous proof of the amount of care and preparation that had been exercised. Selections from "The Messiah," "Israel in Egypt," and other works (secular as well as sacred) were given, the solo singers having been Mdle. Titiens, Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Trebelli-Bettini, Mr. Vernon Rigby, Mr. E. Lloyd, Mr. Cummings, Mr. Santley, Signor Agnesi, and Signor Foli.

On Monday the festival opened with "The Messiah," previously to which the National Anthem was given by chorus, band, orchestra, and organ—Sir Michael Costa having been enthusiastically greeted on taking his place.

The performance of the oratorio included some of the finest chorus-singing that has ever been heard on these occasions. The former improvements in the construction of the Handel orchestra, the more recent additions of screens at the sides of the central transept and a velarium spread under the roof thereof, have co-operated, with the long-continued training and thorough preparation of the chorists, to ensure a degree of precision and a fusion and concentration of the enormous mass of vocal sound such as have scarcely before been realised here. These results were evidenced in nearly all the choruses of "The Messiah," special instances having been those sublime movements, "For unto us," "Hallelujah," and the final "Worthy is the Lamb," with its closing fugue "Amen."

The soprano solos, "Rejoice greatly" and "Come unto him," were sung by Mdle. Titiens; those in the subsequent parts of the oratorio, "How beautiful" and "I know that my Redeemer," having been assigned to Madame Sinico. In like manner, the contralto airs were divided between Mesdames Trebelli-Bettini and Patey, the former of whom gave, "But who may abide," "O, Thou that tellest," and "He shall feed His flock"; and the latter singer "He was despised." Mr. Sims Reeves was unable to appear in consequence of a cold, and the airs put down for him—"Behold! and see," "But Thou didst not leave," and "Thou shalt break them"—were given by Mr. Vernon Rigby, who had previously sung the opening recitative, "Comfort ye," and air "Every Valley." Signor Agnesi gave the bass air "The people that walked in darkness" (with its preliminary recitative), Mr. Santley having sung "Why do the nations?" and "The trumpet shall sound" (this with the fine obbligato of Mr. T. Harper). The names of the singers sufficiently indicate their efficiency in pieces with which they have so frequently been associated.

The second performance, on Wednesday, comprised an interesting and varied miscellaneous selection, the first part of which consisted of sacred, the second of secular, music. The commencing piece was the overture to the "Occasional Oratorio," a work said to have been composed in celebration of the "northern victories" of the Royal troops in 1745. This was very effectively rendered by the band. Afterwards came a selection from "Saul," the choruses, "How excellent," "Envy, eldest born," and "Gird on thy sword," the air, "O Lord, whose mercies" (expressively sung by Madame Trebelli-Bettini); and the solemn "Dead March," the latter encored. The air from "Samson," "How willing my paternal love"—finely given by Mr. Santley—was followed by the chorus, "When his loud voice," the recitative, "Deeper and deeper still"; and air, "Waft her, angels," all from Handel's latest oratorio, "Jephthah." The solo pieces gave occasion for the long-deferred reappearance of Mr. Sims Reeves, whose entry was greeted with acclamations from every quarter of the building. Although personally bearing traces of his protracted and severe illness, the great singer displayed all his wonted grandeur of style, and the applause which followed his performance was even greater than that which preceded it. The air, "If guiltless blood" (by Mdle. Titiens), and the chorus, "Righteous Heaven," both from "Susanna," were followed by the contralto solo, "Lord, to Thee" (Madame Trebelli-Bettini), from "Theodora," and the fine chorus, "Glory be to the Father" (from the Utrecht "Jubilate"), formed an imposing climax to the first part of the selection.

The second portion of the performance opened with the fourth organ concerto (in F), which was very skillfully executed by Mr. W. T. Best (of Liverpool), who introduced a clever and elaborate cadenza of his own. A selection from "Acis and Galatea" followed, including the choruses, "O, the pleasures of the plains," and "Wretched lovers"; and the solos, "Hush, ye pretty warbling choir"—by Madame Lemmens-Sherrington (with piccolo obbligato by Mr. Brossa); and "O ruddier than the cherry"—by Mr. Santley. The chorus, "From Harmony," the bright march, and the air "The trumpet's loud clangour" (Mr. Vernon Rigby), from the setting of Dryden's "Ode on St. Cecilia's Day," were followed by the charming song "Ah! mio cor," from the opera "Alcina," and another extract from a comparatively unknown work, the air "Where'er you walk," from the serenata entitled "Semele;" these solo pieces having been admirably sung, respectively by Mdlle. Titiens and Mr. Cumming. The beautiful chorus, "The many rend the skies;" and the declamatory air, "Revenge, Timotheus cries," finely sung by Signor Agnesi (both pieces from "Alexander's Feast"), were succeeded by the trio and chorus "See the conquering hero" (the solo passages by Mdlle. Titiens and Mesdames Lemmens-Sherrington and Trebelli-Bettini). This piece belongs to the oratorio "Joshua," and it was chosen as a supplement to the secular selection on account of the fine climax which it affords.

The festival closed yesterday (Friday) with a performance of "Israel in Egypt," of which we must speak next week.

The energy, skill, and punctuality of Sir Michael Costa have again been powerful causes of the success of the Triennial Handel Festival.

ROYAL ITALIAN OPERA.

In consequence of the sudden indisposition of Mdlle. Marimon, the production of Ambroise Thomas's "Mignon" was postponed from Tuesday week to Saturday, when it was given for the first time at this establishment, with Mdlle. Albani as Mignon, and Mdlle. Marimon as Filina—M. Faure having appeared as Lotario (as in the first performance of the Italian version of the work at Her Majesty's Opera, in 1870, when Madame (then Mdlle.) Nilsson was the Mignon).

As to the opera itself, we need now only briefly reiterate the opinion previously given—that it contains some very graceful and pleasing music, more comparable with that by which the composer had previously earned his fame than that of his later ambitious and heavy "Hamlet."

The performance of Mdlle. Albani was characterised by such exquisite grace and charm, vocal and personal, that the character of Mignon will probably take the foremost rank among her many attractive performances. In every scene her success was triumphant—special applause having followed her refined and poetical delivery of the romance, "Non conosco" ("Kennst du das Land?"), the characteristic "Styrienne," the fervent prayer in the last act, and other exquisite displays of histrionic and vocal skill.

An admirable feature in the cast of the opera was the Filina of Mdlle. Marimon, who sang and acted with a true appreciation of the musical and dramatic requirements of the part that conducted largely to the general effect. In the well-contrasted trio in the second act (in which Filina is prominent), in her volatile aria "Io son Titania," not to mention other instances, the brilliant vocalisation and the arch and playful manner of Mdlle. Marimon were alike excellent. M. Faure was an admirable representative of Lotario (as in the performance of 1870); and the cast was efficiently completed by Mdlle. Smeroschi as Federigo, Signor Nicolini as Guglielmo, Signor Ciampi as Laerte, Signor Raguer as Giarno, and Signor Manfredi as Antonio. The overture was encored, and the latter part repeated.

"Mignon" is splendidly placed on the stage, with new scenery, costumes, and decorations, and can scarcely fail to prove a source of attraction during coming seasons. It was repeated on Wednesday.

The other operas announced for this week were "Il Flauto Magico" on Monday, "Don Giovanni" on Tuesday, "Les Huguenots" on Thursday, "I Puritani" on Friday, and Verdi's "Luisa Miller" to-night (Saturday), for the first time at the Royal Italian Opera, the principal character to be sustained by Madame Adolina Patti.

HER MAJESTY'S OPERA.

Balfe's "Il Talismano" continues its attraction, prominent features being the exquisitely graceful performance of Madame (Christine Nilsson) and the splendour of the scenery and stage appointments. The opera was given for the fourth time on Monday last.

On the previous Thursday "Lucrezia Borgia" was performed, with Mdlle. Titiens's powerful representation of the character of Lucrezia, Signor Galland as Gennaro (a recent debutant) having been again well received. On the following Saturday M. Achard made a third successful appearance here—his first as Fernando in "La Favorita," which also included the fine performance of Mdlle. Titiens as the heroine.

The second of this week's performances consisted of "Le Nozze di Figaro" on Tuesday. "Lucia di Lammermoor" was announced for Thursday; "Lucrezia Borgia" for Friday; and for to-night (Saturday), "Il Talismano" (for the fifth time).

The new cantata, "Supplication and Praise," composed by Dr. Sloman, of Scarborough, was produced at the Royal Albert Hall last week, under the composer's direction. The solo vocalists were:—Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Mr. Vernon Rigby, and Signor Foli; and the choruses were rendered by the gigantic choir formed and trained by Mr. William Carter. The cantata was well received throughout, and the soprano air, "Let the righteous rejoice," was redemanded.

The second grand opera concert of the season drew a large audience at the Royal Albert Hall last Saturday afternoon, when the fine singing of Madame Christine Nilsson was prominent; other eminent members of Her Majesty's Opera contributing to a varied programme.

The nineteenth season of Mr. Henry Leslie's concerts closed on Thursday evening, when the selection was divided into sacred and secular portions, and included several fine works in which the admirable singing of Mr. Leslie's choir has frequently been evidenced.

The eighth and last of Mr. Charles Hallé's interesting pianoforte recitals is to take place this (Saturday) afternoon, when the programme promises a varied selection of pieces of the classical and romantic school, and includes the first performance of a pianoforte quartet by Herr Gernsheim.

Among the most important of the miscellaneous concerts of the week were those of the eminent operatic conductor, Signor Arditi, and Mr. Brinley Richards, the well-known pianist, composer, and promoter of Welsh national music. The programme on the first-named occasion included a performance of the cantata composed by Signor Arditi, in celebration of the marriage of the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh.

The seventh concert (and last but one) of the Philharmonic Society's sixty-second season takes place on Monday next.

Mr. Sims Reeves's benefit concert, which was to have taken place on the 1st inst., but was unavoidably postponed, is now announced as fixed for Monday next, the 29th inst., at the Royal Albert Hall. Mr. Reeves will have the valuable co-operation of Madame Christine Nilsson, Madame Lemmens-Sherrington, Madame Norman-Néruda, Madame Trebelli-Bettini, and Mr. Santley; several choral pieces will be contributed by the Royal Albert Hall Choral Society under the direction of Mr. Barnby.

Special interest attaches to the morning concert to be given by Madame Christine Nilsson at St. James's Hall on Wednesday next, not only on account of the promised performances of herself and other eminent artists of Her Majesty's Opera, but also because of the object of the concert—the raising of additional funds (which are much needed) for the Westminster Training-School and Home for Nurses.

We have already given an outline of the principal features promised at the forthcoming Leeds Musical Festival (which commences Oct. 14), and have now to announce another extra festival, to take place at Liverpool, in the Philharmonic Hall, from Sept. 29 to Oct. 3 inclusive. His Royal Highness the Duke of Edinburgh has accepted the post of president, and is expected to be present. The vice-presidents include the Earl of Sefton, Lord-Lieutenant of the county; Mr. Richard Smethurst, High Sheriff of the county of Lancashire; the Archbishop of York, the Mayor of Liverpool, the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, the Home Secretary, and the Bishops and principal people of the adjacent counties. The sacred works will include Mr. Sullivan's "Light of the World," Mendelssohn's "St. Paul," Haydn's "Creation," Gounod's mass, "SS. Angeli Custodes," and selections from some of Handel's oratorios. Among the secular works will be M. Gounod's "Jeanne d'Arc" music, Beethoven's Choral Symphony, and the following new works composed expressly for the festival:—A symphony by Sir Julius Benedict, an overture by Mr. G. A. Macfarren, and a "suite" for orchestra by Mr. J. F. Barnett. Each composer will superintend the rehearsals and conduct the performance of his own work; but the concerts generally will be conducted by Sir Julius Benedict. The orchestra, numbering a hundred performers, will be led by M. Sainton; and the chorus of 300 voices is being trained by Mr. James Sanders. Mr. W. T. Best will preside at the organ. A ball will be given on the Friday evening; and on the same day, in the Royal Amphitheatre, there will be competitions for prizes for choral societies and soloists. The proceedings will close, on the Saturday afternoon, with a concert and public presentation of the prizes.

THEATRES.

Only enough of interest exists at this present time in relation to theatres as may suffice to keep many of them open—of novelty there is nothing. But we are promised a new comedy by Mr. Robert Buchanan in about a week, to be entitled "A Mad-Cap Prince," which may set the Haymarket going again. The revival of Mr. Irving in Mr. W. G. Wills's drama of "Eugene Aram" satisfies the requirements of the Lyceum audience. Mr. Charles Mathews, as the member of "A Nice Firm," has amused the Gaiety audience. At the Vaudeville Mr. Boucicault is represented by "Old Heads and Young Hearts;" and at the Court "Brighton" and "Calypso" still maintain their position. At the Criterion "The Bonnie Fish-wife" has been revived as a musical novelty and appropriate companion for "The American Lady." At the Queen's, on Saturday, Miss Hibbert appeared as Juliet to the Romeo of Mr. J. B. Howard; but the tragedy was incompletely performed.

Mr. and Mrs. German Reed's entertainment at St. George's Hall will be varied on Monday next, June 29, by the production of a new first part, entitled "One too Many," by Mr. F. C. Burnand, the music of which has been supplied by Mr. F. H. Cowen. "Mildred's Well," which has proved very attractive during its short career at St. George's Hall, will be withdrawn to-day (Saturday).

Last Saturday afternoon a large audience assembled to hear the first of a series of educational lectures, which are to be given weekly at the Polytechnic Institution. The lecture (on a botanical subject) was delivered by Mr. Edward B. Aveling, who was exceedingly happy in his method of illustration.

METROPOLITAN NEWS.

Mr. Ward Hunt distributed the prizes, yesterday week, on board the Worcester training-ship, lying off Greenhithe.

The annual dinner of the Royal Institute of British Architects was given, on Monday night, at Willis's Rooms—Sir Gilbert Scott, R.A., president, in the chair.

At the Crystal Palace, on Tuesday, the fifty-seventh anniversary dinner in aid of the German Society of Benevolence was held, under the presidency of Count Münster, the German Ambassador. The subscriptions amounted to more than £300.

The sixty-first annual festival of the London Orphan Asylum at Watford was held, on Thursday week, at the London Tavern—Mr. Stephen Williams, one of the vice-presidents, in the chair. Subscriptions amounting to nearly £3000 were announced.

Owing to the strong opposition to the proposed desecration of the burial-ground of Old St. Pancras and St. Giles by the Midland Railway the company has given way, and the objectionable clause has been removed from their bill.

The Lord Chief Justice of England presided, yesterday week, at the forty-second anniversary festival of the United Law Clerks' Society, held in Lincoln's Inn Hall. A list of subscriptions amounting to over £500 was announced.

On Thursday evening the fourth and final conversazione of the present session of the Society for the Encouragement of the Fine Arts was held, by permission of the Council on Education, at the South Kensington Museum.

Mr. T. C. Baring, M.P., took the chair at the celebration of the forty-sixth anniversary of the Merchant Seamen's Orphan Asylum, on Thursday week, and eloquently urged the claims of the institution, which provides education and home for 240 orphan boys and girls.

The Metropolitan Board of Works has resolved to contribute £370,000 towards the making of a new street from King William-street to Fenchurch-street, on condition that the City provides £130,000, and that the inner railway circle, as proposed, is completed.

Mr. Albert Grant, M.P., presided, on Tuesday, at a dinner in Willis's Rooms, intended to further the interests of an institution known as St. John's Hospital, Leicester-square, which undertakes the treatment of skin diseases. The subscriptions during the evening amounted to £819, including a donation of 100 guineas from the chairman.

On Saturday last the play of "The Hunchback" was performed at the Olympic Theatre by amateurs, under the patronage of the Duke of Edinburgh, in aid of the funds of the Gloucester training-ship. Mrs. Elphinstone Hope, as Julia, made a most favourable impression upon the audience by her clever delineation of that character.

There were 2214 births and 1242 deaths registered in the metropolis last week, the former having been 13 and the latter 115 below the average. One person died from smallpox, 28 from measles, 33 from scarlet fever, 4 from diphtheria, 28 from whooping-cough, 27 from different forms of fever, and 56 from diarrhoea. Deaths from diseases of the respiratory organs numbered 333, six more than in the preceding week. The mean temperature was only 53 deg., and was 5 deg. below the average for the corresponding period in fifty years.

The difficult task of finding and acquiring a suitable site for their club-house has been very satisfactorily completed by the committee of the City Liberal Club, who have secured two freehold properties of large area at the north end of Walbrook, almost adjoining the Mansion House. The price to be paid for this site is £70,000.

A gratifying report on the exploration of Palestine was presented, on Tuesday, at the annual meeting of the fund, by Mr. George Grove, the secretary. Dean Stanley presided; and Lieutenant Conder, the officer in charge of the survey, described the progress of the work. About 300 square miles had, he said, been added to the map, and the entire exploration would be accomplished in four years.

The weekly return of metropolitan pauperism shows that the total number of paupers last week was 94,412, of whom 33,231 were in workhouses and 61,181 received outdoor relief. Compared with the corresponding weeks in the years 1873, 1872, and 1871, these figures show a decrease of 6990, 11,714, and 30,055 respectively. The number of vagrants relieved on the last day of the week was 634, of whom 473 were men, 162 women, and 49 children under sixteen.

At Westminster Abbey, on Sunday morning, Canon Barry preached in aid of the higher education of the blind, for which the Royal Normal College and Academy of Music has been founded at Upper Norwood. A public meeting in support of the same object was held at the Mansion House on Tuesday—the Lord Mayor in the chair—when the Duke of Westminster, Lord Shaftesbury, Lord Hatherley, Lord Coleridge, the Right Hon. W. E. Forster, Sir Sydney Waterlow, and others spoke.

The third summer exhibition of plants, flowers, and fruit was held in the gardens of the Royal Botanic Society, Regent's Park, on Wednesday. Fruit and cut roses were the specialties of the exhibition. Of both these a finer display was made than has been seen in the gardens for many years. The fruit filled about three parts of the tent, which is nearly 540 ft. long; the remaining portion being occupied by cut roses. In the large exhibition marquee were grouped collections of ferns, pelargoniums, and stove and greenhouse plants. The bands of the 2nd Life Guards and Royal Horse Guards were in attendance.

The thirty-second annual meeting of the supporters of the Field-lane Ragged Schools, Training Home, and Refuges was held on Thursday week at the institution, the Earl of Shaftesbury in the chair. Above 1000 ladies and gentlemen were present. The report, which was read to the meeting, spoke very favourably of the progress made by the institution as regarded the number of children educated, the assistance rendered to the destitute, servants supplied with situations, religious services attended, and reformations effected. The financial statement for the year to March 31 last showed a total received of £5837 and £5114 expended.

At last Wednesday's meeting of the School Board—Sir Charles Reed in the chair—one of the reports read was from the industrial schools' committee, recommending that it was desirable to continue and to increase the pressure for payments from parents in respect to children sent to industrial schools; that, as the larger part of the expense of maintaining children, when sent under section 16, at the instance of the school board, was borne by the school fund, it was advisable that the board should receive the sums paid by such parents in aid of the fund; and that, in order to carry into effect the above resolutions, it was expedient that the board should have authority to proceed in such cases before a magistrate, and to collect from time to time the sums ordered to be paid. The report was received, and it was arranged to prepare a memorial on the subject to the Home Secretary, and to arrange, if necessary, for a deputation to Mr. Cross. Mr. Freeman brought up a report from the finance committee stating that the necessary arrangements had been made to borrow £42,000 from the Public Works Loan Commissioners. An offer from Miss Toulmin Smith, secretary of the National Health Society, to give £100 to the board, to be invested by them, the interest arising from it to form a fund for annual prizes for elementary or applied physiology, to be given to girls in any board schools in which physiology is taught, was, on the recommendation of the chairman, accepted.

The annual meeting of the Society for the Encouragement of Arts, Manufactures, and Commerce, was held, on Wednesday afternoon, in the society's rooms, John-street, Adelphi—Major-General F. Eardley Wilmot in the chair. The report of the council (a document of considerable length) entered fully into the action taken by the society during the past session. The society's gold Albert medal has this year been awarded to Mr. C. W. Siemens, "for his researches in connection with the laws of heat, and the practical application of them to furnaces used in the arts; and for his improvements in the manufacture of iron; and generally for the services rendered by him in connection with economisation of fuel in its various applications to manufactures and the arts." The society's medal under the head of the Stock Prize, offered to "female artists for the best cameo designed and executed on any of the shells ordinarily used for that purpose," has been awarded to Miss Emily Addis Fawcett. The award of the silver cup and £100, directed by the will of the late Dr. Swiney to be presented on "every fifth anniversary of his death to the best published treatise on jurisprudence," has this year been made in favour of the Right Hon. Sir Robert J. Phillimore, Judge of the Court of Admiralty, in respect of his work entitled "Commentaries on International Law."

Sir Bartle Frere presided, on Monday, at the anniversary meeting of the Royal Geographical Society, held at the London University, Burlington-gardens. The founder's gold medal was, in the absence of Dr. George Schweinfurth, to whom the medal was awarded for his explorations in Africa, handed to the German Ambassador, Count Münster. The Victoria (or patron's) gold medal, which had been awarded to Colonel P. Egerton Warburton for his successful journey across the previously unknown western interior of Australia, was, in the Colonel's absence, given into the custody of his nephew, Mr. Bateman. The President afterwards delivered his annual address on the progress of geographical science. At the close of the meeting Sir Bartle Frere called Susi and James Chumah to him, and in the name of the society presented each of them with the bronze medal, at the same time telling them how highly their fidelity to their late master, Dr. Livingstone, was appreciated, and with what gratitude everyone regarded the bravery which was shown by the whole band of his followers when they determined to save all his writings and to bear his body to the coast. The President added that a silver medal is being struck which will yet further mark the esteem in which the Doctor's followers are held by the society. In the evening the annual dinner was held, in Willis's Rooms, under the presidency of Sir Bartle Frere. The toast of "Our foreign guests" was responded to by M. Leverrier. Sir Samuel Baker, who, as Rede Lecturer at Cambridge, returned thanks on behalf of the University, said that he could assure them that the slave trade of the White Nile was completely at an end when he recently gave up the expedition from Egypt.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN.

BOMBARDMENT OF HERVANI

ARRIVAL OF THE CATALAN DIVISION AT VITTORIA.

THE CIVIL WAR IN SPAIN.

The war in the northern provinces of Spain between the opposing armies of Don Carlos and the Provisional Republican Government of Madrid seems by no means concluded. The Carlists promise to make a fresh stand at the fortified town of Estella, which was their head-quarters in the former war from 1833 to 1839. It is in Navarre, between Vittoria and Pampluna, or a little further south. Both the Commanders-in-Chief, Marshal Concha, for the Spanish National Government, and the Basque General Dorregaray for "King Charles" and his brother, are now busily collecting their forces. One of the sketches we have received from a correspondent following the campaign shows the arrival of the Catalan division at the town of Vittoria, which is a place known, by fame, to all the Duke of Wellington's countrymen. It is a pleasant and prosperous town, the capital of the province of Alava, with 20,000 inhabitants in ordinary times, and with its share of trade; but great losses have been inflicted upon it by this unhappy war. A substantial temporary fortification has been constructed here, by surrounding the town with a new wall, built of stone and faced with gabions or earth-bags; the principal streets and squares of the town are likewise barricaded, with other preparations against a possible Carlist attack. It was on the 19th inst. that Marshal Concha arrived at Vittoria from Bilbao, the scene of his and Marshal Serrano's late victorious operations; he has since moved eastward into Navarre. The other sketch engraved is that of the Carlist bombardment of Hernani, a Basque village on the road from San Sebastian to Tolosa. This place, too, was the scene of an action in the former Carlist war. The British Legion, under Sir De Lacy Evans, was here repulsed from an attack upon the Carlist position at Santa Barbara, on March 16, 1837. The disaster seems to have been due to the misconduct of its Spanish allies.

OLD SEVRES PORCELAIN.

The sale of two or three private collections of old Sevres and Chelsea porcelain, with some Chinese porcelain, carvings in crystal, jade, and cornelian, and other ornamental articles, at Messrs. Christie and Manson's rooms, on the 12th inst., was attended by many purchasers who had plenty of money. The prices obtained were in some instances of an extraordinary amount. So much as £10,500 was given for a set of chimney-piece ornaments in old Sevres porcelain, the property of a nobleman, consisting of a vase and cover, nearly 15 in. high, and a pair of jardinières or flower-pots, in stands, 8½ in. These very costly specimens of artistic pottery, far more precious than gold, are shown in our illustration. The design of the vase-lid is that of a masted ship, the arms of the city of Paris. The jardinières are of the éventail or fan pattern; the ground is of a rare colour, rose du Barri, with bands of green, richly gilt; and the medallions, painted by Morin, represent figures of peasants with flowers. The date of 1759 is ascribed to this exquisite work of art.

THE ASCOT PRIZE GOLD PLATE.

The Ascot Cup of this year was a gold vase designed and modelled by Mr. W. F. Spencer, and manufactured by Messrs. R. and S. Garrard and Co., of the Haymarket. Its design is in the cinque-cento or sixteenth-century Italian style. The bas-relief sculptures, on one side, represent the first incident in the history of the English Wars of the Roses. The implacable rival party chiefs, Richard Plantagenet, Duke of York, and John Beaufort, Earl of Duke of Somerset, are met, with their adherents, in the Temple-gardens. They pluck each a rose, the white rose for York, the red one for the champion of Lancaster, to serve as the badge and token of their opposing claims. This is done in scene iv. act ii. of Shakespeare's "King Henry VI.," part i. The sculpture on the other side of the vase displays the fierce battle of Bosworth, and King Richard III. on his war-horse, fighting with desperate fury, which could not avert his deserved fate on that memorable day. The vase is surmounted by a group which represents Lord Stanley crowning Henry Tudor, Earl of Richmond, as King Henry VII. The shields bear the heraldic arms of the great noblemen engaged in those wars, and the handles are figures personifying the ravages of Fire and Sword. The gold plate given by her Majesty the Queen for one of the Ascot prizes was simply a large flagon, in the style of Queen Anne's time. This, too, was manufactured by Messrs. Garrard. The Royal Hunt Cup was designed by Signor Monti, and manufactured by Messrs. Hancock and Co., of Bruton-street. It was a table centre-piece, representing the stem of a tree, surrounded by a stag, a hunter, and a hound, with the motto, "Neighbours, but not friends."

Dean Stanley presided, last Saturday, at the prize distribution at the Commercial Travellers' Schools. In his observations to the children he cautioned them not to let the literary rubbish which was in fashion drive them away from good reading like "Pilgrim's Progress." He had also a friendly word to say for Mungo Park and Dr. Livingstone's two Nansiok boys, who travelled for nine months through the desert with his dead body.

A meeting of the Bengal Famine Relief Committee was held on Monday, at the Mansion House—the Lord Mayor in the chair—when the discussion turned on the advisability of appealing for further funds. The affirmative view was maintained by Lord Lawrence, Sir G. Campbell, and Sir W. Muir, all of whom argued that there was a wide field in India for charitable relief. Two letters detailing the distress which prevailed in the various districts were read. The fund amounts to £117,023 at present, £10,000 of which it was agreed should be forwarded to Calcutta forthwith.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES FOX.

The death of this eminent civil engineer, at his house, at Blackheath, on the 14th inst., has been recorded. He was born at Derby, in 1810, being youngest son of Dr. Francis Fox, M.D., of that town. In his youth he was himself intended for the medical profession. But his talent lay rather in the direction of mechanical skill. He, therefore, relinquished the study of medicine, and at the age of nineteen joined Mr. John Ericsson, then in business at Liverpool, to whom he was articled. He assisted Mr. Ericsson in the trial of locomotive engines at Rainhill, on the Liverpool and Manchester Railway, in 1829. He was placed by the late Mr. Robert Stephenson on the London and Birmingham Railway, then in course of construction—first at Watford, afterwards in charge of the extension works from Camden Town to Euston-square. Upon the completion of this work he joined the late Mr. Bramah in the manufacturing firm of Bramah and Fox. Some time afterwards, upon the death of Mr. Bramah, he became senior partner in the firm of Fox, Henderson, and Co., of London, Smethwick, and Renfrew. Since the year 1857 he had practised in London as a civil and consulting engineer, with his two elder sons, who continue the business under the firm of Sir Charles Fox and Sons. During the forty-five years of his professional life Sir Charles was engaged in works of magnitude in all parts of the world. He was the inventor of Fox's safety-switch, and contributed to the improvement of the permanent-way and fittings of railways, and of all ironwork construction. His chief work was the building in Hyde Park for the Exhibition of 1851. The late Sir Joseph Paxton having suggested the idea of a structure of iron and glass, up to that time never applied on a large scale, Mr. Charles Fox was enabled, from his intimate knowledge of ironwork construction, to carry out the proposal, and with his own hand to work out most of the details. His firm took the contract for the erection of the building, and work having commenced towards the end of September, 1850, the Exhibition was opened by her Majesty in person on May 1, 1851. In connection with this event Sir C. Fox, with Sir W. Cubitt and Sir Joseph Paxton, received the honour of knighthood. His firm afterwards removed the building from Hyde Park and re-erected it, with many alterations and additions, for the Crystal Palace Company at Sydenham. Sir Charles had been a member of the Institute of Civil Engineers since 1838. He was also for several years a member of the Council of the Institution of Mechanical Engineers. The Portrait is from a photograph by Messrs. Elliott and Fry.

THE LATE SIR CHARLES FOX, C.B.

Sir Anthony Rothschild presided on Sunday at the distribution by Miss de Rothschild to the pupils of the Jews' Free School, in Bell-lane, Spitalfields. The school contains nearly 3000 children. The Government grant amounts to £1600, whilst the annual expenses were £6000. An appeal for increased aid was made.

LAW AND POLICE.

Judgment was given, on Tuesday, by Sir Montagu Smith, in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, concerning a question of attorney and client, which had been raised in the case of a Gibraltar advocate who had purchased some property of a Spanish lady shortly before she died. It was held that a fair price had been given, and the Court affirmed the bond fides of the purchase, ordering both sides to pay their costs.

In the Court of Chancery, Lord Justice James has pronounced the liquidation proceedings in re Burrs and Company to be tainted with fraud. He ordered an immediate adjudication, a petition to that effect having been presented by the Fore-street Warehouse Company.

Sir J. Bacon, sitting as Chief Judge in Bankruptcy, has confirmed an order of the Warwickshire County Court annulling an adjudication which had been granted on a debt not actually due. The case was that of Thomas Collins, a Birmingham jeweller. In the first instance Collins filed a petition for liquidation; and, no action having been taken by the creditors, one of them petitioned for an adjudication. Lastly, an execution creditor came in, and had the adjudication annulled on the ground stated.

A romantic story was told by a Polish Count in the Court of Queen's Bench last week. He professed to have hired himself to Mr. Lloyd as a substitute in the Papal Guards, and his remuneration was to be £2500 for two years' service. He sued Mr. Lloyd for the money, and to prove that he had earned it he gave a doleful account of the disappointments and deprivations he had endured among the defenders of Rome. His first grievance was that the gentleman who recruited him did not tell him he was to fight for the Pope; he thought they wanted him for a Garibaldian. On reaching Rome he had to join the Zouaves, and his two years' experience of them was not happy. Their pay, he said, was threehalfpence a day (always in arrear) and their rations contained more flies than anything else. The Polish Count admitted having received moneys from the defendant since his return, amounting altogether to £148. Mr. Lloyd's answer to the claim was a point-blank denial of the plaintiff's story. Far from having required a substitute, Mr. Lloyd served six months in the same regiment with the Count. He had not even recruited him, for when the Count was sent to him by his tailor he introduced him to the secretary of the Papal Defence Fund, Captain Gordon. The moneys he had paid the plaintiff were entirely out of charity. On one occasion, for instance, he gave him a pound to go to the pantomime and have a pleasant Christmas. The jury having intimated that they were all agreed in favour of the defendant, a verdict was given to that effect.

In the Court of Queen's Bench, Dublin, Miss Onnan, daughter of a farmer in Meath, has obtained £300 damages against Mr. Bellew for breach of promise of marriage.

A severe lesson to wife-beaters was taught on Monday by the Worship-street police magistrate, who sentenced a man convicted of having brutally ill-used his wife to six months' imprisonment, with hard labour. On the expiration of that term defendant is to find sureties for his good behaviour during another six months.—For having cruelly tortured a horse in Hyde Park, James Boston, a groom in the service of the Earl of Home, was, on Monday, sentenced at Marlborough-street to a month's imprisonment, with hard labour.

At Southwark Police Court furious driving is no longer to be regarded as a venial offence, punishable by fine. William Ward, a master carman, charged, on Wednesday, with driving a cart through the Borough to the danger of the lieges, was surprised at receiving a sentence of a month's hard labour.

An inquest has been held in Salford on the body of a man who, according to the evidence of his widow, had not been sober a single day during the last twelve months, and who was so habituated to spirits and beer as to be unable to take any solid food whatever.

For forging the signature of Mr. P. Darcey, a brewer, and by that means obtaining £400 from the Royal Bank, a young man named Mackey was yesterday week, at Dublin, sentenced to five years' penal servitude.—Victor Cohen, for forging bills of exchange and the signatures of Dublin merchants, by which he obtained about £100, was sentenced to seven years' penal servitude.

At Trim Quarter Sessions, just concluded there was not a single criminal case, and at Newtownbutler there were but three, of a trifling character. At Thurles, in Tipperary, there were but two cases of common assault to go before the jury.

The thunderstorm which prevailed in London on Wednesday extended over a considerable portion of the country, doing considerable damage. At Finchley a plasterer named Jackson, while at work in Trove Lodge, Church-end, was struck by lightning, but it is hoped he will recover. Mrs. Whyte, wife of a carter, while sitting by the fireside in her house at Mossy-mouth Toll, about five miles from Elgin, was struck dead by a flash of lightning, which entered the house by the chimney. A child in a cradle in the middle of the floor escaped injury, though the cradle was broken to pieces. The Free Church of Braco or Ardoch, in Perthshire, was struck by lightning and rendered a mass of ruins, the greater part of the steeple falling through the roof. At Coupar Angus, in Fifeshire, a man was killed by lightning.

ELECTION ITEMS.

As in the last Parliament, the representation of North Durham is again divided. The declaration of the poll on Saturday gave Mr. Charles Mark Palmer, one of the Liberal candidates, 4256 votes; Sir George Elliot, who stood in the Conservative interest, 4254; and Mr. Isaac Lowthian Bell, 4104. Mr. Bell, therefore, loses the seat which was won by the Liberals in this division at the general election.

Lord Coleridge, on Monday, delivered judgment on Mr. Drinkwater's claim to the seat at Launceston, forfeited by Colonel Deakin. He held that, though the votes objected to were invalid for the purpose of seating the candidate who received them, they were not invalid in the sense of being thrown away and causing another person to be seated. Mr. Drinkwater's claim was, therefore, disallowed, and there will be another election.—On Tuesday his Lordship gave judgment on the questions reserved at the Peterfield and Boston election trials. In the former he decided that an election judge had no power to go behind the register and inquire into the qualification of persons placed upon it, also that the receipt of gifts from a local bequest did not constitute a disqualification contemplated by the Act. In consequence of this decision, Captain Jolliffe retains the seat. The question reserved on the Boston petition had reference to Mr. Parry's distribution of coals. The Court held that Mr. Justice Grove was justified in striking out the votes of coal-receivers, and giving a majority to Mr. Malcolm—the result being that Mr. Malcolm takes the seat occupied by Mr. Parry.

Sir Ivor Guest, Bart., has filed in the Court of Common Pleas a petition in which he claims the seat for Poole. The Hon. Evelyn Ashley was declared returned by a majority of nine votes.

Mr. J. D. Lewis, who represented Devonport in the last Parliament, and at the recent election for the city of Oxford, on the elevation of the Right Hon. W. E. Cardwell to the Peerage, contested the city with Mr. A. W. Hall, when he was defeated by 162 votes, was, on Monday evening, presented in the Corn Exchange, Oxford, with a handsome illuminated address and a magnificent piece of silver, the whole costing about £150, which had been collected in small subscriptions from the working classes of the city. Mr. Lewis, in returning thanks, observed that there never was a period in his life when he felt more confident of the assurance of the ultimate triumph of the Liberal party, and concluded by expressing his belief that Conservatism had not struck a deep root in the soil.

PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

On Sunday evening the Bishop of Manchester addressed at St. Paul's Cathedral the delegates to the Congress of Societies for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, which has been held in London, a large number of other persons being present. Taking his text from the prophecy of Isaiah, "That a time would come when the wolf should lie down with the lamb," the Bishop defended Christianity from the charge that as a rule of life it left almost untouched man's duty to the lower animals, and in an eloquent passage strongly condemned polo, pigeon-shooting, and other sports as being as little in consonance with the temper of Christianity as gladiatorial contests at Rome or bull fights in Seville.

At the jubilee meeting, on Monday, the chairman (Lord Harrowby) announced that the following letter had been received from Sir Thomas Biddulph on the part of the Queen: "My dear Lord,—The Queen has commanded me to address you, as President of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, on the occasion of the assembly in this country of the foreign delegates connected with your association and of the jubilee of the society, to request you to give expression publicly to her Majesty's warm interest in the success of the efforts which are being made at home and abroad for the purpose of diminishing the cruelties practised on dumb animals. The Queen hears and reads with horror of the sufferings which the brute creation often undergo from the thoughtlessness of the ignorant, and she fears also sometimes from experiments in the pursuit of science. For the removal of the former the Queen trusts much to the progress of education, and in regard to the pursuit of science she hopes that the entire advantage of those anaesthetic discoveries from which man has derived so much benefit himself in the alleviation of suffering may be fully extended to the lower animals. Her Majesty rejoices that the society awakens the interest of the young by the presentation of prizes for essays connected with the subject, and hears with gratification that her son and daughter-in-law have shown their interest by distributing the prizes. Her Majesty begs to announce a donation of £100 to the funds of the society." After the reading of this letter the organ played "God Save the Queen." The pupils to whom prizes were to be presented were then introduced, and each received a handsomely bound book and certificate from the hands of the Duchess of Edinburgh. Some of the prize-takers were only eight years old, others had reached the age of twenty.

Another sitting of the congress took place on Tuesday, in the hall of the Society of Arts, and brought the session to a close. The practice of vivisection, for scientific purposes, was strongly reprobated, when not under proper license; and a communication from Baroness

Burdett-Coutts on this subject was read, and elicited general expressions of agreement, a resolution being passed unanimously in favour of legal interference.

Next year's congress will assemble at Frankfort-on-the-Maine.

An agreement has been entered into between the Earl of Limerick and the Corporation of Limerick for the leasing of Perry-square for 500 years, in order to have it converted into a people's park.

On Wednesday the first series of the Summer Manœuvres was practically brought to a close by a great field-day, in which the two divisions tried conclusions against each other on a spot where, in the war between Charles I. and his Parliament, Cavaliers and Roundheads fought a out-throw.

Mr. Plimsoll, M.P., presided, on Monday, at a public meeting in the Eastern Hall, Limehouse, in connection with the London Seamen's Mutual Protection Society, and explained the provisions of his bill on the subject of unseaworthy ships. A resolution was unanimously adopted in accordance with the spirit and purpose of that measure.—On Tuesday Lord Shaftesbury presided at a public meeting in St. George's Hall, called by the ladies' committee of the Plimsoll Seamen's Fund. Resolutions were adopted urging the necessity of having a temporary bill passed this Session to prevent the sacrifice of life which might otherwise ensue during the coming winter.—The executive committee of the Ironfounders' Society, in acknowledgment of Mr. Plimsoll's efforts on behalf of the seamen, have presented him with an illuminated address and £460, being the product of a levy on the members of the society, to assist Mr. Plimsoll in his efforts.

Several meetings for charitable purposes were held on Wednesday. A fête de bien-faisance in aid of the French Charitable Institution, at No. 10, Leicester-place, was given at the French Embassy, under the patronage of the Princess of Wales. Much of the success which attended the fête was due to the kindly interest taken in the charities by the Duc and Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld-Bisaccia, whose indefatigable exertions in this excellent cause were supplemented by the generous help rendered by a large number of ladies and gentlemen.—The twenty-second anniversary of the City Orthopaedic Hospital, Hatton-garden, was celebrated by a dinner at the London Tavern. The tables were well filled—the chair being occupied by Captain C. T. Ritchie, M.P. The subscription list amounted to £1600, including an anonymous donation of £1000 from "C.O.H."

At the annual meeting of the governors of the Royal Agricultural Benevolent Institution for the relief of decayed farmers, their widows and orphan children, held at Willis's Rooms—Mr. J. J. Mechi in the chair—some pensioners were elected.—The annual general meeting of the Railway Benevolent Institution was held at the Railway Clearing-House, Seymour-street, Euston-square—Mr. John Noble, deputy manager of the Midland Railway, occupying the chair. Mr. Mills, the secretary, read the report, which congratulated the members that the funds were sufficient to enable the committee to admit all the applicants for annuities and the orphans for school benefits without any ballot, and the meeting would therefore be asked to sanction the appointment to annuities of one member and seventeen widows, and of nine children to school benefits.—A new school-building, erected on Saffron-hill by the Snoblack Society (Central), was opened by the Earl of Shaftesbury. The contract for the building was for £3085, which, however, with extras, had reached £3800. About £1500 of the boys' earnings had been saved up, and, together with £1680, had been applied to the buildings, which contained a coffee-room, school-room, and offices for one hundred boys, a dormitory for thirty, and apartments for the superintendent and his family. Among the speakers were Mr. MacGregor, Mr. Tabrum, the Rev. Mr. Cadman, Sir Wilfred Lawson, M.P., and the Hon. A. Thesiger, Q.C.

SKETCHES IN THE CLERKENWELL HOUSE OF CORRECTION.

The prisons of London and Middlesex have afforded, in their arrangements for the safe custody and salutary punishment of offenders, subjects of illustration within the past twelvemonth. The metropolitan county of Middlesex, not including the City of London, has its House of Detention for untried prisoners, in St. James's-walk, north of Clerkenwell-green. It has two Gaols, or Houses of Correction, for convicted criminals. The one for male prisoners is in Coldbath-fields, which is also in Clerkenwell, but a little east of Gray's-inn-lane, nearly opposite the end of Guilford-street. It consists of several extensive ranges of buildings, with courts and yards, inclosed by a high wall, and occupying a square of about nine acres. Some description of this prison has been given in our Journal. It has accommodation for nearly 2000 men and boys, sentenced to different terms of imprisonment, from one week, with or without hard labour, to two years' penal servitude. The average daily number in custody is about 1700, and the number admitted during the year is from 12,000 to 13,000, of whom 1000 are juveniles. First-class hard labour signifies pacing the steps of the treadwheel, during seven hours of the day, but with intervals of rest, fifteen minutes at every quarter of an hour, which reduces the actual work to three hours and a half. The man sits down and waits his quarter of an hour, while another man takes his place on the wheel. The steps, which are eight inches high, descend slowly to meet the men's feet; there are twenty-four steps on the circumference of the wheel, and it goes round twice in a minute. This labour is scarcely felt by a healthy person in the first hour, but it tells upon the strength in the course of the day. The power of the machine is used for grinding corn and pumping water. The wheel, or rather cylinder, is erected along the side of a long gallery, in which 684 prisoners are collected to work. The lower steps only are exposed to view, the rest of the machine is concealed by wooden boards. While 342 prisoners, half the number assembled, mount the steps at once, each screened by a partition from his right-hand and left-hand neighbours, the other 342 sit quietly below. They are not allowed to speak to each other. Such is first-class hard labour at Coldbath-fields. The hard labour of second-class misdemeanants consists of oakum-picking, mat and basket making, shoemaking, tailoring, and other simple trades, besides washing, cleaning enforcing discipline is by stopping one or two articles of diet. Three loaves of brown bread, each loaf 6½ oz., are supplied daily to every man, with gruel or soup, or molasses, at stated times, on different days of the week. The average weekly cost of food is, for each prisoner, 2s. 9½d.; but the whole cost of each prisoner, after reckoning the assumed value of his labour, is at the rate of £23 5s. 8d. a year. The total expenditure of the Coldbath-fields establishment is nearly £40,000, including the salaries and wages of some 200 officers, warders, and servants. A chapel, with Protestant and Roman Catholic services of Divine worship, and a school-room, with teachers, are provided for the instruction of the prisoners.

the place, and doing various services in the prison. When a prisoner is admitted to this House of Correction, he exchanges the name he has disgraced for a number, by which his place in the establishment is known; there is, in the visiting ward, a large frame of movable brass and zinc tablets, with figures and letters, showing at a glance the cell to which any particular man or boy is consigned. The inmates are weighed at their entrance to the prison, under the supervision of a warder; and this is the scene represented in one of our illustrations. The other subject delineated is of an unpleasant character; the block, facetiously called "the pony," upon which naughty boys are horsed for a birching. There is also a triangle for tying up older persons who are to be flogged for wilful misconduct while in prison. But there are not more than about thirty whippings in the year; and what is that among 13,000 culprits, in and out of the prison? Solitary confinement, which they do not like, though converse is always forbidden, may in some cases be inflicted for prison offences. The ordinary means, however, of

MUSICAL PUBLICATIONS.

Messrs. Boosey and Co. have just issued several songs that will doubtless find wide acceptance among drawing-room singers. "The Boatman's Song"—words by J. Oxenford, music by J. Blumenthal—is a spirited declamatory piece, suitable for mezzo-soprano or baritone, for which latter class of voice it was written, having been expressly composed for Mr. Santley. "Sleep, my love, sleep," by Mr. Arthur Sullivan, requires a similar vocal range. This—which was written for Madame Patey—is an expressive melody, affording good scope for cantabile style. In "One long thought of you"—a setting of words by Moore—Mr. Santley appears as composer. This song consists mainly of a flowing and agreeable melody, interspersed with recitative passages that afford good effects of contrast. It will suit either a high baritone or a soprano or mezzo-soprano of moderate compass. Mr. J. L. Molloy excels in ballads of the piquant and characteristic class, a good specimen of which is that entitled "Polly," in which a sailor is supposed to extol his pilot-boat. Of the "Spanish Boat-Song," written and composed by Hamilton Auld, it will suffice to say that it has been sung with success in his drama of "Philip."

Balfe's posthumous opera, "Il Talismano," has just been published by Messrs. Duff and Stewart, in a handsome folio edition. Prefixed to the music are a portrait and memoir of Balfe, and an outline of the libretto. Having spoken of the composition in our notice of its production at Her Majesty's Opera, we need now only record its publication in a complete state, the favourite pieces being also issued in a detached shape.

Messrs. Duff and Stewart are active caterers for pianists and vocalists. Among the vocal music lately published by them are several songs of merit. "The British Oak," by the late Chevalier Nenkomm, is a characteristic national song, in the declamatory style in which that composer excelled. Mr. Henry Gadsby—favourably known by several orchestral works, performed at the Crystal Palace concerts—has produced a very expressive song to some sentimental lines commencing, "Those little words, Good-bye;" another of similar merit being "The Token," by Mr. J. E. Richardson, inscribed to Mr. Sims Reeves, for whom it was expressly composed. Other vocal pieces worthy of mention are Herr Carl Oberthur's agreeable song, "My Fairest Love" ("Liebe's Traum") with English and German words; Mr. E. Land's "My guardian never sleeps," a smooth and pleasing melody; and Mr. J. L. Hatton's "The Boy and the Brook," a pretty vocal theme, with a well-contrasted accompaniment.

Some pianoforte pieces, also published by Messrs. Duff and Stewart, will be pleasing to pupils and useful to teachers. "The Blue Bells of Scotland" has been arranged, with some very effective variations, by Mr. J. G. Dent, who has also produced a brilliant and sparkling "polka de salon" entitled "La Belle-vue." "Bellini's Last Thoughts" is the name of a little fantasia by Dr. Rimbault, in which some of the themes from "Beatrice di Tenda" (the final work of the composer of "La Sonnambula") are formed into a pianoforte piece calculated to interest young pupils. "She Wore a Wreath of Roses" is an adaptation, by Mr. W. Smallwood, of Knight's popular ballad in an easy form, with directions for the fingering of the leading passages. Mr. J. T. Trekel has made some skilful arrangements of popular themes treated in brilliant fantasia style. Among these are "Sound the Loud Timbrel," "Adeste Fideles," "The Russian Boat-Song," and the "National Russian Hymn."

"Romance sans Paroles" (published by Messrs. Enoch and Son) is the title of a very elegant pianoforte piece by Mlle. Belval, who has recently achieved special success as a prima donna at the Paris Grand Opera. This young lady is a daughter of the eminent basso M. Belval, and her musical education has been of a far wider kind than that of most singers. Among her other acquirements, she is an accomplished pianist, and the piece now referred to indicates not only refined taste in composition, but also the possession of high executive powers, the many graceful and elaborate passages being written with a knowledge of the instrument which could scarcely be possessed by any but a skilled executant.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer and Co. have just brought out a valuable series of the beautiful masses of Franz Schubert, published in that cheap and portable form (large octavo) which is now so much in vogue. These masses may compare with the best of those of Haydn and Mozart, to some of which, indeed, they are perhaps superior. The works issued are Numbers 1 (in F), 2 (in G), 3 (in B flat), 4 (in C), and 6 (in E flat). They are published in two editions, one with the original Latin words, the other with an English text adapted by the Rev. J. Troutbeck, in which shape they are entitled "Communion-Services," and are fitted for use in Protestant worship.

Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. have also brought out, in the same shape, at the price of one shilling, Brahms's beautiful "Song of Destiny" ("Schicksalslied"), the English text of which is also supplied by the Rev. Mr. Troutbeck. Of this work we have already spoken in noticing its first performance in England at a Crystal Palace concert in March last.

Largely as Dr. Ferdinand Hiller has composed for the pianoforte, he has scarcely ever produced a finer work than his "Modern Suite," just published by Messrs. Novello, Ewer, and Co. This piece is classed as op. 144, but is as fresh in interest, and as masterly in power, as though it were the production of an earlier period of its composer's career. It consists of a series of six movements—"Preludio," "Alla Polacca," "Intermezzo," "Ballata," "Alla Marcia," and "Alla Comasca"—each distinguished by a specific character, and all of which will delight as well as improve the student of classical pianoforte-playing.

"Novello's Octavo Anthems" now extend to upwards of a hundred numbers, the fifth volume being in progress. The contents are varied and interesting, consisting of original compositions and arrangements bearing some of the most eminent names. The small price of the publication renders it extensively available by choral societies and country choirs.

The Ottel Service Review says her Majesty has approved of a Civil List pension being awarded to Mr. R. H. Horne, the veteran epic and dramatic poet.

The Lord Chancellor has reported to the House of Lords that the right of Edward Francis Joseph, Viscount Taafe of Corren and Baron of Ballymote, to vote at the election of Representative Peers for Ireland has been established to his Lordship's satisfaction.

The Liverpool Mercury says that the memorial of the late member for Liverpool, Mr. S. R. Graves, resolved upon twelve months ago, has been in part completed. A life-sized marble bust of her husband has been presented, on behalf of the subscribers, to Mrs. Graves, and acknowledged by her. A sum of £1000 has also been handed over to the treasurer of the Seamen's Orphan Institution, on account, for the endowment of two Graves scholarships; and the marble statue of Mr. Graves, to be placed in St. George's Hall, is in a forward state.

NEW BOOKS.

Far from a favourable opinion of the British Army, as regards morality, refinement, or anything higher than brutal qualities, will be derived by the majority of readers from the two volumes entitled Reminiscences of a Soldier, by Colonel W. K. Stuart, C.B., late 86th Regiment (Hurst and Blackett). The persons and scenes described by the gallant author are, of course, exceptional; for little or no interest attaches to the great bulk of the people who, whether they be military or civil, fulfil a tame career of ordinary duty and strict propriety. To become famous or notorious, to do or say anything worthy of being recorded in a book and likely to arrest the attention of readers, it is necessary to achieve distinction and to win either a good or a bad pre-eminence; and decidedly bad, for the most part, is the pre-eminence won by the persons whose deeds or sayings are published abroad in the volumes under consideration. The picture presented of the British Army, whether officers or soldiers sit for the portraits, is enough to make one read one's clothes with grief, horror, astonishment, and indignation, and yet, at the same time, to acknowledge, admire, and feel grateful for the fundamental soundness which enabled English officers and soldiers, in spite of the prevailing rottenness, to uphold their discipline and maintain their warlike renown. That whole regiments were not in a chronic state of mutiny is almost incomprehensible, when we read of the treatment to which the privates were liable at the savage or delirious caprice of some tigerish or besotted commanding officer. As we turn over the pages we seem to be wandering through the regions of a pandemonium, where the prominent personages, of whatever rank, are drunken, ignorant, vicious, quarrelsome, foul-mouthed, blasphemous madmen. Some of the anecdotes related are broad even to coarseness; oaths abound with a fruitfulness beyond that of blackberries; the fun, when there is any, has a savour of horse-play; and the wit and humour, which are almost invariably garnished with bad language ("a way they have" or had "in the Army"), are, with a few exceptions, after the now almost obsolete style of "Roderick Random." And it is hardly necessary to say that duels and duelling come in for quite a sufficient share of notice. Let it not be supposed that any reflection is intended to be cast upon the gallant author; on the contrary, he is to be thanked for the indubitably truthful account, shocking as it may be, which his long service eminently qualified him to give of military life as it was some years ago. We are supposed to have changed all that; and, superficial and specious as the change may be in many respects, it is quite certain that things have in several material points been altered for the better. Barracks may still be a sink of iniquity for all that appears on the exterior to the contrary; but it is impossible that either officers or soldiers can be quite so brutal, and unenlightened, and illiterate as they appear to have been, and that such sickening cases of corporal punishment and such gross cases of inefficient court-martial as the gallant author has vouched for could nowadays recur. Besides, as has already been suggested, he has, no doubt, concerned himself with the exceptions and not the rule; otherwise it would be incredible that our military fabric could have held together. The portions of the second volume which relate to service in India differ in kind from the main contents of the two volumes, and have their own special attractive and instructive qualities; and nothing can be more admirable than the manly frankness with which the gallant author exposes his own occasional deviations from perfect heroism, or than the good sense and kindness with which he pleads the cause of his friend, as we are quite sure he would allow us to say, the private soldier.

A lack of earnest intention seems to be traceable in what an anonymous author has written under the title of Some Time in Ireland; a Recollection (Henry S. King and Co.); and, though the cause of mere amusement may have been promoted rather than hindered thereby, those who are in search of solid information and wish to make a serious study of Irish social life are likely to be disappointed, wearied, and irritated. The anonymous author, who boasts to belong to the gentler sex, very truly observes that "writers professing to describe social and family life in Ireland have mostly selected their types from roystering squires or ruined country gentlemen;" whereas she professes to depict, from the vivid recollections of her earlier years and from her later experience, "views, feelings, habits, and principles, more really and truly characteristic of the gentry of Ireland." If that be so, and if success have crowned her efforts, her readers will very probably come to the conclusion that, so far as social life is concerned, there is or was a very strong resemblance between the ruined and the unruined gentry. At least, there is the same general aspect of mingled extravagance and abject penuriosity—the same hum-scarum condition of things—the same happy-go-lucky style of management. But then she has entered into more than usual detail; and the sketches she has given of the interior economy of that household in which she, at the commencement of her autobiographical reminiscences, filled the unenviable post of a little girl, the youngest of several children, have a certain charm of novelty; and, if they do not evince much sisterly affection, are hit off with some humour, and bear witness to a remarkably precocious habit of observation and taste for scandal. An Irish election and its consequences—including, of course, an attack upon a dwelling-house—give the author an opportunity of exhibiting considerable descriptive powers. The rather lame conclusion of the whole record forcibly suggests that want of serious intention which has already been alluded to, and which faintly haunts one all through the pages; for the writer, at the end, plainly considers that she is to be congratulated upon having escaped from Ireland, as if that were the best way of solving Irish puzzles. But then, as she herself confesses, "we never affected nor desired to be considered native Irish; nor would such a pretension, if made, have been admitted by the genuine natives, who regarded us as heretical supplanters of the rightful owners of the soil."

As there is no end to Wimpole-street, some future day may see the conclusion of M. Guizot's History of France, translated by Robert Black, M.A. (Sampson Low and Co.). At any rate, the third volume has lately been finished and published; and the fourth, it is reasonable to suppose, will, if nothing should occur to prevent its publication, bring to a close a handsome, an elaborate, an instructive, a picturesque, and an interesting addition to the category of historical literature. The work, if memory may be trusted, began to be published in the year 1869, and, according to the earliest advertisements, was to have been concluded in about twenty monthly parts. Afterwards, the number of monthly parts was stated at twenty-four; but already more have been issued, and the end is by no means yet. When all is over, the number of monthly parts will probably reach nearly the double of that which was originally projected. To such dimensions has the work grown in the handling. But when increase of size is accompanied by proportionate increase of valuable contents, there is an appreciable gain; and when M. Guizot tells historical tales to his grandchildren and M. A. de Neuville illustrates those tales with the really splendid creations of his pencil, everybody is likely to want more rather than less. The third volume, in which the pictorial efforts of M. de Neuville are as conspicuous as heretofore, begins with the accession of Francis I. and stops at the assassination of Henry IV.—a period full of memorable incidents, military, political, religious, and literary; from the campaign in which the heroic Bayard fell and the subsequent battle, in which "all was lost save honour," to the famous engagement at Ivry, when the road to honour and victory was indicated by the "white plume of Navarre." It may be mentioned, by the way, that M. Guizot does not fail to give the text of the letter which relegates the celebrated saying about "all is lost save honour" not exactly to the unclear region to which the remark of Cambronne has been consigned, but to one considerably below the sublime. The chivalrous Francis, in fact, did not forget to mention, as if it were of equal importance, that he had saved his "bacon" as well as his honour.

Particular attention should be paid to the title of Swiss Allmends and a Walk to see them, by F. Barham Zincke, Vicar of Wharstead (Smith, Elder, and Co.), else readers may suppose that they are never coming to the "Swiss Allmends." In fact, a walk has to be taken through fifteen chapters and 296 pages out of 362 before we arrive at what we have come out to see. And many an expression of impatience may rise to the lips as the eye glances through the headings of the chapters, and encounters the well-known names of Berne, Zurich, Interlaken, the Brünig, Sarnen, Alp-nach, Altorf, St. Gothard, Airolo, Faido, Bellinzona, Locarno, the Rigi Kulm, Lucerne, and other places which every cockney knows all about. But it will be well to curb impatience; for the author is not as other men are, and does not observe things or places in the common way or from the common point of view. His profession, and the peculiar bent of his mind, which is practical, inquisitive in a good sense, reflective, and didactic, lead him to make unusual investigations, to study some of the less superficially striking parts of manysided nature, and to communicate to others impressions of which they would not by themselves have been susceptible. He is of no account—on the present occasion, whatever he may be on other occasions—at picturesque description; it is doubtful whether his book would yield a single sentence which, as a piece of writing, deserves to be noticed; his style is, for the most part, more jejune than that of the ordinary guide-book; he jots down innumerable nothings of no interest to any earthly creature; but, with all this, he has facts to state and hints to give which may invest with fresh interest even a beaten path. As to the Swiss Allmends, it may be as well to predicate that "allmend means land which is held and used, as the word itself indicates, in common," and then to leave readers to gather up from Mr. Zincke's pages the interesting information he was at no little pains to collect. It may be added that what is admitted by the author to be "a really good map," furnished by Messrs. Keith Johnston, will be found in the volume's pocket.

A very modest, and indeed diffident, preface is sometimes suggestive of the pride that apes humility; but in the case of Winter at the Italian Lakes (Sampson Low and Co.) the writer, a lady whose name does not appear, must be considered to have written her apologetic preface under the influence of just appreciation, unadulterated by any sort of mock sentiment. At any rate, she has assigned to her own book exactly the value that would be assigned to it by most impartial persons. It is founded upon a journal originally intended for the amusement of her companions; and, if it produced the desired effect, the companions, whatever may be thought of their capacity for being amused, had nothing to complain of. And amongst the public there may be a larger number than one would suppose of happy beings made in the likeness of the companions. It is impossible, however, to help participating in the amiable writer's own fear "that there are only two classes of persons to whom these pages can afford any interest"—to wit, those who, assisted by the magic of memory, "may feel a certain pleasure even in names and feeble outlines," and those who, in search of a particular sort of climate, "may, perhaps, gather a few hints" from the writer's own experience. The ordinary reader's heart is likely to grow heavy at the outset, when it appears that the winter alluded to was so long ago as 1869, that the Italian lakes commence with "the old clock of Dover Castle," and that progress is delayed by "a day in the galleries of Munich." To fully enjoy the book the reader should be of the feminine gender, inclined to dwell upon petty details, apt to conjoin religion with coquetry, so highly Protestant as to be made "very sad" at the sight of a book of prayers belonging to a Roman Catholic, liable to be startled at the apparition of ice and snow in the winter, impressed with the importance of a chillblain to the British Constitution, prone to indulge in scriptural quotations, and warranted to see the fun of describing fellow-travellers, whose initials only are given, as "wandering letters of the alphabet." And, after all, when one comes to think, there should be many a reader of the kind; so that the book may meet with a success which the modest candour, if not the descriptive power, or the adventurous spirit, or the wit or the humour, or the theological liberality of the writer certainly deserves. It were unpardonable not to give as much publicity as possible to a little anecdote which is a deliciously ingenuous and unconscious illustration of the moral blindness pointed out in the lesson of the mote and the beam. "At Alessandria," says the amiable lady, "I got some dreadfully cross looks from a priest, whose small leather bag I unfortunately took up instead of my own. I am sure the suspicious creature thought I was a thief. . . . I should have liked to tell him to cultivate that 'charity which thinketh no evil.' I wonder what there was in the bag—some deep plot perhaps."

Of the two volumes entitled respectively The Unknown River: an Etcher's Voyage of Discovery, and Chapters on Animals, both by Philip Gilbert Hamerton, and both published by Messrs. Seeley, Jackson, and Halliday, the former, having eight illustrations etched by the author, is apparently only a new edition, in a smaller form, of a very bright, pleasant, readable narrative, recording the author's experiences during a canoe-trip on an "unknown river" connected with the Loire. The latter is a much larger and a very handsome book, containing no fewer than twenty illustrations "etched directly on the copper by two deservedly celebrated animal-painters, Karl Bodmer and J. Veyrassat," which, as Mr. Hamerton himself, no mean judge, truly and magnanimously suggests, "will be found to add considerably to the value and interest of the volume." The author has filled his sixteen desultory chapters with discourse based in great part, if not entirely, upon his own personal observations; and, as he is evidently a keen observer as well as a warm but not merely sentimental lover of animals, he commands our confidence as well as our attention. Horses, dogs, cats, "bovines," asses, pigs, wild boars, wolves, kids, birds, and other animals come in for a share of notice. Anecdotes abound, and, for strangeness and attractiveness, may vie with those associated with the name of Jesse. The chapter in which cats are the author's theme is one of the most entertaining, but it is also one of those in which the author is least indebted to his own personal knowledge, for the peerless Puddles, the cat that would go a-fishing and would honourably abstain from indulging, without permission, the "particular weakness" of its race, was originally made known to fame, it would appear, by Mr. Frank Buckland. It is possible that a reader or two may be rendered a little uncomfortable sometimes by the author's reflections, speculations, and small bits of rhapsody; but in this world we must have tribulation. As for the incredulous, let them read the last chapter and read their clothes.

A few "heliotype reproductions of drawings by officers of the Royal Artillery" give some additional interest to the otherwise sufficiently interesting Recollections of Sir George B. L'Estrange, late of the 31st Regiment, and afterwards in the Scots Fusilier Guards (Sampson Low and Co.). The recollections proper do not occupy more than 201 out of 288 pages. There are, first of all, eight pages of preface; then fifteen of introduction; and, at the end, about sixty-four of appendix. The preface tells how the gallant author was led to jot down the recollections of his life, and was interrupted by most melancholy events in the very midst of his task. The introduction gives some information about Sir Roger L'Estrange, Knight, and contains some commendatory remarks touching public schools in general and Westminster in particular. The appendix is devoted to a short but lively and striking memoir of the late Major Edmund L'Estrange, 71st Highland Light Infantry; to an obituary announcement of the death of Lieutenant-Colonel A. R. L'Estrange, author of that memoir; and to some "favourable notices" of Lieutenant-Colonel George Guy Carleton L'Estrange. Sir George, whose recollections give a title to the volume, was a young officer of fifteen at the date from which he commences his tale of reminiscences; and at that early age began his military career by bringing up from Portsmouth to Ashford in Kent, for preliminary drill, a hundred wild Irish volunteers. There is a portrait of him as he rode at their head and played, not at all well, upon the flute certain Irish tunes, to which he found they stepped along cheerily and obediently. How he hit upon that curious expedient does not appear; but it was highly successful. Before long, however, he and his volunteers were safely embarked for the Peninsula; and from that moment he enters upon so attractive a course of recollections that, if he could have made it twice as long, he would probably have better pleased the majority of his readers. The style of writing is quite good enough, and so simple and unpretentious that it makes one's heart warm towards the gallant veteran who employs it, and who cannot be said to belong to those of whom it would be just to quote: "old men forget, yet all shall be forgot but they'll remember with advantages the deeds they did" in the Peninsula.

From the preface, which is dated January, 1873, it would appear as if neglect (most surely unintentional, however) had been the fate of A Month in Switzerland, by F. Barham Zincke (Smith, Elder, and Co.). One comfort is that the subject is one of annually recurring interest. It would, at the first blush, strike most people as an absurdity to suppose that anybody could, at the present day, have anything fresh to say, or worth saying, about Switzerland, after only a few weeks' sojourn; but a perusal of the volume will probably lead to a change of opinion. The author does not wear a common kind of spectacles or confine himself to the same sort and the same aspect of things as the ordinary tourist would be disposed to notice; though the remarks he makes about the aggravatingly monotonous character of Swiss hotels, or, at any rate, of their interior economy, must have suggested themselves to many a visitor. The author, however, was not unfamiliar with Switzerland, even before he went thither with his wife and his companion for this particular "month"; and that fact exonerates him from a charge of having picked up an impossibly large amount of interesting information in a supernaturally short space of time.

A veteran officer of high distinction, Major-General Sir Vincent Eyre, K.C.S.I. and C.B., has published his poems of many years and many lands, under the title Lays of a Knight Errant (H. S. King and Co.). His fame is probably secured, in the history of the Indian Sepoy War of 1857, by the resolute enterprise he achieved in relieving and defending "the house of Arrah." This may console his partial friends, if the cold or critical temper of the reading public in our day should fail to admire the lively offspring of his humorous, or, by turns, sentimental vein of fancy. It is, however, quite likely that among a large number of readers each will find a piece of verse to please him in this collection, which has great variety of tone and style, with a discursive range of subjects. The author is a man of taste and culture, as well as of active experience; and his leisure days have been profitably spent amid scenes of classic or romantic history, the associations of which he has thoughtfully imbibed and completed by study. Italy, Germany, Switzerland, the south of France, and the wonderful old Nile have occupied his musing mind. The young lady of his family, whom he mentions as having been his companion in these rambles and readings, must be congratulated upon the rare advantage of sharing them with a man so well qualified to feel their true spirit. There was something congenial to a soldier of British India, we may suppose, in the relics of Rome's Imperial power or in those of Teutonic chivalry. Sir Vincent Eyre has nevertheless a turn for lighter themes. He tells the story of his dog Dandy, a narrative of wide travels and diverse exploits, with much pleasant humour. The "Lays of Home-Land" include many occasional poems of domestic or personal interest.

A funny "frontispiece and vignette by George Du Maurier" predisposes one in favour of Round About the Islands; or, Sunny Spots Near Home, by Clement W. Scott (Tinsley Brothers); and the favourable predisposition is increased by the dedication, from which it appears that the author is a pluralist in the matter of friendship. An author who has not only a friend, but friends, in whom he has sufficient confidence to inscribe his book to them must have a great deal, if it be only simple trustfulness, in him. And the contents of his volume show that he is moved by a genial spirit; that he has a quick and probably, like Lesbia, a beaming eye; that he has a "heart alive," as he himself would say, to pleasant, sunny, healthful influences; and that he handles a pen skilfully and agreeably. The contents of the volume are, in part, a collection of letters devoted to "sketches of frequent holiday rambles round our summer islands near home;" but that description cannot apply to "At the Academy," and some other articles, which help to raise the number of pages to three hundred and fifty or more of very good reading.

We must not altogether forget the claim of everybody's children to have the best new books for their reading pointed out with a view to purchase by their indulgent friends. For this purpose it is right that mention be here made of The Gingerbread Maiden and Other Stories, by Laura Friwall (Sampson Low, Marston, and Searle). The little volume is dedicated to Hans Christian Andersen, of whose genial spirit of kindly sympathy, and talent of sportive invention, the fair author seems to have imbibed her share. It need scarcely be explained that "the gingerbread maiden" is one made of that dainty cake by the confectioner, and exhibited for sale in a village shop. "Mrs. Farthingale's Baby" is a little drama of humble family life, to show what may happen when idle, quarrelsome boys and girls neglect minding the baby in their mother's absence from home. In "The Queen of the Roses" we have a flight of more poetical fancy. "Molochia" is the dreadful name of reproach laid upon a naughty little girl, whose proper name is Dora; she rebels and runs away, but is finally reclaimed. "The Man in the Moon," last of this series, has something of the turn and air of "Alice in Wonderland." Mrs. B. Dawson has furnished illustrative designs, which are produced in the black silhouette fashion. These, too, are lively and expressive.

Playfulness, at one time restrained within the bounds of graceful fancy and at another extending well into the regions of grotesque extravagance, is conspicuous amongst the characteristics of The Little People; and other Tales, by Lady Pollock, W. K. Clifford, and Walter Herries Pollock (Chapman and Hall). The volume is embellished "with illustrations by John Collier." The "little people" of the title are otherwise known by the name of "fairies" and their sayings and doings have from time immemorial been found to have a singular fascination for the little people of real life. It would not be remarkable if the book were to find great favour with the majority of English children.

The hobby which is at present being ridden by us with so much determination may cause more than could otherwise have been expected of attention to be bestowed upon National Education in Greece in the Fourth Century before Christ, by Augustus S. Wilkins, M.A. (Strahan and Co.). The contents of the volume are based upon and adapted from an essay which "obtained the Hare Prize in the University of Cambridge." The author's object is threefold—to set forth, first, "the popular Greek conceptions of the aims and methods of national education;" secondly, "the manner in which these conceptions were carried into practical effect, with their general results upon national life;" thirdly, "the criticisms of the popular ideas and methods of education passed by the great Greek thinkers of the fourth century before our era, with the substitutes suggested by them." Much learning and research have, of necessity, been brought to bear upon the task; and the work is far more readable than the suspicious general reader might in his heart imagine. It may be interesting, if not useful and suggestive, to parents and guardians and school boards to know that at Sparta "the boys were inspected every ten days, and anyone who seemed too fat was whipped."

WILLS AND BEQUESTS.

The will, dated Sept. 15 last, of Benedict John Angell, late of Lubenham, Leicestershire, and of No. 36, Curzon-street, Mayfair, who died on the 12th ult., was proved on the 6th inst. by John Benedict Gore, the uncle, and Charles Norris Wilde, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £120,000. The testator bequeaths to his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Wilshire Angell, the furniture of his town residence, a pecuniary legacy of £5000, and all his interest in No. 36, Curzon-street, together with an annuity of £2000; to his executor, Mr. Wilde, £5000, free of duty; and the residue of his real and personal estate to his said uncle, Mr. J. B. Gore.

The will, dated Sept. 13, 1850, of Colonel Robert Smith, C.B., who died on Sept. 16 last, has been proved by his son, Robert Claude Smith, who takes the whole of his property as only next of kin. The personal estate is sworn under £90,000.

The will and codicil, dated May 27, 1873, and March 23 last, of Henry Grisewood, late of No. 15, Chesham-place, Belgrave-square, who died on April 28, have recently been proved by Mrs. Ann Grisewood, the widow, and Henry Edward Grisewood, the acting executors, the personal estate being sworn under £90,000. The testator gives to his wife his furniture and £1000 absolutely, and the income of the investments of £50,000 for life, or so long as she shall continue a widow; £100 to be laid out in the purchase of some article of personal adornment to be presented to Mrs. Bauman as a memento of his regard; to his son Arthur George the advowson of Daylesford, Worcestershire; to his son Henry Edward all his interest in the estate at Ware; £1000 each to his three other children, and legacies to his servants. As to the residue of his property, he leaves six twentieths to his eldest son, four twentieths each to his two other sons, and three twentieths to each of his two daughters.

The will and codicil, dated Sept. 12 and Oct. 15 last, of James William Cuthbert, late of No. 14, Grosvenor-street, and of Hampton Court Palace, who died on the 6th ult., at Cannes, in France, were proved on the 9th inst. by Lord Dacre, Alexander Leslie Montgomery, Lord Alfred Spencer Churchill, and Berkeley Paget, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £80,000. The testator bequeaths £200 to each of his executors, and an additional sum of £300 to Mr. B. Paget; £5000 to the Hon. Adolphus Edward Paget Graves; £200 to Henry Thomas Young, and £25,000 to Madame Seymourina Suzanne Poirson as she shall appoint. None of these legacies are to be paid until the death of the wife, who, subject thereto, takes the whole of the property except two farms in Kent, which on her decease are settled to the use of the said Hon. A. E. P. Graves, for life, with remainder to his son Cyril Cuthbert Hare Graves.

The will, dated Oct. 29, 1867, of Dame Harriet Fellows (relict of the late Sir Charles Fellows), late of West Cowes, Isle of Wight, who died on March 19 last, was proved on the 6th inst. by Charles Francis Fellows, John Rogers, and Henry Fellows, the executors, the personal estate being sworn under £20,000. After giving several legacies to friends, the testatrix leaves the residue of her property to her stepson, Mr. C. F. Fellows. The testatrix bequeaths to the trustees of the British Museum her collection of watches, to be placed and held with Milton's watch, bequeathed to them by her late husband; and to the Royal Institution, Albemarle-street, the drawings by herself of such watches.

The Caledonian Challenge Shield was won at Edinburgh, yesterday week, by J. Todd, Glasgow.

The large wooden bridge over the river Don, between Mexborough and Denaby, was destroyed by fire last Saturday.

A thunderstorm of brief duration, but of great violence, burst over some districts of the north of Scotland on Sunday.

Sir Garnet Wolseley presided, last Saturday, at the annual meeting in connection with the Soldiers' Daughters' Home at Hampstead.

The projectors and proposed members of the Junior Reform Club have held a meeting at the Westminster Palace Hotel, at which the preliminary steps were taken for perfecting its organization. Mr. Danby Seymour presided. An executive committee was elected, and a deputation was appointed to wait upon Mr. Gladstone and bring the position of the club under his notice. The secretary stated that 300 applications for admission had been received, and that negotiations had been opened for obtaining a lease of the premises at the corner of Pall-mall and Waterloo-place.

SKETCHES FROM PALESTINE.

Three views of local scenery, and one group of figures, engraved for a page of this Supplement, belong to a collection of some fifty sketches in water colours, hastily drawn on the spot by Lieut. Conder, R.E., from which he hopes, at a future period, to work out a series of finished drawings, to be exhibited for the benefit of the Palestine Exploration Fund.

CARMEL AND KISHON.

This is a view of the winter aspect of one of the most picturesque places in Palestine. The winding Kishon, after flowing through the narrow gorge of Harosheth, comes out into the flat plains, from which the steep sides of Carmel rise abruptly. It has burst the sand-bar, which in summer closes its mouth; and, at the time of year represented, flows into the sea, an almost unfordable stream. Here, on the sandy dunes near the beach, the palms, rare as they are generally in Palestine, grow in clusters. The dark hill behind is covered with a dusky, rolling underwood, flowing like a stream over the dark red and grey cliffs; and, breaking down the watercourses, runs a thicket of mastic and other dark-leaved shrubs. It is to this soft bushy appearance that Solomon is supposed to refer when he likens the dark hair of his African bride to Carmel. The alluvial plain, of deep red soil, stretches to the reedy banks; coarse, bright-coloured marshy shrubs grow on each side. A long line of herons is generally to be seen watching beside the water, or a dainty white egret stepping along the margin.

MOUNT EBAL AND SHECHEM.

The modern Nablus, on the site of the ancient Shechem, lies, as is well known, in a narrow valley between the high and rugged hills of Ebal (the mountain of curses) on the north, and Gerizim (the mountain of blessings) on the south. Both these stony hills are steep and barren; only a few olives and patches of corn grow at their feet. But the valley between is one of the most delightful spots in Palestine. More than seventy springs burst from all sides; long gardens of orange, lemon, and walnut surround the town, and the trees attain a size not visible elsewhere, except at Damascus. The modern town is hot and dirty; but great interest attaches to it as the seat of the last remnant of that wonderful Samaritan people now fast dying out. Their customs and prejudices are undisturbed by modern science. The Survey party could not convince the high priest that Gerizim, which he believed to be the highest mountain in the world, was actually overtopped by the northern summit. The yearly Passover is held on this sacred summit, when the white-robed priests and congregation still eat the lamb, hot from the embers, standing or walking about. Of this unique scene Lieutenant Conder hopes to furnish a sketch. It is described by Dean Stanley in his book on Palestine. The water-colour sketch of Mount Ebal and Shechem, as drawn by Lieutenant Conder, represents that flush of colour which for a few minutes pervades the mountain in the evening, with a brilliancy of reflection, from the hard grey crags and ruddy soil, which it is hard for us to appreciate in our sober clime. This contrasts forcibly with the dark foliage of the valley lying in the shadow of Gerizim.

THE SEA OF GALILEE.

Few indeed are the views or paintings that give a true and unidealized representation of a spot so deeply interesting. The Sea of Galilee can boast of but little beauty. It is a volcanic crater, surrounded with rolling slopes of basaltic country and steep cliffs of white marl. A great plateau stretches away on the east, broken only by two mounds, being the summits of hills more than one hundred miles distant. It has not the wild and desolate grandeur of the Dead Sea, and from many points of view it is tame and ordinary in appearance. The calm transparency of the surface, in which the white crest of Hermon is mirrored, is shown in another sketch from the south-west. The one selected shows the lake on a stormy day at the time of the first rains. The thunderstorms which sweep over the lake, with bright gleams of the warm sun lingering on isolated spots, give a grandeur to the scene which is wanting in calmer weather. The middle distance shows a long slope and curious square top of basaltic formation—the Horns of Hattin, where the power of Christianity and Western civilisation was broken in Palestine by that disastrous battle in which the flower of crusading chivalry fell before the superior numbers and skill of the great Saladin.

GIPTSY-BOY DANCERS.

The gipsy dancers are amongst the most curious institutions of the country. The Egyptian dancing and singing girls are rarely seen, though employed in such towns as Damascus, and sometimes found among the wild Arabs in the Jordan valley, from whom they gain enough to carry them from tribe to tribe on their journeys to and from Egypt. The dancers here in question are a different class. They are all boys or young men, allowed to appear in public. They are accompanied by a sort of clown, whose grotesque and awkward imitation of their movements answers closely to the part played by the European circus clown. Castanets are fastened to the fingers of the dancers, who, with a curious clawing action resembling that of a mesmerist, often advance close to the audience. Long skirts of various colours are worn, and float like a ballet-dancer's in the wind when they are turning round. The usual motion is a voluptuous movement of the body. To a European the performance is repulsive to the last degree. It is noticed only as a relic of the paganism which is by no means extinct among the lower classes of native population in Syria.

Baroness Meyer de Rothschild and her daughter have contributed £150 to the North-Eastern Hospital for Children, in memory of the late Baron Meyer Amschel de Rothschild.

A conversazione of the Society of Arts was held, yesterday week, at the South Kensington Museum. The visitors were received in the South Court by Major-General F. Eardley Wilmot, R.A., and other members of the council.

The Right Hon. W. E. Forster, presiding, yesterday week, at the 118th anniversary meeting of the Orphan Working School, at Haverstock-hill, said in the course of his speech, with regard to the examination in holy scripture which they had listened to, he was glad to state that the teaching conducted there was unsectarian—that was to say, there was no effort to claim the children as belonging to a particular sect; but, on the contrary, to make them all feel that they had been brought up as thorough Christians, the words of the bible and the meaning being fully impressed on their minds.

The Duke of Cambridge, as honorary colonel of the City of London Rifle Volunteer Brigade, inspected that regiment, last Saturday, in Hyde Park. His Royal Highness, having reviewed the men, said it had been his good fortune to inspect the brigade upon every occasion since its formation. He had no hesitation in congratulating Colonel Hayter on the fact that, in his opinion, that was the best inspection of the regiment he had made. Another City corps—the 2nd London Rifles—was inspected last Saturday, on the Horse Guards Parade ground, by Colonel Lyons, acting for Prince Edward of Saxe-Weimar.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, CAPE COAST.

NEW SCHOOLS, HARPER-STREET, NEW KENT-ROAD.

CAPE COAST CASTLE.

The tide of contemporary interests has already begun to drift public attention far away from the Gold Coast; but the local capital of the British settlements in that part of West Africa, which was the centre of so many excited feelings at the commencement of this year, is a place still claiming historical remembrance in the future, though its political importance may soon become a thing of the past. It seems likely, indeed, that the seat of Government will hereafter be removed from Cape Coast Castle to some less unhealthy place of abode for British official gentlemen. The old range of buildings, not without a certain stateliness, in which the representatives of England have dwelt since the time of Charles II., will perhaps be deserted or demolished. We now give a view of Government House, with its garden front, sketched by Mr. Melton Prior, our Special Artist with Sir Garnet Wolseley's expedition. In this garden, on Oct. 4, two days after his landing, Sir Garnet convened a meeting of the Fantee kings and chiefs, assembled under two marquees, to discuss their joint action in the Ashantee War. Those native auxiliaries were of no service in the field.

NEW SCHOOLS IN SOUTH LONDON.

The London School Board has been doing much good work in Southwark and Lambeth. A visit to the new schools lately built and opened for teaching in the districts traversed by the Old and New Kent Roads, east of the Borough, will gratify, we think, any friend of popular education. In Monnow-road, Blue Anchor-road, towards Southwark Park, is one of the best furnished and best managed of these new Board schools. That it is most acceptable to the people of the district seems to be proved by the fact that many more parents would gladly send their children if there were more room. The school building was designed by the architect, Mr. R. Plunbe, to accommodate 1188, but the daily attendance, last week was nearly 1300, and since the opening, on Jan. 4, hundreds have been turned from the doors. There are usually about 450 boys, 400 girls, and 450 infants. The head master, Mr. Lumley, has four assistant masters and six pupil-teachers under him. An adult teacher is always present in every room to direct the work. Miss Bulcraig, the schoolmistress on the girls' side, has three assistant mistresses; and in the infant school Miss Campbell has three, besides the apprentice teachers. With this efficient staff, and with the best appliances, literary and mechanical, for simultaneous training and teaching, the business of the school is likely to be well performed. Another large and successful board school recently erected is that in Harper-street, New Kent-road, which belongs to the Lambeth division of the London School Board district. The building, of which Mr. Edis, Fitzroy-square, was the architect, is shown in our Illustration. Its high-pitched roof, large upper windows, and tall chimney-stacks in front have rather an imposing aspect. The central entrance, in the main front, is for the infants; the entrance to the girls' school is at one side, and that to the boys' school is in Ripley-street, on the other side. This school is also in full operation. The new schools in Creek-road and Clifford-road, Deptford, were lately noticed. The Lambeth and Southwark members of the London School Board may fairly be congratulated upon such conspicuous monuments of their zeal for the provision of ample means to discipline and instruct the young Londoners on that side of the Thames. Ten or twenty years hence, let us hope, the world will be all the better for what is now daily taught in these schools.

THE PLACE DU HAVRE, PARIS.

The personal assault on M. Gambetta by a Bonapartist military man calling himself the Comte de St. Croix was narrated in our last, with the sentence of the Tribunal of Correctional Police upon the perpetrator of this outrage. The Municipal Guard, immediately after the scuffle at the St. Lazare terminus of the Versailles Railway, Place du Havre, cleared first the grand staircase and lobbies, and next the whole space outside the station, of a great crowd there assembled. None were allowed to pass in but those who were going to travel by the railway, and those who arrived by the trains were obliged at once to quit the station. It had for some time past been the daily practice of an idle multitude to assemble in the afternoon, at the hour when members of the National Assembly were returning from Versailles to Paris. Those who were favourites of the mob, or whose partisans had engaged a claque for their behoof, were greeted with sounds and gestures of applause. Others had to encounter less agreeable manifestations of feeling; and, in the present uncertain temper of the populace, it seems just as well that these irregular proceedings should have been stopped.

THE SEASON.

With the trees in Hyde Park in their fashionable summer suit of the brightest green—though the pretty little country rivulet not far from "the Corner" has long been little better than a sheet of dry and unsavoury mud; with the shutters taken down which through the winter have made almost every third house in the "best" squares a corpse stonily erect among its cheery companions; with the windows of Bond-street and Regent-street in a blaze of everything that is useless and expensive and fashionable, we see everywhere in their fullest bloom the glories of London society, those without whom "the Season" would not exist even as a name—the Swells.

Up and down Rotten Row, desiring, apparently, no wider field for their exertions, walk and trot gently cavaliers and dames innumerable, mounted on Tattersall's choicest—livery-stable keepers tell you there has not been such a Season for seven or eight summers; round the outer circle of the Park roll carriages filled with delicate, golden-haired maidens in pink, and stately Greek beauties in olive-green or deep violet; while here and there a four-in-hand sweeps by, with trim (if "tawny") Guardsmen and bright, laughing girls, in their lightest summer dresses, perched above a team of splendid bays; Regent-street and Bond-street are full of tightly-buttoned-up, frock-coated young men and eagerly-shopping maids; the Academy boasts its double eye-glasses of dowagers by the score, as well as its shovel-hats of clerical dignitaries—shall I say by the hundred? (where do all the Academy Bishops spring from?); and in the evening the opera-houses brim over with duchesses in acres of lace and bushels of diamonds; while along every square are perpetual little canvas porticoes, and outspread carpets to save the feet of the Upper Ten from contact with anything so common as stone.

What must it cost, this "Season"? Walking through Grosvenor-square the other afternoon I saw a carriage waiting to receive a stout old lady perfectly well able to take care of herself; an able-bodied man was standing ready to open the carriage-door; a second, equally able-bodied, having flung open the door of the house, was striking an attitude of angular beauty on the mat; while a third stalwart menial acted as guard of honour outside the room from which her portly ladyship was preparing to issue. Is it too much to assume that from morning to night these three men had very little to do beyond welcoming the coming and speeding the parting guests of No. —, Grosvenor-square? And, if it is not, how much may we put down as the annual cost of the trio, who might, as far as the uninitiated eye can perceive, be fully replaced by one very little boy in buttons?

What does one four-in-hand cost? Five hundred a year? How much does Madame Delamode receive for a single ball-dress, or one of those still more overwhelming costumes in which our fair patricians appear before their Sovereign—and of which it would seem that so very little remains when they have at length succeeded in struggling home? Diamonds, opera-boxes, dinners, and dances—what sort of a bill does the Earl of Littlebury have to pay for these at the end of a season, in which, perhaps, none of his daughters have been "got rid of," not one of his impetuous sons has made a big match? No wonder the mortgages grow heavier, the idea of ever attempting to pay them off more widely remote, even the possibility of preventing a foreclosure less of a probability every year. If the star of Littlebury still diminishes, while that of Griggs, his linen-draper (and mortgagee), increases daily, it can hardly be said to be altogether Griggs's fault, a thing for which Griggs is to be sneered at and hated by men whom he has saved more than once from immediate ruin; though, beyond question, he is an "awful cad," with less breeding than brains, and considerably clearer ideas of honesty than of his—the which letter a man had better commit all the deadly sins in a body than leave out.

Such are the Season and its cost, in Park-lane and Belgrave-square; but there is a reverse to the medal. Let us go from Regent-street, West, to Regent-street, Westminster, of which, probably, fifty per cent. of our readers never heard, though it is the main thoroughfare of a neighbourhood at least as populous as that of its aristocratic namesake a mile off. Here throughout the hottest summer are crowded together in narrow alleys and filthy lanes thousands of human beings who never know what it is to have a holiday, except in the dreadful time when they can get no work—many of whom never from year's end to year's end can really feel what buoyant, unclouded health is. Here, a grade higher, live thousands of working men, who, though they manage to keep body and soul together without aid from charity or workhouse, cannot afford to leave the close, unhealthy streets near their work, have not the twopence or fourpence a day it would cost them to travel to shop or factory betimes every morning from some more wholesome neighbourhood. Many of these men are, in their way, educated—thoroughly, if not highly; all are keen politicians. They go to the free reading-room, in Great Smith-street; they take in the Beesive or the National Reformer; and to them the Season is a perpetual grievance and irritation; its boundless and thoughtless luxury chafes them, struggling fiercely, as they must, for the bare necessities of life; they count up the cost of each four-in-hand, of every tiara of diamonds, every robe covered with priceless valenciennes; nor do they forget whence was obtained the wealth with which all these are bought. Has not the National Reformer lately published a series of articles (eminently calculated to bring into brotherly union rich and poor), tracing to their somewhat unsavoury sources the fortunes of most of our "great families"? Can we expect the man of forty, who, to maintain his wife and children and improve himself, works hard and honestly, amid impure air and almost unavoidable dirt,—can we expect him, brought up so far from all the refining and softening influences of ease and comfort, to look with a very kindly eye upon the "young swell" who, doing nothing, thinking nothing—perhaps feeling nothing—spends every year the income of fifty working-men solely and selfishly on his own amusement? Can we hope that to him the Season, with its thousand glories and delights, is anything but a bitterness, a series of insults, a robbery (perhaps he thinks) of that which would give to his children health and gaiety, to himself leisure for thought and culture—to all, longer and healthier and better life?

What answer can we make to the cry of the pale, old-faced little ones, the savage growl of the mechanic, the earnest prayer of the political economist—pressing on with his terrible logic, careless what fire his words may light? Are they not both here—the misery of the many, the wealth, wasted by the hands of the few, that might relieve it? Both are here—as they ever have been.

That is our answer—they have ever been. Time is the father of Seasons. The swells of the present day live only as long use has made it their nature to live. We cannot expect the typical Guardsman, brought up to do nothing so artistically that in this special line no man in the world can rival him, to sacrifice his income and his idleness, to be laughed at, or put into a lunatic asylum, for the benefit of those members of another race, whom he knows only as "cads." Time has made him what he is; Time is gradually bringing round a reform. How many men with historical names and colossal incomes would a century ago have given up the best part of their time to help those who can hardly help themselves, to think and work for the untaught and overworked poor? How many do it to-day? The answer is a proud one for England; and these noblemen are every day lessening that danger of revolution of which those who do most to sow its seeds whisper with profound awe.

"There's a good time coming," it is to be hoped. In the meanwhile, let us take the "swells" as they are—and as they are it is not good to see them? What a great factory would smoky London be without these gleams of silk and velvet, these pink and blue and amber butterflies, the beautiful women's faces, the noble horses and stately riders, that stream each day along Hyde Park and Piccadilly—this laughing, chattering, glittering, useless crowd (as useless as bright flowers and sweet scents) that lights up the dull routine of business life, the sober men and women of all the year round, when, like the spring with its birds and blossoms in the country, in town from May to August the swells return to saunter through "the Season!"

FINE ARTS.

EXHIBITION OF WORKS IN BLACK AND WHITE.

The collection of drawings and designs in any material that does not yield colour in the ordinary sense, which is now on view at the Dudley Gallery, is rather superior to that of last year. A larger number of artists of position are among the contributors. If the engraving element is less widely represented, there is an increased proportion of work of auto-graphic interest—i.e., studies from nature, many of them for pictures, etchings, and drawings for the wood-engraver. In this last section the works by English artists present a great variety of ability; but the excellence of the foreign etchers is, perhaps, not shown to more advantage than last season. The display contains much that is deserving of study, though it will probably prove of more interest to artists than the public. Many of the designs, (as well as the etchings) are, of course, not novel, they having been appropriated for finished pictures and water-colour drawings, or published in a printed form, particularly as wood-engravings.

In preparatory works of this kind it is not to be expected that many should present an importance demanding lengthened observation. Nor have we space either to attempt to criticise all the works of merit in detail, or to venture on so fertile a theme as the general principles of design, draughtsmanship, and effect, and the technicalities of drawing with "the point," the "stump," and the brush, or on wood and other materials, or with the burin, etching needle, aqua-fortis, and so forth. We shall therefore content ourselves with chronicling some of the more prominent successes, following their order on the walls, but grouping the contributions of a given artist together, and wishing it to be understood that when we limit ourselves to giving the title only we intend thereby to commend it to the visitors' attention.

We commence our survey, then, with No. 5, one of a series of small etchings after old masters, with the exception of a spirited portrait of Sir Richard Wallace after Baudry, by Jules Jacquemart, the eminent French etcher, whose name sufficiently guarantees their first-rate quality. No. 9 is a slight landscape sketch in charcoal by the late George Cattermole. There are other similar works by the same, as also a sketch by Sir David Wilkie, but why they are admitted we are at a loss to imagine. The exhibition should, we think, be restricted to works by living artists, otherwise its character will be in danger of being lost. "The Foundling" (13), by F. Holl, is a study for the picture in the Academy, and in some respects preferable. "Mont St. Père" (14) is one of ten studies by L. Lhermitte, au fusain, which have fine pictorial qualities of composition, effect, and feeling, often pathetic. We may name as specially admirable "The Pilgrimage" (162)—women in a church, one holding her infant to kiss a chalice containing the relics that have attracted the pilgrims—and the "Last Ceremony" (120), the church service for the dead, with the mourners round the coffin. Similarly impressive are the drawings (34 and 66) by J. F. Millet; "Study of a Head" (33), very ably foreshortened, by G. F. Watts; and other studies in red chalk and pencil, by the same, show the artist to be influenced by the great Italian masters as much as his paintings. No. 37, an etching after Turner, by P. Braque-mond. "Study of a Head" (49), very firmly drawn in chalk, by E. Armitage. No. 54 is one of several of the original sketches for the illustrations by G. Du Maurier, which have formed a leading attraction of Punch in late years. All of them, we need hardly say, evince a rare feeling for beauty and grace. "Sweet Seventeen" (63), by G. D. Leslie, exquisite in expression. Two heads of Capri girls (75 and 90), by F. Leighton, are distinguished by refinement; but far more extraordinary is a most elaborate pencil study, by the same artist, of a "Lemon Tree" (171), in which the forms of the stem, branches, sprays, leaves, and fruit are "made out" with a delicacy of outline which the eye can scarcely follow in its intricacy, yet which, on the closest examination, nowhere seems to fail in clearness and truth. "Peaceful Times" (76), by Marcus Stone. "The Isles of the Sea" (79), by F. Powell, a large study of general effect for the picture in the Water-Colour Exhibition. No. 80, samples of E. Edwards's projected series of etchings illustrative of Old English Inns. "Monkey Tricks" (102), also No. 323, by that admirable artist-naturalist, J. Wolfe. "Thiers and Guizot" (115), by J. D. Linton. "Deserted" (116) and "Even-song" (191), two examples by S. Read of his skill in infusing sentiment into architectural subjects. "Stratford-on-Avon" (150), a delicate drawing in Indian ink by Mason Jackson. "Capital" (160) and "Labour" (185), by H. S. Marks, are two very thorough studies for the principal figures in the artist's Academy picture. Nos. 164 and 175 are two small but characteristic examples of Sir John Gilbert, to whom, probably, the arts of book and periodical illustration (and certainly ourselves) are more indebted than to any other artist. Small as are the sketches by this prince of illustrators under notice, they evince unrivalled facility both of invention and execution. How gracefully free, how suggestively playful, are the lines! How picturesque is the whole, how entirely devoid of the rigidity and hide-bound edginess of much recent illustration work! In "Choosing Models at Rome" (166) we have a humorous sketch by Miss Thompson. But more characteristic are the sketches of horse artillery in full gallop, "A Reminiscence of Woolwich" (190), and of charging cavalry suddenly reining up as the trumpet sounds the "Halt!"—a Reminiscence of Aldershot" (233). These sketches show a power of drawing the horse in full action, together with a spirit and vigour, that for a lady's work is most extraordinary, and for the display of which the "Calling the Roll" affords no opportunity. On the other hand, there is in these, as in some previous works, a tendency to clever exaggeration which we do not find in the Academy picture. "A Sea Fight" (172) is a very effective drawing by J. E. Hodgson. "Woods of Fontainebleau" (197), by H. Réy, is a fine example of the capabilities of the somewhat neglected art of lithography. Nos. 215 and 216, two very clever hunting-subjects by W. Small. Other designs by this artist, particularly some illustrations to "Ninety-Three," are distinguished by great truth of character and effect, and powerful telling of the story. No. 222, a study of a lion, by Heywood Hardy, and No. 258, by the same. "Odds and Ends" (230), H. Herkomer. "Upper Valley of the Conway" (255), a study, large in style, by J. S. Raven. No. 270, a frame of sketches by A. Legros. The extremely elaborate engraving, by S. Cucinatto, of "L'Arche de Noé—le Déluge" (275), with its countless beasts and birds leaving the ark. "Schreckhorn, from the Waldspitz" (345), by A. Croft. "The late Lord Lytton" (409), by D. Langée. "In Tow" (428), by A. Hopkins. "Woodland Hunting" (427), by F. Taylor. "A Portrait" (439), by W. Britten, and "Hulks—Portsmouth Harbour" (444), by W. L. Wyllie.

There are, in addition to the preceding, designs of merit for the wood-engraver made for ourselves and other illustrated journals and books (the major part of which have already been published) by S. L. Fildes, H. Herkomer, G. G. Kilburne, G. Régamey, O. Green, R. Macbeth, E. J. Gregory, H. Paterson, J. Parker, F. Chester, and Percy Macquoid. Among the etchings not hitherto mentioned, which we regret we have not space to particularise, are those of P. Braque-mond, P. Rajon, M. Lalanne, Ernest George, Fortuny, M. T. Pierre, A. Appian, and A. Mongin. Lastly, there are good specimens of wood engraving by H. Harral, A. Sargent, the brothers Dalziel, W. J. Palmer, D. J. Anderson, J. Swain, and W. B. Murray. In the centre of the room is a plaster group by F. Dalon, of a mother and child, which has the charm of naturalness without the faults we have remarked in the group at the Royal Academy.

A number of Munich pictures are being exhibited in the rooms at 48, Great Marlborough-street, which for the occasion are called the "Munich Gallery." Among these are three cartoons by Kaulbach, the late director of the Munich Gallery. One of them is the "Amor and Psyche," a well-known design. Another is "James V. Opening the Scottish Parliament at Edinburgh," a comparatively weak composition, in which the disproportionate length of all Kaulbach's figures is not adequately redeemed by dignity of character or dramatic impressiveness. The third cartoon, "Peter Arbus Condemning a Heretic Family to the Flames," is greatly superior: it has much of the intensity of conception and expression of the master, though it is not of itself sufficient to justify to English eyes the artist's fame. There are several large oil-paintings in the old-fashioned style of German art which convey no idea of the recent art-revival in the Bavarian capital, such, for example, as Professor Conrad's painty and positive, unrefined and unimpressive "Lying in State of the Emperor Joseph II.," Professor Otto's heavy and clumsy piece of decoration, "The Triumph of Bacchus," Schorn's theatrical and badly-painted "Deluge," Professor A. Zimmermann's forcible-feeble "Finding of Moses," and the dreadfully opaque "Battle of the Granicus," by Gunkel. A view of Florence, by Kirchner, and some landscapes by Wenglein, are almost the only tolerable works among those of moderate dimensions.

ASTRONOMICAL OCCURRENCES IN JULY.

(From the "Illustrated London Almanack.")

The Moon is near Saturn during the morning hours of the 2nd day; she is near Mars on the 13th day, the day of New Moon; near Mercury on the 14th, Venus on the 16th, Jupiter on the 18th, and Saturn on the 29th. Her times of change are:—

Last Quarter	on the 6th	at 1 minute	after 6h.	in the afternoon.
New Moon	" 13th	" 28	" 4	" afternoon.
First Quarter	" 21st	" 32	" 1	" afternoon.
Full Moon	" 29th	" 43	" 4	" morning.

She is nearest to the Earth on the morning of the 7th, and most distant from it on the afternoon of the 20th.

MERCURY is an evening star till the 18th day, setting on the 3rd day at 9h. 27m. p.m., or 1h. 10m. after sunset, which interval gradually decreases to 52m. by the 8th day, to 29m. by the 13th day, and to 3m. only by the 18th day (the planet setting on this day at 8h. 9m. p.m.); and from July 19 to Sept. 1 he sets in daylight. He is in aphelion on the 9th, stationary among the stars on the 11th, near the Moon on the 14th, in inferior conjunction with the Sun on the 26th, and near Mars on the 29th.

VENUS is an evening star; she sets on the 10th day at 9h. 54m. p.m., or 1h. 41m. after sunset; on the 20th day at 9h. 36m. p.m., or 1h. 32m. after sunset; and on the last day at 9h. 12m. p.m., or 1h. 25m. after the Sun. She is near the Moon on the 16th. The bright star Regulus (a Leonis) is near her about the middle of the month, being a little to the south of her till the 17th, and a little north of her after this day.

MARS sets on the 1st day at 8h. 29m. p.m., or 11m. after the Sun; on the 10th day the planet and Sun set nearly together. On the 20th day he rises at 3h. 39m. a.m., or 28m. before sunrise; on the last day at 3h. 33m. a.m., or preceding sunrise by 54m. He is due south at 11h. 51m. a.m. on the 15th. He is near the Sun on the 5th, and the Moon on the 13th.

JUPITER is an evening star, setting on the first day at 11h. 24m. p.m., or 3h. 6m. after sunset; on the 10th at 10h. 51m. p.m., or 2h. 38m. after the Sun; on the 20th at
